IT is justly regretted by the present age that so little information has come down to us respecting the personal history of Shakspeare. The Genius of Biography neglected him in his own days,—she gave records of men comparatively uninteresting, and said nothing about the paragon of nature,—she embalmed the dwarfs of our literature, but left its Colossus to be buried in oblivion.

Perhaps our baulked curiosity can fix upon no individual more strangely responsible for this misfortune than Shakspeare himself. He retired from the business of life, to enjoy its leisure and domestic happiness, probably at the age of forty-eight, with his public honours all thick and fresh upon him. The Poet, who saw so deeply into the minds of others, could not have looked into himself without prognosticating his own favour with futurity. Even if the praises of his contemporaries had been less emphatic than they were, he could no more have been unconscious of his own greatness than of his own existence. How can we imagine him blind to the destined love of posterity, or account for his omitting to tell us what manner of man the Poet personally was, whose works were to charm unborn ages—to sweeten our sympathies—to beguile our solitude—to enlarge our hearts, and to laugh away our spleen. Yet Shakspeare has told us nothing of himself individually in any plain and direct manner; and, after closing his dramatic career, he took no pains to leave his dramas in a corrected state for publication, so that they have reached us with more uncertainties of text than even those of the Greek tragedians. Such seeming unconcern, either about his own fame, or about the interest which the world was to take in him, is almost as much a matter of wonder as his genius itself*.

It would be tedious to enumerate the individuals, including antiquaries, writers of lives, and professed lovers of literature, who were either his contemporaries, or so nearly so, as to have had access to abundant information respecting him; but who have either slightly noticed him, or not at all. Coeval tradition has no doubt given a general and most pleasing outline of his personal character. Drummond of Hawthornden contrasts his gentleness with the rough assumingness of Ben Jonson; and Ben, himself, says of him, "I loved the man and do honour his memory, on this side idolatry, as much as any; he was, indeed, honest, and of an open and free nature." For this noble testimony one is sorry that Drummond was a less generous witness of Jonson's convivial manners and confidential conversation.

All who addressed William Shakspeare seem to have uniformly connected his name with the epithets—_worthy, gentle, and beloved._ "He was verie good company," says Aubrey, "and of a verie ready and smooth wit." The same John Aubrey says, that he was a handsome and well made man; a tradition at all events acceptable to our belief; although Aubrey did not write till about sixty years after the great Poet's death. It is unfortunate, however, that we have not complete assurance as to his personal appearance. The bust over his monument at Stratford must have been placed there (according to Malone) earlier than 1623, seven years after Shakspeare's death, as it is mentioned in the verses of Leonard Digges, written at that period. It gives us the idea of a tolerably good-looking, though not of a handsome man; but it is an indifferent piece of sculpture, and may have done him no justice. The Chandos portrait of him affords a much finer conception of his physiognomy, and Malone and Boswell, I think, have shown the great probability of this portrait being authentic; but still it differs widely from the Stratford bust. These are the two most probable of Shakspeare's extant likenesses.

In fact, all the traditions respecting Shakspeare are but scraps to our curiosity. Sir William Dugdale, a native of Coventry, about twenty miles from Stratford-upon-Avon, who published the "Antiquities of Warwickshire," only thirty years after the Poet's death, and who might have seen a score of persons once familiar with him, did not trouble himself to make a single inquiry on the subject. Fuller was equally careless. That Anthony Wood should have collected few anecdotes about the great Bard, may be partly accounted for by the circumstance that his main object, in the "Athenae Oxonienses," was to give an account of men bred at Oxford.

* It is worth noticing, however, that the accident of fire has combined with the sloth of his contemporaries to destroy, in all probability, several memorials respecting Shakspeare. In the year 1613, his own theatre, the Globe, was burnt down, and in that conflagration, it can scarcely be doubted, that many of his manuscripts were consumed. Soon after there was a great fire in the town of Stratford, on which occasion, it is probable, that some of his letters to his native townspeople were lost. Ben Jonson must have also possessed some letters of Shakspeare; but Ben's house and library were partially destroyed by fire towards the end of his lifetime. To crown all, the great fire of London, in 1666, may well be supposed to have deprived us of documents respecting the Poet that would have otherwise existed.
is true that he has introduced names that were never enrolled at Oxford; but, as his aim was to glorify a great university, it was, perhaps, his policy to say but little about the greatest of men who had never been at a university at all.

Thomas Heywood, Shakspeare's contemporary and fellow comedian, contemplated writing a History of Poets, which would have included the Bard of Avon, but, unfortunately, the work, if ever written, was never published. Browne, the pastoral poet, also intended a similar work, but his design also was left unfulfilled. Hell, they say, is paved with good intentions. The very booksellers who republished our Poet's plays in 1664 and 1685, employed no person to write his life.

Almost a century after Shakspeare's death, the poet Rowe wrote his account of him. That it is meagre must be owned; but that it is so very incorrect as Malone, and his Editor, Boswell, assert, may be doubted. The remainder of the 18th century produced a succession of writers on the subject of Shakspeare, among whom we are chiefly indebted to Dr. Farmer for his Essay on the Learning, or rather, on the No Learning of Shakspeare, and to the indefatigable and truth-loving, though sometimes mistaken, Malone. In our own times Mr. J. P. Collier has made some interesting discoveries respecting the personal history of Shakspeare, as regards his connexion with the theatre. The Rev. Alexander Dyce is also an estimable living writer on the Shakspearian and pristine literature of England.

From fear of prolixity, I shall not enter into all the disputation that have been maintained about the true spelling of the poet's name, which has been variously written, Shaxpeare, Shackspere, Shakspeare, and Shakspeere. I adhere, in compliance with modern fashion, to writing it Shakspeare, though Sir Frederick Madden, in a small tract lately published, makes out a strong case that the poet's autograph was always Shakspeare. Sir Frederick's letter to the Society of Antiquaries on this subject was drawn forth by the discovery of a copy of Montaigne's Essays, translated by Florio, which can be traced back to have been in the possession of our poet, who has written on a blank leaf Wm. Shakspeere. This copy, for the sake of its autograph, has been lately sold for 100 guineas. In the whole world of authors there is not one whom we should wish to see Shakspeare reading sooner than Montaigne; and he has shown his regard for the naïf old Frenchman by copying him in a passage of the Tempest, (Act ii. Sc. 1.) in the discourse of Gonzalo, Antonio, and Sebastian. The speech of Gonzalo is a palpable imitation of a passage in Book I. p. 102, of Montaigne's work. Florio, who translated Montaigne into English, was probably known to Shakspeare, and there is a tradition that he was the prototype of Holofernes, the schoolmaster in "Love's Labour's Lost."

Rowe gave out that the poet was sprung of a good family by the father's side, of which, however, there is no proof; in fact, nothing has been discovered respecting Shakspeare's grandfather. Malone expresses his belief that the poet's father, John Shakspeare, was not a native of Stratford; if so, it is not probable that his grandfather was born in the same place, and, accordingly, his birth has no record in the parish register of Stratford. This certainly proves that Rowe made a mistake when he referred to the above register, but it proves nothing more; it furnishes nothing like evidence that the poet's grandsire could not have possessed any landed property. "If he had had lands," says Malone, "we should have known how they came to him, and to whom they were transmitted." But, is it not notorious, that there have been innumerable transmissions of landed property of which all records have been lost? It is true that the rolls of Henry the Seventh's Chapel contain no record of the alleged grant of lands from that monarch to the Poet's paternal ancestor, they certainly seem to refer to a grant received by his mother's father; but, it does not follow necessarily thence, that the Poet's paternal family could by no possibility have ever possessed any landed property. Malone sought in vain all over Warwickshire for documents to this effect; but did he know in what part of Warwickshire they were exactly to be sought for—no! he acknowledges that he knows nothing about Shakspeare's paternal grandfather, neither where he was born, nor where he lived, nor where he died, nor by what means he subsisted; but of this he assures us, that he could not have been a gentleman,—the Poet's father, having been the first of his family who, among the citizens of Stratford, received the title of "Mayster," in consequence of his magistracy. But Shakspeare's paternal family, to all appearance, were not Stratfordians, and their names, if they had been landed gentry, would not have appeared in the civil records of Stratford. The question about such a Poet's gentility of birth is of unspeakable unimportance; but I cannot help comparing Mr. Malone's logic on the subject, to that of the hackney-coachmen who, when you refuse them an exorbitant fare, pronounce an opinion before your face that you can be no gentleman.

Shakspeare's father, John Shakspeare, was a Glover in Stratford; that this was his main trade has been completely ascertained by Mr. Malone. He seems, however, to have been a speculative tradesman; he farmed meadow-land, and may possibly have traded in wool and cattle as has been alleged; but the tradition of his having been a butcher is entitled to no credit, for, if he sold gloves, it is not very likely that he had, either another shop, or the same shop with shambles before it. Mr. Malone tells us that in those days the Glover's trade was more lucrative than at present, because gloves were then perfumed, trimmed with gold, and worn by gallants as well as by bishops and judges. Few minds, I suppose, will require this perfuming apology for Shakspeare's father's vocation.

Mr. Malone thinks that John Shakspeare settled in Stratford not long after the year 1550; in 1565 he was elected alderman, and, in 1568, he was made chief magistrate. His glove-selling business is no proof of meanness in his descent; for has no man been a Glover in Great Britain whose father possessed landed property? In the last century, a peer of Scotland, who regularly voted in the convention of Scottish lords, and whose progenitors had been rich and powerful, sold both gloves and leathern small-clothes in the High Street of Edinburgh. If John Shakspeare's trade be not direct evidence of mean descent, still less is his marriage; Glover as he was, he espoused Mary Arden, the daughter of a gentleman whose family had received grants of land from Henry the Seventh, and she brought him the estate of Asbies, a small one to be sure, but containing fifty acres of arable and six of pasture land, besides the right of commonage. Such a match, in an age when the landed gentry were still more shy than they are at present to intermarry with shopkeepers, speaks volumes for the respectability of Shakspeare's father as a tradesman.

Mr. Malone decides positively that the fee simple of this landed property, brought to John Shakspeare by his wife, was worth only one hundred pounds, because the average rent of land was, at that time, only three shillings the acre per annum. Even at this estimate, Mary Arden's portion was a larger one than was usually given to the daughter of a landed gentleman. But we find that the said John Shakspeare also farmed the meadow of Ingent, containing sixteen acres, at the rate of eleven shillings per acre. Now what proof has Mr. Malone adduced that the acres of Asbies were not as valuable as those of Ingent? and if they were so, the former estate must have been worth between three and four hundred pounds. The Poet's father, in his best prosperity, may be easily supposed to have had one hundred and fifty pounds or more additional property; and thus, in the year 1568, when he was high bailiff of Stratford, and when he obtained a grant of arms from the Clarendon (Cooke) of the Heralds' College, he might have said truly, as he did say, that he was worth five hundred pounds, and might, with no great stretch of truth, have alluded to that property having come to him mainly from his ancestors. But John Shakspeare, I may be told, had no right to call his wife's ancestors his own; not strictly, to be sure, but in those days names of relationship were freely assumed from connection by marriage. Even in our own times the godly custom is not quite dropt, and my niece-in-law addresses me as her dear uncle, though she is only my nephew's wife.

At all events, whether John Shakspeare put a perfumed and easy glove upon his conscience in speaking at that time of his circumstances, the divine Poet cannot be suspected of any collusion with the misrepresentation of his father's wealth, for he was then a little cherub only four years old, toddling about, and thinking more of sugar-plums than of the Heralds' College. It is too true that John Shakspeare, a flourishing man in 1568, fell into difficulties, not a great many years afterwards. In 1578 he was excused from paying the weekly assessment levied on aldermen for the relief of the poor; in 1579 his name is found among the defaulters in the payment of taxes, and, in the former of those years, it is proved that he had, for some time, owed to Roger Sadler, a baker of Stratford, a debt of five pounds, for which he had been obliged to bring a friend as security. In the same year, 1578, he had also been forced to mortgage the small estate of Asbies for forty pounds to Mr. Edmond Lambert, apparently to pay for the purchase of two houses in Stratford, for which that sum precisely was disbursed. These forty pounds were certainly not half the value of the estate of Asbies, even according to Mr. Malone's computation; but, can we be sure, that the value of the land was not still more disproportioned to the loan for which it was mortgaged? In such transactions, and especially in times when money is hard to be raised, the sanguine borrower will be glad to have his loan on any terms, and the lender will take great care that the pawn deposited, if it should be forfeited, shall usiously repay him. But, it appears, that John Shakspeare owed other moneys to Edmond Lambert, besides the forty pounds above mentioned. The extent of these other debts is not known, but from their existence it is clear that Lambert trusted Shakespeare senior beyond the extent of the mortgage; and that he trusted him on the faith of his landed property appears from this circumstance, namely, that when John Shakspeare waited on Lambert and offered forty pounds to relieve the mortgage on Asbies, his creditor said—"No! you shall not have back your land till you pay me all the rest that you owe me."

A chancery lawsuit ensued, in the course of which, Shakspeare's father styles himself a poor man. But that is a very general expression. Many a man comparatively poor lives in credit and respect; and as the Poet's father died soon afterwards, leaving tenements to his son, his poverty could not have been that of destitution. He seems, as I have observed, to have been an enterprising trader, and his speculations drew him into difficulties. The writer of Shakspeare's life, in Lardner's Cyclopaedia, says, that the Poet's father in his old age must have been almost a pauper; but men who are almost paupers seldom leave houses and orchards to their heirs, and we know that two houses in Stratford, each having an orchard, were inherited by William Shakspeare from his father. If the latter was ever insolvent, he could not have died so. As to his difficulties, were they not such as we often see men involved in, who, though they have in the main real substance, are unable, from the perplexed state of their affairs, to settle the debt of the day that is passing over their heads? If he was in difficulties, however, in 1597, it may be asked why he had applied in 1596 to the College of Arms for a renovated grant of arms? My answer is, that John Shakspeare, wishing to blend his arms with those of his wife, (a very natural wish,) applied for a new patent on the strength of the old one granted in 1568; and might very well say to himself, "They granted me a coat of arms when I was in the palmiest state of my prosperity, I am now asking only for a change in that coat, and why should they refuse it,—because I have fallen into the sere and yellow leaf?" Such a refusal, on account of the change in his circumstances, would have been little less cruel than a revocation of the former grant. There is every reason to suppose that Shakspeare might be concerned in this second application for a renewed coat of arms, from a wish to record his mother's pedigree. But the imputation adduced by the writer of his life, in Lardner's Cyclopaedia, who taxes him with conniving at his father's misrepresentation of his circumstances, and by his powerful friends having influenced the Heralds' College to confirm the new grant in 1599, is unsupported by the slightest evidence.

The two tenements in Henley Street, Stratford, already alluded to, were purchased by John Shakspeare in 1574, when our Poet was only ten years old. Whether his father, antecedent to his purchase of these houses, had lived in either of them as a tenant, is uncertain; and consequently, the money levied on visitors for the sight of the particular house in which the Poet was born, is a mere tax on their credulity *.

* In this house a book is kept in which visitors, if they choose, write their names. A pompous Frenchman, for the time being ambassador at London, made a journey to Stratford, and went to see the alleged birth-house of the mighty Poet. He wrote in the book, that this day, in the year of our Lord 17—, the place of Shakspeare's nativity had been visited by the two Messrs. De  *, father and son, and signed

Monsr. Le Père
Monsr. Le Fils.

A wag wrote below— et Monsr. Le Saint Esprit.
Our great Poet, the eldest son and the third child of his parents, was born at Stratford in the month of April, 1564, probably on the 23rd of the month, says Mr. Malone, because he was baptized on the 25th. It seems to be far from a self-evident truth that a child must have been born exactly two days before its christening; but, if Mr. Malone be right, the nativity of Shakspeare occurred on the day consecrated to England’s patron saint, George of Cappadocia. It distresses our enthusiasm, however, to find that this great saint was a still greater sinner. St. George was born at Epiphania, a town of Cilicia, in a fuller’s shop, and his character through life retained a trace of his earthy origin. By the arts of a parasite he obtained patrons, who got him a lucrative commission to supply the Roman army with bacon; but George defrauded the soldiers of their bacon, and, in order to save his own, was obliged to fly from the pursuit of justice. Afterwards he professed Arianism, and mounted, by force and bloodshed, the archiepiscopal throne of Athanasius, which he stained with cruelty and avarice. At last, in the capital of Egypt, public vengeance rose up against him, and he was committed to prison, (A.D. 361,) but the populace saved him the tedium of a trial; they put him to death, and threw his body into the sea. It belongs to those who study church history to explain how this swindler and cut-throat has been transformed into the renowned St. George of England, the patron of arms, of chivalry, and of the garter.

Our Poet, Mr. Malone thinks, derived his christian name either from William Smyth, a mercer, and one of the aldermen of Stratford, or from William Smith, a haberdasher in the same town, one of whom probably was his godfather. When he was but nine weeks old the plague visited Stratford, and carried off more than a seventh part of the population, but the door-posts of our sacred infant, like those of the Israelites in Egypt, were sprinkled so as to be passed by by the destroying angel, and he was spared. How momentous are the results of apparently trivial circumstances! When Mahomet was flying from his enemies he took refuge in a cave, which his pursuers would have entered if they had not seen a spider’s web at the entrance; not knowing that it was freshly woven, they passed by the cave, and thus a spider’s web changed the history of the world. In like manner, a breath of wind wafting contagion to Shakspeare’s cradle, would have altered the destinies of our literature.

No anecdotes of his earliest years have been preserved. All the education he ever received was probably at the free school of Stratford; but at what age he was placed there, or how long he remained, are points that can be only conjectured. His father, it appears, was no great scholar, for he put his mark, something like the letter A, instead of his signature. That circumstance, however, was in those days no proof of mean descent, for, only thirty years before Elizabeth’s ascent to the throne, Fitzherbert advises those gentlemen in the country who could not write, to aid their memory by notches on a stick. Nor was Shakspeare’s father’s conscious deficiency in instruction likely to make him obstruct his son’s education, but the contrary. That Shakspeare was not a classical scholar, may be taken for granted; but, that he learned some Latin at the free school of Stratford, is conceded even by those who estimate his classic acquirements at the lowest rate; even allowing, as seems to be ascertained, that he derived his plots, in the main, from translations of books. Instead of being surprised that Shakspeare had, to all appearance, great genius with small erudition, I am inclined to ascribe the greatness of his genius to his good fortune in having so small a portion of his youthful powers absorbed in the forced fatigue of acquiring learning. By learning I mean not the knowledge he got from general reading, but the knowledge which he missed acquiring from grammars and dictionaries.

* Dr. Drake and others have burthened John Shakspeare, the Glover, with a larger family than he ever had, from confounding him with another John Shakspeare, a shoemaker, in Stratford. The poet’s father had four sons and four daughters—Joan, Margaret, William, Gilbert, another Joan, Anne, Richard, and Edmund. The elder Joan, Margaret, and Anne, were cut off at an immature age; Gilbert, according to Oldys, lived to a good old age, and saw the dramatist perform a character in one of his own plays, which, from the description of it, must have been Adam, in “As You Like It.” The second Joan became the wife of William Hart, a hatter, in Stratford, and died in 1646. Of Richard nothing is known, but that he was buried in 1612-13, aged nearly 39. Edmund embraced the profession of an actor, played at the Globe Theatre, and was interred in the church of St. Saviour (the parish where he resided) on the 31st of December, 1607, in his 28th year.

I have elsewhere expressed my belief as to the influence of deep scholarship on poetic genius. If learning could come intuitively, I have no doubt that it would enrich genius, but the toil and absorption of mind bestowed in acquiring it, the unoriginal habits of thinking, nay, the prejudices liable to accompany its acquisition, the cramping of the soul from its natural impulses and meditations, these, I apprehend, are the drawbacks on whatever advantages to inspiration may accrue from laboriously acquired erudition. It was predicted of a young man lately belonging to one of our universities, that he would certainly become a prodigy because he read sixteen hours a day. “Ah! but,” said somebody, “how many hours a day does he think?” It might have been added, “How many hours does he feel?” Still we have evidence that Shakspeare revelled in the fictions of antiquity, and understood its characters and moral truths. There is not a doubt that he lighted up his glorious fancy at the lamp of classical mythology:

Hyperion’s curls—the front of Jove himself,
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill—

Who can read these lines without perceiving that Shakspeare had imbibed a deeper feeling of the beauty of Pagan mythology than a thousand pedants could have imbibed in their whole lives? How many years he was at the grammar-school has not been determined; they may have been three, or they may have been six. At the lowest supposition he acquired some, though small Latin; but, before we conclude that it was very small, let us recollect that Shakspeare was here the schoolboy, and not a common-place lout. I grant that, after entering into the cares of life, it is not very probable he should have cultivated his classic acquirements. The best scholars hold their tenure of erudition on a repairing lease, and many who have been once learned have given up their lease to avoid the trouble of repairs. The little tenement of his schoolboy learning it can scarcely be imagined that Shakspeare afterwards mended; nevertheless, I suspect that he had much reading, how far soever it might fall short of erudition. There are symptoms of his having known something of French, and, if he knew anything of Latin, a certain acquirement of Spanish and Italian was of easy access to him. Whether the latter suspicion be true or not, is it possible to conceive Shakspeare, in quest of his plots, not to have been an active reader? and supposing his reading to have been desultory, it is not inexplicable that desultory reading should have been a mighty element to his fancy. His mind was an alembic of sweets. The bee is not fed on fields of sugar-cane, but on the bitter herbs of the mountains; and on those mountains the most beautiful and best-tasted wild birds are better nourished than are our caged and crammed domestic fowls. I once examined the stomach of a wild bird killed in the Highlands; its feathers were splendid, and its flesh was white, firm, and plump, but in its crop there was nothing but heather-bells. I had been reading the works of Burns, and could not help saying to myself—"Well, poor thing! thou seemest to me a Burns among birds, since in the wild air of nature thou couldst fatten upon heather-bells!"

Shakspeare's learning, whatever it was, gave him hints as to sources from which classical information was to be drawn. The age abounded in classical translations; it also teemed with public pageants, and Allegory itself might be said to have walked the streets. He may have laughed at the absurdity of many of those pageants, but still they would refresh his fancy. Whether he read assiduously or carelessly, it should be remembered that reading was to him not of the vulgar benefit that it is to ordinary minds. Was there a spark of sense or sensibility in any author, on whose works he glanced, that spark assimilated to his soul, and it belonged to it as rightfully as the light of heaven to the eye of the eagle.

CHAPTER II.

Malone calls in question Rowe's assertion that our Poet was recalled from school merely on account of his father's circumstances, and in order to assist him in his own trade; and says, it is more likely that he was taken away with a view to his learning some business, in which he might afterwards maintain himself. My own suspicion however is, that his father recalled him in order to assist him in his own business. There is a tradition, that our poet was bound apprentice to an attorney; and I have never mentioned this hypothesis to one of the legal fraternity who has not jumped to the same conclusion, arguing that Shakspeare's knowledge of legal phrases seems not to be merely such as might have been acquired by accident, but that it has all the appearance of technical skill. The lawyers will even make out a case to you without a fee, showing that our Poet's barefaced improbabilities, audacious fictions, sly evasions, and quips and rogneries, could have proceeded from none but an apprentice-bred lawyer. So ambitious are they to make us believe that our bird of Paradise was bred in their black rookery! But what is Mr. Malone’s argument on this point? He surmises that the youthful Poet’s ardent curiosity, about the age of fourteen, led him frequently to attend the Court of Record, which sat in Stratford once a fortnight. Here is a fine fiction to be sure, worthy of the law itself; the forms of a petty court of law kindling an ardent interest in the mind of a boy poet!

George Steevens’s argument in favour of his having been bred a butcher, deduced from the Poet’s supposed allusion to the wooden pins of the shambles is a stupid joke, though Aubrey’s tradition that he was a butcher’s boy had given occasion to it. Others have alleged that he was a schoolmaster between his fourteenth and eighteenth year: a most improbable vocation for such an age, and supported by no evidence. But that he was learning some business or other, during those years, must necessarily be supposed. We have no direct evidence that his father ever plied any other trade than that of a Glover, and therefore nothing forbids us to conjecture that he assisted his father in that trade.

It is surprising that conjecture in its fertility has never sent Shakspeare on foreign voyages in his youth, and made him a sea-boy on the high and giddy mast; for I am told that he never mentions nautical matters without an appearance of correct skill.*

Whatever his occupation was between the time of his leaving school, and his going to London, it is certain that he married in the interim. His choice was Anne Hathaway, who was then in her twenty-sixth year, he, the boy poet, being only eighteen years and some months, and, consequently, nearly eight years younger than his spouse.

* This remark was conveyed to me in a note from my friend Captain Glasscock, R.N., who further observes, “that our Poet draws a nice but palpable distinction between the fishermen and the veritable blue-water mariners. The fishermen in Pericles are the seafaring folk of the coast. One of them says, Act II. Scene 1. —‘When I saw the porpoise, how he bounced and tumbled! They say they are half flesh, half fish. A plague on them, they never come but I look to be washed.’ How true the appearance of the tumbling porpoise, which is always portentous of a gusty gale! How could he have picked up this seafaring fact — a man born and bred in a perfectly inland country?

Nevertheless, Captain G. conceives that the boatswain’s order, ‘Set her two courses off,’ is a mistake in the punctuation, and that the reading should be, ‘Set her two courses — off to sea again.’ ‘Set the two courses, and lay her off,’ is perfect. It means that the ship’s head is to be put seaward, and that the vessel is to be drawn off the land under that canvas nautically denominated ‘the two courses.’ Were I in command of a vessel to-morrow, on a lee shore, I should say, ‘Set the two courses — we must claw off under that canvas.’ How differently does Dryden make his mariners speak! In his translation of Virgil’s Æneid, b. iii. l. 523, we find the following nautical nonsense:—

‘Where proud Pelorus opes a reader’s way,
   Tack to the larboard and tack off to sea,
   Veer starboard. Sea and land.’

The last of these lines is silver absurdity.

‘Swift, when he described a storm, in the ‘Voyage to Brobdignag,’ must have been laughing in his sleeve at the credulity of those whom he anticipated gulling by his sea-gibberish. Dibdin himself is often ridiculously incorrect.’
On this point of our Poet’s history, a most important document was discovered in the archives of the Consistorial Court of Worcester, by Mr. Wheeler, who has published it in “The Gentleman’s Magazine, September, 1836,” with this prefatory notice:—“It is well-known that the Bard of Avon married unusually early in life; and in the first biographical account of him, founded by Rowe, from information obtained by Betterton on the spot, it is mentioned that his wife was the daughter of one Hathaway, a substantial yeoman in the neighbourhood of Stratford.” Mr. Malone correctly observes that they were not married at Stratford, no entry of their marriage appearing in the register of that parish. “Nor have I,” says that commentator, “been able to ascertain the day or place of their union, though I have searched the registers of several of the neighbouring parishes for that purpose. The tradition, however,” continues Mr. Malone, “concerning the surname of his wife, is confirmed by the will of Lady Barnard, our Poet’s grand-daughter, for she gives several legacies to the children of her kinsmen, Mr. Thomas Hathaway, formerly of Stratford.” This tradition is decisively confirmed by the document now sent to “The Gentleman’s Magazine,” which contains the earliest notice of the youthful Bard except his baptismal register; and is the bond entered into, on the 28th of November, 1582, by two sureties, on his applying for a licence to be married to Ann Hathaway, of Stratford, maiden. The bondsmen, Fulk Sandells and John Richardson, were two farmers of this town, Stratford, marksmen*, apparently friends of the poet, but no otherwise remarkable; and it may reasonably be inferred that he accompanied them to Worcester on the occasion, though, being under age, he did not join in the bond. That he was married soon afterwards is very clear, and also that the union, which was to be celebrated with once asking of the banns, and not without the consent of her friends, took place within the diocese of Worcester, which includes Stratford-upon-Avon; probably in some church in its neighbourhood, and not, as Mr. Malone supposes, at Weston-upon-Avon, three miles from Stratford, which lies in the county and diocese of Gloucester. Shakspeare’s marriage bond is dated, as we have seen, the 28th of November, 1582. In May, 1583, our Poet’s wife brought him a daughter, who was named Susanna, and was baptized the 26th of May of the same year.—(Malone; Boswell’s edition, vol. ii. p. 113; and Dyce, in the Aldine Poets, vol. xx. p. 12.) If this was the case, the poet’s first child would appear to have been born only six months and eleven days after the bond was entered into. If Mr. Malone be correct, as to the date of her birth in the Stratford register, Miss Susanna Shakspeare came into the world a little prematurely.†

* That is, men who signed their marks.
† I have not inserted in my main text the rest of Mr. Wheeler’s Letter to Mr. Urban, in the “Gentleman’s Magazine,” for September, 1836, but I here subjoin it in a note.

“The conjecture of Mr. Malone that our poet’s wife was not of Shottery, a village in this parish, and about a mile from the town, is strongly supported by her description in the bond; but it is however certain that the Hathaways held, if not resided in, the old and much-frequented house at Shottery previous to the birth of Anne Hathaway, which took place before the commencement of our register; but they did not become its proprietors until the beginning of the seventeenth century. The cottage,
From Mr. Malone's inquiries about the ancestors of the Poet's wife, they seem to have been farmers. Her father appears to have had some landed property of his own. Yet we have no proof that Shakspeare got any dowry with his wife. About eighteen months after Susanna's birth, Mrs. Shakspeare was delivered of twins, a son and a daughter, who were baptized, February 1584-5, by the names of Hamnet and Judith. "Shakspeare's friend, Mr. Hamnet Sadler, and his wife, Judith," says Mr. Malone, "were without doubt sponsors to these children." Our author's wife never appears to have brought him another child.

One of the first misfortunes that is alleged to have befallen our Poet in his married life, has certainly no appearance of having originated in his marriage. "Shakspeare," says his biographer, Rowe, "had, by a misfortune common enough to young fellows, fallen into ill company, and amongst them some that made a practice of deer-stealing engaged him more than once in robbing a park that belonged to Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecote near Stratford. For this," continues Rowe, "he was prosecuted by that gentleman, and in revenge he made a ballad upon him. The ballad itself is lost; but it was so very bitter that it redoubled the prosecution against him, insomuch that he was obliged to leave his business and family in Warwickshire, and to shelter himself in London."

Of this lampoon, only one passage that is extant is believed to be genuine*, and then perhaps a comfortable farmhouse, with other property at Shottery subsequently sold off, formed part of the manor of Old Stratford belonging to John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, upon whose attinder in the first year of Queen Mary's reign it was forfeited to the crown; and it appears from the Warwickshire Survey Book (temp. Phil. & Mar.) in the possession of William Staunton, Esq. of Longbridge House, near Warwick, that John Hathaway held by copy of court, dated 20 April, 34 H. VIII. a messuage (the house in question) and half a virgate in Shottery, called Hewland, and one messuage and one virgate previously in the tenure of Thomas Perkyns, and one toft and half a virgate called Hewlynys, at 23 shillings and eightpence rent. In the same Survey Book it also appears that Richard Hobbins and George Hathaway then held one messuage, one toft, and two virgates in Shottery, by copy of court dated 12 April, 34 H. VIII. at 21 shillings and fourpence rent. By letters patent 22 March, 8 James I. this property, at least that which was held by John Hathaway, was granted by the crown to William Whitmore, of London, Esq. and John Randoll, of Preston Bagot, in Warwickshire, gentleman†; from whom it was purchased on the 1st of April, 1610, by Bartholomew Hathaway, of Shottery, husbandman, and to the descendants of this person it has continued uninterruptedly in a direct line to the present period.

* A parliament member, a justice of peace,
At home a poor scare-crow, at London an asse.
If lousie is Lucy, as some volke miscalle it,
Then Lucy is lousie, whatever befall it.
He thinks himself greate;
Yet an asse in his state,
We allow by his ears, but with asses to mate.
If Lucy is lousie as some volke miscalle it,
Sing lousie Lucy whatever befall it.

† "In the Antiquities of Warwickshire, 1st edit. p. 501, Dugdale in his account of Preston Bagot, near Henley in Arden, observes that there was "upon a grave stone in the church this epitaph —Here lyeth John Randoll, by birth a Somersettshire man, some time a student of the law, regardfull of his own and publique peace; who on the Purification of S. Mary, in the yeare of our redemption, dyed, 1627," that one would do no great honour to the muse even of a poacher. Mr. Malone discredits the whole story of the deer-stealing, and he is probably right in scouting Davies's exaggeration of it, namely, that our Poet was whipt for the offence. But, false as the alleged punishment may be, it by no means follows that the anecdote of the theft, and of a threatened prosecution, must needs be incredible. Mr. Malone's argument is, that Shakspeare could not have stolen deer from the deer-park of Sir Thomas Lucy, because Sir Thomas possessed no deer-park, and therefore our Poet could not have been amenable for deer-park robbery. No! but Sir Thomas might have had deer on his own grounds, though not in a legally constituted deer-park; and for making free with such venison the offender was liable to an action of trespass. The story is not one that we should exactly wish to be true, but still it was only a youthful frolic, and a prank very common among young men of those days.

Most probably for that reason he removed from Warwickshire to London, unaccompanied by wife or child, a few years after his marriage; it is generally thought in 1586 or 1587. He now embraced the profession of a player. Plays he must have seen acted at Stratford, and some of the best of the then living actors, such as the elder Burbage, Heminge, and Thomas Green, who were in all probability personally known to him. The first of these Thesopian heroes were the countrymen of Shakspeare, the last was certainly his townsman, and perhaps his relation.

Rowe says that Shakspeare was received into the company in a very mean rank. It has also been said, probably on the faith of Rowe's assertion, that he was employed as the call-boy*, whose business is to give notice to the performers when their different entries on the stage are required. Another tradition is, that he used to hold the horses of those who rode to the theatre without attendants. This latter story first appeared in Cibber's "Lives of the English Poets," in 1753. Sir William Davenant, we are there informed, told it to Betterton, who communicated it to Rowe, who told it to Pope, and Pope told it to Dr. Newton, the editor of Milton. The gentleman who heard it from Dr. Newton was undoubtedly either Dr. Johnson, who relates it himself, or his amanuensis, Shield, who wrote no small part of Cibber's "Lives of the Poets."

But the probability of Shakspeare's ever having been either a call-boy or a horse-holder, has never, in latter years, received much belief; and it has been completely put to discredit by Mr. Collier, who has proved by documents of his own discovery, that Shakspeare, in 1589, a very few years after the earliest date that can be assigned to his arrival in London, was among the proprietors of the very theatre in which he is alleged to have been once a call-boy; and from this fact it must be at least concluded, that if he was at first received in a mean rank, he made a rapid acquisition of theatrical consequence. But this fact carries us back into farther and fair inferences.

* Shakspeare had two brothers, younger than himself, who were both players; the time of their entrance on that mode of life is not known, but, if either of them was connected with the theatre when very young, he may have been a call-boy, and that circumstance may have given rise to a tradition respecting William Shakspeare, which his manly age makes so improbable.
It is clear that before 1591, or even 1592, Shakspeare had no celebrity as a writer of plays: he must therefore have been valuable to the theatre, chiefly as an actor; and if this was the case, namely, that he speedily trode the stage with some respectability, Mr. Rowe's tradition that he was at first admitted in a mean capacity must be taken with a bushel of doubt.

My own suspicion is quite adverse to his having been a novice, and meantly received, on the London stage. The inhabitants of Stratford were great lovers of theatrical amusements; companies of the best comedians visited them during the youth of our Poet, at least, on an average, once a year. From childhood to manhood, Shakspeare's attention must have been drawn to the stage, and there is every probability that he knew the best actors. He was probably a handsome man, and certainly an exquisite judge of acting; he was past the age at which we can conceive him to have been either a call-boy, or a horse-holder: what should forbid us then to suppose that he speedily ranked among the respectable actors? It has been alleged in proof of his mediocrity, that he enacted the part of his own Ghost in "Hamlet." But is the Ghost in "Hamlet" a very mean character? No: though its movements are few, they must be awfully graceful; and the spectral voice, though subdued and half monotonous, must be solemn and full of feeling. It gives us an imposing idea of Shakspeare's stature and mien to conceive him in this part. The English public, accustomed to see their lofty nobles, their Essex's, and their Rawleighs, clad in complete armour, and moving under it with a majestic air, would not have tolerated the actor Shakspeare, unless he had presented an appearance worthy of the buried majesty of Denmark.

Dr. Drake* quotes some lines from a poem by John Davies of Hereford, published about 1611, which make it appear that Shakspeare was accustomed to perform kingly parts. This indicates that he had at least risen above a mean rank on the stage. It is true that in one of his Sonnets he complains of his vocation as a player, but I have heard both Mrs. Siddons and John Kemble make the same complaint. Upon the whole it may be presumed that he was a good actor, though not of the very highest excellence; a circumstance perhaps not to be regretted, for if he had performed as well as he wrote, his actorship might have interfered with his authorship.

CHAPTER III.

An interesting subject of inquiry in Shakspeare's literary history, is the state of our dramatic poetry when he began to alter and originate English plays. Before his time mere mysteries and miracle plays, in which Adam and Eve appeared naked, in which the devil displayed his horns and tail, and in which Noah's wife boxed the patriarch's ears before entering the ark, had fallen comparatively into disuse, after a popularity of four centuries; and, in the course of the sixteenth century, the clergy were forbidden by orders from Rome to perform in them. Meanwhile "Moralities," which had made their appearance about the middle of the fifteenth century, were also hastening their retreat, as well as those pageants and masques in honour of royalty which, nevertheless, aided the introduction of the drama. At the same time, it must not be understood that such entertainments took a sudden and final departure: the "Chester Mysteries" were revived for the last time in 1574, and the Passion of Christ was exhibited for the last time, in the reign of James the First, on a Good Friday. The title of "Masques," as we see by Milton's "Comus," was attached to a species of dramatic entertainments at a still later period.

But we owe our first regular dramas to the universities, the inns of court, and public seminaries. The scholars of these establishments engaged in free translations of classic dramatists, though with so little taste, that Seneca was one of their favourites. They caught the coldness of that model, however, without the feeblest trace of his slender graces; they looked at the ancients without understanding them, and they brought to their plots neither unity, design, nor affecting interest. There is a general similarity among all the plays that preceded Shakspeare in their ill-conceived plots, in the bombast and dulness of tragedy, and in the vulgar buffoonery of comedy.

Of our great Poet's immediate predecessors, the most distinguished were Lyly, Peele, Greene, Kyd, Nash, Lodge, and Marlowe. Lyly was not entirely devoid of poetry, for we have some pleasing lyrical verses by him, but in the drama he is cold, mythological, and conceited; and he even polluted for a time the juvenile age of our literature with his abominable euphuism. Peele has left some melodious and fanciful passages in his "David and Bathsheba." Greene is not unjustly praised for his comedy "Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay." Kyd's "Spanish Tragedy" was at first admired, but, subsequently, quoted only for its samples of the mock sublime. Nash wrote no poetry except for the stage, but he is a poor dramatic poet—though his prose satires are remarkably powerful. Lodge was not much happier on the stage than Nash; his prose works are not very valuable; but he wrote one satire in verse of considerable merit, and various graceful little lyrics. Marlowe was the only great man among Shakspeare's precursors; his conceptions were strong and original; his intellect grasped his subject as a whole: no doubt he dislocated the thews of his language by overstrained efforts at the show of strength, but he delineated character with a degree of truth unknown to his predecessors; his “Edward the Second” is pathetic, and his “Faustus” has real grandeur. If Marlowe had lived, Shakspeare might have had something like a competitor.

Shakspeare commenced his career twenty years after our drama had acquired a local habitation, as well as a name; after scholars and singing-boys had ceased to be exclusive performers, and when school-rooms, university-halls, the inns of court, the mansions of nobility, and the palaces of royalty, were no longer the only theatres of exhibition. Plays it is true were still acted, even at a late period of Elizabeth’s reign, in churches, chapels, and noble houses, and even regularly licensed comedians exhibited their theatrical glories in the court-yards of inns. I never enter an old-built place of this kind without thinking of our pristine theatres. But when Shakspeare came to London, our metropolis had regular licensed theatres and theatrical companies. The first building in England dedicated exclusively to the purposes of the drama, and entitled the theatre, was erected about 1570 in Whitefriars, near the present Apothecaries’ Hall. The number of theatres rapidly increased. A playhouse in Whitefriars, in or near Salisbury Court, and another called the Curtain in Shoreditch, were raised previous to 1580. It is clear, also, says Mr. Collier, that there were theatres on the Bankside, near the foot of London Bridge, prior to 1587, for in the October of that year, some of the inhabitants of Southwark complained that plays and interludes were still represented on the Sabbath *

I shall not enter into the antiquarian question as to the exact number of theatres which existed at the date of Shakspeare’s arrival in London; it is sufficient to say that there must have been several. Between that time and his final retirement to Stratford, many other new theatres sprung up; it must be understood, however, that they were never all open at the same time.

“Nearly all these buildings,” says Mr. Dyce, “were probably constructed of wood. Those,” he adds, “which for some undiscovered reason were termed private theatres were entirely roofed in from the weather, while the public theatres were open to the sky, except over the stage and galleries. On the outside of each theatre was exhibited a sign indicative of its name, and on the roof, during the time of exhibition, was hoisted a flag; their interior arrangements resembled those of the present day; there were tiers of galleries or scaffolds; beneath these there were boxes or rooms intended for persons of the highest class; and which, at the private theatres, were secured with locks, the keys being given to the individuals who engaged them; and there was the centre area (separated it seems from the stage by pales) at the private theatres, termed the pit, and furnished with seats; but at the public theatres, the same space was called the yard, and afforded no such accommodation.

“Cressets, or large open lanterns, served to illuminate the body of the house, and two ample branches, of a form similar to those now hung in churches, gave light to the stage. The band of musicians, which was far from numerous, sat, it is supposed, in an upper balcony, over what is now called the stage-box. The instruments chiefly used were trumpets, cornets, hautboys, lutes, recorders, viols, and organs.

“The amusements of the audience previous to the commencement of the play,

* Collier’s “Annals of the Stage,” vol. iii., p. 316.
were reading, playing at cards, smoking tobacco, drinking ale, and eating nuts and apples; even during the performance it was customary for wits, critics, and young gallants, who were desirous of attracting attention, to station themselves on the stage, either lying on rushes, or seated on hired stools, while their pages furnished them with pipes and tobacco.

"At the third sounding or flourish of trumpets, the exhibition began. The curtain, which concealed the stage from the audience, was then drawn, opening in the middle, and running upon iron rods. Other curtains, called traverses, were used as a substitute for scenes. At the back of the stage was a balcony, the platform of which was raised about eight or nine feet from the ground; it served as a window gallery or upper chamber: from it a portion of the dialogue was sometimes spoken, and in front of it curtains were suspended, to conceal if necessary those who occupied it from the audience. The internal roof of the stage, either painted blue, or adorned with drapery of that colour, was termed the heavens. The stage was generally strewed with rushes, but on extraordinary occasions was matted. Moveable painted scenery assuredly there was none; a board containing the name of the place of action in large letters was displayed in some conspicuous situation. Occasionally, when a change of scene was necessary, the audience were required to suppose that the performer, who had not quitted the boards, had passed to a different spot; a bed thrust forth showed that the stage was a bed-chamber, and a table with pen and ink intimated that it was a counting-house. Rude contrivances were employed to imitate towers, walls of towns, hell mouths, trees, dragons, &c.; trap-doors had been early in use, but to make a celestial personage ascend to the roof of the stage, was more than the mechanists of the theatre could always accomplish.

"The best theatrical wardrobes at the better theatres were of a costly kind. The performers of male characters occasionally wore periwigs; female parts were played by boys or young men, who sometimes used wizards; the speaker of the prologue was usually dressed in a black velvet cloak: an epilogue was often dispensed with. During the play, the clown would break forth into extemporaneous buffoonery; there was dancing and singing between the acts; and at the end of the piece there was a song or a jig, a farcical rhyming composition, of considerable length, sung or said by the clown, and accompanied with dancing and playing on the pipe and tabor. A prayer for the queen, offered by the actors on their knees, concluded the whole.

"The price of admission appears to have varied according to the rank and estimation of the theatres; a shilling was charged for a place in the best boxes, the entrance money to the pit and galleries was sixpence, twopence, and sometimes a penny: the performance commenced at three o'clock. During the reign of Elizabeth, plays were acted on Sundays as well as on other days of the week; but during that of her successor, dramatic exhibitions on the Sabbath appear to have been tolerated only at court."

There is every reason to believe that Shakspeare commenced his career as a dramatic author, by adapting the works of preceding writers to the stage. Before the end of 1592, he had certainly been thus employed; in that year Greene died, and left for publication his "Groat's-worth of Wit," in which, alluding evidently to Shakspeare, he says, "There is an upstart crow, beautified with our feathers; in his own conceit, the only Shakescene in a country."

It is probable, however, that Shakspeare had already made some, though few, attempts as an original dramatist; in the mean time, there is reason to suspect that he may have written some of those undramatic poems which apparently raised his reputation very high, whilst his dramatic renown was yet in the dawn. He himself calls his "Venus and Adonis" the first heir of his invention: that poem appeared in 1593, and the "Rape of Lucrece" in the following year. The luxuriance of the former poem is prurient—the morality of the latter is somewhat dull; yet they acquired him reputation, not only before some of his better dramas had appeared, but even afterwards. Both of them were dedicated to the Earl of Southampton, who according to Rowe, presented our bard with a thousand pounds. The truth of this anecdote has been called in question; but our hearts, at least, lean to the belief of it.

Having entered on his undramatic poems, I am tempted to continue the subject, and to bring them under one view—postponing for the present the consideration of some of his dramas, that were written earlier than some of those untheatrical pieces.

His "Sonnets," and "A Lover's complaint," were published together in 1609. Several of his sonnets had certainly been composed many years before that date, for Meres, in 1598, alludes to "Shakspeare's sugared Sonnets among his friends." They appear to have been thrown off at different periods of his life.

Some of those effusions, though not all, seem to me worthy of Shakspeare. Among the most admirable are the eighth, the thirtieth, and, above all, the hundred and twenty-third—

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments, &c.

This, of a truth, is Shakspeare's own: it is Love looking at his own image in the stream of poetry. As a whole, however, these sonnets are no more to our Poet's fame, than a snow-ball on the top of Olympus.

In describing great men, Dugald Stewart marks as one of their characteristics, that they stamp their character on that of their age. But the generality of these sonnets exhibit the age stamping its character on Shakspeare, rather than the converse. It was an age of fantastic conceits; and from these the immortal sonneteer himself is not exempt. It was an age of hyperbolical expressions of friendship between men; for, in those days, it was as common for a gentleman writing to another, to subscribe himself "your devoted lover," as it is now to say, "I am your obedient servant." Now in these sonnets our Poet compliments his male friends in a manner totally different from modern usage, and to be explained only by the fashion of coeval language.

The greater portion of the sonnets is addressed to a male friend, whom Mr. Boaden, I think, has proved to have been the Earl of Pembroke; at least we must believe so till a better claimant shall be found.

Augustus W. Schlegel vituperated the commentators of Shakspeare for not having discovered in the above productions a mine of information respecting the Poet's biography.
But beyond some general expressions of his natural feelings, Shakspeare's sonnets give us no access to his personal history. Schlegel says, that they paint his passions unequivocally—but they do no such thing; for they paint his friendship hyperbolically, and mixed with jealousies that belong not to manly friendship. Nor though some twenty of his sonnets are addressed to a female, with whom he feigns himself in love, is it certain that his erotic language, even in these, was not tinged with phantasy? He threatens his female idol with the danger of his going mad, and of his accusing her falsely of favours which she had never conferred upon him. There is no denying, in the first place, that he seems to speak in these sonnets to a sweetheart, either real or imaginary, who was younger than himself. At the same time his menacing her with exposure, begets a doubt of his having been deeply attached to the object whom he could thus threaten. I have a suspicion, moreover, that if the love affair had been real, he would have said less about it. Nevertheless I am far from entertaining the opinion that Shakspeare never felt the passion of love for any other woman than his wife Anne Hathaway. She married him, or rather perhaps decoyed him into a marriage, when she was in her twenty-sixth year, and when he was a boy of eighteen. Setting aside the suspicion of Susanna Shakspeare's birth having been premature for her mother's reputation, the very circumstance of a full grown woman marrying a stripping of eighteen, is discreditable to her memory, and leaves us with no great sympathy for her, if Shakspeare, amidst the allurements of London, forgot his conjugal faith.

But it is painful to find the worthy Dr. Drake so much distressed upon this subject. He first of all denies the possibility of Shakspeare having had any love affair in London, because he was married and was the father of children. Soon afterwards he laments that these sonnets, addressed to a bad, black-eyed woman, cannot be proved to have been addressed to an unreal object. But by and by he discovers, in his own mind, a perfect conviction that they were addressed to a purely ideal object. Nay more, Dr. Drake vituperates this ideal woman for having been one of the most wicked females that was ever described by the pen of a poet. Now surely this is a hard case, that a poor black-eyed young lady should first of all have her existence disproved, and then that she should be had up to be rated for faults committed by her during her state of nonentity!

Another of Shakspeare's undramatic poems is a "Lover's Complaint." It has many beauties, mixed with as many conceits. "The Forsaken Maiden," in describing her lover, conjures up a being that seems to be Shakspeare himself:

For, on the tip of his subduing tongue,
All kinds of arguments and questions deep;
All replications prompt, and reasons strong,
For his advantage still did wake and sleep,
To make the weeper laugh—the laughers weep.

In the miscellany of the "Passionate Pilgrim," some portion of the poetry is said to have been written by our bard; but this miscellany seems to have gone to the press without Shakspeare's consent, or even his knowledge, and how much of it proceeded from his pen cannot now be discovered.
CHAPTER IV.

I now revert to his theatrical life. On his arrival in London, his first employment must have been that of an actor. He left Stratford unaccompanied by his family, and lived at London in lodgings. The place of his abode in the metropolis before 1596 has not been traced; but at, and probably after, that period, he lodged in Southwark, near the Bear Garden.

The speculations of George Chalmers and Dr. Drake as to his having spent the most part of every year of his life in Stratford, even after his migration, are not conclusive; although it cannot well be supposed that he never, or even unfrequently, revisited Warwickshire during his London life. On the contrary, his final return to his native place, indicates no unfriendly separation from it. One can fancy him actuated by the feelings so beautifully described by Goldsmith,—

I still had hopes—my long vexations past,
Here to return and die at home at last.

That he must have had his vexations, is only saying that he was a man. At the same time we have indications of his having become, at no tardy period, pretty prosperous in London. Within a very few years he had a small share in the theatre which he joined, and in 1596 he was a very considerable shareholder. There are proofs also of his having been at the latter period a popular dramatic writer, universally admired, and already patronized by some of the first noblemen of the land, among whom were the Lords Southampton and Pembroke. There is no evidence, to be sure, that he ever received any solid patronage from Queen Elizabeth, but there is every reason to suppose that she highly appreciated his genius. Another proof of his prosperous circumstances is contained in a letter addressed to him in 1598, by Richard Quyney of Stratford, requesting the loan of 30l., which in those days was no incon- siderable sum. This epistle was undoubtedly written by the father of the Thomas Quyney, who afterwards married our poet's youngest daughter. The style of the letter shows that the applicant entertained no fear of a refusal.

The year 1597 has been assigned by Mr. Malone, as the date at which he bought one of the best houses in Stratford, called New Place, which he repaired and improved; but from what Mr. Collier says, I am inclined to believe that this purchase was made at a somewhat later period. In 1602 he gave 320l. for 107 acres of land, which he attached to this property. Methinks these facts and his evident resolution to spend the remainder of his days in his native town, and with his old Anne Hathaway, will much impair our belief that he ever formed any serious unconjugal bondage of his heart in London.

At the burial of his only son, Hamnet, in 1596, it is at least presumable that he revisited Stratford; and it is equally probable that he was present at the marriage of his eldest daughter Susanna, who, in 1607, became the wife of John Hall, a respectable physician in Stratford.

To the year 1598 is commonly assigned the commencement of his friendship with Ben Jonson. Rowe's anecdote about the intimacy having originated in an act of kindness on the part of Shakspeare towards Ben, who is alleged to have been at that time "wholly unknown to the world," has been completely disproved by Gifford, because Ben Jonson, in the year 1598, must have been as well known as Shakspeare. We are also indebted to Gifford, for showing that Jonson's feelings towards his great contemporary were independent, honourable, and untinged with envy. The only wonder is how the world, with Ben's verses on the mighty poet before their eyes, could have been so long and so stupidly blind to the fact which Jonson's editor showed them.

Dr. Drake quotes the Bodleian letters, to prove that Shakspeare was accustomed to visit Stratford annually; and Anthony Wood tells us that he used to bait at the Crown Inn, in Oxford, which was kept by John Davenport, the father of the poet. Anthony represents Mrs. Davenport as both beautiful and accomplished, and her husband as a lover of poets and a great admirer of Shakspeare. In gratitude Shakspeare was bound to admire his wife—and it is certain that Sir William Davenport was the godson of Shakspeare. The story of young Davenport saying, that he was going to see his godfather, and being told that he ought not to take the name of God in vain, is old enough for Joe Miller, and need not be repeated.

There is no proof of Queen Elizabeth having ever patronised our poet—though she may have indirectly encouraged him; but it is little doubted that James I. wrote to him with his own hand a friendly letter, perhaps, as Dr. Farmer suggests, in consequence of his compliment to the Stuart family, which Shakspeare paid in the tragedy of Macbeth. The crown of England had scarcely fallen on James's head, when he granted his royal patent to our poet and his company of the Globe; thus raising them from being the Lord Chamberlain's servants to be the servants of the King. The patent is dated on the 29th of May, 1603, and the name of Shakspeare stands second on the list of patentees.

In the midst of his London prosperity, we should not forget the tradition of his wit and hilarity at the Mermaid, a celebrated tavern in Friday-street. Here there was a club of genial spirits, to which regularly repaired Shakspeare, Beaumont, Fletcher, Selden, Cotton, Donne, and many others whose names, even at this distant period, call up a mingled feeling of reverence and respect. Here took place the lively wit combats between Shakspeare and Jonson; and to this place Beaumont alludes in his letter to Ben—

What things have we seen Done at the Mermaid! heard words that have been
So nimble, and so full of subtle flame,
As if that every one, from whom they came.
Had put his whole wit in a jest.
CHAPTER V.

It is pretty certain, as I have already stated, that Shakspeare began his career in dramatic poetry by altering, and adapting for the stage, plays that had been previously written. In the opinion of the best judges there is more than one drama, published in the popular editions of his works, in which he could have had little or no share. One of these is Titus Andronicus, a tragedy not without some traits of merit, but too revolting in its general conception, to be the credible fruit of Shakspeare's genius. Even independently of its horrors, it has an air in its poetry, and a tone in its versification, which is not Shakspearian. Individual passages have smooth rhythm and pointed expression; but not the broad freedom and effect in harmonious language that characterise Shakspeare.

Six other plays, viz., The Arraignment of Paris*, The Birth of Merlin, Edward III., The Fair Emma, The Merry Devil of Edmonton, and Mucedorus,—are found entered on the books of the London Stationers, as written by William Shakspeare; but these and some others which have been fathered on our poet, are regarded as spurious, in spite of Schlegel's credulity on the subject.

A different opinion attends the play of Pericles, of which Dryden says, that "Shakspeare's own muse his Pericles first bore;" and the credibility of this tradition is not weakened by the fact that Heminge and Condell, the first editors of the Poet's works, omitted Pericles in their edition; for it happens that they omitted Troilus and Cressida, a play which nobody doubts to have been Shakspeare's. Rowe says that some part of it was certainly written by him. Dr. Farmer observes that the hand of Shakspeare may be seen in the latter part of the play, and Dr. Percy coincides with his opinion.

Steevens contends that the tragedy was originally named Pyrocles, after the hero of Sydney's "Arcadia;" the character, as he justly remarks, not bearing the slightest affinity to that of the Athenian statesman.

I am glad that we may safely reject the First Part of Henry VI. from the list of Shakspeare's genuine Plays, when I think of that infernal scene in the fifth act, the condemnation of Joan of Arc to be burnt alive.

Malone assigns both the Second and Third Parts of Henry VI. to the year 1591. In both parts there are such obvious traces of Shakspeare's genius, particularly in the Second Part, that we must suppose them to have been written principally by him. They are both, to be sure, alterations of older plays; but it has been well observed that the antecedent pieces received from our poet's hand "a thorough repair."

To the same date, 1591, Mr. Malone ascribes the "Two Gentlemen of Verona." It is plain from this piece that Shakspeare was yet very far from having arrived at the maturity of his art; but it shows us the young Poet in bounding high spirits, getting through his subject sometimes with graceful and sometimes with farcical glee. He unravels the plot, we are told, precipitately, and his characters are reconciled as friends too improbably. An old Duke who had been whimsically cross, gets whimsically pleased. A Proteus of a lover, at the sight of his ill-used mistress, grows penitent; and what is still more unpardonable, the girl herself, who in boy’s attire had braved death and danger to find out her truant lover, forgives him on his repentance.

Something might be alleged in palliation of all this—but what shall we say to Launce and his dog? Is it probable that even such a fool as Launce should have put his feet into the stocks for the puddings which his dog had stolen, or poked his head through the pillory for the murder of geese which the same dog had killed?—yet the ungrateful cur never denies one item of the facts with which Launce so tenderly reproaches him. Nay, what is more wonderful, this enormous outrage on the probable, excites our enormous risibility. What an unconscionable empire over our fanciful faith is assumed by those comic geniuses! They despise the very word probability. Only think of Smollett making us laugh at the unlikely speech of Pipes, spoken to Commodore Trunnion down a chimney—“Commodore Trunnion, get up and be spliced, or lie still and be damned!” And think also of Swift amusing us with contrasted descriptions of men six inches and sixty feet high—how very improbable!

At the same time, something may be urged on the opposite side of the question. A fastidious sense of the improbable would be sometimes a nuisance in comic fiction. One sees dramatic critics often trying the probabilities of incidents in a play, as if they were testing the evidence of facts at the Old Bailey. Now, unquestionably at that august court, when it is a question whether a culprit shall be spared, or whipped and transported for life, probabilities should be sifted with a merciful leaning towards the side of doubt. But the theatre is not the Old Bailey, and as we go to the former place for amusement, we open our hearts to whatever may most amuse us; nor do we thank the critic who, by his Old Bailey-like pleadings, would disenchant our belief. The imagination is a liberal creditor of its faith as to incidents when the poet can either touch our affections, or tickle our ridicule.

Nay, we must not overlook an important truth on this subject. The poet or the fictionist—and every great fictionist is a true poet—gives us an image of life at large, and not of the narrow and stinted probabilities of every-day life. But real life teems with events which, unless we knew them to have actually happened, would seem as to be next to impossibilities. So that if you chain down the poet from representing every thing that may seem in dry reasoning to be improbable, you will make his fiction cease to be a probable picture of Nature.

We must remember nevertheless, that the drama, even in comic fiction, when it is not farcical, ought to be as much observant of probability as is consistent with the captivation of the fancy, and not only with the immediate delight of the imagination, but with its sober and reflective enjoyment.

That there are limits to this lawful allowance of improbabilities to fictionists is quite evident; for in his “Comedy of Errors” Shakspeare himself oversteps them.
Here, when imitating the "Menacechmi" of Plautus, he is not contented with two brothers, who are so much alike that the very mother who bore them could not distinguish them, but he must have another pair of twins, the slaves of the first pair, and perfect resemblances. Shakspeare himself, however, had not skill to draw compound interest from these compound improbabilities.

When we come to his next comedy, "Love's Labour's Lost" (1592), we are still far from finding him at the zenith of his inspiration; though this play is interspersed with Shakspearian bursts of poetry, and though it breathes, if possible, a still more revelling spirit than the "Two Gentlemen of Verona."

The young King of Navarre retires to a country palace with a few of his courtiers, and makes them join him in a vow, to study philosophy there for three years, to fast one day of every week, to eat but one meal on each of the other days, to sleep but three hours a night, not to wink all the day-time, and never to converse with any woman. A law is made that if any of the bewitching sex should come within a mile of the palace, she was to lose her tongue. To the fulfilment of this grave vow, however, there is soon found to be a comic obstacle. The daughter of the King of France arrives on a diplomatic errand from her aged and bed-rid father, and as the law of tongue-cutting could not be well enforced, either on her highness or on her suite of ladies, the fair bevy is admitted to lodge under tents at a certain distance from the palace, but not under its roof. The King of Navarre waits on the Princess of France, and falls in love with her; his courtiers, also, are smitten by her three beauties in attendance. The vow of the devoted students is broken, they resolve "to woo the girls of France" and to bring them to their home. The king and his courtiers, disguised as Muscovites, visit the beauties at their tents, but the princess makes them receive them in masks, and causes each of the Muscovite lovers to address a wrong mistress. The ladies turn their backs on their admirers, and refuse to dance with them. This is a scene of exquisite humour. When the page of the Muscovites, departing from the letter of what he had to deliver in a prepared speech, substitutes the word backs for eyes, and calls them the fairest women that ever turned their backs on men. Suddenly arrives the news of the princess's father being dead; there the dramatis personae very decently abstain from extreme punning, and the daughter of France, with decorous delicacy, tells the King of Navarre that until a twelvemonth from the present day, she cannot listen to his suit. Her ladies pleasantly and prudently settle with their lovers that their decisive courtship must be deferred for a year. All the while the princess remains in the scene, no doubt with tears in her eyes for the loss of her father; nevertheless, she stops to hear the merry song of the cuckoo—

O words of fear, unpleasing to a married ear.

In this play there is a tenuity of incident that has prevented its popularity. The characters are rather playfully sketched than strongly delineated, or well discriminated. Biron is the witty hero of the king's courtiers, as Rosaline is the heroine of the princess's ladies. But the whole play is such a riot of wit, that one is at a loss to understand who were intended to be the wittiest personages. Dull, methinks, shows himself to be the most sensible person in the play when he says that he understood not the jargon which the other characters had been uttering. But still, what with Biron and Holofernes, nobody could wish "Love's Labour's Lost" to be forgotten.

"Richard II." as well as "Richard III." according to Malone's dates, appeared in 1593. The former tragedy is estimable for its pathos and skilful delineation of character. Its eloquence is not unblemished by a disposition to play upon words, the besetting sin of Shakspeare; but it is wholly free from the intermixture of comic scenes. The march of incidents is perspicuous and progressively affecting. Our interest at the outset is bespoken against Richard, and we wish well to the banished Bolingbroke. Nor is the Poet unfaithful to the latter personage, but rather mitigates the truth of history in describing the Lancastrian hero's treatment of the fallen king. But Lancastrian in his prejudices, as Shakspeare was—he lets us see, though without saying so directly, that Henry IV., though heir to his father's property, was not the inheritor of all his virtues. The aged Gaunt is a model of heroic loyalty and justice. His eloquence on his death-bed is prophetic; and we reverence Gaunt's predictions of what would ensue to Richard for his injustice, not the less superstitiously that they are tinged with human sagacity. Nor is the Bishop of Carlisle's part in this drama to be overlooked, as the intrepid champion of Richard. When he appeals in parliament for his hapless sovereign, and protests against his being sentenced in his absence, whilst thieves are not condemned without a hearing, he says most eloquently—

I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stir'd up by heaven, thus boldly for his king.
My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a proud traitor to proud Hereford's king;
And if you crown him, let me prophesy
The blood of England shall manure the ground,
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and Infidels, &c.

With such characters in the piece as the heroic Gaunt and this intrepid churchman, it is absurd to talk of this tragedy depending for its interest solely on the character of the hapless Richard. The king is undoubtedly at first obnoxious to us. But the poet cools up his strength, as the piece closes, to the double task of commanding our warm tears for Richard, and preserving our cold respect for Lancaster. As Henry Bolingbroke advances to be a king, he ceases to interest us as a man; whilst, as Richard is unkinged, he becomes a more rational man, and more interesting to our sympathies. We forget his past errors when dust is thrown upon his disrowned head, and when none among the brutal mob cries, God bless him! The Poet has departed from the letter of history in several particulars; among others, in representing his queen, who could have been then only twelve years old, as his equal companion; for after the death of his first wife, the "good Queen Anne" of Bohemia, he was betrothed to the daughter of France, in her ninth year. If Shakspeare had given himself the trouble to adhere to the truth of history, it is not unimaginable that be might have drawn effect from the very circumstance of their unequal ages. Richard was a beautiful man, and his queen, young as she was at twelve, might have been attached to him, though betrothed before she had a free choice. I doubt if she ever came to England.

Shakespeare keeps Henry IV.'s memory in good odour by assigning the murder of Richard II. to Sir Pierce of Exton, whom he makes the usurping monarch reprimand for his officious cruelty; but there is too much reason to believe that Henry IV., who infamously purchased the support of the clergy by allowing them to burn heretics alive, was the real murderer of the dethroned monarch, and that he caused him to be starved to death.

CHAPTER VI.

In "Richard III.," 1593, Shakspeare put forth a power of terrific delineation which, with the exception of the death-scene of Cardinal Beaufort in the Second Part of Henry VI., he had never before displayed. This tragedy forms an epoch in the history of our poet, and in that of dramatic poetry. In his preceding dramas, he showed rather the suppleness than the knotted strength of his genius; but in the subtle cunning, the commanding courage, the lofty pride and ambition, the remorselessness of the third Richard, and in the whole sublime depravity of his character, he reminds us of the eulogium passed by Fuseli on Michael Angelo, who says, that Michael could stamp sublimity on the hump of a dwarf. So complete was this picture of human guilt, that Milton, in seeking for a guilty hero, was obliged to descend to the nether regions.

It belongs to our historical rather than our dramatic curiosity, to inquire whether Shakspeare was justified by the facts of history, to describe Richard III. quite so blackly. Every one may have heard of the old Countess of Desmond's testimony, that Richard was a handsome man, and only second in appearance to his brother Edward IV., in the ball room, in which she danced with the former. Her declaration certainly proves that he could not have been a notoriously deformed man; but still I think there are proofs that he had one shoulder higher than the other,—a defect which if he was otherwise personable, as he probably was, he might have well concealed by his dress; and to a girl of nineteen or twenty he might have easily appeared a handsome man. As to his true moral character, I know not what to say; Horace Walpole's "Doubts," I think, are themselves subject to doubts. I remember being in Drury Lane, when Kean played Richard III., and I had the felicity to sit in the same box with Madame de Staël and Sir James Mackintosh. Sir James gave us a long discourse on the utterly absurd traditions respecting Richard III.'s crimes and cruelties. He was at that time a thorough believer in the doubts of Horace Walpole. But when Sir James Mackintosh's History of England appeared, I looked in vain for a reassertion of the same scepticism respecting Richard's guilt; on the contrary, he seems to confess it. For my own part, I think that Richard was infamously abused after his death, by the Lancastrians, and afterwards by the Tudors; neither do I believe that he was a hunch-back; yet still I have my suspicions both as to the perfect equality of his shoulders, and the perfect morality of his conduct.

The wretched taste of the public for many years neglected this sublime drama. In the days of Betterton, all the powers of that great actor could not give stage popularity to "Richard III." Cibber at last brought it on the stage in a patched state, containing a portion of the original play, but mixed up with matter from other Shakspearian plays; and, strange to say, eked out with some of Cibber's own stuff. Yet with all this stuff, Cibber's edition of "Richard III." kept possession of the stage for one hundred and twenty years. In 1741, when Garrick came out at Goodman's Fields, his utterance of the line, "Off with his head! so much for Buckingham!" drew thunders of applause, and these words set the first seal on Garrick's popularity. That line, nevertheless, was not Shakspeare's, but Cibber's.

I have not before me Cibber's misadaptation to the stage of "Richard III.;" but only that of John Kemble, and I fear that Kemble did little to restore the original; nay, it is certain that he did nothing material. The medley called "Richard III.;" till lately acted on our boards, commences with Richard III. stabbing Henry VI. with his own hand. This might be well enough for the Third Part of Henry VI., but it had no right to a place in the tragedy of Richard III. Shakspeare's object in the latter piece was to produce from Richard's character an impression of terror, not of disgust; and the poet, therefore, exhibite on the stage none of the murders occasioned by Richard, except that of Clarence, whose previous guilt mitigates our anger at his fate, although he moves our pity. Clarence's dream, a piece of poetry which Charles Fox justly compared to the death-scene of Alcestis, in Euripides, is omitted in Kemble's edition of this drama. The complaint was that Shakspeare's play was too long, and the remedy to which they resorted was to thrust in interpolations *.

The "Merchant of Venice" (in 1594), was a long and forward stride of Shakspeare's progress in the drama. Here, as in "Richard III.," we see the giant in his seven-league boots; and he is now grown to a maturity of art and strength, from which still greater miracles are yet to be expected.

Since the restoration of Charles II., the "Merchant of Venice" has been one of the most popular plays on the English stage, and the appearance of Shylock has been the ambition of its greatest actors. In the picture of the Jew there is not the tragic grandeur of Richard III.; but there is a similar force of mind, and the same subtlety of intellect, though it is less selfish. In point of courage I would give the palm to Shylock, for he was an ill-used man, and the champion of an oppressed race; nor is he a hypocrite, like Richard. In fact Shakspeare, whilst he lends himself to the prejudices of Christians against Jews, draws so philosophical a picture of the energetic Jewish character, that he traces the blame of its faults to the iniquity of

* I ought not to omit mentioning our obligations to Mr. Macready, for restoring this play to the stage in its genuine state.
the Christian world. Shylock's arguments are more logical than those of his opponents, and the latter overcome him only by a legal quibble. But he is a usurer, and lives on the interest of lent moneys; and what but Christian persecution forced him to live by this means! But he is also inhuman and revengeful. Why! because they called him dog, and spat upon his gaberdine. They voided their rheum upon him, and he in return wished to void his revenge upon them. All this is natural, and Shylock has nothing unnatural about him. His daughter Jessica, is a very faithful picture of a love-inclined young woman; betraying the oriental warmth of her race, together with their craftiness. But she is not to be taken as a true sample of a Jewish daughter, for among no people are the ties of domestic life held more sacred than among the Hebrews. The scene of the caskets is objected to by Hazlitt, but he gives no why or wherefore: I am not, therefore, bound to argue against his no arguments; but have only to say that I like the pomp of Portia's courtship at the arrival of the Prince of Morocco, when he swears by his scimitar—

That won three fields from Sultan Solyman.

Let us remember that we are here in the romantic drama.

Throughout this whole piece there is a flow of incident and richly-imagined language, that bears us, on a spring-tide of interest, to the settlement of the plot in the trial scene, which is a drama in itself. Yet there Shakspeare does not forsake us, as a vulgar writer would have done. On the contrary, he prolongs our voluptuous sympathy, in the union of the happy characters, by a little pleasantry about the rings and by a moonlight serenade of music. Our imaginations retire from the play soothed and gratified, and perhaps with more hints to our understanding respecting the charity which we owe to the Jews, than Shakspeare has ventured to insinuate.

CHAPTER VII.

A Midsummer Night's Dream (1594).—Addison says, "When I look at the tombs of departed greatness, every emotion of envy dies within me." I have never been so sacrilegious as to envy Shakspeare, in the bad sense of the word, but if there can be such an emotion as sinless envy, I feel it towards him; and if I thought that the sight of his tombstone would kill so pleasant a feeling, I should keep out of the way of it. Of all his works the "Midsummer Night's Dream" leaves the strongest impression on my mind, that this miserable world must have, for once at least, contained a happy man. This play is so purely delicious, so little intermixed with the painful passions from which poetry distils her sterner sweets, so fragrant with hilarity, so bland and yet so bold, that I cannot imagine Shakspeare's mind to have been in any other frame than that of healthful ecstasy when the sparks of inspiration thrilled through his brain in composing it. I have heard, however, an old cold critic object that Shakspeare might have foreseen it would never be a good acting play, for where could you get actors tiny enough to couch in flower blossoms? Well! I believe no manager was ever so fortunate as to get recruits from Fairy-land, and yet I am told that "A Midsummer Night's Dream" was some twenty years ago revived at Covent Garden, though altered, of course not much for the better, by Reynolds, and that it had a run of eighteen nights: a tolerably good reception. But supposing that it never could have been acted, I should only thank Shakspeare the more that he wrote here as a poet and not as a playwright. And as a birth of his imagination, whether it was to suit the stage or not, can we suppose the poet himself to have been insensible of its worth? Is a mother blind to the beauty of her own child? No! nor could Shakspeare be unconscious that posterity would dote on this, one of his loveliest children. How he must have chucked and laughed in the act of placing the ass's head on Bottom's shoulders! He must have foretasted the mirth of generations unborn at Titania's doating on the metamorphosed weaver, and on his calling for a repast of sweet peas. His animal spirits must have bounded with the hunter's joy, whilst he wrote Theseus's description of his well tuned dogs and of the glory of the chase. He must have been happy as Puck himself whilst he was describing the merry Fairy, and all this time he must have been self-assured that his genius "was to cast a girdle round the earth," and that souls, not yet in being, were to enjoy the revelry of his fancy.

But nothing can be more irregular, says a modern critic, Augustine Skottowe, than to bring into contact the fairy mythology of modern Europe and the early events of Grecian history. Now, in the plural number, Shakspeare is not amenable to this charge; for he alludes to only one event in that history, namely, to the marriage of Theseus and Hippolyta; and as to the introduction of fairies, I am not aware that he makes any of the Athenian personages believe in their existence, though they are subject to their influence. Let us be candid on the subject. If there were fairies in modern Europe, which no rational believer in fairy tales will deny, why should those fine creatures not have existed previously in Greece, although the poor blind heathen Greeks, on whom the gospel of Gothic mythology had not yet dawned, had no conception of them? If Theseus and Hippolyta had talked believingly about the dapper elves, there would have been some room for critical complaint; but otherwise the fairies have as good a right to be in Greece in the days of Theseus, as to play their pranks any where else or at any other time.

There are few plays, says the same critic, which consist of such incongruous materials as "A Midsummer Night's Dream." It comprises four histories,—that of Theseus and Hippolyta, that of the four Athenian Lovers, that of the Actors, and that of the Fairies, and the link of connexion between them is exceedingly slender. In answer to this, I say that the plot contains nothing about any of the four parties concerned approaching to the pretension of a history. Of Theseus and Hippolyta my critic says, that they are uninteresting; but when he wrote that judgment, he must have fallen asleep after the hunting scene. Their felicity is seemingly secure, and it throws a tranquil assurance that all will end well. But the bond of sympathy between Theseus and his four loving subjects is any thing but slender. It is, on the contrary, most natural and probable for a newly-married pair to have patronised their amorous lieges during their honey-moon. Then comes the question, what natural connexion can a party of fairies have with human beings? This is indeed a posing interrogation; and I can only reply, that fairies are an odd sort of beings, whose connexion with mortals can never be set down but as supernatural.

Very soon Mr. Augustine Skottowe blames Shakspeare for introducing common mechanics as amateur actors during the reign of Theseus in classic Athens. I dare say Shakspeare troubled himself little about Greek antiquities; but here the poet happens to be right, and his critic to be wrong. Athens was not a classical city in the days of Theseus; and, about seven hundred years later than his reign, the players of Attica roved about in carts, besmearing their faces with the lees of wine. I have little doubt that, long after the time of Theseus, there were many prototypes of Bottom the weaver and Snug the joiner, in the itinerant acting companies of Attica.

In the "Taming of the Shrew," (1596), we have no new triumph of Shakspeare's absolute invention; for in 1594, a play called "the Taming of a Shrew," was entered on the books of the Stationers' Company, and the plot of that elder piece is in the main a rude fore-image of Shakspeare's play. The former opens with the ejection of Sly the Tinker from an ale-house, and with his mystification by order of a nobleman who finds him in his drunken sleep, and causes him to be transported to his castle with such deceptions, that poor Sly at last believes himself "a lord indeed." The scene of the anonymous poet's play is laid at Athens, while Shakspeare lays his at Padua. Some of the circumstances of the Shakspearian play, however, seem to have been adopted from George Gascoigne's translation of Ariosto's comedy called "The Supposes," which was published in 1566, and from thence the name of Petruchio was taken. But though Shakspeare has no claim either to the invention of incidents or to that of the general cast of characters, still his genius enriches what he imitated, and he has much improved the character of the Shrew's husband; for, in the older play the husband is a coarse brute, whereas Petruchio is only so in ludicrous affectation. Petruchio is a good-natured mad-cap, playing the devil in a fit of eccentricity.

In "Romeo and Juliet," (1596), there is a much larger pretension to originality. It is true that the mere story of the play can be traced to much earlier narrators. It was copied by one Italian novelist from another, till it appeared, though somewhat varied, in a French tale, by Pierre Boisteau, and in 1562 it found its way, though still with considerable alterations, into a dull English poem of four thousand lines by Arthur Brooke, entitled "The Tragical History of Romeus and Juliet." To the English source, we may suppose Shakspeare to have applied. Yet, what does his possession of those undramatised materials derogate from his merit as a dramatist? The structure of the play is one of the most regular in his theatre, and its luxury of language and imagery were all his own. The general, the vaguely general conception of two young persons having been desperately in love, had undoubtedly been imparted to our poet by his informants; but who among them had conceived the finely-depicted progress of Juliet's impassioned character, in her transition from girlish confidence in the sympathy of others—to the assertion of her own superiority over their vulgar minds in the majesty of her despair? To cullogise this luxuriant drama, however, would be like gilding refined gold.

Henry IV. Part 1st.—(1597.)—This piece may challenge the world to produce another more original and rich in characters: the whole zodiac of theatrical genius has no constellation with so many bright and fixed stars of the first magnitude as are here grouped together: a prince destined to the glory of Agincourt, a Falstaff, a Hotspur, a Douglas, and an Owen Glendower. The interest of this first and better Part of Henry IV. is no doubt derived from its characters more than from its incidents, not that the latter are either thin or confused; they, on the contrary, are clear, rapid, and full: but the action is more indebted to its agents than to its own movement, for as to the mere issue of events, I think we cannot be said to feel a palpitating anxiety for success on either side. Henry IV. is a cool politic prince; and his adversary, Northumberland, is even less interesting, so cowardly, though rash for a time, and so weak, that we should not care a straw for his cause, if it were not for his son, Harry Hotspur.

But the more original characters of the play give life and interest to all that happens. First of all comes forth Sir John Falstaff. Antiquity has nothing like him, and the world will never look upon his like again. That scene in which young Hai and he enact a supposed explanation between the prince and his father, is sufficiently wonderful for its effects on our risibility in the first part of it; but, in the after part, when the charming old rogue descends from the part of Henry IV., and assuming that of the prince, beats him, even there, he raises our wonder to astonishment. The man who can read that scene without "measureless content," ought to lie down and die of a lethargy.

No words can do justice to the discriminated traits of valuable character in Prince Henry, in Hotspur, Douglas, and in Glendower. The first arises to glory out of previous habits and pursuits that would have extinguished any character unpossessed of the unquenchable Greek fire that glowed in Henry of Agincourt, and he shines as Homer says of Diomede, "like a star that had been bathed in the ocean." He is comparatively wiser than the irascible Hotspur, and therefore, more justly successful. The Scottish Douglas retreats at last, but it is only when the field is lost, and after he had slain three warriors, who were the semblances of the king. He was personally little interested in the fray; his reputation could afford him to retreat without expense to his honour, and therefore he shows, after prodigal valour, a discretion which is quite as nationally characteristic as his courage. Owen Glendower is a noble wild picture of the heroic Welch character; brave, vain, imaginative, and superstitious; he was the William Wallace of Wales, and his vanity and superstition may be forgiven; for he troubled the English till they believed him, and taught him to believe himself, a conjuror.

King John. (1596 according to Malone, 1598 according to Dyce.)—This historical play, says Mr. Malone, was founded on a former drama, entitled "The troublesome Raigne of King John of England, with the Discoverie of King Richard Cour-detion's base son, vulgarly named the Bastard Faulconbridge; also the death of King John at Swinestead Abbey, as it was (sundrie times) publickly acted by the Queen's Majesties players, in the Honourable City of London." A later publisher, Mr. Malone adds, had the audacity, in 1622, to annex to it the name of William Shakspeare.

Thus there was an older English historical play than that of Shakspeare on the subject of King John, and it is curious to find that the former was almost an exact forerunner of the latter, in point of incidents and personages. I say personages and not characters, for Shakspeare has thrown more vivacity into the part of Faulconbridge than can be found in the prototype; more dignity into that of Constance, and more pathos into that of Arthur. In the old piece there was no anticipation of Shakspeare's high painting. I am not sure, however, in his almost, though not entirely, copying the incidents of the old play, that Shakspeare has not omitted some which he could have turned from golden dross into pure gold. I mean particularly that scene in the old play where Faulconbridge, in fulfilling King John's injunction to plunder the religious houses, finds a young smooth-skinned nun in a chest where the abbot's treasures were supposed to be deposited. If ever romantic tragedy needed comic relief it was Shakspeare's "King John," and this scene under his comic touches would have relieved it.

It is remarkable that the Poet of England, and the most eloquent Poet who ever summed up the virtues of Brutus, should have dramatised the reign of King John without the most distant allusion to Magna Charta. Was he afraid of offending Elizabeth? I think not; for he brought out "Julius Cæsar" in the reign of King James, whose petty mind was more jealous of popular principles than that of Elizabeth. His main object was probably to recast, with all despatch, an old piece into a new one for the stage.

I regret further that his mighty genius did not turn to poetical account another event in King John's reign, still more adapted to poetry, namely, the superstitious desolation of the English mind, which immediately followed the papal excommunication that was issued from Rome against England and her King. The shutting up of the churches, the nation's sudden deprivation of all the exterior exercise of its religion, the altars despoiled of their ornaments, the cessation of Sabbath bells, and the celebration of mass with doors shut against the laity; all these circumstances have been wrought up by Hume into an historic picture that is worthy of Livy *, and what would they not have been as materials for a poetical picture in the hands of Shakspeare?

But let us be thankful for our Poet's "King John," such as it is. No doubt it sets the seal as to the question about the probability of good historical tragedies proceeding from the pen of the best poets, and a negative seal; for after "Constance" leaves the stage, Shakspeare's "King John" is rather the execution of a criminal than an interesting tragedy.

There are scenes and passages, however, in our Poet's "King John" which may never be forgotten. The pathos of Arthur's conference with Hubert is entirely Shakspeare's,

* In my estimation of Hume as an historian, I often compare him to Thucydides; but in this part of the reign of John he reminds me of Livy.
and so is the whole of the part of Constance, his mother, as well as that most appallingly interesting of dialogues between King John and Hubert, touching the murder of young Arthur. In the old play, Constance has a good deal of the virago in her portraiture; in Shakspeare she is the most interesting character in nature—a doating and a bereaved mother. Those who find themselves, as I do, older than they could wish to be, may derive some consolation for their age, in recollecting that they were born early enough to have seen Mrs. Siddons perform the part of Constance.

All's Well that Ends Well.—(1598.)—The plot of this piece was derived originally from Boccaccio, but was immediately borrowed by Shakspeare from a novel in Painter's "Palace of Pleasure," entitled "Giletta of Narbona." In several circumstances our Poet has improved on the incidents of his original. His Helena, the heroine of the play, is the daughter of a deceased and renowned physician. She is a young and beautiful orphan, who, having been bred up in the house of the widowed Countess of Roussillon, falls in love with the young Count Bertram of Roussillon. Bertram is called to Paris by the king's command. His majesty labours under a disease which his doctors had pronounced incurable, (would that Shakspeare had not named the disease, or substituted some other more delicately mentionable as the subject of a lady's treatment;) the enamoured Helena finds among her father's recipes an infallible cure for this complaint, and, by the Countess of Roussillon's consent, repairs to Paris to offer her services to the king. They are accepted with much difficulty, but his majesty is cured; and Helena, when told to name her reward, asks to have her choice of a husband among all the court nobility, excepting only those of the blood royal: the king agrees, and she names Bertram, who is commanded by the king to marry her. Proud of his superior birth, he at first refuses, but, perforce, gives his hand without his heart, to Helena, and, instead of consummating the marriage, writes to her to say, that till she could get the ring from his finger which never should come off, and show him a child of hers begotten by himself, he would never call her his wife. He then abandons France, and entering the service of the Duke of Florence, obtains a high command in the Florentine army. But amidst his military duties he finds leisure to fall in love with Diana, a Florentine virgin, the daughter of a poor widow, and vainly tries to seduce her. Meanwhile, his scorned Helena is filled with remorse that she should have been the cause of her Bertram's exile, and, with a religious sense of duty, that it behoved her to make a pilgrimage for expiation. It appears, however, that there was something like human love mixed up with this heavenly piety, for she takes with her her gold and jewels, and proceeds to Florence, and by one of those happy probabilities peculiar to the drama, falls in with the widow and Diana, above mentioned. Helena persuades the latter, by money and eloquence, to promise Bertram an assignation at the price of his giving her his family ring, and to allow her, Bertram's wife, to be her substitute. Bertram parts with the ring, and Helena obtains the means of obliging him to marry her. Bertram, crediting a rumour of his wife's death, returns to France, and so does Helena, not like Giletta, in the novel, with twin sons in her arms, but only as ladies wish to be who love their lords. Bertram, on a full explanation before the king, consents to love his wife for ever, and
"The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet."
The episodical exposure of the lying braggart, Parolles, is tolerably comic, but Falstaff, as Schlegel remarks, makes us forget every other comic hero of Shakspeare.
Altogether, this piece is far from standing in the front rank of Shakspeare's plays. Bertram's penitence gives us no deep assurance of his conjugal happiness with a partner whom he has been forced to marry, and tricked into receiving. The dénouement, also, is unnecessarily perplexed by Diana and her mother's appearance before the French king. But some of the happiest aphorisms and poetical passages of Shakspeare might be quoted from this comedy. Though the characters are not deeply marked, those of Helena and the Countess of Roussillon are interesting: we take part with the former because she is a right-loving woman, and thwarted in her love only by Bertram's odious aristocracy; but the mother of Bertram propitiated our offence at the family pride of her son; she redeems nobility by reverting to nature,—compassionate and generously alive to the natural claims of intellect and sensibility, she venerates the memory of the gifted physician, Gerard de Narbon, and she cherishes his orphan daughter, calling her even her own daughter when she more than suspects Helena's passion for her son. Whilst Helena is coming into her presence, she says,

Even so it was with me, when I was young.
If we are Nature's, these are ours; this thorn
Does to our rose of youth rightly belong—
Our blood to this, this to our blood is born;
It is the shew and seal of Nature's truth,
Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth
By our remembrances of days foregone.
Such were our faults—O! then we thought them none.
Her eye is sick on't—I observe her now.

Helena. What is your pleasure, Madam?
Countess. You know, Helen,
I—am a mother to you.

We are so Turkish towards the sex, that little short of supreme poetry is required to interest our imaginations in a woman who has survived her youth and beauty; and yet there is no age, in either sex, which benignant expression cannot beautify, when it is limned by the understanding mind. This Countess of Roussillon is a poetical portrait which I should wish to see reflected on canvas. Such a painting, to be sure, would exhibit only the relics of facial charms, but it would also give us the enduring benevolence and tenderness of a woman once beautiful in form, and still loveable in spirit. The Countess had a right to end her days well after having given her blessing to the re-union of Bertram and Helena; and, in my mind, she is the most respectable personage in the play of All's Well that Ends Well.

The play of Henry V. had a forerunner in an older drama which bore the same title, and contained many of the incidents which Shakspeare has employed. The anonymous dramatist goes back to Henry's juvenile frolics, and after these and his father's death, transfers him to Harfleur and Agincourt without noticing his glory in the northern war with Percy. In the outset of the piece we have the inn at Eastcheap, we see the prince familiar with dissolute company, and we have other circumstances that are similar in both pieces. These, it may be alleged, Shakspeare might have got from the chroniclers; but it is clear that he had consulted the elder play, for the trick by which he makes Falstaff to give himself the appearance of being wounded, is copied from the old play, in which Dericke says,

Every day when I went into the field,
I would take a straw and thrust it into my nose,
And make my nose bleed, and then I would go into the field——
And when the captain saw me he would say
Peace! a bloody soldier! and bid me stand aside.—
Whereof I was glad.

But the prince's companions in the earlier piece are vulgar beings, and have no Falstaff among them.

In Shakspeare's Henry V. there is no want of spirited action and striking personages; but I cannot agree with Schlegel as to the nice discrimination which he discovers in the portraiture of Irish, Scotch, and Welsh character among the brave captains of Henry's camp. Schlegel calls Captain Jamy "le lourd Ecossais*;" but why should he call my countryman "lourd?" Fluellen says, "that Captain Jamy is a marvelous falarous gentleman, and of great expedition and knowledge in the antient wars. He will maintain his arguments, as well as any military man, in the discipline of the pristine wars of the Romans." Here is only a proof that Jamy was argumentative, as most Scotsmen are, and imbued with some learning, but not that he was heavy; he is not a cloddish, but a fiery spirit. "By the messe," he says, "ere these eyne of mine take themselves to slumber, I'll do good service, or I'll ligge in the grund for it, or go to death and pay for it as valorously as I may, that sall I surely do, that is the breff and the long of it."

The brave officers of Henry's army are, however, finely contrasted with the scum of England—Nym, Bardolph, and Pistol, formerly servants to Falstaff, and now exposed to the test as soldiers. As to poor Falstaff, the description of his death in the play affects us with emotions that are not profoundly serious, and yet one cannot help saying, as Prince Henry says on the belief of his feigned death, "I better could have spared a better man." The multiplicity of battles in "Henry V." is a drawback on its value as an acting play; for battles are awkward things upon the stage. A handful of combatants disappoints the spectator's imagination; and on the other hand, the illusion produced by numbers of horse and foot, turns the spectacle into a sort of Astley exhibition. We forget this objection, however, in reading the play. It has noble passages. And amongst these, the description of the night before the battle of Agincourt will be repeated by the youth of England when our children's children shall be grey with age. It was said of Æschylus, that he composed his "Seven Chiefs against Thebes," under the inspiration of Mars himself. If Shakspeare's "Henry V." had been written for the Greeks, they would have paid him the same compliment.

* I have not beside me a German copy of Schlegel's Dramaturgie, but only a French translation.
As You Like It.—(1599).—The plot of this delicious comedy was taken by our Poet from Lodge’s “Rosalynd, or Euphues’ Golden Legacy.” Some of Lodge’s incidents are judiciously omitted, but the greater part are preserved:—the wrestling scene, the flight of the two ladies into the forest of Arden, the meeting there of Rosalind with her father and lover, and the whole happy termination of the plot, are found in the prose romance. Even the names of the personages are but slightly changed; for Lodge’s Rosalind, in her male attire, calls herself Ganymede, and her cousin, as a shepherdess, is named Aliena. But never was the prolixity and pedantry of a prosaic narrative transmuted by genius into such magical poetry. In the days of James I, George Heriot, the Edinburgh merchant, who built an hospital still bearing his name, is said to have made his fortune by purchasing for a trifle a quantity of sand that had been brought as ballast by a ship from Africa. As it was dry, he suspected from its weight that it contained gold, and he succeeded in filtering a treasure from it. Shakspeare, like Heriot, took the dry and heavy sand of Lodge, and made gold out of it.

Before I say more of this dramatic treasure, I must absolve myself by a confession as to some of its improbabilities. Rosalind asks her cousin Celia, “Whither shall we go?” and Celia answers, “To seek my uncle in the forest of Arden;” but arrived there, and having purchased a cottage and sheep-farm, neither the daughter nor niece of the banished Duke seem to trouble themselves much to inquire about either father or uncle. The lively and natural-hearted Rosalind discovers no impatience to embrace her sire until she has finished her masked courtship with Orlando. But Rosalind was in love, as I have been with the comedy these forty years; and love is blind; for until a late period my eyes were never couched so as to see this objection. The truth however is, that love is wilfully blind, and now that my eyes are opened, I shut them against the fault. Away with your best-proved improbabilities, when the heart has been touched and the fancy fascinated! When I think of the lovely Mrs. Jordan in this part, I have no more desire for proofs of probability on this subject, though “proofs pellucid as the morning dews,” than for “the cogent logic of a bailiff’s writ.”

In fact, though there is no rule without exceptions, and no general truth without limitation, it may be pronounced, that if you delight us in fiction, you may make our sense of probability slumber as deeply as you please.

But it may be asked whether nature and truth are to be sacrificed at the altar of fiction? No! in the main effect of fiction on the fancy, they never are nor can be sacrificed. The improbabilities of fiction are only its exceptions, whilst the truth of nature is its general law; and unless the truth of nature were in the main observed, the fictionist could not lull our vigilance as to particular improbabilities.

Apply this maxim to Shakspeare’s “As You Like It,” and our Poet will be found to make us forget what is eccentric from nature in a limited view, by showing it more beautifully probable in a larger contemplation. In this drama he snatches us out of the busy world into a woodland solitude; he makes us breathe its fresh air, partake its pastoral peace, feast on its venison, admire its bounding wild deer, and sympathise with its banished men and simple rusties. But he contrives to break its monotonous by the intrusion of courtly manners and characters. He has a fool and a philosopher, who might have hated each other at court, but who like each other in the forest. He has a shepherdess and her wooing shepherd, as natural as Arcadians; yet when the banished court comes to the country and beats it in wit, the courtiers seem as much naturalized to the forest as its natives, and the general truth of nature is equally preserved.

The events of the play are not numerous, and its interest is preserved by characters more than incidents. But what a tablet of characters! the witty and impassioned Rosalind, the love-devoted Orlando, the friendship-devoted Celia, the duty-devoted old Adam, the humorous Clown and the melancholy Jaques; all these, together with the dignified and banished Duke, make the forest of Arden an Elysium to our imagination; and our hearts are so stricken by those benevolent beings, that we easily forgive the other once culpable but at last repentant characters.

Much Ado About Nothing.—(1600.)—The principal incident of this Comedy
(i. e. the crimination of an innocent woman, in consequence of a villain procuring the lady's maid-servant to appear drest like her mistress, and receive a lover at the window,) is found in the Orlando Furioso of Ariosto, as well as in one of the novels of Bandello, who borrowed it from his compatriot poet. The story is probably still older than Ariosto. It is likely to have reached Shakspeare through Belleforest's "Cent Histoires Tragiquest," published in 1583, and translated into English shortly afterwards. There are many coincidences between the novel and the play, and some deviations in the latter from the former, which are any thing perhaps but improvements.

I fully agree with the admirers of this play in their opinion as to the most of its striking merits. The scene of the young and guiltless heroine struck speechless by the accusation of her lover, and swooning at the foot of the nuptial altar, is deeply touching. There is eloquence in her speechlessness, and we may apply the words, "Ipsa silentia terrent," amidst the silence of those who have not the ready courage to defend her, whilst her father's harsh and hasty belief of her guilt crowns the pathos of her desolation. At this crisis, the exclamation of Beatrice, the sole believer in her innocence, "O! on my soul, my cousin is belied," is a relieving and glad voice in the wilderness, which almost reconciles me to Beatrice's otherwise disagreeable character. I agree also that Shakspeare has, all the while, afforded the means of softening our dismayed compassion for Hero, by our previous knowledge of her innocence, and we are sure that she shall be exculpated. Yet who, but Shakspeare, could dry our tears of interest for Hero, by so laughable an agent as the immortal Dogberry? I beg pardon for having allowed that Falstaff makes us forget all the other comic creations of our Poet. How could I have overlooked you, my Launce, and my Launce's dog, and my Dogberry? To say that Falstaff makes us forget Dogberry is, as Dogberry himself would say, most tolerable and not to be endured. And yet Shakspeare, after pouncing this ridiculous prey, springs up, forthwith, to high dramatic effect, in making Claudio, who had mistakenly accused Hero, so repentant, as to consentingly marry another woman, her supposed cousin, under a veil, which, when it is lifted, displays his own vindicated bride, who had been supposed to have died of grief, but who is now restored to him, like another Alcestis, from the grave.

At the same time, if Shakspeare were looking over my shoulder, I could not disguise some objections to this comedy, which involuntarily strike me as debarring it from ranking among our Poet's most enchanting dramas. I am on the whole, I trust, a liberal on the score of dramatic probability. Our fancy and its faith are no niggards in believing whatsoever they may be delighted withal; but, if I may use a vulgar saying, "a willing horse should not be ridden too hard." Our fanciful faith is misused when it is spurred and impelled to believe that Don John, without one particle of love for Hero, but out of mere personal spite to Claudio, should contrive the infernal treachery which made the latter assuredly jealous. Moreover, during one half of the play, we have a disagreeable female character in that of Beatrice. Her portrait, I may be told, is deeply drawn, and minutely finished. It is; and so is that of Benedick, who is entirely her counterpart, except that he is less disagreeable. But the best-drawn portraits by the finest masters may be admirable in execution, though unpleasant to contemplate, and Beatrice's portrait is in this category. She is a tartar, by Shakspeare's own showing, and, if a natural woman, is not a pleasing representative of the sex. In befriending Hero, she almost reconciles us to her, but not entirely; for a good heart, that shows itself only on extraordinary occasions, is no sufficient atonement for a bad temper, which Beatrice evidently shows. The marriage of the marriage-hating Benedick and the furiously anti-nuptial Beatrice, is brought about by a trick. Their friends contrive to deceive them into a belief that they love each other, and partly by vanity—partly by a mutual affection, which had been disguised under the bickerings of their wit—they have their hands joined, and the consolations of religion are administered, by the priest who marries them, to the unhappy sufferers.

Mrs. Jameson, in her characters of Shakspeare's women, concludes with hoping that Beatrice will live happy with Benedick; but I have no such hope; and my final anticipation in reading the play is the certainty that Beatrice will provoke her Benedick to give her much and just conjugal castigation. She is an odious woman. Her own cousin says of her—

Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes,
Misprizing what they look on—and her wit
Values itself so highly, that to her
All matter else seems weak. She cannot love,
Nor take no shape nor project of affection,
She is so self-endeared.

I once knew such a pair: the lady was a perfect Beatrice; she railed hypocritically at wedlock before her marriage, and with bitter sincerity after it. She and her Benedick now live apart, but with entire reciprocity of sentiments, each devoutly wishing that the other may soon pass into a better world. Beatrice is not to be compared, but contrasted with Rosalind, who is equally witty; but the sparkling sayings of Rosalind are like gems upon her head at court, and like dew-drops on her bright hair in the woodland forest.
Hamlet.—(1600.—The story which mainly forms the plot of this tragedy, can be traced back to Saxo Grammaticus's "History of Denmark." From his pages it was transferred to those of Belleforest, in the latter half of the sixteenth century, from whence it passed into English under the title of "The Historie of Hamblett," a small quarto volume, printed in black letter.

Mr. Malone has also shown that some play, founded on the story of Hamlet, had been exhibited on the English stage, before 1589, a period at which it is inconceivable that Shakspeare could have written his immortal play. Mr. Malone supposes the author of that pristine Hamlet to have been Thomas Kyd; but the supposition is only conjectural, and no copy of the piece has been yet discovered. From that now lost tragedy, and the black-letter "Historie of Hamblett," our Poet must have drawn the chief historical incidents of his play.

Amidst our universal admiration of this tragedy, the precise character of its hero has nevertheless remained a problem in the hands of its admirers. Hamlet is strong in imagination, beautiful in abstracted thoughts, and great and good in his general

"'Hamlet' first appeared, according to Malone's calculation, in 1600; therefore this edition was published only three years after the tragedy had been produced. Hence we are inclined to suppose, that, in some respects, it is a more exact copy of the original than any one subsequently printed; and consequently that it may be considered as a better authority in the case of those disputed points, where common sense is on its side, than the later editions, which were more likely to give the interpolations of the players. That it shows an abundance of typographical errors is most certain; and that a great want of skill in the copyist appears in many places; but when it omits passages that reflect no credit on the understanding of their author, we are anxious to believe that it is more faithful to the text of such a man as Shakspeare, than those copies are which impute to him obscenity, without even the apology of wit.

"Many striking peculiarities in this edition of Hamlet, tend strongly to confirm our opinion, that no small portion of the ribaldry was found in the plays of our great poet, is to be assigned to the actors of his time, who flattered the vulgar taste with the constant repetition of many indecent and not a few stupid jokes; till they came to be considered, and then printed, as part of the genuine text. Of these, the two or three brief but offensive speeches of Hamlet to Ophelia, in the play-scene, act 3rd, are not to be found in the copy of 1603; and so far we are borne out in our opinion; for it is not to be supposed that Shakspeare would insert them upon cool reflection, three years after the success of his piece had been determined. Still less likely is it, that a piratical printer would reject any thing actually belonging to the play, which would prove pleasing to the vulgar bulk of those who were to be the purchasers of his publication."

I am inclined, upon the whole, to agree with these remarks, although the subject leaves us beset with uncertainties. This copy of the play was apparently pirated; but the pirate's omission of the improper passages alluded to is not a perfect proof that they were absent in the first representation of the piece. Yet it leads to such a presumption; for looking at the morality of Shakspeare's theatre in the main, he is none of your poetical artists who resort to an impure influence over the fancy. Little sallies of indecorum, he may have now and then committed; but they are few, and are eccentricities from intentions; yet he is weak, wayward, and inconsistent; fond, but barbarous towards Ophelia; proudly and justly conscious of his superiority to ordinary men, and yet, not always unjustly, a despiser of himself. The theorists respecting his character reconcile its contrarieties to their own satisfaction, but no two of them in the same manner.

Skottowe recommends us to read the black-letter "Historie of Hamblett," where we shall see his misusage of Ophelia well explained. Now in that prose history, Hamlet is sent to a solitary place within the woods, where there is brought to entrap him a fair and beautiful woman, who, with flattering speeches and all the craftiest means she could, sought to allure him: but this is not the innocent Ophelia of Shakspeare; and the prince's harsh treatment of her in poetry, derives not an atom of apology from the craft of the woman in prose. My solution of the question about Hamlet's inconsistencies is, that his morbid mind is induced both with the reality and the affectation of madness. Such cases are not unknown in the history of mental aberration. Surpassingly excellent as Shakspeare's Hamlet is, it has a fault, as a piece of dramatic structure, in the unnecessary perplexity of events towards its close, when the prince sails for England and returns, whilst all this while he might as well have been in Denmark.

The Merry Wives of Windsor.—(1601.)—The tradition that this comedy was written by our Poet at the command of Queen Elizabeth, in order that Falstaff might be exhibited in love, is too pleasant to be set aside by the gravely stupid objections of George Chalmers, who alleges that, as the Queen was now sixty-eight years old, she could be in no proper mood for such fooleries. For we know that Elizabeth danced at that age, and was wise enough to fancy herself in love. The worthy George Chalmers criticised George Buchanan without understanding the language in which he wrote; he was a dupe to young Ireland's forgery; he regarded Swift's Song by a Person of Quality, "Fluttering spread thy purple pinions, Gentle Cupid, o'er my heart!" as a sweet and sensible lyric effusion; and if he had lived to travel in a steam carriage on a rail-road, he would have joined with me in exclaiming, as I did, under the tunnel at Watford,—"Swift was a prophet when he wrote the line—'Nature must resign to Art.'" Chalmers further objects to the above tradition that Falstaff was already dramatically dead, and that no royal edict could effect his resurrection. It is a pity that Shakspeare lived too early to have canonized George Chalmers as the Saint George of Dulness.

In this drama, which displays a rich variety of incidents and a throng of well-supported characters, we are presented with an unrivalled instance of pure domestic English comedy, heightened in zest by the frolicsome adjunction of mock fairy mythology. It must be owned, that if Queen Elizabeth desired to see Falstaff in love with any one but himself, she gave a command that could not be well obeyed. But Shakspeare fulfilled his commission perhaps with an improvement on the humour of its strict letter and law, for he makes the old Knight imagine himself to be the object of love with two married women. The under-plot of Anne Page and Fenton, and the under-characters of Slender, Evans, and Dr. Caius, are perpetual aids to our interest and mirth in this piece; and after it is done, we anticipate nothing less than Falstaff himself sitting down to supper in the Garter Inn at Windsor, and, over a pottle of sack, setting the company in a roar, by the description of his agonies when he was carried out of Mrs. Page's house in a basket of foul linen, pitched into the Thames, beaten as an old witch, and pinched by the fairies as a horned mortal.

Twelfth Night.—The date of this play is assigned by Mr. Dyce to 1601. And Mr. Malone was incorrect in supposing that it appeared six years later; for Mr. Collier, in his History of Dramatic Poetry, I. 327, shows that it was indisputably written before 1602, for in the February of that year it was an established play.

There are some traits of similarity between Shakspeare's plot and the thirtieth story in the second part of Bandello's novels; but the former has a nearer resemblance to the "Historie of Apolonius and Sylla," in Rich's Farewell to Military Profession," published in 1583*; and it is more probable that the poet consulted Rich than Bandello. Still, if Shakspeare drew from Rich's story, he has altered it for the better. Rich makes Viola previously in love with the Prince, whom she subsequently serves as a page, and in pursuit of whom she forsakes her friends and country, breaking the domestic ties of nature to get, in male attire, into the house of a man who had not fancied her in the garb of her own sex. Shakspeare says nothing of any attachment on the part of Viola previous to her being a helpless and expatriated orphan, and obliged to get her bread as a page, by disguising her sex.

The entire story, as it is told by Shakspeare, may be thus abridged. Sebastian and his sister Viola, were twins, born at Messaline, and from their birth they so much resembled each other that, but for the difference in their dress, they could not be known apart. When grown up to youth, they made a sea voyage together, and were shipwrecked on the coast of Illyria. The captain of the vessel, with a few sailors that were saved, got to land in a small boat, and with them they brought Viola safe on shore, where she, instead of rejoicing at her own deliverance, lamented her brother's loss; but the captain comforted her with the assurance that he had seen her brother, when the ship split, fasten himself to a strong mast, on which, as long as he could see anything of him for the distance, he perceived him borne up above the waves. Viola now found herself in a strange country, and asked the captain who was its governor? The captain told her that it was governed by Orsino,

“a duke, noble in nature as well as dignity.” Viola said that she had heard her father speak of Orsino. The captain further said, that it was the general talk that Orsino sought the love of fair Olivia, whose brother had recently died, and for whose loss she was so afflicted that she had abjured the sight and company of men. Viola, herself tenderly mourning for a brother, wished she could live with this lady; but it might not so be, because the Lady Olivia admitted no person to her house, not even the duke himself. Then Viola formed another project, which was, in a man’s habit, to serve the Duke Orsino as a page. The captain, being her friend, and having some interest at court, got her presented to Orsino under the feigned name of Cesario. The duke was wonderfully pleased with the handsome youth, whom he made his page, and in the progress of his favour entrusted with the history of his love for Olivia, and even sent on an embassy to woo her in his name, as he had no hopes of being himself admitted to her. Cesario, meanwhile, had had the misfortune to have fallen in love with her lord; but she accepts the embassy, and admits of no excuse or refusal to be presented to Olivia. The haughty beauty, curious to see this peremptory visitant, receives Cesario, and at first sight is enamoured of the supplicant who comes to plead for another. She sends a servant after Cesario, with a diamond ring, under the pretence that it had been left as a present from the Duke. Viola returns to Orsino’s palace, and relates the ill success of the negotiation; but is sent back a second time to Olivia, who betrays her attachment to Cesario, and says, “If you would undertake another suit, I had rather hear you solicit than music from the spheres.” Viola had scarcely left the Lady Olivia’s house, when a gentleman, another of her rejected suitors besides the Duke, having heard of Olivia favouring Cesario, challenges the poor girl in boy’s attire to fight a duel, and from this challenge she escapes with difficulty. But the knot is soon untied by the arrival of her brother Sebastian, who has been saved also from shipwreck; he finds his way, by that superintending providence which watches over all true dramatic characters, to Olivia’s house. She, unconscious that he is not Cesario, receives his addresses with rapture, and, lest he should change his mind, gets a priest, who instantly unites them. Viola acknowledges her sex, and the Duke, conceiving a new passion, marries her and consoles himself for Olivia.

This is a dry abbreviation of the story of “Twelfth Night,” but who can abridge Shakspeare’s stories, or tell them in any other language than his own? The delicacy with which a modest maiden makes love to her lord in male disguise, and the pathos with which she describes her imaginary, but too real self—when “concealment, like a worm i’ the bud, preyed on her damask cheek,” and the sudden growth of Orsino’s attachment to her on the discovery of her sex, and on the recalling of her words from his memory to his understanding, form beauties in this comedy which no touch of human revision could improve.

The comic, and the grave and tender, were never more finely amalgamated than here. The characters play booty, as it were; they are in collusion to aid each other, though seemingly hostile. The roguish Maria, the honest convivial Sir Toby Belch, the poor Sir Andrew Aguecheck, ambitioning vices which he could only ape, and the exquisitely vulgar coxcomb Malvolio, are all most precious beings.

The character of Viola is so sweetly peculiar, that I have never seen justice done to it upon the stage. Mrs. Siddons was too tragic for it, and Mrs. Jordan was too comic.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA, (1602), was entered at Stationers’ Hall, February (1603). It was therefore probably written in the previous year. It was printed again in 1609, with a preface, not by the author, but the editor, who says, that “it had never been staled with the stage, never clapperclawed by the palms of the vulgar.” But it is entered, in 1603, as having been acted “by my lord chamberlain’s men.” Mr. Malone thinks that these two discordant accounts may be thus reconciled. It might have been performed in 1602 at court by the Lord Chamberlain’s servants (as many plays at that time were), and yet not have been exhibited on the public stage till some years afterwards.

A. W. Schlegel says that Shakspeare wrote “Troilus and Cressida” as a mere poetical pastime, with no view to its being acted; and assuredly, if the poet meant to produce a piece ill-suited for the stage, he succeeded in his design; but he gave it unfortunately another negative quality, namely, that of being but imperfectly agreeable in private perusal.

Shakspeare drew the chief materials of this drama from Caxton’s “Recuyel of the Histories of Troy,” and from Chaucer’s “Troilus and Cresseide.” A good many books of Chapman’s translation of the Iliad had appeared before the play was written, though the whole was not published till a year after; so that Shakspeare may plead the excuse of ignorance and false information for his historical injustice to Achilles, in making him treacherously murder the unarmed Hector; though the translated parts of the Iliad already published ought to have taught him a fairer conception of Pelides’s character. The poet, has gleaned, in general, so just a conception of the chiefs in the Trojan siege, that his making Achilles a cowardly assassin is more surprising even than his anachronism of Hector quoting Aristotle. His Ulysses is Homeric, and the Cressida described by Ulysses in Shakspeare, is a rich portraiture.

It is certainly, however, not one of our great dramatist’s masterpieces. The language is too often tortuously and tumultuously figurative, and is so cramped with Shakspeare’s frequent fault of trying to be over-muscular in expression, that there are almost whole scenes which, if they had been written by a satiric imitator of his style, I should say were a cruel caricature of Shakspeare.

The plot, if there can be said to be any, gives us no consolatory justice in its dénouement. Troilus always goes off the stage fighting, but he is never killed, and Hector dies in his stead; which is at once provoking and lamentable. As to Cressida, however, I think Shakspeare has made her a more consistent being than Chaucer. The Shakspearian Cressida has seduction in the very motion of her foot; she is wanton and volatile, and her perfidy to Troilus is conceivable. But Chaucer’s Cressida is a wise, affectionate and modest woman, forsaking a young and fond lover—a contradiction in nature.
HENRY VIII. was brought out in 1603, according to Malone, Boswell, and Dyce. Mr. Chalmers, however, alleges that it was neither written nor represented before 1613; whilst Mr. Gifford is convinced that it was produced in 1601, and I am inclined to his opinion. At least I am utterly against George Chalmers's date of the piece, from the improbability that Shakspeare should have sat down to compose a play celebrating the elevation of Anne Boleyn, and the birth of her daughter Elizabeth, in the 10th year of James's reign.

The allusive compliments to James are generally and justly regarded as additions foisted into the piece at its representation during the new reign; and I should suspect "Henry VIII." to have been written at the latest in 1602, for in the March of the subsequent year, Elizabeth fell into the melancholy of which she died. It seems to me, therefore, more probable that Shakspeare should have written a drama likely to please both the court and the public before the sunset of the Queen's popularity, than during its twilight, when she herself perceived that the people were preparing their orisons for the expected sovereign.

The general opinion certainly seems to coincide with Gifford's, that "Henry VIII." appeared upon the stage in the reign of Elizabeth. I have heard it, however, alleged as a matter of surprise (supposing this to be the fact) that Shakspeare, in the life-time of Elizabeth, should have brought before the public a tragedy which affects us with the deepest sorrow for the repudiation of Queen Katherine, and which makes an exposure of Henry's hypocrisy and cruelty towards her; together with the scene of her dying heart-broken in consequence of Anne Boleyn's triumph over the King's capricious affections. But my answer is, that Shakspeare could not have contrived a play more conducive to Queen Elizabeth's interests. He affects us deeply with Queen Katherine, but she dies soon enough to leave us interested in the lovely Anne Boleyn—pleased with her compassion for the fallen consort whom she had supplanted, and well disposed to hear the prophetic prediction of Cranmer, that Anne might "produce a gem in her offspring that would lighten all this isle." Shakspeare certainly did expose Henry VIII. in this play, but if it be not a paradox to say so, he exposed him under a decent covering. He never allows us for a moment to suppose that he (the poet himself) believed the King conscientious in his divorce of Katherine, or impelled by any other motive than his passion for Anne Boleyn. To be sure he sets forth all the formalities of Henry's scruples, but he makes those scruples only the transparent veils of his real motives; nevertheless, he lets down Henry as gently as may be. In our abstracted estimation we certainly condemn him, but the poet mitigates our hatred of him, by showing him up as not ill-hearted towards his people; and he gives him a blunt wilfulness that is indigenously English. Poetical art perhaps never flattered a monster with such palpable likeness, and yet with such impalpable and cunning mitigation. He suborns his guilty love itself to seduce our sympathy by the beauty of its object.

Thus Shakspeare contrives, though at the sacrifice of some historical truth, to raise the matron Katherine to our highest admiration, whilst at the same time he keeps us in love with Anne Boleyn, and on tolerable terms with Henry VIII. But who does not see, under all this wise management, the drift of his design, namely, to compliment Elizabeth as a virgin queen, to interest us in the memory of her mother Anne Boleyn; and to impress us with a belief of her innocence, though she suffered as an alleged traitress to the bed of Henry? The private death of Katherine of Arragon might have been still remembered by many living persons, but the death of Anne Boleyn was still more fresh in public recollection; and a wiser expedient could not have been devised for asserting the innocence of Elizabeth’s mother, than by portraying Henry’s injustice towards Queen Katherine. For we are obliged to infer that, if the tyrant could thus misuse the noble Katherine, the purest innocence in her lovely successor could be no shield against his cruelty.

Measure for Measure (1603).—We are much indebted to George Steevens for an advice which he gave to Nichols the bookseller to republish six old plays, on which Shakspeare founded his “Measure for Measure,” “Comedy of Errors,” “Taming the Shrew,” “King John,” “King Henry IV.” and “King Henry V.,” and “King Lear.”

George Whetstone’s “Promos and Cassandra” evidently afforded Shakspeare the plot and principal characters of “Measure for Measure.” It is exceedingly interesting to peruse that old play, not only from its possessing a certain degree of intrinsic merit, but still more from its being the ground which Shakspeare hallowed by his tread, and fertilised into fresh beauty. Whetstone’s King of Hungary is Shakspeare’s Duke of Vienna, Promos is the prototype of Angelo, Cassandra that of Isabella, Andrugio is Claudio, and Whetstone’s Paulina corresponds to Shakspeare’s Julia, beloved of Claudio. The old poet has no female counterpart to Shakspeare’s Mariana, for Cassandra is ultimately married to Promos, and Mariana was a necessary character to the more recent dramatist, as Isabella is supposed at the conclusion to accept of the Duke’s hand. The Clown, Mother Overdone’s servant, in the old play, is an original, and a sharp rogue. In general, I remark that in the vulgar personages of Whetstone there is a grosser vulgarity than in those of Shakspeare; a difference which may be fairly attributed to the barbarism of the elder times.

The versification of Whetstone’s play is divided between the old rhyming alexandrine measure, and that of the more modern heroic blank verse. The language of “Promos and Cassandra” has at times a touching simplicity, but in the eloquence of poetry it will, of course, bear no comparison with “Measure for Measure,” nor in the strong conception of character. When I say this, I am far from meaning that I think Shakspeare a multifariously strong designer of character in “Measure for Measure.” The Duke is a very whimsically good man; and, in short, there is nothing highly heroical in the drama excepting Isabel. I remember being once coy in my admiration of this seemingly cold heroine, but better reflection has taught me to think otherwise. What would become of the human race, if the pride of woman in her purity were capable of compromise? Adieu to all domestic affections! The dishonouring of the sex is introducing death into the source of life. This thought never struck me more forcibly than in reading the scene in Whetstone's play in which Cassandra comes disguised as a boy to the house of Promos, in order to purchase her brother's life by the surrender of her virtue, and with the hope promised to her by Promos that he will skin over her shame by marrying her: a hope that deepens her degradation. I said to myself, Thanks to Shakspeare that Isabella would have seen a thousand brothers perish sooner than have submitted to such a shame! At the same time, though "Measure for Measure" infinitely overtops "Promos and Cassandra" in poetic conception, the former play is not one of Shakspeare's least exceptional pieces, and in probability of incident it suffers by comparison with the latter. Whetstone is consistent and probable when he resolves and crowns the plot by the King of Hungary and Bohemia arriving at the town of Julio and passing judgment on his delegated governors; but what could move Shakspeare to make the Duke appoint Angelo his temporary viceroy, after he had known the base treatment which Angelo had given to his betrothed Mariana? Besides, the Duke's escape from detection by his most familiar subjects and courtiers, under the disguise of a friar, is, to say the least, very difficult to be fancied.

I have said already, however, that if you tell a story pleasantly to the fancy, that power of the mind is not severely scrupulous in its belief. The readers of "Measure for Measure" must decide on this point for themselves. If they find much pleasure in the drama, they will pardon much of its improbability. In the drama, as in the merry conversation of common life, we forgive a man for telling white-lie anecdotes; but they must be lily-white lies, and must be fragrant with merriment. At the same time, we must own that Shakspeare, in "Measure for Measure," presumes a little too far on his right to improbability, and, to use a vulgar phrase, "draws a long bow."

The tragedy of Othello—(1604)—has evident marks of its plot and incidents having been largely borrowed from the 7th novel of the 3rd decade of Cinthio's Hecatommithi. Dunlop, in his History of Fiction*, says that the characters of Desdemona, Iago, and Cassio, are taken from Cinthio with scarcely a shade of difference. As to the Cassio of Shakspeare, he is a good-natured and common-place man, whose portraiture would be nothing unless it had a place in so splendid a tablet as that of our poet's tragedy, so that I shall waive the trouble of inquiring how far he is like or unlike his alleged prototype, the Cypriot Captain: but the character of Desdemona is not taken from Cinthio; the Desdemona of the Italian novel degrades her husband by the accusation, "that Moors were naturally moved to anger and a thirst for revenge by every trifling occasion;" she is the same in sex, honesty, and circumstances, but she is not the gentle Desdemona of Shakspeare: our poet's heroine, instead of being borrowed from Cinthio, with scarcely a shade of difference, is not borrowed at all.

The same thing may be said of Iago; the villain of the novel has his mainspring motive in his conjugal suspicion of the Moor having had intimacy with his wife. Shakspeare has hinted at such a circumstance in Scene III., Act I., of the tragedy.

when he makes Iago say, that there was a rumour of Othello having been too intimate with his wife. But the villain shows, by his own expressions, that he has no true faith in the scandal. His hatred to Othello is wholly founded in official disappointment; and neither towards the crisis, nor amidst it, do we ever dream of Iago having been actuated by so pardonable a motive as conjugal jealousy. Besides, the cunning and intellect of the poet's and novelist's villain, are different beyond all comparison. Between the Moor of Cinthio and of Shakspeare, it was still more useless to institute any comparison: the former gets his wife killed by beating her with a bag of sand, and tries to save himself from suspicion by breaking down a beam in the ceiling, placed as if it had fallen by accident. In the novel, the Moor is arrested, carried to Venice, put to the rack, and afterwards assassinated: this is not Shakspeare's Moor of Venice!

Some allege that Iago is too villainous to be a natural character, but those allegers are simpleton judges of human nature: Fletcher of Saltoun has said that there is many a brave soldier who never wore a sword; in like manner, there is many an Iago in the world who never committed murder. Iago’s “LEARNED SPIRIT” and exquisite intellect, happily ending in his own destruction, were as requisite for the moral of the piece as for the sustaining of Othello’s high character; for we should have despised the Moor, if he had been deceived by a less consummate villain than “honest Iago.” The latter is a true character, and the philosophical truth of this tragedy makes it terrible to peruse, in spite of its beautiful poetry. Why has Aristotle said that tragedy purifies the passions? for our last wish and hope in reading Othello is, that the villain Iago may be well tortured.

This drama, by itself, would have immortalized any poet; then what are we to think of Shakspeare, when we may hesitate to pronounce it to be the best of his plays! Certainly, however, it has no superior in his own theatre, and no rival in any other. The Moor is at once one of the most complex and astonishing, and yet most intelligible pictures, that fiction ever portrayed of human character. His grandeur of soul is natural, and we admire it; his gentleness is equally natural, and we love him for it; his appearance we cannot but conceive to be majestic, and his physiognomy benevolent. The Indian prince, Ramoon Roy, who delighted all hearts in London, a few years ago, and who died to our sorrow, was the only living being I ever saw who came up to my conception of Othello’s appearance. But the Moor had been bred a barbarian, and though his bland nature and intercourse with the more civilised world had long warred against and conquered the half-natural habits of barbarism, yet those habits, at last, broke out, and prevailed in the moments of his jealousy. He is not a jealous man by nature, but, being once made jealous, he reverts to savageness, and becomes as terrible as he had before been tender. This contrast in his conduct, however, is not an Ovidian metamorphosis, but a transition so probably managed as to seem unavoidable; yet, the naturalness of the change prevents neither our terror nor pity: on the contrary, the sweetness of his character before its fall, is the smoothness of the stream before its cataract; and his bland dispositions, heretofore displayed, appear, like a rich autumnal day, contrasted with the thunder-storm of its evening.
The terrors of the storm are also made more striking to our imagination by the gentleness of the victim on which they fall—Desdemona. Had one symptom of an angry spirit appeared in that lovely martyr, our sympathy with her would have been endangered: but Shakspeare knew better.

King Lear.—(1605.)—A play, entitled "The True Chronicle Historie of King Leare and his Three Daughters," was entered at Stationers' Hall, in 1594: the author's name is unknown. As this senior "King Leare" had had possession of the stage for several years, it would scarcely be doubtful that Shakspeare had seen it, even if there were not coincident passages to prove that he borrowed some ideas from it. Mr. Skottowe alleges that our Poet also dipped for materials into an old ballad, on the same subject, which he conceives to have been written anterior to Shakspeare's Lear; but the date of the old ballad is utterly unknown, and Mr. Skottowe's certainty is at most conjecture. He is more right in illustrating the probability of our Poet having drawn the parts of Gloster and Edgar from the story of the Paphlagonian King, in Sir Philip Sydney's "Arcadia."

The elder tragedy is simple and touching. There is one entire scene in it—the meeting of Cordelia with her father, in a lonely forest—which, with Shakspeare's Lear in my memory and heart, I could scarce read with dry eyes. The Lear antecedent to our Poet's Lear is a pleasing tragedy; yet the former, though it precedes the latter, is not its prototype, and its mild merits only show us the wide expanse of difference between respectable talent and commanding inspiration. The two Lear's have nothing in common but their aged weakness, their general goodness of heart, their royal rank, and their misfortunes. The ante-shakspearian Lear is a patient, simple old man; who bears his sorrows very meekly, till Cordelia arrives with her husband the king of France, and his victorious army, and restores her father to the throne of Britain. Shakspeare's Lear presents the most awful picture that was ever conceived of the weakness of senility, contrasted with the strength of despair. The dawn of his madness, his fearful consciousness of its approach, its progress and completion, are studies to instruct the most philosophical inquirer into the aberrations of the human mind. The meeting of Lear, Edgar, and the Fool, and the mixture in that scene of real and pretended madness, is one of Shakspeare's most perfect strokes, which is seldom unnoticed by the commonest of his critics.

In the old play, Lear has a friend Perillus, who moves our interest, though not so deeply as Kent, in the later and greater drama. But, independently of Shakspeare's having created a new Lear, he has sublimated the old tragedy into a new one, by an entire originality in the spiritual portraiture of its personages. In the characters of Gloster's two sons, the beneficent Edgar and the bastard Edmund, he has created an under-plot which is finely and naturally interwoven with the outlinear plot. In fine, wherever Shakspeare works on old materials, you will find him not wiping dusted gold, but extracting gold from dust where none but himself could have made the golden extraction.
Macbeth.—(1606.)—Enlightened criticism and universal opinion have so completely set the seal of celebrity on this tragedy, that it will stand whilst our language exists as a monument of English genius. Nay, it will outlast the present form of our language, and speak to generations unborn in parts of the earth that are yet uninhabited. No drama in any national theatre, taking even that of Greece into the account, has more wonderfully amalgamated the natural and the supernatural—or made the substances of truth more awful by their superstitious shadows—than has the tragedy of Macbeth. The progress of Macbeth in crime is an unparalleled lecture in ethical anatomy. The heart of a man, naturally prone to goodness, is exposed so as to teach us clearly through what avenues of that heart the black drop of guilt found its way to expel the more innocent blood. A semblance of superstitious necessity is no doubt preserved in the actions of Macbeth; and a superficial reader might say that the Witches not only tempted, but necessitated, Macbeth to murder Duncan. But this is not the case, for Shakspeare has contrived to give at once the awful appearance of preternatural impulse on Macbeth’s mind, and yet visibly to leave him a free agent, and a voluntary sinner. If we could imagine Macbeth conjuring the hags to re-appear on the eve of his inevitable death, and accusing them of having caused him to murder Duncan, the Witches might very well say, “We did not oblige you to any such act, we only foretold what would have happened even if you had not murdered Duncan, namely, that you should be Scotland’s king. But you were impatient. You did not consider that, if the prediction was true, it was no duty of yours to bestir yourself in the business; but you had a wife, a fair wife, who goaded you on to the murder.” If the Witches had spoken thus, there would be matter in the tragedy itself to bear them out; for Macbeth absolutely says to himself,—“If it be thus decreed, it must be, and there is no necessity for me to stir in the affair.”

Julius Caesar.—(1607.)—Shakspeare had achieved wonders in subjects of romance, and yet he had succeeded but indifferently in the early part of his career in a plot that came to him through translation from Plautus. I venture to add, that he was not eminently happy in his “Troilus and Cressida;” so that a reader, unapprised of the event, might be pardonable for fearing that in classical subjects he might appear like Samson shaven of his hair. But, three out of his four classical dramas, “Julius Caesar,” “Antony and Cleopatra,” and “Coriolanus,” are so consummate that he must be pronounced as much at home in Roman as in romantic history. Already he had shown, in his allusions to Pagan mythology, that he had inhaled its sweetest aroma, distilled, not by toiling scholarship, but by the fire of his genius. But, now that he was in the fullest manhood of his mind, he could borrow more from the ancients than the bloom and breath of their mythology. He cast his eyes both in their quiet and in their kindled inspiration, both as a philosopher and as a poet, on the page of classic history; he discriminated its characters with the light of philosophy; and he irradiated truth without encroaching on its solid shapes with the hues of fancy. What is Brutus, the real hero of the tragedy, but the veritable Brutus of Plutarch,— unaltered in substance, though by poetry new hallowed to the imagination? And what else is Portia? For the picture of that wedded pair, at once august and tender, human nature and the dignity of conjugal faith are indebted. Brutus and Portia have a transient discord, to be sure, but it is like one in perfect music that heightens harmony,—when Brutus says,

You are indeed my honourable wife,
And dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit this sad heart.

I cannot, on the whole, but remark a more matured tone of philosophy in the classical and later, than in the earlier and romantic, dramas of Shakspeare. By his classical dramas I mean the three great ones, "Julius Cæsar," "Antony and Cleopatra," and "Coriolanus," for "Timon" cannot be ranked among his masterpieces. That he displays in the characters of Juliet and Hamlet a great knowledge of human nature is undeniable; but Juliet, though a lovelier being than Cleopatra, is not such a finished and inexpressibly subtle portraiture as the enchantress of Egypt. The philosophy that illuminates Hamlet has, possibly from the hero being neither entirely in his perfect mind, nor entirely out of it, a certain vagueness and obscurity, unlike the deep and clear insight into human nature displayed in the classical dramas which I have named. I attribute this difference not to the influence of classical or uncritical subjects, but to the ripened growth of the Poet's mind.

It is evident from the opening scene of "Julius Cæsar," that Shakspeare, even dealing with classical subjects, laughed at the classic fear of putting the ludicrous and sublime into juxta-position. After the low and farcical jests of the saucy cobbler—the eloquence of the Roman tribune, Marullus, "springs upcards like a pyramid of fire."

Act I. Scene I. Rome.—A Street.

_Enter Flavius, Marullus, and a Rabble of Citizens._

Flavius. Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home! Is this a holiday? What! know ye not, Being mechanical, you ought not walk Upon a labouring day without the sign Of your profession!—Speak, what trade art thou? Carpenter. Why, sir, a carpenter. Marullus. Where is thy leathern apron and thy What dost thou with thy best apparel on? [Rule! You sir, what trade are you? Cobbler. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman I am but, as you would say, a cobbler. Marullus. But what trade art thou! answer me directly! Cobbler. A trade sir, that I hope I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed sir, a mender of bad soles.

Marullus. What trade, thou knave, thou naughty knave, what trade?

Cobbler. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me, Yet if you be out, sir, I can mend you. Marullus. What meanest thou by that? I Mend me! thou saucy fellow. Cobbler. Why, sir, cobbler you. Flavius. Thou art a cobbler, art thou! Cobbler. Truly, sir, all that I live by is with the awl. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trode upon neat's leather, have gone upon my handywork. Flavius. But wherefore art not in thy shop today? Why dost thou lead these men about the streets? Cobbler. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday to see Caesar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Marullus. Wherefore rejoice! What conquest brings he home,
What tributaries follow him to Rome,
To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels!
You blocks, you stones! you worse than senseless things!
Oh! you hard hearts! you cruel men of Rome!
Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yea, to chimney tops,
Your infants in your arms, and there have sat
The live-long day, with patient expectation,

To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome;
And when you saw his chariot but appear,
Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tiber trembled underneath her banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds,
Made in her concave shores?
And do you now put on your best attire,
And do you now pull out a holiday,
And do you now strew flowers in his way,
That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?
Be gone!
Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,
Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this ingratitude.

It can be no great exaggeration to say, that these lines in the speech of Marullus are among the most magnificent in the English language. They roll over my mind's ear like the lordliest notes of a cathedral organ, and yet they succeed immediately to the ludicrous idea of a cobbler leading a parcel of fools about the streets, in order to make them wear out their shoes, and get himself into more work.

Timon of Athens.—(1610.)—I am at a loss to account for the strong likeness of our poet's misanthrope to that of Lucian in this tragedy, if tragedy it may be called, that leaves us more affected by its comic dialogue than by its tragic conclusion. From North's translation of Plutarch he could not have derived a conception of Timon so near to that of the Greek fictionist. I have never seen the MS. comedy entitled "Timon," which is mentioned by Malone, but I am told that it bears only a slight resemblance to Shakspeare's play. Neither will our poet's probable acquaintance with "Painter's Palace of Pleasure," in which Timon's story is told, account for the Lucian-like appearance of Shakspeare's hero. Yet there is no proof that Lucian had been translated at this period into English. It is agreeable to remark that, in general, our poet's dramatic power seems to improve with his advancing years. In several of his later masterpieces, the fruitfulness of his fancy remains fresh, whilst its fruits are mellowed and enriched by more skilful cultivation. But I cannot say that I consider Timon as one of the proofs of this general observation; on the contrary, I should set it down as an exception. Schlegel puts us off with comparing it to one of the biting satires of Juvenal; but a tragedy has no business to resemble a biting satire. It contains striking passages, and an amusing portion of cynical philosophy, particularly in the conference of the half-rational though hateful cur, Apmantus, and the human mad dog Timon. But it is far from displaying Shakspeare improved either in his philosophy or his philanthropy at the time he wrote it. It is the production of his spleen more than of his heart. The interwoven episode of Alcibiades is uninteresting, for it is a moot point whether he or the Athenians were in the wrong. Altogether "Timon" is a pillar in his theatric fame that might be removed without endangering the edifice.
Cymbeline.—(1609.)—The taste of our age no longer listens—either to the minute criticisms of Mrs. Lennox, or the trenchant sentence of Dr. Johnson, in disparagement of this delightful drama. Both of those impugners of "Cymbeline" proceeded on a principle that is mortally pernicious to our enjoyment of dramatic poetry, namely, that, before we allow ourselves to be pleased with a piece of fiction, we ought to sift and scrutinize, to the uttermost, every ground for our fanciful belief. This is a mode of dispreparing us for the enjoyment of fanciful belief that can be practised in perfection only by minds that have not within them the seeds of poetical enjoyment; and in this class of mind Johnson may very well pair off with Mrs. Lennox. Both of their souls, if they had been rubbed together for a year, could not have produced a spark of poetical feeling between them; and, whenever they dip their pens in their own hearts, they are critical arbitrators against true poetry.

In order to enjoy the romantic drama, we must accept of the terms on which the romantic poet offers us enjoyment. The outline of his piece in such a poem as "Cymbeline" will at once show that the scene is placed remotely as to time, in order to soften its improbabilities to the imagination by the effect of distance. We all know that in landscapes and landscape-painting the undefined appearance of objects resulting from distance has a charm different from that of their distinctness in the foreground; and the same principle holds true in the romantic drama, when the poet avowedly leaves his scenes open to the objection of improbability, owing to the very nature of romantic fiction. But the matter-of-fact critics leave no toleration or licence for our fanciful credulity. They say you must mathematically prove this or that fact, before you can lawfully enjoy the fancy of it. Now this is the converse but exact semblance of intolerance in religion. The religionists say that you are damned, if you doubt; the strait-waistcoat critics tell you that you are a bad judge of the drama if you dare to believe, even in fancy, what our mathematics prove to be heresy.

Of all plays in the world, I think these remarks are particularly applicable to Shakspeare's Cymbeline. With my heart open to romantic belief, I conscientiously suppose all the boldly imagined events of the drama—I am rewarded with the delightful conceptions of Imogen, of her arrival at the cave of her banished brothers, with its innumerable beauties, and with its happy conclusion.

This play is perhaps the fittest in Shakspeare's whole theatre to illustrate the principle, that great dramatic genius can occasionally venture on bold improbabilities, and yet not only shrive the offence, but leave us enchanted with the offender. The wager of Posthumus, in "Cymbeline," is a very unlikely one. But let us deal honestly with this objection and admit the wager to be improbable; still we have enough in the play to make us forget it and more than forgive it. Shakspeare foresaw that from this licence he could deduce delightful scenes and situations, and he scrupled not to hazard it. The faulty incident may thus be compared to a little fountain, which, though impregnated with some unpalatable mineral, gives birth to a large stream; and that stream, as it proceeds, soon loses its taint of taste in the sweet and many waters that join its course.
Be the wager what it may, it gives birth to charming incidents. It introduces us to a feast of the chastest luxury, in the sleeping scene, when we gaze on the shut eye-lids of Imogen; and that scene (how ineffably rich as well as modest!) is followed by others that swell our interest to enchantment. Imogen hallows to the imagination everything that loves her, and that she loves in return; and when she forgives Posthumus, who may dare to refuse him pardon? Then in her friendship with her unconscious brothers of the mountain cave, what delicious touches of romance! I think I exaggerate not, in saying that Shakspere has nowhere breathed more pleasurable feelings over the mind, as an antidote to tragic pain, than in Cymbeline.

Antony and Cleopatra.—(1608.)—If I were to select any historical play of Shakspere, in which he has combined an almost literal fidelity to history with an equally faithful adherence to the truth of nature, and in which he superinduces the merit of skilful dramatic management, it would be the above play. In his portrait of Antony there is, perhaps, a flattered likeness of the original by Plutarch; but the similitude loses little of its strength by Shakspere's softening and keeping in the shade his traits of cruelty. In Cleopatra, we can discern nothing materially different from the vouched historical sorceress; she nevertheless has a more vivid meteoric and versatile play of enchantment in Shakspere's likeness of her, than in a dozen of other poetical copies in which the artists took much greater liberties with historical truth:—he paints her as if the gipsy herself had cast her spell over him, and given her own witchcraft to his pencil.

At the same time, playfully interesting to our fancy as he makes this enchantress, he keeps us far from a vicious sympathy. The asp at her bosom, that lulls its nurse asleep, has no poison for our morality. A single glance at the devoted and dignified Octavia recalls our homage to virtue; but with delicate skill he withholds the purer woman from prominent contact with the wanton Queen, and does not, like Dryden, bring the two to a scolding match. The latter poet's "All for Love" was regarded by himself as his masterpiece, and is by no means devoid of merit; but so inferior is it to the prior drama, as to make it disgraceful to British taste for one hundred years that the former absolutely banished the latter from the stage. A French critic calls Great Britain the island of Shakspere's idolaters; yet so it happens, in this same island, that Dryden's "All for Love" has been acted ten times oftener than Shakspere's "Antony and Cleopatra.*"

Dryden's Mark Antony is a weak voluptuary from first to last. Not a sentence of manly virtue is ever uttered by him that seems to come from himself; and whenever he expresses a moral feeling, it appears not to have grown up in his own nature, but to have been planted there by the influence of his friend Ventidius, like a flower in

*It ought to be kept in remembrance, nevertheless, that the inconstant representations of a popular dramatic poet's pieces on the stage is not a proof of his popularity having expired, or being even on the decline. The frequenter of the theatre demand variety. Molière is as much as ever a favourite of France, yet the pieces of other comic writers are oftener represented. a child's garden, only to wither and take no root. Shakspeare's Antony is a very different being. When he hears of the death of his first wife, Fulvia, his exclamation
"There's a great spirit gone!" and his reflections on his own enthralment by Cleopatra, mark the residue of a noble mind. A queen, a siren, a Shakspeare's Cleopatra alone could have entangled Mark Antony, whilst an ordinary wanton could have enslaved Dryden's hero.

Coriolanus.—(1610.)—Mr. Macready has restored this noble tragedy, in its original shape, to the stage. With all my love and respect for John Kemble's memory, I cannot but regret that he mutilated Shakspeare's drama, in what he called fitting it for the stage. Kemble made some use of a tragedy named Coriolanus, written by Thomson, in this misadaptation of the piece to the stage, how much I have not ascertained; but whatever use he made of it, Thomson is not responsible for Kemble's substitutions: for he was dead long before Kemble began his mutilations of Shakspeare, and I believe left his Coriolanus only as a posthumous MS. This much may be said in behalf of Kemble's half-changeling producti'n, that it adheres for the most part to Shakspeare's text.

During this long interval, nevertheless, it was not forgotten. The enlightened public, in 1682, permitted Nahum Tate, the executioner of King David, to correct the plays of Shakspeare, and he laid his hangman hands on "Coriolanus." He made Valeria a prattling and rattling lady; Aufidius threatens to violate Virgilia before her husband's face; Nigridia boasts that he has racked young Marcius the son of Coriolanus, and that he had thrown him with all his limbs broken into the arms of Volumnia, and she, his grandmother, soon enters mad, with the pretty mangled boy in her arms. This mode of re-writing Shakspeare was, for the time being, called correcting the saint of our stage. In like manner the Russians correct their patron saint when they find him deaf to their prayers for more favourable weather;—they take him out in his wooden effigy and whip him soundly and publicity.

I suspect they borrowed this custom from our mode of correcting Shakspeare.

Winter's Tale.—(1611.)—The story of this tale is taken, with some alterations, from the "Dorastus and Fawnia" of Robert Greene.

After a hundred perusals of this play I sat down to it, for the last time, fresh from reading Mrs. Lennox's objections to it; and a dreadful list of them she seems at first sight to make out; but when you come to the piece itself, some of those objections disappear, as if conscious of their falsehood, and the rest insensibly melt away. The jealousy of Leontes, though rash and irrational, is not unnatural in a hasty and wilful man. The lapse of time is explained by an apology from the lips of Time himself. The silence of Florizel towards his Perdita, and her supposed father and brother, on shipboard, has a fair excuse in the impossibility of the Poet's representing dramatically a narrated event; and the greatest of the alleged improbabilities, namely that of Hermione refusing reconciliation with her husband.
may be explained by the conceivableness of a mother being unwilling to re-embrace a husband who had ordered the murder of her child, until that husband had repented, and the lost Perdita had been restored. Mrs. Lennox says, that the statue scene in the "Winter's Tale" is low and ridiculous. I am sure Mrs. Siddons used to make it appear to us in a different light. Let Mrs. Lennox* and her followers, if she has any, get a patent for this belief. When a projector asked a reward from James I. for having invented the art of flying, the King offered him a patent for it; the humbler privilege of an exclusive right to crawl upon all-fours ought to be given to the believers of Shakspeare's statue scene in the "Winter's Tale" being low and ridiculous. Mrs. Lennox says that the original story of "Greene" is more purely moral than that of our Poet. Now in the original tale, the father of Fawnia attempts to seduce his own daughter. Shakspeare has omitted this exquisite trait of morality.

THE TEMPEST.—(1611.)—This is believed to be the last written of Shakspeare's plays†.

The public feelings of England had recently been much interested by the adventures of Sir George Somers, admiral of a fleet that sailed from England for the settlement of a colony in Virginia. Sir George's ship was separated by a tremendous storm from the rest of the fleet, and wrecked on the Bermudas shore, in the year 1609. The

* My dislike to Mrs. Lennox's memory for having misapplied her little talent, and still less learning, in an effort to prove that Shakspeare has spoilt every story on which his plays are founded, is softened by the perusal of her history. She was the protégée of Dr. Johnson, who is said to have written the preface to her "Shakspeare Illustrated." She began her literary career, in 1747, with publishing a collection of poems, under her own maiden name of Charlotte Ramsay. Subsequently came out her "Female Quixote," which has considerable merit, and was very favourably received. Others of her works appeared later; an account of them is given in Nichols's "Literary Anecdotes," vol. iii. p. 290. Towards the latter end of her days she was afflicted with poverty and sickness. She died January 4, 1804, at the age of eighty-four, after having depended for some time on the bounty of the "Literary Fund." Without genius she possessed talents, and her industry and misfortunes have a claim on our interest.

† In my supposition that The Tempest was the last-written of Shakspeare's plays, I followed the writers who are generally considered the best authorities. But, since the first edition of these "Remarks," Mr. Cunningham, Jun. has published, from State Office Papers, A Diary of The Revels of that period, in which we find that The Tempest was performed at court in 1611, most probably when it was a new play. The Winter's Tale, as is proved by the same document, was played at court in 1612, and it was also in all likelihood a still newer piece. This cannot be proved, but it is presumable—and if justly to be presumed, my comparison of Shakspeare to Prospero must go down to the gulf; for if he wrote "Winter's Tale" after The Tempest, I do not think he could have divested it again in order to write "Winter's Tale," a far inferior play to the other.

Since reading the Rev. Joshua Hunter's Essay on the play of The Tempest, which came out after the first edition of my "Remarks," I am convinced of a truth strangely and often overlooked; namely, that Bermudas could not have been the island which Shakspeare intended us to imagine the scene of his drama—otherwise Prospero would not have sent Ariel to gather dews from the "still-vex'd Bermoothes," if it was the place of the magician's own habitation. But the imaginable locality of the enchanted island decides nothing as to the date of the enchanting poem—which Mr. Hunter, in my opinion, has not settled. Indeed, the circumstance of The Tempest having been first played at court in 1611 directly contradicts the probability of its having been long before known to the public history of his voyage was given to the public by Silvester Jourdan, one of his crew, with the following title, "A Discovery of Bermudas, otherwise called the Isle of Divels, by Sir Thomas Gates, Sir George Somers, and Captayne Newport, and divers others." In this publication Jourdan informs us "that the Islands of the Bermudas, as every one knoweth who hath heard or read of them, were never inhabited by any Christian or heathen people, but ever esteemed and reputed a most prodigious and enchanted place, affording nothing but gusts, storms, and foul weather; which made every navigator and mariner to avoid them as Scylla and Charybdis, or as they would shun the devil himself *."

This drama is comparatively a grave counterpart to "A Midsummer Night's Dream." I say comparatively, for its gaiety is only less abandoned and frolicsome. To be condemned to give the preference to either would give me a distress similar to that of being obliged to choose between the loss of two very dear friends.

"The Tempest," however, has a sort of sacredness as the last work of the mighty workman. Shakspeare, as if conscious that it would be his last, and as if inspired to typify himself, has made its hero a natural, a dignified, and benevolent magician, who could conjure up spirits from the vasty deep, and command supernatural agency by the most seemingly natural and simple means.—And this final play of our poet has magic indeed; for what can be simpler in language than the courtship of Ferdinand and Miranda, and yet what can be more magical than the sympathy with which it subdues us? Here Shakspeare himself is Prospero, or rather the superior genius who commands both Prospero and Ariel. But the time was approaching when the potent sorcerer was to break his staff, and to bury it fathoms in the ocean—

Deeper than did ever plummet sound.

That staff has never been, and never will be, recovered †.

The exact period at which Shakspeare quitted the metropolis and settled in his native place has not been ascertained, but as it was certainly some years before his death, it cannot be well put later than 1611 or 1612. His fame, his engaging manners, and his easy fortune—for he retired with an income of three hundred pounds a-year—equal to fifteen hundred pounds in the present day—must have made him associate with the best society in and around Stratford; and we cannot conceive his settlement to have been less than a joyous era to his townsmen and neighbourhood. But of his convivial pleasantry we have no anecdote except one, which is not very probable. Rowe tells us that, "in a pleasant conversation among their common friends, Mr. Combe, an old gentleman noted for his wealth, asked the Poet

* Drake on Shakspeare, Vol. II. 503.
† I have already noticed those plays published under Shakspeare's name, of which it is generally thought that he wrote but a small part. There are several others not published under his name, but only alleged against him, with the names and claims of which I think it would be tedious to detain the reader; but if he is curious in the matter, he will find it fully discussed in Boswell's edition of Malone, vol. ii. p. 473.
what epitaph he should write upon him, on which Shakspeare gave him these four lines:—

"Ten in the hundred," &c."

Rowe adds, that "John Combe never forgave the satire." That Shakspeare, in his buoyant spirits, might have extemporised such lines, indifferent as they are, is not impossible; but that any enmity ever lasted between them is disproved by their respective wills—John Combe bequeathing five pounds to our Poet, and our Poet leaving his sword to John Combe's nephew.

Shakspeare's wife had brought him three children: Susanna, who was born in May, 1583; about eighteen months afterwards, she was delivered of twins, a son and daughter, who were baptized, on February 2, 1584-5, by the names Hamnet and Judith. In the year 1596, he lost his only son, who died at the age of twelve. Susanna, his eldest daughter, was married, June 5, 1607, to Dr. John Hall, a respectable physician; and in 1615-16 his youngest daughter Judith, then in her thirty-first year, was married to Thomas Quiney, a vintner, in Stratford. On the 25th of the succeeding month he executed his will, as if warned of impending fate, for, on the 23rd of April, 1616, on his birthday, and when he had exactly completed his fifty-second year, the best of poets expired. No account has been transmitted to us of the malady which carried him off. Mr. Malone thinks, with apparent justice, that his son-in-law, Dr. Hall, who was then of the mature age of forty, must have attended him: and this same physician left a private note-book containing a short statement of the cases of his patients, which fell into the hands of Mr. Malone; but, unluckily, the earliest case recorded is dated in 1617, a year later than the death of his illustrious father-in-law.

He died at fifty-two. The average probability of life is twenty years beyond that age, and the probable endurance of the human faculties in their vigour is not a great deal shorter. Chaucer wrote his best poetry after he was sixty; Dryden when he was seventy. Cowper was also late in his poetical maturity; and Young never wrote any thing that could be called poetry till he was a sexagenarian. Sophocles produced his "OEdipus Coloneus," certainly beyond the age of eighty. But the pride of England, it may be said, died in the prime of life. The strength of genius even in precocious man seldom shows itself before twenty-two, so that, averaging human life at seventy-two, men of twenty-two have fifty years before them of real intellectual productive and enjoyable life to be hoped for. But alas! the Poet of poets was defrauded by fate of between a third and a half of his most valuable portion of existence.

He was buried on the 25th of April, on the north side of the 'chancel of the great church at Stratford. The wretched lines on his gravestone, "Good friends, for Jesus' sake, forbear," &c. could not have been of his own inditing. A monument was afterwards erected to his memory, at what time is not known, but certainly before 1623, as it is mentioned in the commendatory verses of Leonard Digges. He is represented under an arch in a sitting posture, a cushion spread before him, with a pen in his right hand and his left resting on a scroll of paper. The following Latin distich is engraved under the cushion.

"Judicio Pylium, genio Socratem, arte Maronem, Terra tegit, populus morret, Olympus habet."

In May, 1742, when Garrick, Macklin, and Delane visited Stratford, they were hospitably entertained under Shakspeare's mulberry-tree by Sir Hugh Clopton. He was a barrister-at-law, was knighted by George I., and died in the eightieth year of his age, in 1751. The New Place, this scene of Shakspeare's residence and of Garrick's entertainment, was sold, soon after the year 1752, to the Reverend Mr. Gastrell, who cut down Shakspeare's mulberry-tree, to save himself the trouble of showing it to those whose admiration of the Poet led them to visit the ground on which it stood.

That Shakspeare planted this tree, is as well authenticated as any thing of that nature can be.

SHAKESPEARE'S WILL.

FROM THE ORIGINAL, IN THE OFFICE OF THE PREROGATIVE COURT OF CANTERBURY.

In the name of God, Amen. I William Shakspeare of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick, gent. in perfect health and memory (God be praised!) do make and ordain this my last will and testament in manner and form following; that is to say:

First, I commend my soul into the hands of God my Creator, hoping, and assuredly believing through the only merits of Jesus Christ my Saviour, to be made partaker of life everlasting; and my body to the earth whereof it is made.

Item, I give and bequeath unto my daughter Judith one hundred and fifty pounds of lawful English money, to be paid unto her in manner and form following; that is to say, one hundred pounds in discharge of her marriage portion within one year after my decease, with consideration after the rate of two shillings in the pound for so long time as the same shall be unpaid unto her after my decease; and the fifty pounds residue thereof, upon her surrendering of, or giving of such sufficient security as the overseers of this my will shall like of, to surrender or grant, all her estate and right that shall descend or come unto her after my decease, or that she now hath, of, in, or to, one copyhold tenement, with the appurtenances, lying and being in Stratford-upon-Avon aforesaid, in the said county of Warwick, being parcel or holden of the manor of Rowington, unto my daughter Susanna Hall, and her heirs for ever.

Item, I give and bequeath unto my said daughter Judith one hundred and fifty pounds more, if she, or any issue of her body, be living at the end of three years next ensuing the day of the date of this my will, during which time my executors to pay her consideration from my decease according to the rate aforesaid: and if she die within the said term without issue of her body, then my will is, and I do give and bequeath one hundred pounds thereof to my niece Elizabeth Hall, and the fifty pounds to be set forth by my executors during the life of my sister Joan Hart, and the use and profit thereof coming, shall be paid to my sister Joan, and after her decease the said fifty pounds shall remain amongst the children of my said sister, equally to be divided amongst them; but if my said daughter Judith be living at the end of the said three years, or any issue of her body, then my will is, and so I devise and bequeath the said hundred and fifty pounds to be set out by my executors and overseers for the best benefit of her and her issue, and the stock not to be paid unto her so long as she shall be married and covert baron; but my will is, that she shall have the consideration yearly paid unto her during her life, and after her decease the said stock and consideration to be paid to her children, if she have any, and if not, to her executors or assigns, she living the said term after my decease: provided that if such husband as she shall at the end of the said three years be married unto, or at any [time] after, do sufficiently assure unto her, and the issue of her body, lands answerable to the portion by this my will given unto her, and to be adjudged so by my executors and overseers, then my will is, that the said hundred and fifty pounds shall be paid to such husband as shall make such assurance, to his own use.

Item, I give and bequeath unto my said sister Joan twenty pounds, and all my wearing apparel, to be paid and delivered within one year after my decease, and I do will and devise unto her the house, with the appurtenances, in Stratford, wherein she dwelleth, for her natural life, under the yearly rent of twelve-pence.

Item, I give and bequeath unto her three sons, William Hart, —— Hart, and Michael Hart, five pounds a piece, to be paid within one year after my decease.

Item, I give and bequeath unto the said Elizabeth Hall all my plate, (except my broad silver and gilt bowl,) that I now have at the date of this my will.

Item, I give and bequeath unto the poor of Stratford aforesaid ten pounds; to Mr. Thomas Combe my sword; to Thomas Russel, esq. five pounds; and to Francis Collins, of the borough of Warwick, in the county of Warwick, gent. thirteen pounds six shillings and eight-pence, to be paid within one year after my decease.

Item, I give and bequeath to Hamlet [Hamnet] Sadler twenty-six shillings eight-pence, to buy him a ring; to William Reynolds, gent. twenty-six shillings eight-pence, to buy him a ring; to my godson, William Walker, twenty shillings in gold; to Anthony Nash, gent. twenty-six shillings eight-pence; and to Mr. John Nash, twenty-six shillings eight-pence; and to my fellows, John Hemynge, Richard Burbage, and Henry Cundell, twenty-six shillings eight-pence apiece to buy them rings.

Item, I give, will, bequeath, and devise unto my daughter, Susanna Hall, for better enabling of her to perform this my will, and towards the performance thereof, all that capital messuage or tenement, with the appurtenances, in Stratford aforesaid, called The New Place, wherein I now dwell, and two messuages or tenements, with the appurtenances situate, lying, and being in Henley Street, within the borough of Stratford aforesaid; and all my barns, stables, orchards, gardens, lands, tenements, and hereditaments whatsoever, situate, lying, and being, or to be had, received, perceived, or taken, within the towns, hamlets, villages, fields, and grounds of Stratford-upon-Avon, Old Stratford, Bishopton, and Welcombe, or in any of them, in the said county of Warwick; and also all that messuage or tenement, with the appurtenances, wherein one John Robinson dwelleth, situate, lying, and being, in the Blackfriars in London, near the Wardrobe: and all other my lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whatsoever: to have and to hold all and singular the said premises, with their appurtenances, unto the said Susanna Hall, for and during the term of her natural life; and after her decease to the first son of her body lawfully issuing, and to the heirs-males of the body of the said first son lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to the second son of her body lawfully issuing, and to the heirs-males of the body of the said second son lawfully issuing; and for default of such heirs, to the third son of the body of the said Susanna lawfully issuing, and to the heirs-males of the body of the said third son lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, the same so to be and remain to the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sons of her body, lawfully issuing, one after another, and to the heirs-males of the bodies of the said fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sons lawfully issuing, in such manner as it is before limited to be and remain to the first, second, and third sons of her body, and to their heirs-males; and for default of such issue, the said premises to be and remain to my said niece Hall, and the heirs-males of her body lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to my daughter Judith, and the heirs-males of her body lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to the right heirs of me the said William Shakspeare for ever.

Item, I give unto my wife my second best bed, with the furniture.

Item, I give and bequeath to my said daughter, Judith, my broad silver gilt bowl. All the rest of my goods, chattels, leases, plate, jewels, and household stuff whatsoever, after my debts and legacies paid, and my funeral expenses discharged, I give, devise, and bequeath to my son-in-law, John Hall, gent. and my daughter Susanna, his wife, whom I ordain and make executors of this my last will and testament. And I do entreat and appoint the said Thomas Russell, esq. and Francis Collins, gent. to be overseers hereof. And do revoke all former wills, and publish this to be my last will and testament. In witness whereof I have hereunto put my hand, the day and year first above written.

By me, WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

THE PLAYERS' PREFACE.
(Folio. 1623.)

TO THE GREAT VARIETY OF READERS,

From the most able, to him that can but spell: there are you numbered, we had rather you were weighed. Especially, when the fate of all books depends upon your capacities: and not of your heads alone, but of your purses. Well! it is now public, and you will stand for your privileges, we know: to read, and censure. Do so, but buy it first. That doth best commend a book, the stationer says. Then, how odd soever your brains be, or your wisdoms, make your licence the same, and spare not. Judge your six-pen'orth, your shillings worth, your five shillings worth at a time, or higher, so you rise to the just rates, and welcome. But, whatever you do, buy. Censure will not drive a trade, or make the jack go. And though you be a Magistrate of wit, and sit on the stage at Blackfriars, or the Cockpit, to arraign plays daily, know, these plays have had their trial already, and stood out all appeals; and do now come forth quitted rather by a decree of court, than any purchased letters of commendation.

It had been a thing, we confess, worthy to have been wished, that the Author himself had lived to have set forth, and overseen his own writings; but since it hath been ordained otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you do not envy his friends the office of their care and pain, to have collected and published them; and so to have published them, as where (before) you were abused with divers stolen and surreptitious copies, maimed and deformed by the frauds and stealths of injurious impostors, that exposed them: even those are now offered to your view cured, and perfect of their limbs; and all the rest, absolute in their numbers as he conceived them: who, as he was a happy imitator of nature, was a most gentle expresser of it. His mind and hand went together; and what he thought, he uttered with that easiness, that we have scarce received from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our province, who only gather his works, and give them to you, to praise him. It is yours that read him. And there we hope, to your divers capacities, you will find enough, both to draw, and hold you: for his wit can no more lie hid, than it could be lost. Read him, therefore; and again, and again: and if then you do not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to understand him. And so we leave you to other of his friends, who, if you need, can be your guides: if you need them not, you can lead yourselves, and others. And such readers, we wish him.

ANCIENT COMMENDATORY VERSES
ON SHAKESPEARE.

ON WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, WHO DIED IN APRIL, 1616.

Renowned Spenser, lie a thought more nigii
To learned Chaucer; and, rare Beaumont, lie
A little nearer Spenser, to make room
For Shakspeare in your threefold, fourfold tomb.
To lodge all four in one bed make a shift,
For, until doomsday hardly will a fifth,
Betwixt this day and that, by fates be slain,
For whom your curtains need be drawn again.
But if precedency in death doth bar
A fourth place in your sacred sepulchre,
Under this sable marble of thine own,
Sleep, rare tragedian, Shakspeare, sleep alone:
Thy unmolested peace, in an unshared cave,
Possess as lord, not tenant of thy grave.
That unto us, and others, it may be Honour hereafter to be laid by thee.

WILLIAM BASSE.

TO THE MEMORY OF MY BELOVED MASTER WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, AND WHAT HE HATH LEFT US.

To draw no envy, Shakspeare, on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy book and fame;
While I confess thy writings to be such,
As neither man, nor Muse, can praise too much.
'Tis true, and all men's suffrage. But these ways
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise;
For silliest ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
And think to ruin, where it seem'd to raise.
These are, as some infamous bawd, or whore,
Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more?
But thou art proof against them, and, indeed,
Above the ill fortune of them, or the need.
I therefore will begin: Soul of the age!
The applause! delight! the wonder of our stage!
My Shakspeare rise! I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie
A little further off, to make thee room:
Thou art a monument without a tomb,
And art alive still, while thy book doth live
And we have wits to read, and praise to give.
That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses,
I mean with great, but disproportion'd Muses:
For if I thought my judgment were of years,
I should commit thee surely with thy peers,
And tell how far thou didst our Lily outshine,
Or sporting Kyd, or Marlow's mighty line.
And though thou hast'd small Latin and less Greek;
From thence to honour thee, I will not seek
For names: but call forth thund'ring Eschylus,
Euripides, and Sophocles to us,
Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordoua dead,
To live again, to hear thy buskin tread,
And shake a stage: or when thy socks were on,
Leave thee alone for the comparison
Of all, that insolent Greece, or haughty Rome
Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
Triumph, my Britain, thou hast one to show,
To whom all scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!
And all the Muses still were in their prime,
When, like Apollo, he came forth to warm
Our ears, or like a Mercury to charm!
Nature herself was proud of his designs,
And joy'd to wear the dressing of his lines!
Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
As, since, she will vouchsafe no other wit.
The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,
Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not please;
But antiquated and deserted lie,
As they were not of nature's family.
Yet must I not give nature all; thy art,
My gentle Shakspeare, must enjoy a part.
For though the poet's matter nature be,
His art doth give the fashion: and, that he
Who casts to write a living line, must sweat,
(Such as thine are); and strike the second heat
Upon the Muses anvil; turn the same,
And himself with it, that he thinks to frame;
Or for the laurel, he may gain a scorn;
For a good poet's made, as well as born.
And such wert thou! Look how the father's face Lives in his issue, even so the race
Of Shakspeare's mind and manners brightly shines
In his well torned, and true filed lines:
In each of which he seems to shake a lance,
As brandish'd at the eyes of ignorance.
Sweet Swan of Avon! what a sight it were
To see thee in our water yet appear,
And make those flights upon the banks of Thames,
That so did take Eliza, and our James!
But stay, I see thee in the hemisphere
Advanced, and made a constellation there!
Shine forth, thou Star of poets, and with rage,
Or influence, chide, or cheer the drooping stage,
Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourn'd like night,
And desairs day, but for thy volume's light.

Ben Jonson.
ON THE PORTRAIT OF SHAKESPEARE.

(Prefixed as a Frontispiece to the first edition of his Works in folio, 1623.)

TO THE READER.

This figure that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shakspeare cut,
Wherein the graver had a strife
With nature, to out-do the life:
O could he but have drawn his wit
As well in brass, as he has hit
His face; the print would then surpass
All that was ever writ in brass:
But since he cannot, reader, look
Not on his picture, but his book.

BEN JONSON.

UPON THE LINES AND LIFE OF THE FAMOUS SCENIC POET, MASTER WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

Those hands which you so clapp'd, go now and wring,
You Britains brave; for done are Shakspeare's days;
His days are done that made the dainty plays,
Which made the globe of heaven and earth to ring:
Dry'd is that vein, dry'd is the Thespian spring,
Turn'd all to tears, and Phoebus clouds his rays;
That corpse, that coffin, now bestick those bays,
Which crown'd him poet first, then poet's king.
If tragedies might any prologue have,
All those he made would scarce make one to this;
Where fame, now that he gone is to the grave,
(Death's public tiring-house) the Nuntius is:
For, though his line of life went soon about,
The life yet of his lines shall never out.

HUGH HOLLAND.

TO THE MEMORY OF THE DECEASED AUTHOR, MASTER W. SHAKSPEARE.

Shakspeare at length thy pious fellows give
The world thy works; thy works, by which out-live
Thy tomb, thy name must: when that stone is rent,
And time dissolves thy Stratford monument,
Here we alive shall view thee still; this book,
When brass and marble fade, shall make thee look
Fresh to all ages; when posterity
Shall loath what's new, think all is prodigy
That is not Sakspeare's, every line, each verse,
Here shall revive, redeem thee from thy herse.
Nor fire, nor cank'ring age,—as Naso said
Of his,—thy wit-fraught book shall once invade:
Nor shall I e'er believe or think thee dead,
Though miss'd, until our bankrout stage be sped
(Impossible) with some new strain to out-do Passions "of Juliet, and her Romeo;"
Or till I hear a scene more nobly take,
Than when thy half-sword parrying Romans spake:
Till these, till any of thy volume's rest,
Shall with more fire, more feeling be express'd,
Be sure, our Shakspeare, thou canst never die,
But, crown'd with laurel, live eternally

L. Diggé

TO THE MEMORY OF MASTER W. SHAKSPERE.

We wonder'd, Shakspeare, that thou went'st so soon
From the world's stage to the grave's tiring-room:
We thought thee dead; but this thy printed worth
Tells thy spectators, that thou went'st but forth
To enter with applause: an actor's art
Can die, and live to act a second part:
That's but an exit of morality,
This a re-entrance to a plaudite.

I. M.

UPON THE EFFIGIES OF MY WORTHY FRIEND, THE AUTHOR, MASTER
WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE, AND HIS WORKS.

Spectator, this life's shadow is;—to see
The truer image, and a livelier he,
Turn reader: but observe his comic vein,
Laugh; and proceed next to a tragic strain,
Then weep: so,—when thou find'st two contraries,
Two different passions from thy rapt soul rise,—
Say, (who alone effect such wonders could,)
Rare Shakspeare to the life thou dost behold.

AN EPITAPH ON THE ADMIRABLE DRAMATIC POET, W. SHAKSPERE.

What needs my Shakspeare for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an age in piled stones?
Or that his hallow'd reliques should be hid
Under a star-ypointing pyramid?
Dear son of memory, great heir of fame,
What need'st thou such weak witness of thy name?
Thou in our wonder and astonishment
Hast built thyself a live-long monument.
For whilst to th' shame of slow-endevoring art
Thy easy numbers flow, and that each heart
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued book
Those Delphic lines with deep impression took,
Then thou our fancy of itself bereaving,
Dost make us marble with too much conceiving;
And so sepulcher'd in such pomp dost lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

John Milton.
ON WORTHY MASTER SHAKESPEARE, AND HIS POEMS.

A mind reflecting ages past, whose clear
And equal surface can make things appear,
Distant a thousand years, and represent
Them in their lively colours, just extent:
To outrun hasty time, retrieve the fates,
Roll back the heavens, blow ope the iron gates
Of death and Lethe, where confused lie
Great heaps of ruinous mortality:
In that deep dusky dungeon, to discern
A royal ghost from churls; by art to learn
The physiognomy of shades, and give Them sudden birth, wond'ring how oft they live;
What story coldly tells, what poets feign
At second hand, and picture without brain,
Senseless and soul-less shews: To give a stage,—
Ample, and true with life,—voice, action, age,
As Plato's year, and new scene of the world,
Them unto us, or us to them had hurl'd:
To raise our ancient sovereigns from their horse,
Make kings his subjects; by exchanging verse
Enlive their pale trunks, that the present age
Joys in their joy, and trembles at their rage:
Yet so to temper passion, that our ears
Take pleasure in their pain, and eyes in tears
Both weep and smile; fearful at plots so sad,
Then laughing at our fear; abused, and glad
To be abused; affected with that truth
Which we perceive is false, pleased in that ruth
At which we start, and, by elaborate play,
Tortured and tickled; by a crab-like way
Time past made pastime, and in ugly sort
Disgorging up his ravin for our sport:—
While the plebeian imp, from lofty throne,
Creates and rules a world, and works upon Mankind by secret engines; now to move
A chilling pity, then a rigorous love;
To strike up and stroke down, both joy and ire;
To steer the affections; and by heavenly fire
Mould us anew, stol'n from ourselves:—
This—and much more, which cannot be express'd
But by himself, his tongue, and his own breast,—
Was Shakspeare's freehold; which his cunning brain
Improv'd by favour of the nine-fold train:—
The buskin'd muse, the comick queen, the grand
And louder tone of Clio, nimble hand
And nimbl'er foot of the melodious pair,
The silver-voiced lady, the most fair
Calliope, whose speaking silence daunts,
And she whose praise the heavenly body chants:—
These jointly woo'd him, envying one another:—
Obey'd by all as spouse, but lov'd as brother:—
And wrought a curious robe, of sable grave,
Fresh green, and pleasant yellow, red most brave,
And constant blue, rich purple, guiltless white,
The lowly russet, and the scarlet bright:
Branch'd and embroider'd like the painted spring;
Each leaf match'd with a flower, and each string
Of golden wire, each line of silk: there run
Italian works, whose thread the sisters spun;
And there did sing, or seem to sing, the choice
Birds of a foreign note and various voice:
Here hangs a mossy rock; there plays a fair
But chiding fountain, purled: not the air,
Nor clouds, nor thunder, but were living drawn;
Not out of common tiffany or lawn,
But fine materials, which the Muses know,
And only know the countries where they grow.

Now, when they could no longer him enjoy,
In mortal garments pent,—death may destroy,
They say, his body; but his verse shall live,
And more than Nature takes our hands shall give:
In a less volume, but more strongly bound,
Shakspeare shall breathe and speak; with laurel crown’d,
Which never fades; fed with ambrosian meat,
In a well-lined vesture, rich, and neat:
So with this robe they clothe him, bid him wear it;
For time shall never stain, nor envy tear it.

TEMPEST.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

ALONSO, King of Naples.
SEBASTIAN, his brother.
PROSPERO, the rightful Duke of Milan.
ANTONIO, his brother, the usurping Duke of Milan.
Ferdinand, son to the King of Naples.
GONZALO, an honest old Counsellor of Naples.
ADRIAN,
FRANCISCO,
CALiban, a savage and deformed Slave.
TRINCULO, a Jester.
SPERMADO, a drunken Butler.
Master of a Ship, Boatswain, and Mariners.

MIRANDA, daughter to Prospero.

ARIEL, an airy Spirit.
IRIS, CERES, JUNO, \textit{Nymphs,} \textit{Spirits.}

Other Spirits attending on Prospero.

SCENE,—The Sea, with a Ship: afterwards an uninhabited Island.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—On a Ship at Sea.—A Storm, with Thunder and Lightning.

Enter a Shipmaster and a Boatswain.

Master. Boatswain,—

Boats. Here, master: what cheer?

Master. Good: Speak to the mariners: full to't yarely, or we run ourselves aground; bestir, bestir.

Enter Mariners.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts; cheerly, cheerly, my hearts; yare, yare: take in the top sail; 'Tend to the master's whistle.—Blow till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Ferdinand, Gonzalo, and others.

Alon. Good Boatswain, have care. Where's the master? Play the men.

Boats. I pray now, keep below.

Ant. Where is the master, Boatswain?

Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labour; Keep your cabins; you do assist the storm.

Gon. Nay, good, be patient.

Boats. When the sea is. Hence! What care these roarrers for the name of king? To cabin: silence: trouble us not.

Gon. Good; yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boats. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor; if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more; use your authority. If you cannot, give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap.—Cheerly, good hearts.—Out of our way, I say.

Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark upon him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Stand fast good fate, to his hanging! make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage If he be not born to be hanged, our case is miserable.

[Exeunt.

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the topmast; yare; lower, lower; bring her to try with main-course. [A cry within.] A plague upon this bowling! They are louder than the weather, or our office.—

Re-enter Sebastian, Antonio, and Gonzalo.

Yet again? what do you here? Shall we give o'er, and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

Seb. A poc o' your throat! you bowling, blasphemous, incharitable dog!

Boats. Work you, then.

Ant. Hang, cur, hang! you whoreson, insolent noise-maker, we are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

Gon. I'll warrant him from drowning; though the ship were no stronger than a nut-shell, and as leaky as an unanch't wench.

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold; set her two courses; off to sea again, lay her off.

Enter Mariners, etc.

Mar. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost! [Exeunt.

Boats. What, must our mouths be cold?

Gon. The king and prince at prayers! let us assist them, For our case is as theirs.

Seb. I am out of patience.

Ant. We are merely cheated of our lives by drunkards.—This wide-chapp'd rascal;—'Would, thou might'st lie drowning,

The washing of ten tides!
Gen. He'll be hanged yet;
Though every drop of water swear against it,
And gape at wid'st to glut him.

[A confused noise within.—] Mercy on us! We split, we split!—Farewell, my wife and children! Farewell, brother!—We split, we split!—

Ant. Let's all sink with the king.

[Exeunt.

Gen. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground; long heath, brown furze, any thing; The wills above be done! but I would fain die a dry death.

SCENE II.—The Island; before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mir. If by your art, my dearest father, you have put the wild waters in this roar, array them:
The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,
But that the sea, mounting to the wellkin's cheek,
Dashes the fire out. O, I have suffer'd
With those that I saw suffer! a brave vessel,
Who had no doubt some noble creatures in her,
Dash'd all to pieces. O, the cry did knock Against my very heart! Poor souls! they perish'd, Had I been any god of power, I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e'er
It should the good ship so have swallowed, and
The freighting souls within her.

Pro. No more amazement; tell your piteous heart,
There's no harm done.

Mir. O, woe the day! No harm.

Pro. I have done nothing but in care of thee,
(If thee, my dear one! thee, my daughter!) who Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am; nor that I am more better
Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell,
And thy no greater father.

Mir. More to know
Did never meddle with my thoughts.

Pro. 'Tis time
I should inform thee further. Lend thy hand,
And pluck my magic garmente.—So;
[Leaves his mantle.

Lie there my art.—Wipe thou thine eyes; have comfort.
The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd
The very virtue of compassion in thee,
I have with such provision in mine heart
So safely order'd, that there is no soul—
No, not so much perdition as an hair,
Betid to any creature in the vessel
Which thou heard'st cry, which thou saw'st sink.

Sit down;
For thou must now know further.

Mir. You have often
Begun to tell me what I am; but stopp'd,
And left me to a bootless inquisition;
Concluding, Stay, not yet.—

Pro. The hour's now come;
The very minute bids thee open thine ear;
Obey, and be attentive. Can't thou remember
A time before we came unto this cell?
I do not think thou can'st; for then thou wast not
Out three years old.

Mir. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pro. By what? by any other house, or person?

Of any thing the image tell me, that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mir. 'Tis far off;
And rather like a dream than an assurance
That my royal circular waked, in. had I not Four or five women once, that tend'd me?

Pro. Thou hast, and more, Miranda: But how Is it,
That this lives in thy mind? What see'st thou else
In the dark backward and abyss of time?
If thou remember'st aught, ere thou canst here,
How thou cam'st here, thou may'st.

Mir. But that I do not.

Pro. Twelve years since, Miranda, twelve years since,
Thy father was the Duke of Milan, and
A prince of power.

Mir. Sir, are not you my father?

Pro. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and
She said—thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was Duke of Milan; and his only heir
A princess; no worse issued.

Mir. O, the heavens!
What foul play had we, that we came from thence;
Or blessed was't, we did it?

Pro. Both, both, my girl;
By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heaved thence;
But blessedly holp hither.

Mir. O, my heart bleeds
To think o' the teen that I have turn'd you to,
Which is from my remembrance! Please you, further.

Pro. My brother, and thy uncle, call'd Antonio—
I pray thee, mark me,—that a brother should
Be so peridious!—he whom, next thyself,
Of all the world I loved, and to him put
The manage of my state; as, at that time,
Through all the signiorities it was the first,
And Prospero the prime duke; being so reputed
In dignity, and, for the liberal arts,
Without a parallel: those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rapt in secret studies. Thy false uncle—
Dost thou attend me?

Mir. O, good sir, I do.

Pro. I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicate
To closeness, and the bettering of my mind
With that, which, but by being so retired,
Over-prized all popular rate, in my false brother
Awaked an evil nature: and my trust,
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A falsehood, in its contrary so great
As my trust was; which had, indeed, no limit,
A confidence sans bound. He being thus loved,
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact,—like one,
Who having, unto truth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie,—he did believe
He was the duke; out of the substituting,
And executing the outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative:—Hence his ambition
Growing,—Dost hear!

Mira. — Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.

Pro. To have no screen between this part he
And him he play’d it for, he needs will be [play’d]
Absolute Milan: Me, poor man!—my library
Was dukedom large enough; of temporal royalties
He thinks me now incapable: confederates
(So dry he was for sway) with the king of Naples,
To give him annual tribute, do him homage;
Subject his coronet to his crown, and bend
The dukedom, yet unbow’d, (alas, poor Milan!)
To most ignoble stooping.

Mira. — O the heavens!

Pro. Mark his condition, and the event; then
If this might be a brother. [tell me]

Mira. — I should sin
To think but nobly of my grand-mother;
Good wombs have borne bad sons.

Pro. — Now the condition.
This king of Naples, being an enemy
To me inveterate, hearkens my brother’s suit;
Which was, that he in lieu of the premises,—
Of homage, and I know not how much tribute,—
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedom; and confer fair Milan,
With all the honours, on my brother: Whereon, A tree-hostile army levied, one midnight
Fated to the purpose, did Antonio open
The gates of Milan; and, if the dead of darkness,
The ministers for the purpose hurried thence
Me, and they crying self.

Mira. — Alack, for pity!
I, not remembering how I cried out then,
Will cry it o’er again: it is a hint,
That wrings mine eyes to it.

Pro. — Hear a little further,
And then I’ll bring thee to the present business
Which now’s upon us; without which, this story
Were most impatient.

Mira. — Wherefore did they not,
That hour, destroy us?

Pro. — Well demanded, wench;
My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not;
(For dear the love my people bore me) nor set
A mark so bloody on the business; but
With colours fairer painted their foul ends.
In few, they hurried us aboard a bark;
Bore as some leagues to sea; where they prepar’d
A rotten carcass of a boat, not rigg’d,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively had quit: there they hoist us,
To cry to the sea that roar’d to us; to sigh
To the winds, whose pity, sighing back again,
Did us but loving wrong.

Mira. — Alack! what trouble
Was I then to you?

Pro. — O! a cherubim
That thirst, that did preserve me! I will never mind
Infused with a fortitude from heaven.
When I have deck’d the sea with drops full salt;
Under my burden groan’d; which raised in me
An undergoing stomach, to bear up Against what should ensue.

Mira. — How came we ashore?

Pro. — By Providence divine.

Some food we had, and some fresh water, that
A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity, (who being then appointed Master of this design,) did give us; with Rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessaries,
Which since have esteemed much; so, of his gentleness,
Knowing I loved my books, he furnished me,
From my own library, with volumes that
I prize above my dukedom.

Mira. — Would I might
But ever see that man!

Pro. — Now I arise:
Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.
Here in this island we arrived; and here
Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.

Mira. — Heavens thank you for’t! And now, I pray you, sir,
(For still ’tis beating in my mind,) your reason
For raising this sea-storm?

Pro. — Know thus far forth,—
By accident most strange, bountiful fortune,
Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore; and by my prescience
I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star; whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after drop.—Here cease more questions,
Thou art inclin’d to sleep; ’tis a good dulness,
And give it way;—I know thou canst not choose.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. — All hail, great master! I graver sirs, hail! I come
To answer thy best pleasure; be’t to fly,
To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride
On the curl’d clouds; to thy strong bidding, task
Ariel, and all his quality.

Pro. — Hast thou, spirit,
Perform’d to point the tempest that I bade thee?

Ari. — To every article.
I boarded the king’s ship: now on the beak,
Now in the waist, the deck, in every cabin,
I flamed amazement: Sometimes, I’d divide,
And burn in many places; on the top-mast,
The yards and bowsprit, wou’d I flame distinctly,
Then meet, and join: Jove’s lightnings, the precursors
’O the dreadful thunder-claps, more momentary
And sight-out-running were not: The fire, and Cracks
Of sulphurous roaring, the most mighty Neptune
Seem’d to besiege, and make his bold waves tremble,
Yea, his dread trident shake.

Pro. — My brave spirit! Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason?

Ari. — Not a soul,
But felt a fever of the mad, and play’d
Some tricks of desperation: All, but mariners,
Plung’d in the foaming brine, and quit the vessel,
Then all a-fire with me; the king’s son, Ferdinand,
With hair up-standing (then like reeds, not hair),
Was the first man that leap’d; cried, Hell is empty,
And all the devils are here!

Pro. — Why, that’s my spirit!
But was not this nigh shore?

Ari. — Close by, my master.
ACT I.

Pro. But are they, Ariel, safe?

Ari. Not a hair perish'd;

On their sustaining garments not a blemish,

But fresher than before: and, as thou bad'st me,

In troops I have dispersed them 'bout the isle;

The king's son have I landed by himself;

Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs,

In an odd angle of the isle, and sitting,

His arms in this sad knot.

Pro. Of the king's ship,

The mariners, say, how thou hast disposed,

And all the rest o' the fleet?

Ari. Safely in harbour

Is the king's ship; in the deep nook, where once

Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch dew

From the still- vex'd Bermoothes, there she's hid:

The mariners all under hatches stow'd;

Whom, with a charm join'd to their suffer'd labour,

I have left asleep; and for the rest o' the fleet,

Which I dispersed, they all have met again;

And are upon the Mediterranean flote,

Bound sadly home for Naples;

Supposing that they saw the king's ship wreck'd,

And his great person perish.

Pro. Ariel, thy charge

Exactly is perform'd; but there's more work:

What is the time o' the day?

Ari. Past the mid season.

Pro. At least two glasses: The time 'twixt six and now,

Must by us both be spent most precisely.

Ari. Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me pains,

Let me remember thee what thou hast promis'd, Which is not yet perform'd me.

Pro. How now? moody?

What is't thou can'st demand?

Ari. My liberty.

Pro. Before the time be out? No more!

Ari. I pray thee

Remember, I have done thee worthy service;

Told thee no lies, made no mistake, serv'd

Without or grudge or grumblings: thou didst

To hate me a full year. [promise

Pro. Dost thou forget

From what a torment I did free thee?

Ari. No.

Pro. Thou dost; and think'st

It much to tread the ooze of the salt deep;

To run upon the sharp wind of the north;

To do me business in the veins o' the earth,

When it is bak'd with frost.

Ari. I do not, sir. [forgot

Pro. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou

The foul witch, Sycorax, who, with age and envy,

Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?

Ari. No, sir.

Pro. Thou hast: Where was she born?

Ari. Speak; tell me.

Ari. Sir, in Argier.

Pro. Oh, was she so? I must,

Once in a month, recount what thou hast been,

Which thou forget'st. This damn'd witch, Sycorax,

For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible

To enter human hearing, from Argier,

Thou know'st, was banish'd; for one thing she did,

They would not take her life: Is not this true?

Ari. Ay, sir.

Pro. This blue-eyed hog was hither brought with child,

And here was left by the sailors: Thou, my slave.

As thou report'st thyself, wast then her servant:

And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate

To act her earthy and abhor edition commands,

Refusing her grand 'hests, she did confine thee,

By help of her more potent ministers,

And in her most unmitigable rage,

Into a cloven pine; within which rift

Imprison'd, thou did'st painfully remain

A dozen years; within which space she died,

And left thee there; where thou did'st vent thy groans

As fast as mill-wheels strike: Then was this island,

(Save for the son that she did litter here,

A freckled whelp, hag-born,) not honour'd with

A human shape.

Ari. Yes; Caliban her son.

Pro. Dull thing, I say so; he, that Caliban,

Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st

What torment I did find thee in: thy groans

Did make wolves howl, and penetrate the breasts

Of ever-angry bears; it was a torment

To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax

Could not again undo; it was mine art,

When I arriv'd, and heard thee, that made gape

The pine, and let thee out.

Ari. I thank thee, master.

Pro. If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an oak

And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till

Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters.

Ari. Pardon, master; I will be correspondent to command,

And do my spriting gently.

Pro. Do so; and after two days,

I will discharge thee.

Ari. That's my noble master!

What shall I do? say what? what shall I do?

Pro. Go, make thyself like to a nymph o' the sea;

Be subject to no sight but mine; invisible

To every eye-ball else. Go, take this shape,

And lither come in: hence, with diligence.

[Exit Ariel.

Ari. Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well;

Awake!

Mira. The strangeness of your story put Heaviness in me.

Pro. Shake it off; Come on;

We'll visit Caliban, my slave, who never

Yields us kind answer.

Mira. 'Tis a villain, sir, I do not love to look on.

Pro. But, as 'tis,

We cannot miss him: he does make our fire,

Fetch in our wood; and serves in offices

That profit us. What ho! slave! Caliban!

Thou earth, thou! speak.

Cal. [within.] There's wood enough within.

Pro. Come forth, I say; there's other business

for thee:

Come forth, thou tortoise! when?

[Re-enter Ariel, like a water-nymph.

Fine apparition! My quaint Ariel,

Hark in thine ear.

Ari. My lord it shall be done. [Exit.

Pro. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil him.

Upon thy wicked dam, come forth! [self

Enter Caliban.

Cal. As wicked dew as c'er my mother brush'd With raven's feather from unwholesome fen, DROP ON YOU BOTH! A SOUTH-WEST BLOW ON YE, AND BLISTER YOU ALL O'ER. [CRAMPS, PRO. FOR THIS, BE SURE, TO-NIGHT THOU SHALT HAVE SIDE-STITCHES THAT SHALL PEN THY BREATH UP; URBANS SHALL, FOR THAT VAST OF NIGHT THAT THEY MAY WORK, ALL EXERCISE ON THEE; THOU SHALT BE PINCH'D AS THICK AS HONEY-COMBS, EACH PINCH MORE STINGING THAN BEES THAT MADE THEM.

CAL. I MUST EAT MY DINNER. THIS ISLAND'S MINE, BY SYPARAX MY MOTHER, [FIRST, WHILST THOU TAK'EST FROM ME. WHEN THOU CAMEST THOU STROK'DST ME, AND MAD'ST MUCH OF ME; WOULD'ST GIVE ME WATER WITH BERRIES IN'T; AND TEACH ME HOW TO NAME THE BIGGER LIGHT, AND HOW THE LESS, THAT BURN BY DAY AND NIGHT: AND THEN I LOV'D THEE, AND SHOW'D THEE ALL THE QUALITIES O' THE ISLE, THE FRESH SPRINGS, BRINE PITS, BARNEN PLACE, AND FERTIL;

CURSED BE THOSE THAT DID SO!—ALL THE CHARMS OF SYPARAX, TOADS, BEETLES, BATS, LIGHT ON YOU! FOR I AM ALL THE SUBJECTS THAT YOU HAVE, [ME WHICH FIRST WAS MINE OWN KING; AND HERE YOU STAY IN THIS HARD ROCK, WHILES YOU DO KEEP FROM ME THE REST OF THE ISLAND.

PRO. THOU MOST LYING SLAVE, WHOM STRIPES MAY MOVE, NOT KINDNESS: I HAVE USED THEE, FILTH AS THOU ART, WITH HUMAN CARE; AND LODGED THEE IN MY OWN CELL, TILL THOU DID'ST SEEK TO VIOLATE THE HONOUR OF MY CHILD. CAL. O HO, O HO!—WOULD IT HAD BEEN DONE! THOU DID'ST PREVENT ME; I HAD PEOPLED THIS ISLE WITH CALIBANS.

PRO. ABBORRED SLAVE; WHICH ANY PRINT OF GOODNESS WILL NOT TAKE, BEING CAPABLE OF ALL ILL! I PITIED THEE, TOOK PAIN TO MAKE THEE SPEAK, TAUGHT THEE EACH HOUR ONE THING OR OTHER: WHEN THOU DID'ST NOT, SAVAGE, KNOW THINE OWN MEANING, BUT WOULD'ST GABBLE LIKE A THING MOST BRUTISH, I ENDOW'D THY PURPOSES WITH WORDS THAT MADE THEM KNOWN: BUT THY VILE FACE, [NATURES THOUGH THOU DID'ST LEARN, HAD THAT IN'T WHICH GOOD COULD NOT ABIDE TO BE WITH; THEREFORE WAST THOU DESERVEDLY CONFINED INTO THIS ROCK, WHO HAD'ST DESERVED MORE THAN A PRISON.

CAL. YOU TAUGHT ME LANGUAGE; AND MY PROFIT ON'T IS, I KNOW HOW TO CURSE; THE RED PLAGUE RID YOU, FOR LEARNING ME YOUR LANGUAGE!

PRO. HAG-SEED, HENCE! FETCH US IN FUEL; AND BE QUICK, THOU WERT BEST, TO ANSWER OTHER BUSINESS. SHRUGG'ST THOU, MALICE? IF THOU NEGLECT'ST, OR DOST UNWILLINGLY WHAT I COMMAND, I'LL RACK THEE WITH OLD CRAMPS; FILL ALL THY BONES WITH ACES; MAKE THEE ROAR THAT BEASTS SHALL TREMBLE AT THY DIN.

CAL. NO, PRAY THEE!—I MUST OBEY: HIS ART IS OF SUCH POWER, [ASIDE. IT WOULD CONTROL MY DAME'S GOD, SETEBOS, AND MAKE A VASSAL OF HIM.

PRO. SO, SLAVE; HENCE! [EXIT CALIBAN.

RE-ENTER ARIEL INVISIBLE, PLAYING AND SINGING; FERDINAND FOLLOWING HIM.

ARIEL'S SONG.

COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS, AND THEN TAKE HANDS:

COURTED WHEN YOU HAVE, AND KISSED,

(The Wild Waves Whist.)

FOOT IT FEASTLY HERE AND THERE; AND, SWEET SPIRITES, THE BURDEN BEAR.

HARK! HARK!

BUR. BOUGH, BOUGH.

THE WATCH-DOGS BARK!

BUR. BOUGH, BOUGH.

HARK, HARK! I HEAR THE STRAIN OF STRUTTING CHANTELURE CRY, COCK-A-DODDLE-DOO.

FER. WHERE SHOULD THIS MUSIC BE? 'T IS THE AIR, OR THE EARTH? IT SOUNDS NO MORE:—AND SURE IT WAITS UPON SOME GOD OF THE ISLAND. SITTING ON A BANK WEEPING AGAIN THE KING MY FATHER'S WRECK, THIS MUSIC CREST BY ME UPON THE WATERS; ALLOYING BOTH THEIR FURY, AND MY PASSION, WITH ITS SWEET AIR: THENCE I HAVE FOLLOW'D IT, OR IT HATH DRAWN ME RATHER:—BUT 'T IS GONE. NO, IT BEGINS AGAIN.

MIRA. SINGS.

FULL FATHOM FIVE THY FATHER LIES; OF HIS BONES ARE CORAL MADE; THOSE ARE PEARLS THAT WERE HIS EYES: NOTHING OF HIM THAT DOETH FADE, BUT DOETH SUFFER A SEA-CHANGE INTO SOMETHING RICH AND STRANGE. SEA-NYMPHS HOURLY環 HIS KNEEL:

[BURDEN, DING-DONG.

HARK! NOW I HEAR THEM,—DING-DONG, BELL.

FER. THE DITTY DOES REMEMBER MY DROWN'D FATHER: THIS IS NO MORTAL BUSINESS, NOR NO SOUND [THER:—THAT THE EARTH OWE:—I HEAR IT NOW ABOVE ME.

PRO. THE FRINGED CURTAIN'S OF THINE EYE ADVANCE AND SAY, WHAT THOU SEEEST YON.

MIRA. WHAT IS'T? A SPIRIT LORD, HOW IT LOOKS ABOUT! BELIEVE ME, SIR, IT CARRIES A BRAVE FORM:—'T IS A SPIRIT.

PRO. NO, WENCH; IT EATS AND SLEEPS, AND BATH SUCH SENSES AS WE HAVE, SUCH: THIS GALLANT, WHICH THOU SEEEST, WAS IN THE WRECK: AND HE'S SOMETHING STAIN'D WITH GRIEF, THAT'S BEAUTY'S CANKER, THOU MIGHT' ST CALL HIM A GOODLY PERSON: HE HATH LOST HIS FELLOWS, AND STRAYS ABOUT TO FIND THEM.

MIRA. I MIGHT CALL HIM A THING DIVINE; FOR NOTHING NATURAL I EVER SAW SO NICE.

PRO. IT GOES ON, [ASIDE. AS MY SOUL PROMPTS IT:—SPIRIT, FINE SPIRIT! I'LL FREE THEE WITHIN TWO DAYS FOR THIS.

FER. MOST SURE, THE GODDESS ON WHOM THESE AIRS ATTEND!—VOUCHSAFES, MY PRAYER MAY KNOW, IF YOU REMAIN UPON THIS ISLAND; AND THAT YOU WILL SOME GOOD INSTRUCTION GIVE, HOW I MAY HEAR YOU HERE: MY PRIME REQUEST, WHICH I DO LAST PRONOUNCE, IS, O YOU WONDROUS IF YOU BE MAID OR NO?

MIRA. NO WONDER, SIR; BUT CERTAINLY A MAID.

FER. MY LANGUAGE! HEAVENS!—I AM THE BEST OF THEM THAT SPEAK THIS SPEECH, WERE I BUT WHERE 'TIS SPOKEN.

PRO. HOW! THE BEST? WHAT WERT THOU, IF THE KING OF NAPLES HEARD THEE?

FER. A SINGLE THING, AS I AM NOW, THAT WONDERS TO HEAR THEE SPEAK OF NAPLES: HE DOES HEAR ME; AND, THAT HE DOES, I WEEP: MYSELF AM NAPLES; WHO WITH MY EYES, NE'ER SINCE AT EBB, Beheld THE KING MY FATHER WRECK'D.

MIRA. ALACK, FOR MERCY!
Fer. Yes, faith, and all his lords; the duke of And his brave son, being twain.
Milan,
Pro.
The duke of Milan,
And his more braver daughter, could control thee,
If now 't were fit to do't:—At the first sight
[Aside.
They have changed eyes:—Delicate Ariel,
I'll set thee free for this!—A word, good sir;
I fear you have done yourself some wrong: a word.
Mira. Why speaks my father so urgently? This is the third man that e'er I saw; the first
That e'er I sig'd for: pity, move my father
To be inclined my way!
Fer. O, if a virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.
Pro.
Soft, sir; one word more.—
They are both in either's powers; but this swift business
I must uneasy make, lest too light winning
[Aside.
Make the prize light.—One word more; I charge thee,
That thou attend me: thou dost here usurp
The name thou owest not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island, as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on't.
Fer. No, as I am a man.
Mira. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a
If the ill spirit have so fair an house.
[Aside: Good things will strive to dwell with t.
Pro.
Follow me.—
[To Ferd.
Speak not for him; he's a traitor.—Come,
I'll manacle thy neck and feet together:
Sea-water shall thou drink; thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, wither'd roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled: Follow.
Fer.
No;
I will resist such entertainment, till
Mine enemy has more power.
Mira.
O dear father,
Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle, and not fearful.
Pro.
What, I say,
My foot my tutor! Put thy sword up, traitor;
Who makest a show, but darest not strike, thy conscience
Is so possess'd with guilt: come from thy ward;
For I can here disarm thee with this stick,
And make thy weapon drop.
Mira.
Beseech you, father!
Pro.
Hence; hang not on my garments.
Mira.
Sir, have pity;
I'll be his surety.
Pro.
Silence! one word more
Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee.
What! An advocate for an impostor? hush!
Thou think'st there are no more such shapes as he,
Having seen but him and Caliban: Foolish wench!
To the most of men this is a Caliban,
And they to him are angels.
Mira.
My affections
Are then most humble; I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.
Pro.
Come on; obey:
[To Ferd.
Thy nerves are in their infancy again,
And have no vigour in them.
Fer.
So they are:
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up.
My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, or this man's threats,
To whom I am subdu'd, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid: all corners else o' the earth
Let liberty make use of; space enough
Have I, in such a prison.
Pro.
It works:—Come on.
Thou hast done well, fine Ariel!—Follow me.—
[To Ferd. and Mr.
Hark, what thou else shalt do me.
[To Ariel.
Mira.
Be of comfort;
My father's of a better nature, sir,
Than he appears by speech; this is unwonted,
Which now came from him.
Pro.
Thon shalt be as free
As mountain winds: but then exactly do
All points of my command.
Ari.
To the syllable.
Pro.
Come, follow; speak not for him.
[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Island.
Exeunt Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others.
Gon. 'Beseech you, sir, be merry: you have cause
[So have we all] of joy; for our escape
Is much beyond our loss: Our hint of woe
Is common; every day, some sailor's wife,
The masters of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woe: but for the miracle,
I mean our preservation, few in millions
Can speak like us: then wisely, good sir, weigh
Our sorrow with our comfort.
Alon.
Pr'ythee, peace.
Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge.
Ant. The visitor will not give him o'er so.
Seb. Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit;
By and by it will strike.
Gon.
Sir,—
Seb. One:—Tell.
Gon. When every grief is entertain'd, that's Comes to the entertainer—[offer'd,

Seb. A dollar.
Gon. Dolour comes to him, indeed; you have spoken truer than you purposed.
Seb. You have taken it wiselier than I meant you should.
Gon. Therefore, my lord,—
Ant. Fye, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!
Alon. I pr'ythee spare.
Gon. Well, I have done: But yet—
Seb. He will be talking.
Ant. Which of them, he, or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?
Seb. The old cock.
Ant. The cockrel.
Seb. Done: the wager?
Ant. A laughter.
Seb. A match.
Adr. Though this island seem to be desert,—
Seb. Ha, ha, ha!
Ant. So, you've paid.
Adr. Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible,— Mrs'd my daughter there! for, coming thence,
My son is lost; and, in my rate, she too,
Who is so far from Italy removed,
I ne'er again shall see her. O thou mine heir
Of Naples and of Milan, what strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee!

Ev'rn.
Sir, he may live;
I saw him beat the surges under him,
And ride upon their backs; he trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breathed
The surge most swoln that met him; his bold head
'bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke
To the shore, that o'er his wave-worn basis bow'd,
As stooping to relieve him; I not doubt,
He came alive to land.

Alon.
No, no, he's gone.
Seb. Sir, you may thank yourself for this great loss;
That would not bless our Europe with your
But rather lose her to an African; [daughter,
Where she, at least, is banished from your eye,
Who hath cause to weet the grief out.

Alon.
'Pr'ythee, peace.
Seb. You were kneel'd to, and importun'd other-
By all of us; and the fair soul herself [wis
Weigh'd between lothness and obedience, at Which end o' the beam she bow'd. , We have lost your son,
I fear, for ever: Milan and Naples have
More widows in them of this business' making,
Than we bring men to comfort them: the fault's your own.

Alon. So is the dearest of the loss.

Con.
My lord Sebastian,
The truth you speak doth lack some gentleness,
And time to speak it in; you rub the sore,
When you should bring the plaster.

Seb.
Very well.
Ant. And most chirurgeonly.
Con. It is foul weather in us all, good sir,
When you are cloudy.

Seb.
Foul weather!

Ant.
Very foul.

Con. Had I plantation of this isle, my lord,—
Ant. He'd sow it with ne'er a shrive.

Seb.
Or docks, or mallows.
Con. And were the king of it, What would I do?
Seb. 'Scrape being drunk, for want of wine.
Con. I' the commonwealth, I' would by contraries
Execute all things: for no kind of trifle
Would I admit; no name of magistrate;
Letters should not be known; no use of service,
Of riches, or of poverty; no contracts,
Successions; bound of land, tillth, vineyard, none:
No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil?
No occupation; all men idle, all;
And women too; but innocent and pure:
No sovereignty.—

Seb.
And yet he would be king on't.
Ant. The latter end of his commonwealth forgets the beginning.

[duec

Con. All things in common nature should pro-
Without sweat or endeavour: treason, felony,
Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine,
Would I not have; but nature should bring forth,
Of its own kind, all foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people.

Seb. No marrying 'mong his subjects!
Ant. None, man; all idle; whores and knaves.
Gon. I would with such perfection govern, sir,
To excel the golden age.
Seb. 'Save his majesty!
Ant Long live Gonzalo!
Gon. And, do you mark me sir?—
Alon. Pr’ythee, no more: thou dost talk nothing to me.
Gon. I do well believe your highness; and did it to minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible and nimble lungs, that they always use to laugh at nothing.
Ant. ‘Twas you we laugh’d at.
Gon. Who, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you: so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.
Ant. What a blow was there given?
Seb. An it had not fallen flat-ling.
Gon. You are gentlemen of brave mettle; you would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.
Enters Ariel, invisible, playing solemn music.
Seb. We would so, and then go a-bat-fowling.
Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not angry.
Gon. No, I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for I am very heavy?
Ant. Go sleep, and hear us.
[All sleep but Alon. Seb. and Ant.]
Alon. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes
Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I
They are inclined to do so. [find Seb.]
Seb. Please you, sir,
Do not omit the heavy offer of it:
It seldoms visits sorrow; when it doth,
It is a comforter.
Ant. We two, my lord,
Will guard your person, while you take your rest,
And watch your safety.
Alon. Thank you; wondrous heavy.—
[ALONSO SLEEPS. EXIT ARIL.
Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them?
Ant. It is the quality o’ the climate.
Seb. Why
Doth it not then our eye-lids sink? I find not Myself disposed to sleep.
Ant. Nor I; my spirits are nimble.
Th’ they fell together all, as by consent;
Th’ they dropp’d, as by a thunder-stroke.
What might, Worthy Sebastian?—O, what might?—No more:
And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face,
What thou shouldest be: the occasion speaks thee;
My strong imagination sees a crown
[and Dropping upon thy head.]
Seb. What art thou waking?
Ant. Do you not hear me speak?
Seb. I do; and, surely,
It is a sleepy language; and thou speak’st
Out of thy sleep: What is it thou did’st say?
This is a strange repose, to be asleep
With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving,
And yet so fast asleep.
Ant. Noble Sebastian,
Thou livest thy fortune sleep—die rather; wink’st
Whiles thou art waking.
Seb. Thou dost snore distinctly;
There’s meaning in thy snores.
Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you Must be so too, if heed me; which to do
Trebles thee o’er.
Seb. Well, I am standing water.
Ant. I’lI teach you how to flow.
Seb. Do so: to ebb.
Hereditary sloth instructs me.
Ant. O,
If you but knew, how you the purpose cherish,
While thus you mock it! how, in stripping it,
You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed,
Most often do so near the bottom run,
By their own fear, or sloth.
Seb. Pr’ythee, say on:
The setting of thine eye, and check, proclaim
A matter from thee; and a birth, indeed,
Which throes thee much to yield.
Ant. Thus, sir:
Although this lord of weak remembrance, this (Who shall be of as little memory,
When he is earth’d) hath here almost persuaded
(For he’s a spirit of persuasion only,)
The king, his son’s alive: ’tis as impossible
That he’s undrown’d, as he that sleeps here, swims.
Seb. I Love no hope
That he’s undrown’d.
Ant. O, out of that no hope,
What great hope have you! no hope, that way, is Another way so high an hope, that even Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond,
But doubts discovery there. Will you grant, with
That Ferdinand is drowned? [me.
Seb. He’s gone.
Ant. Then, tell me,
Who’s the next heir of Naples?
Seb. Claribel.
Alon. She that is queen of Tunis: she that dwells
Ten leagues beyond man’s life; she that from Naples
Can have no note, unless the sun were post
(The man i’ the moon’s too slow,) till new-born chins
Be rough and razorable; she, from whom
We were all sea-swallow’d, though some cast again;
And, by that, destined to perform an act,
Whereof what’s past is prologue; what to come,
To yours and my discharge.
Seb. What stuff is this?—How say you?
’Tis true, my brother’s daughter’s queen of Tunis:
So she is heir of Naples; ’twixt which regions
There is some space.
Ant. A space whose every cubit
Seems to cry out, How shall that Claribel
Measure us back to Naples?—Keep in Tunis,
And let Sebastian wake!—Say, this was death
That now hath seized them; why, they were no worse
Than now they are: there be, that can rule Naples,
As well as he that sleeps; lords, that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily
As this Gonzalo; I myself could make
A chough of as deep chat. O, that you bore
The mind that I do! what a sleep were this
For your advancement! Do you understand me?
Seb. Methinks, I do, I.
Ant. And how does your content
Tender your own good fortune?
Seb. I remember,
You did supplant your brother Prospero.
Ant. True:
And, look, how well my garments sit upon me;
Much fester than before: My brother’s servants
Were then my fellows now they are my men.
SCENE II. — Another part of the Island.

Enter CALIBAN, with a burden of wood.

A noise of thunder heard.

Cul. All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prosper fall, and make him
By inch-meal a disease! His spirits hear me,
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with urchin shows, pitch me I the mire,
Nor lead me, like a fire-brand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid them; but
For every trifle are they set upon me;
Sometimes like apes, that moe and chatter at me,
And after, bite me; then like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall; sometime am I
All wound with adders, who, with, cloven tongues,
Do hiss me into madness:—Lo! now! lo!

Enter TRINCULO.

Here comes a spirit of his; and to torment me,
For bringing wood in slowly: I'll fall flat;
Perchance, he will not mind me.

Tri. Here's neither bush nor shrub, to beat off any weather at all, and another storm brewing;
I hear it sing i' the wind: yond same black cloud, yond huge one, looks like a foul bumbard that Would shed his liquor. If it should thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head:
yond same cloud cannot choose but fall by pailfuls.
—What have we here? a man or a fish? dead or alive?
or fish: he smells like a fish: a very ancient and fish-like smell: a kind of, not of the newest, Poor-John. A strange fish! Were I in England now, (as once I was,) and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver: there would this monster make a man; any strange beast there makes a man: when they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to do a sick Indian. Leg'd like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm, o' my troth! I do now let loose my opinion, hold it no longer;
this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunder-bolt. [Thunder.] Alas! the storm is come again: my best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout: Misery acquaints a man with strange bed-fellows. I will here shroud, till the dregs of the storm be past.

Enter STEPHANO, singing: a bottle in his hand.

Srn. I shall no more to sea, to sea,
Here shall I die a-shore:—
This is a very scurry tune to sing at a man's funeral: Well, here's my comfort.

[Drinks.

The master, the swabber, the boatswain, and I,
The gunner, and his mate,
Loy'd Mall, Meg, and Marlan, and Margery,
But none of us ear'd for Kate:
For she had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, Go, hang;
She lov'd not the savour of tar nor of pitch,
Yet a tailor might scratch her where-e'er she did itch:
Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang.

This is a scurry tune too: But here's my comfort.

[Drinks.

Cal. Do not torment me: Oh!

Ste. What's the matter? Have we devils here?
Do you put tricks upon us with savages, and men of Inde? Ha! I have not 'scapeed drowning, to be a'ared now of your four legs; for it hath been said, As proper a man as ever went on four legs, cannot make him give ground; and it shall be said
so again, while Stephano breathes at nostrils.

Cal. The spirit torments me: Oh! I'll Ste. This is some monster of the isle, with four legs; who hath got, as I take it, an aque: Where the devil should he learn our language! I will give him some relief, if it be but for that: If I can recover him, and keep him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever broads on neat-leather.

Cal. Do not torment me, pr'ythee;
I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now; and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle; if he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. If I can recover him, and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him; he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

Cal. Thou dost me yet but little hurt; thou wilt Anon. I know it by thy trembling;
Now Prosper works upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways; open your mouth:
here is that which will give language to you, eat;
open your mouth: this will shake your shakin', I can tell you, and that soundly: you cannot tell who's your friend: open your chaps again.

Trin. I should know that voice: It should be—
But he is drowned; and these are devils: Oh! defend me!—

Ste. Four legs, and two voices; a most delicate monster! His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches, and to detract. If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his ague: Come —Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano—

Ste. Doth thy other mouth call me?—Mercy!
mercy! This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no long spoon.

Trin. Stephano!—if thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speak to me; for I am Trinculo,—be not afraid,—thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth; I'll pull thee by the lesser legs; if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo, in deed: How canst thou to be the siege of this moon-calf? Can he eat Trinculos?

Trin. I took him to be killed with a thunder-stroke:—But art thou not drowned, Stephano? I hope now, thou art not drowned. Is the storm over-blown! I hid me under the dead moon calf's gaberline, for fear of the storm. And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitans
'shoop!-

Ste. Pr'ythee, do not turn me about; my stomach is not constant.

Cal. These be fine things, an if they be not sprites,
That's a brave god, and bears celestial liquor:
I will kneel to him.

Ste. How did'st thou 'scape? how cam'st thou lither? I swear by this bottle, how thou cam'st lither. I escaped upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved over-board, by this bottle! which I made of the bark of a tree, with mine own hands, since I was cast a-shore.

Cal. I'll swear, upon that bottle, to be thy True subject; for the liquor is not earthly.

Ste. Here; swear then how thou escap'dst.

Trin. Swam a-shore, man, like a duck; I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

Ste. Here, kiss the book: Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trin. O Stephano, hast any more of this?

Ste. The whole butt, man; my cellar is in a rock by the sea-side, where my wine is hid. How now, moon-calf! how does this ague?

Cal. Hast thou not dropped from heaven?

Ste. Out o' the moon, I do assure thee: I was the man in the moon, when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her, and I do adore
thee;
My mistress shewed me thee, thy dog, and bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents: swear.

Trin. By this good light this is a very shallow monster:—I fear'd of him a very weak monster;
—The man!—the moon!—a most poor credulous monster: Well drawn, monster, in good sooth.

Cal. I'll be thy thee every fertile inch o' the island;
And kiss thy foot: I pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most peridious and drunken monster; when his god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle.

Cal. I'll kiss thy foot: I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on then; down and swear.

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster: a most scurvy monster!
I could find in my heart to best him,—

Ste. Come, kiss.

Trin. —but till the poor monster's in drink;
An abominable monster!

Cal. I'll shew thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries;
I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough.
A plague upon the tyrant that I serve!
I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee,
Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster! to make a wonder of a poor drunkard.

Cal. I pr'ythee, let me bring thee where crabs

And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-muts; Shew thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how to make the nimble marmozet; I'll bring thee to clust'ring filbers, and sometimes I'll get thee young sea-mells from the rock: Wilt thou go with me?

Ste. I pr'ythee now, lead the way, without any more talking. —Trinculo, the king and all our company else being drown'd, we will inherit here.—
Here! bear she the bottle. Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again.

Cal. Farwell, master: farwell, farwell.

[Sings drunkenly.

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster.

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish;
Nor fetch in firing
At requiring,
Nor scrape trenchering, nor wash dish;
'Ban 'Ban, Ca—Caliban,
Has a new master—Get a new man.
Freedom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! freedom
FRIEND, hey-day, freedom! freedom.

Ste. O brave monster! lead the way. [Exeunt.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

Fer. There be some sports are painful; but their labour Delight in them sets off: some kinds of baseness Are nobly undergone; and most poor matters Point to rich ends. This my mean task would be As heavy to me, as 'tis odious; but The mistress, which I serve, quickens what's dead, And makes my labours pleasures: Oh, she is Ten times more gentle than her father's crabb'd; And he's composed of harshness. I must remove Some thousands of these logs, and pile them up, Upon a sore injunction: My sweet mistress Weeps when she sees me work; and says, such baseness Had ne'er like executor. I forget: But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my la- Most busy-less, when I do it. [bours; Enter Miranda, and Prospero at a distance.

Mira. Alas, now! pray you, Work not so hard: I would the lightning had Burnt up those logs, that you are enjoin'd to pile! Pray, set it down, and rest you: when this burns, 'Twill weep for having wearied you: My father Is hard at study; pray now, rest yourself; He's safe for these three hours. Fer. All most dear mistress, The sun will set, before I shall discharge What I must strive to do.

Mira. If you'll sit down, I'll bear your logs the while: Pray, give me that: I'll carry it to the pile.

Fer. No, precious creature: I had rather crack my sinews, break my back, Than you should such dishonour undergo, Mira. Labour It would become me As well as it does you: and I should do it With much more ease; for my good will is to it, And yours against.

Pro. Poor worm! thou art infected; This visitation shows it.

Mira. You look wary.

Fer. No, noble mistress; 'tis fresh morning with me, When you are by at night. I do beseech you, (Chiefly, that I might set it in my prayers. What is your name?

Mira. Miranda: —O my father, I have broke your 'hest to say so!

Fer. Admired Miranda! Indeed, the top of admiration; worth What's dearest to the world! Full many a lady I have eyed with best regard; and many a time The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage Brought my too diligent ear: for several virtues Have I liked several women; never any With so full soul, but some defect in her Did quarrel with the noblest grace she owed, And put it to the foil: But you, O you, So perfect, and so peerless, are created Of every creature's best.

Mira. I do not know
One of my sex! no woman's face remember, Save, from my glass, mine own; nor have I seen More that I may call men, than you, good friend. And my dear father: how features are abroad, I am skill-less of; but, by my modesty, (The jewel in my dowre,) I would not wish Any companion in the world but you; Nor can imagination form a shape, Beside yourself, to like of—But I prattle Something too wildly, and my father's precepts Therein forget.

Fer. I am, in my condition, A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king; (I would, not so!) and would no more endure This wooden slavery, than I would suffer The flesh-fly blow my mouth. —Hear my soul The very instant that I saw you, did [speak;— My heart fly to your service; there resides, To make me slave to it; and for your sake, Am I this patient log-man.

Mira. Do you love me?

Fer. O heaven, O earth, bear witness to this sound, And crown what I profess with kind event, If I speak true; if hollowly, invert What best is bo'ded me, to mischief! I, Beyond all limit of what else! the world, Do love, prize, honour you.

Mira. I am a fool, To weep at what I am glad of. Pro. Fair encounter Of two most rare affections! Heavens, rain grace On that which breeds between them!

Fer. Wherefore weep you?

Mira. At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer What I desire to give; and much less take, What I shall die to want—But this is trifling; And all the more it seeks to hide itself, The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bashful cun- And prompt me, plain and holy innocence! [ning; I am your wife, if you will marry me; If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow You may deny me; but I'll be your servant, Whether you will or no.

Fer. My mistress, dearest, And I thus humble ever.

Mira. My husband then?

Fer. Ay, with a heart as willing As bondage e'er of freedom: here's my hand. Mira. And mine, with my heart in't: And now farewell, Till half an hour hence.

Fer. A thousand! thousand! [Exeunt Fer. and Mira.

Pro. So glad of this as they, I cannot be, Who are surprised with all; but my rejoicing At nothing can be more. Ill to my book; For yet, ere supper time, must I perform Much business appertaining.]

SCENE II.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Stephano and Trinculo; Caliban following with a bottle.

Stee. Tell not me:—when the butt is out, we will drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and hold 'em: Servant-monster, drink to me
Trin. Servant-monster? the folly of this island! They say, there's but five upon this isle: we are three of them; if the other two be brained like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee; thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.

Ste. My man-monster hath drowned his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot drown me: I swear, ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light.—Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no standard.

Ste. We'll not run, monsieur monster.

Trin. Nor go neither: but you'll lie, like dogs; and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-calf.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy I'll not serve him, he is not a valiant.

Trin. Thouliest, most ignorant monster; I am in case to justle a constable: why, thou deboshed fish thou, was there ever a man a coward, that hath drunk so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish, and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, my lord?

Trin. Lord, quoth he!—that a monster should beget a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I pr'ythee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head; if you prove a runter, the next tree—the poor monster's subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleased To hearken once again the suit I made thee?

Ste. Marry will I; knead and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter Ariel, invisible.

Cal. As I told thee Before, I am subject to a tyrant; A sorcerer, that by his cunning hath Cheated me of this island.

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou; I would, my valiant master would destroy thee: I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing.

Ste. Mum then, and no more.—[To Caliban.] Proceed.

Cal. I say, by sorcery he got this isle; From me he got it. If thy greatness will Revenge it on him—for, I know, thou dar'st; But this thing dare not.

Ste. Shoe: That's most certain.

Cal. Thou shalt be lord of it, and I'll serve thee. How now shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party? [asleep, Cal. Yea, yea, my lord; I'll yield him thee Where thou may'st knock a nail into his head. Ari. Thou liest, thou canst not.

Cal. What a pied nunny's this? Thou scurvy patch!— I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows, And take his bottle from him: when that's gone, He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show Where the quick freshes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no further danger: interrupt the monster one word further, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out of doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing; I'll go further off.

Ste. Didst thou not say, he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Ste. Do I so? take thou that. [Strikes him.] As you like this, give me the lie another time.

Trin. I did not give the lie:—Out o' your wits, and hearing too?—A pox o' your bottle! this can sack and drinking do.—A murrain on you monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Cal. Ha, ha, ha! Shoe. Now, forward with your tale. Pr'ythee, stand further off.

Cal. Beat him enough: after a little time, I'll beat him too.

Ste. Stand further.—Come, proceed.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him I the afternoon to sleep: there thou may'st brain Having first seized his books; or with a log [him, Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake, Or cut his weazend with thy knife: Remember, First to possess his books; for without them He's but a jot, as I am, nor hath not One spirit to command: they all do hate him, As rootedly as I: Burn but his books; He has brave utensils, (for so he calls them,) Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal. And that most deeply to consider, is The beauty of his daughter; he himself Calls her a non-pareil: I ne'er saw woman, But only Sycorax my dam, and she; But she as far surpasseth Sycorax, As greatest does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a less?

Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I war—And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter And I will be king and queen; (save our graces!) And Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroys:—Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand; I am sorry I beat thee: but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head. Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep; Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honour.

Ari. This will I tell my master.

Cal. Thou makest me merry: I am full of plea—Let us be jocund: Will you troll the catch [sure; You taught me but while-ere?]

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason: Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings. Flout 'em, and scout 'em; and scout 'em, and flout 'em; Thought is free.

Cal. That's not the tune.

[Ariel plays the tune on a lutor and pipe]

Ste. What is this same?

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of No-body.
Scene III.

Tempest.

Ste. If thou beest a man, shew thyself in thy likeness: if thou beest a devil, take't as thou list. Trin. O, forgive me my sins! Ste. He that dies, pays all debts: I defy thee:—

Mercy upon us! Cal. Art thou afraid? Ste. No, monster, not I. Cal. Be not afraid; the isle is full of noises, Sounds, and sweet airs, that give delight, and hurt Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments [not. Will hum about mine ears: and sometimes voices, That, if I then had waked after long sleep, Will make me sleep again; and then, in dreaming, The clouds, metherough, would open and shew riches Ready to drop upon me: that, when I waked, I cried to dream again. Ste. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing. Cal. When Prospero is destroyed. Ste. That shall be by and by: I remember the story.

Trin. The sound is going away: let's follow it, and after, do our work. Ste. Lead, monster, we'll follow. I would I could see this taborer: he lays it on. Trin. Wilt come? I'll follow, Stephano. [Exeunt.

Scene III.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others.

Gon. By'r lakin, I can go no farther, sir; My old bones ache: here's a maze trod, indeed, Through forth-rights and meanders! by your pa- I needs must rest me. [tence.

Alon. Old lord, I cannot blame thee, Who am myself attach'd with weariness, To the dunning of my spirits: sit down and rest. Even here I will put off my hope, and keep it No longer for my blatterer: he is drown'd, Whom thus we stray to find: and the sea macks Our frustrate search on land: Well, let him go.

Ant. I am right glad that he's so out of hope.

[Aside to Sebastian. Do not, for one repulse, forego the purpose That you resolved to effect.

Seb. The next advantage Will we take thoroughly.

Ant. Let it be to-night; For, now they are oppress'd with travel, they Will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance, As when they are fresh.

Seb. I say to-night; no more. Solemn and strange music; and Prospero above, invisible. Enter several strange shapes, bringing in a banquet; they dance about with gentle actions of salutation, and inviting the King, &c. to eat, they depart.

Alon. What harmony is this? my good friends, hark!

Gon. Marvellous sweet music! Alon. Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were these?

Seb. A living drollery: Now I will believe, That there are unicorns; that, in Arabia There is one tree, the pheni'x throne; one pheni*x At this hour reigning there.

Ant. I'll believe both; And what does else want credit, come to me, And I'll be sworn 'tis true: travellers ne'er did't; Though fools at home condemn them.

Gon. I should report this now, would they believe me? If I should say, I saw such islanders, (For, certes, these are people of the island,) Who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note, Their manners are more gentle-kind, than of Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

Pro. Honest lord, Thou hast said well; for some of you there present Are worse than devils. [Aside.

Alon. I cannot too much muse, Such shapes, such gesture, and such sound, ex- pressing (Although they want the use of tongue,) a kind Of excellent dumb discourse.

Fron. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since They have left their viands behind; for we have stomachs.— Will't please you taste of what is here? Alon. Not I. Gon. Faith sir, you need not fear: When we were boys, Who would believe that there were mountaineers, Dew-lapp'd like bull's, whose throats had hanging at them Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men, Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we find, Each putter-out on five for one, will bring us Good warrant of.

Alon. I will stand to, and feed, Although my last: no matter, since I feel, The best is past:—Brother, my lord the duke, Stand to, and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table, and with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom destiny (That hath to instrument this lower world, And what is in't,) the never-surfaced sea Hath caused to belch up; and on this island Where man doth not inhabit; you 'mongst men Being most unfit to live. I have made you mad; [Seeing Alon. Sen. &c. draw their swords. And even with such like valour, men hang and drown Their proper selves. You fools! I and my fellows Are ministers of fate: the elements, Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well Wound the loud winds, or with bemoke'd-at stabs Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish One dowle that's in my plume; my fellow-ministers Are like invulnerable; if you could hurt, Your swords are now too massy for your strengths. And will not be uplifted: But, remember, (For that's my business to you,) that you three From Milan did supplant good Prospero; Exposed unto the sea, which hath requited it. Him, and his innocent child: for which foul deed The powers, delaying, not forgetting, have Incensed the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures, Against your peace: Their, of thy son, Alonso, They have bereft; and do pronounce by me, Ling'ring perdition (worse than any death
Can be at once;) shall step by step attend [from You and your ways; whose wrath to guard you (Which here, in this most desolate isle; else falls Upon your heads,) is nothing, but heart's sorrow And a clear life ensuing.

He watches in thunder: then, to soft music, enter the Sirens again, and dance with mops and mowes, and carry out the table.

Pro. [Aside.] Bravely the figure of this happy hast thou Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouing: Of my instruction hast thou nothing 'hated, In what thou hast to say: so, with good life, And observation strange, my meader ministers Their several kinds have done: my high charms And these, mine enemies, are so knit up [work, In their distractions: they now are in my power; And in these fits I leave them, whilst I visit Young Ferdinand, (who they suppose is drown'd,) And his and my love darling. [Exit Prospero from above.

Gon. I' the name of something holy, sir, why In this strange stare I [stand you.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pro. If have too amasterly punished you, Your compensation makes amends; for I Have given you here a thread of mine own life, Or that for which I live: whom once again I tender to thy hand; all thy vexations Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strangely stood the test: here, afore Heaven, I ratify this my rich gift. O Ferdinand, Do not smile at me, that I boast her off, For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise, And make it halt behind her.

Per. I do believe it, Against an oracle.

Pro. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worthily purchas'd, take my daughter: But if thou dost break her virgin knot before All sanctimonious ceremonies may With full and holy rite be minister'd, No sweet aspersion shall the heavens let fall To make this contract grow: but barren hate, Sour-eyed disdain, and discord, shall bestrew The union of your bed with weeds so loathly, That you shall hate it both: therefore, take heed, As Hymen's lamps shall light you.

Per. As I hope For quiet days, fair issue, and long life, With such love as 'tis now; the murkiest den, The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion Our worser Genius can, shall never melt Mine honour into lust; to take away The edge of that day's celebration, When I shall think, or Phoebus's steeds are founder'd, Or night kept chain'd below.

Pro. Fairly spoke: Sit then, and talk with her, she is thine own, What, Ariel; my industrious servant Ariel! [Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master! here I am.

Pro. Thou and thy meander fellow's your last service Did worthily perform; and I must use you In such another trick: go, bring the rabble, O'er whom I give thee power, here, to this place: Inite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art; it is my promise, And they expect it from me.

Ari. Presently!

Pro. Aye, with a twinkle.

Ari. Before you can say, come, and go?, And breathe twice; and cry, so, so; Each one, tripping on his toe, Will be here with mop and mowes: Do you love me, master? no.

Pro. Dearly, my delicate Ariel: do not approach, Till thou dost hear me call.

Ari. Well I conceive. [Exit.

Pro. Look, thou be true: do not give dalliance Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw To the fire? the blood: be more abstemious, Or else, good night your vow!

Per. I warrant you, sir, The white cold virgin snow upon my heart Abates the ardour of my liver.

Pro. Well,— Now come, my Ariel: bring a corollary, Rather than want a spirit: appear, and pertly,— No tongue; all eyes; be silent. [Soft music.

A Masque. Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich less Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats, and pease; Thy turgid mountains, where live nibbling sheep, And flat meads thatch'd with stover, them to keep; Thy banks with peonied and lilled brims, Which spoggy April at thy 'hest betrays, To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; and thy blem groves, Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves.
Being lass-born; thy pole-clipit vineyard;
And thy sea-marge, steril, and rocky-hard,
Where thou thyself dost air: The queen o' the sky,
Whose watery arch, and messenger, am I,
Bide thee leave these; and with her sovereign grace,
Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
To come and sport: her peacocks fly amain;
Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Cer. Hail many-colour'd messenger, that ne'er
Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter;
Who, with thy saffron wings, upon my flowers
Diffuseth honey drops, refreshing showers;
And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown
My bosky acres, and my unshrub'd down,
Rich scarf to my proud heart: Why hath thy queen
Summon'd me hither, to this short-grass'd green?

Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate;
And some donation freely to estate
On the bless'd lovers.

Cer. Tell me, heavenly bow,
If Venus, or her son, as thou dost know,
Do now attend the queen? since they did plot
The means, that dusky Dis my daughter got,
Her and her blind boy's scandal'd company?
I have forsworn.

Iris. Of her society
Be not afraid; I met her deity
Cutting the clouds towards Phosphos; and her son
Dove-drawn with her: here thought they to have done
Some wanton charm upon this man and maid,
Whose vows are that no bed-rite shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted; but in vain;
Mars's hot nimion is return'd again;
Her waspish-headed son has broke his arrows,
Swears he will shoot no more, but play with spar-
And be a boy right out.

Cer. Highest queen of state,
Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Jun. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me,
To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be,
And honour'd in their issue.

SONG.

Jun.--Honour, riches, marriage-blessing,
Long continuance, and increasing,
Hourly joys be still upon you!
Juno sings her blessings on you.

Cer.--Earth's increase, and fison plenty,
Barns and garners never empty;
Vines, with clustering branches growing;
Plants, with goodly burden bowing;
Spring come to you, at the farthest,
In the very end of harvest!
Scarcity and want shall shun you;
Ceres' blessing so is on you.

Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly: May I be bold
To think these spirits?

Pro. Spirits, which by mine art
I have from their confines called to enact
My present fancies.

Fer. Let me live here ever;
So rare a wonder'd father, and a wife,
Make this place Paradise.

Juno and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.

Pro. Sweet now, silence;
Juno and Ceres whisper seriously;

There's something else to do: hush, and be mute,
Or else our spell is marst'd.

Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wand-ring brooks,
With your sedged crowns, and ever harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons: Juno does command.
Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate
A contract of true love; be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs.

You sun-burn'd sicklemen, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow, and be merry;
Make holy-day: your rye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited; they join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end whereof Phoebus starts suddenly, and speaks; after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heartily consent.

Pro. Aside.] I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates,
Against my life; the minute of their plot
Is almost come.—[To the spirits.] Well done;—
avoid;—no more.

Fer. This is most strange: your father's in some
That works him strongly.

Mira. Never till this day,
Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd.

Pro. You do look, my son, in a moved sort
As if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir:
Our revels now are ended: these our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits, and,
Are melted into air, into thin air;
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind: We are such stuff
As dreams are made of, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.—Sir, I am vex'd;
Bears with my weakness; my old brain is troubled.
Be not disturb'd with my infirmity;
If you be pleased, retire into my cell,
And there repose; a turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.

Fer. Mira. We wish your peace.

Pro. Come with a thought:—I thank you:—
Ariel, come.

[Exeunt.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to: What's thy Spirit, pleasure? We must prepare to meet with Caliban.
[Enter Ceres.

Ari. Ay, my commander; when I presented
I thought to have told thee of it; but I fear'd,
Lest I might anger thee.

Pro. Say again, where didst thou leave these varlets?

Ari. I told you, sir, they were red-hot with
So full of valour, that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
For kissing of their feet; yet always bending
Towards their project: Then I beat my tabor,
At which, like unback'd colts, they prickt'd their muzzle,
Advanced their eye-lids, lift up their noses,
As they smelt music; so I charm'd their ears,
That, calf-like, they my lolling follow'd, through TEMPEST.

Tooth’d briers, sharp furzes, prickings goss, and thorns,
Which enter’d their frail shins: at last I left them
I’ the filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to the chins, that the foul lake
Overstunk their feet.

This was well done, my bird;
The trumpey in my house, go, bring it hither,
For stale to catch these thieves.

I go, I go. [Exeunt.

Ariel. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature
Nurture can never stick; on whom my pains,
Humanely taken, all, all lost, quite lost:
And as, with age, his body uglier grows,
So his mind cankers: I will plague them all,

Even to roaring:—Come, hang them on this line.

Prospero and Ariel remain invisible. Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you tread softly, that the blind mole
May not

Hear a footfall: we now are near his cell.

Ste. Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is a harmless fairy; has done little better than played
The Jack with us.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-piss; at Which my nose is in great indignation.

Ste. So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I Should take a displeasure against you; look you,—

Trin. Thouwert but a lost monster.

Cal. Good my lord, give me thy favour still:
Be patient, for the prize I’ll bring thee to Shall hood-wink this mischance: therefore speak Softly,

All’s hush’d as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool—

Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonour
In that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That’s more to me than my wetting: yet
This is your harmless fairy, monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o’er Ears for my labour.

Cal. Pr’ythee, my king, be quiet: Sceast thou here,
This is the mouth o’ the cell: no noise, and enter.

Do that good mischief, which may make this island
Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban,

For eye thy foot licker.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy
Stephano! look, what a wardrobe here is for thee.

Cal. Let it alone, thou fool; it is but trash.

Trin. O, ho, monster; we know what belongs to a frippery:—O king Stephano!

Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo; by this hand,
I’ll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it.

Cal. The dropsy drown this fool! what do you
To doat thus on such luggage? Let’s along, [mean,
And do the murder first: if he awake,

From toe to crown he’ll fill our skins with pinches;
Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Be you quiet, monster.—Mistress’ line, is Not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair,

And prove a bald jerkin.

Trin. Do, do: We steal by line and level, an’t
Like your grace.

Ste. I thank thee for that jest: here’s a garment for’t: wit shall not go unrewarded, while I am King of this country: Steal by line and level, is An excellent pass of pate: there’s another garment for’t.

Trin. Monster, come, put some lime upon your Fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have none on’t: we shall lose our
And all our turn’d to barnacles, or to apes [time,
With foreheads villainous low.

Ste. Monster, lay-to your fingers; help to bear
This way, where my hoghead of wine is, or I’ll

Turn you out of my kingdom: go to, carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

A noise of hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits, in Shape of hounds, and hunt them about. Prospero
And Ariel, settling them on.

Pro. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver!

Pro. Fury, Fury! there, Tyrant, there! hark,

Hark! [Cal. Ste. and Trin. are driven out.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints

With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews

With aged cramps; and more pinch-spotted make

Than pard, or cat o’ mountain. [them,

Ari. Hark, they roar.

Pro. Let them be hunted soundly: At this hour

Lie at my mercy all mine enemies:

Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou
Shalt have the air at freedom: for a little,

Follow, and do me service. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes; and Ariel.

Pros. Now does my project gather to a head:

My charmcrack not; my spirits obey; and time
Go upright with his carriage. How’s the day?

Ari. On the sixth hour; at which time, my lord,
You said our work should cease.

Pros. I did say so,

When first I raised the tempest. Say, my spirit,

How fares the king and his?

Ari. Confined together

In the same fashion as you gave in charge;

Just as you left them, sir; all prisoners

That if you now behold them, your affections
Would become tender.

Pros. Dost thou think so, spirit?

Ari. Mine would, sir, were I human.

Pros. And mine shall,
but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions? and shall not myself,
One of their kind, that relish all as sharply,
Passion as they, be kindlier moved than thou art?
Though with their high wrongs I am strack to the quick,
Yea, with my nobler reason 'gainst my fury
Do I take part: the rarer action is
In virtue than in vengeance: they being penitent,
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown further: Go, release them, Ariel;
My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore,
And they shall be themselves.
Arie. I'll fetch them, sir. [Exit.
Pro. Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes,
And groves;
And ye, that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him,
When he comes back: you demy-puppets, that
By moon-shine do the great ringlets make,
When of the chalky groves; and you, whose pastime
Is to make midnight-mushrooms; that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew; by whose aid
(Weak masters though ye be,) I have be-dimm'd
The noontide sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds,
And 'twixt the green sea and the azure vault
Set roaring war: to the dread rattling thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak
With his own bolt: the strong based promontory
Have I made shake; and by the spurs pluck'd up
The pine and cedar: graves, at my command,
Have waked their sleepers; oped, and let them forth
By my so potent art: But this rough magic
I here abjure: and, when I have required
Some heavenly music, (which even now I do,) To work mine end upon their senses, that
This airy charm is for, I'll break my staff,
Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
And, deeper than did ever plummet sound,
I'll drown my book. [Solemn music.
Re-enter Ariel: after him, Alonso, with a frantic gesture, attended by Gonzalo; Sebastian and Antonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco: they all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmed; which Prospero observing, speaks.
A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains,
Now useless, boil'd within thy skull! There stand,
For you are spell-stopp'd.——
Holy Gonzalo, honourable man,
Mine eyes, even sociable to the show of thine,
Fall fellowly drops.—The charm dissolves space;
And as the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason.—O my good Gonzalo,
My true preserver, and a loyal sir,
To him thou follow'st; I will pay thy graces
Home, both in word and deed.—Most cruelly
Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter:
Thy brother was a furtherer in the act:—
Thou'st pinch'd for't now, Sebastian.— Flesh and blood,
You brother mine, that entertain ambition,
Expell'd remorse and nature; who, with Sebastian (Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong.)
Would here have kill'd your king; I do forgive thee,
Unnatural though thou art!—Their understanding
Begins to swell; and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shores,
That now lie foul and muddy. Not one of them,
That yet looks on me, or would know me:—Ariel
Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell;
I will dis-case me, and myself present,
As I was sometime Milan: quickly, spirit;
Thou shalt ere long be free.
Arie. re-enters, singing, and helps to attire Prospero.
Arie. Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie:
There I couch when owls do cry.
On the hat's back I do fly.
After summer, merrily:
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.
Pro. Why, that's my dainty Ariel: I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom: so, so, so.—
To the king's ship, invisible as thou art:
There shall thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches; the master, and the boatswain,
Being awake, enforce them to this place;
And presently, I pr'ythee.
Arie. I drink the air before me, and return
Or e'er your pulse twice beat. [Exit Ariel.
Gon. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement
Inhabits here: Some heavenly power guide us
Out of this fearful country!
Pro. Behold, sir king,
The wronged duke of Milan, Prospero:
For more assurance that a living prince
Do now speak to thee, I embrace thy body;
And to thee, and thy company, I bid
A hearty welcome.
Alo. Whe're thou beest he, or no,
Or some enchanted trible to abuse me,
As late I have been, I not know: thy pulse
Beats, as of flesh and blood; and, since I saw thee
The affliction of my mind amends, with which,
I fear, a madness held me: this must crave
(An if this be at all,) a most strange story.
Thou duxedom I resign; and do entreat
Thou pardon me my wrongs:—But how should
Be living, and be here?
[Prospero
Pro. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age; whose honour cannot
Be measured or confined.
Gon. Whether this be,
Or be not, I'll not swear.
Pro. You do yet taste
Some subtilties o' the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain:—Welcome, my friends,
All:—
But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
[Aside to Sen. and Ant
I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you.
And justify you traitors; at this time
I'll tell no tales.
Seb. The devil speaks in him.
[Aside.
Pro. No:
For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy rankest fault; all of them; and require
My dukedom of thee, which, perchance, I know,
Thou must restore.
Alo. If thou best Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation:
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since
Were wreck'd upon this shore; where I have lost,
How sharp the point of this remembrance's!
My dear son Ferdinand.

Pro. I am woe for't, sir.
Alon. Irreparable is the loss; and patience
Says it is past her cure.

Pro. I rather think,
You have not sought her help; of whose soft grace
For the like loss, I have her sovereign aid,
And rest myself content.

Alon. You the like loss?
Pro. As great to me, as late; and, portable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you; for I
Have lost my daughter.

Alon. A daughter?
O heavens! that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish
Myself were muddied in that oozy bed
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

Pro. In this last tempest. I perceive, these
At this encounter do so much admire, [lords
That they devour their reason; and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath: but, howsoe'er you have Been justled from your senses, know for certain,
That I am Prospero, and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan; who most strangely [landed,
Upon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was
To be the lord on't. No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Befitting this first meeting. Welcome, sir
This cell's my court: here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in.
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will requite you with as good a thing;
At least, bring forth a wonder, to content ye,
As much as me my dukedom.

The entrance of the Cell opens, and discovers FERDINAND AND MIRANDA playing at chess.

Mira. Sweet lord, you play me false.
Fer. No, my dearest love,
I would not for the world.
Mira. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should
And I would call it fair play. [wrangle, Alon. If this prove
A vision of the island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose.
Seb. A most high miracle!
Fer. Though the seas threaten, they are merciful:
I have cursed them without cause. [Ferd. kneels to Alon.

Alon. Now all the blessings
Of a glad father compass thee about!
Arise, and say how thou cam'st here.

Mira. I! wonder!
How many goodly creatures are there here!
How haughty mankind is: O brave new world,
That hath such people in't!

Pro. 'Tis new to thee.
Alon. What is this maid, with whom thou wast at play?
Your old'st acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hast sever'd us,
And brought us thus together?

Fer. Sir, she's mortal;
But, by immortal providence, she's mine;
I chose her, when I could not ask my father
For his advice, nor thought I had one: she
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life, and second father
This lady makes him to me.

Alon. I am hers:
But O, how oddly will it sound, that I
Must ask my child forgiveness!

Pro. There, sir, stop:
Let us not burden our remembrances
With a heaviness that's gone.

Gon. I have inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you
And on this couple drop a blessed crown; [gods,
For it is you, that have chald'k forth the way
Which brought us hither!

Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo!
Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples? O, rejoice
Beyond a common joy; and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars: In one voyage
Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis;
And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife,
Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom
In a poor isle: and all of us, ourselves,
When no man was his own.

Alon. Give me your hands:
[To Ferd. and Mir.
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart,
That doth not wish you joy!
Gon. Be't so! Amen!

Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain amazed,

Ariel. All is well. I have done since I went.
Pro. My tricksy spirit!

Alon. These are not natural events; they strongen,
[hither?
From strange to stranger:—Say, how came you
Boats. If I did think, sir, I were well awake,
I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep,
And (how we know not,) all clapp'd under hatches,
Where, but even now, with strange and several noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, gingling chains,
And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
We were awaked: straitway, at liberty:
Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld
Our royal, good, and gallant ship; our master
Capering to eye her: On a truce, so please you,
Even in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither.

Ariel. Was't well done?
Pro. Bravely, my diligence. Thou shalt
Aside. be free.

Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod
And there is in this business more than nature
Was ever conduct of: some oracle
Must rectify our knowledge.
SCENE 1.

TEMPEST.

Pro. Sir, my liege, Do not infest your mind with beating on The strangeness of this business: at pick'd leisure, Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you (Which to you shall seem probable,) of every These happen'd accidents: till when, be cheerful, And think of each thing well.—Come hither, spirit; [Aside. Set Caliban and his companions free: Untie the spell. [Exit Ariel.] How fares my gracious sir? There are yet missing of your company Some few odd lads that you remember not. [Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, in their stolen apparel. Ste. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself; for all is but fortune: —Coragio, bully-monster, coragio! Trin. If these be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight. Cal. O Setebos, these be brave spirits, indeed! How fine my master is! I am afraid He will chastise me. Seb. Ha, ha; What things are these, my lord Antonio! Will money buy them? Ant. Very like; one of them Is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable. [lords, Pro. Mark but the badges of these men, my Then say if they be true:—This mis-shapen knave,— His mother was a witch; and one so strong That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs, And deal in her command, without her power: These three have robb'd me: and this demi-devil (For he's a bastard one,) had plotted with them To take my life: two of these fellows you Must know, and own; this thing of darkness I Acknowledge mine. Cal. I shall be pinch'd to death. Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler? Seb. He is drunk now: where had he wine? Alon. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: Where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded them?— How can't thou in this pickle?

Trin. I have been in such a pickle, since I saw you last, that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly-blowing. Seb. Why, how now; Stephano? Ste. O, touch me not; I am not Stephano, but a cramp. Pro. You'd be king of the isle, sirrah? Ste. I should have been a sore one then. Alon. This is as strange a thing as e'er I look'd on. [Pointing to Caliban. Pro. He is as disproportioned in his manners As in his shape:—Go, sirrah, to my cell; Take with you your companions; as you look To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Cal. Ay, that I will; and I'll be wise hereafter, And seek for grace: What a thrice-double ass Was I, to take this drunkard for a god, And worship this dull fool? Pro. Go to; away! Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it. Seb. Or stole it, rather. [Exeunt Cal., Ste. and Trin. Pro. Sir, I invite your highness, and your train, To my poor cell: where you shall take your rest For this one night; which (part of it,) I'll waste With such discourse as, I not doubt, shall make it Go quick away: the story of my life, And the particular accidents, gone by, Since I came to this isle: And in the morn, I'll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples, Where I have hope to see the nuptial Of these our dear-beloved solemnized; And thence retire me to my Milan, where Every third thought shall be my grave. Alon. I long To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely. Pro. I'll deliver all; And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales, And sail so expeditious, that shall catch Your royal feet far off.—My Ariel;—chick,— That is thy charge; then to the elements Be free, and fare thou well!—[Aside. Please you, draw near. [Exeunt

EPILOGUE. Spoken by Prospero.

Now my charms are all o'erthrown, And what strength I have 's mine own; Which is most faint: now 'tis true, I must be here confined by you, Or sent to Naples: Let me not, Since I have my dukedom got, And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell In this bare island, by your spell; But release me from my bands, With the help of your good hands. Gentle breath of yours my sails Must fill, or else my project fails, Which was to please: Now I want Spirits to enforce, art to enchant; And my ending is despair, Unless I be relieved by prayer; Which pierces so, that it assails Mercy itself, and frees all faults. As you from crimes would pardon'd be, Let your indulgence set me free.

SCENE,—Sometimes in Verona; sometimes in Milan; and on the frontiers of Mantua.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An open place in Verona.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus; Home-keeping youth have ever home-ly ways; Wer't not, affection chains thy tender days To the sweetest glances of thy honour'd love, I rather would entreat thy company, To see the wonders of the world abroad, Than living dully staggerd at home, Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. But, since thou lovest, love still, and thrive therein. Even as I would, when I to love begin. [adieu! Pro. Wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, Think on thy Proteus, when thou, haply, seest Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel: Wish me partaker in thy happiness, When thou dost meet good hap: and in thy danger, If ever danger do environ thee, Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers, For I will be thy bed's-man, Valentine. Val. And on a love-book pray for my success. Pro. Upon some book I love, I'll pray for thee. Val. That's on some shallow story of deep love, How young Leander cross'd the Hellespont.

Pro. That's a deep story of a deeper love; For he was more than over shoes in love.

Val. 'Tis true; for you are over boots in love, And yet you never swam the Hellespont.

Pro. Over the boots? nay, give me not the boots. Val. No, I'll not, for it boots thee not.

Pro. What?

Val. To be

In love, where scorn is bought with groans; coy looks With heart-sore sighs; one fading moment's mirth, With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights: If haply won, perhaps, a hapless gain; If lost, why then a grievous labour won; However, but a folly bought with wit, Or else a wit by folly vanquished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance, you call me fool.

Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear, you'll prove.
SCENE II.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Pro. I do.
Speed. Why then my horns are his horns, whether
I wake or sleep.

Pro. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheep.
Speed. This proves me still a sheep.
Pro. True; and thy master a shepherd.
Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.
Pro. It shall go hard, but I'll prove it by another.
Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore, I am no sheep.
Pro. The sheep for fodder follow the shepherd, the shepherd for food follows not the sheep; thou for wages followest thy master, thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore, thou art a sheep.
Speed. Such another proof will make me cry ba.
Pro. But dost thou hear? gav'st thou my letter to Julia?
Speed. Ay, sir; I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour!
Speed. I'm too small a pasture for such a store of muttons.
Speed. If the ground be overcharged, you were best stick her
Pro. Nay, in that you are astray; 'twere best pound you.
Speed. Nay, sir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter.
Pro. You mistake; I mean the pound, a pinfold.
Speed. From a pound to a pin? fold it over and over,
'Tis thousandf too little for carrying a letter to your lover.
Pro. But what said she? did she nod?
[Speed nods.

Pro. I nod, I; why, that's noddy.
Speed. You mistook, sir; I say, she did nod: and you ask me, if she did nod; and I say, I.
Pro. And that set together, is--noddy.
Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it together, take it for your pains.
Pro. No, no, you shall have it for bearing the letter on.
Speed. Well, I perceive, I must be fain to bear with you.
Pro. Why, sir, how do you bear with me?
Speed. Marry, sir, the letter very orderly: having nothing but the word, noddy, for my pains.
Pro. Beshrew me, but you have a quick wit.
Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.
Pro. Come, come, open the matter in brief:
What said she?
Speed. Open your purse, that the money, and the matter, may be both at once delivered.
Pro. Well, sir, here is for your pains: What said she?
Speed. Truly, sir, I think you'll hardly win her.
Pro. Why? Could'st thou perceive so much from her.
Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her; no, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter: And being so hard to me that brought your mind, I fear, she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Give her no token but stones; for she's as hard as steel.
Pro. What, said she nothing?
Speed. No, not so much as--take this for thy pains. To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testern'd me; in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letters yourself: and so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.
Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck;
Which cannot perish, having thee aboard,
Being destined to a drier death on shore:—
I must go send some better messenger;
I fear, my Julia would not deign my lines,
Receiving them from such a worthless post.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Garden of Julia's House.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,
Would'st thou then counsel me to fall in love?
Luc. Ay, madam; so you stumble not unheed-
Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen, [fullly.
That every day with parole encounter me,
In thy opinion, which is worthiest love?
Luc. Please you, repeat their names, I'll show my according to my shallow simple skill.
Jul. What think'st thou of the fair Sir Egclamour?
Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat and fine;
But, were I you, he never should be mine.
Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatio?
Luc. Well, of his wealth; but of himself, so, so.
Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?
Luc. Lord! lord! I to see what folly reigns in us!
Jul. How now! what means this passion at his name?
Luc. Pardon, dear madam; 'tis a passing shame,
That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.
Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?
Luc. Then thus,—of many good I think him
Jul. Your reason?
[best.
Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason;
I think him so, because I think him so.
Jul. And would'st thou have me cast my love on him?
Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.
Jul. Why, he of all the rest hath never moved me.
Luc. Yet he of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.
Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small.
Luc. Fire, that is closest kept, burns most of all.
Jul. They do not love, that do not show their love.
Luc. O, they love least, that let men know their
Jul. I would, I knew his mind.
[love.
Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.
Jul. 'To Julia,'—Say, from whom?
Luc. That the contents will show.
Jul. Say, say; who gave it thee?
Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think,
from Proteus:
He would have given it you, but I, being in the way,
Did in your name receive it; pardon the fault, I pray.
Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly broker!
Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?
To whisper and conspire against my youth?
Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place.
There, take the paper, see it be return'd;
Or else return no more into my sight.
Luc. To plead for love deserves more fee tha
Jul. Will you be gone?
[Exeunt.
Luc. That you may ruminate. [Exit.
Jul. And yet, I would, I had o'ertook'd the letter, It were a shame to call her back again, And pray her to a fault for which I chid her. What fool is she, that knows I am a maid, And would not force the letter to my view? Since maids, in modesty, say No, to that Which they would have the profferer construe, Ay, fie! howwayward is this foolish love, That, like a testy babe, will scratch the nurse, And presently, all humbled, kiss the rod! How curiously I chid Lucetta hence, When willingly I would have had her here! How angrily I taught my brow to frown, When inward joy enforced my heart to smile! My penance is, to call Lucetta back, And ask remission for my folly past:— What ho! Lucetta?

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. What would your ladyship? Was it near dinner time? Luc. I would it were; That you might kill your stomach on your meat, And not upon your maid. Jul. What is't you took up So gingerly? Luc. Nothing. Jul. Why didst thou stop then? Luc. To take a paper up that I let fall. Jul. And is that paper nothing? Luc. Nothing concerning me. Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns. Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns, Unless it have a false interpreter Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.

Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune: Give me a note: your ladyship can set. Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible; Best sing it to the tune of Light o' love. Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune. Jul. Heavy? belike, it hath some burden then, Luc. Ay; and melodious were it, would you Jul. And why not you? Luc. I cannot reach so high. Jul. Let's see your song;—How now, minion? Luc. Keep tune there still, so you will sing it out: And yet, methinks, I do not like this tune. Jul. You do not? Luc. No, madam; it is too sharp. Jul. You, minion, are too saucy. Luc. Nay, now you are too flat. Jul. And mar the consort with too harsh a descent; There wanteth but a mean to fill your song. Luc. The mean is drown'd with your unruly base. Luc. Indeed, I bid the base for Proteus. Jul. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me. Here is a coil with protestation!—[Tears the letter. Go, get you gone; and let the papers lie: You would be fingerling them, to anger me. Luc. She makes it strange; but she would be best pleased To be so anger'd with another letter. [Exit.
Jul. Nay, would I were so anger'd with the same! O hateful hands, to tear such loving words! Injurious wasps! to feed on such sweet honey, And kill the bees, that yield it, with your stings! I'll kiss each several paper for amends. And, here is writ—kind Julia;—unkind Julia!

As in revenge of thy ingratitude, I throw thy name against the bruising stones Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain. Look, here is writ—love-wounded Proteus:— Poor wounded name! my bosom, as a bed, Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd; And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss. But twice, or thrice, was Proteus written down: Be calm, good wind, blow not a word away, Till I have found each letter in the letter, Except mine own name; that some whirlwind bear Unto a ragged, fearful, hanging rock, And throw it thence into the raging sea! Lo, here in one line is his name twice writ, Poor forlorn Proteus, passionate Proteus, To the sweet Julia; that I'll tear away; And yet I will not, sith so prettily He couples it to his complaining names; Thus will I fold them one upon another; Now kiss, embrace, contend, do what you will.

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. Madam, dinner's ready, and your father Jul. Well, let us go. [stays. Luc. What, shall these papers lie like tell-tales here?
Jul. If you respect them, best to take them up. Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down; Yet here they shall not lie, for catching cold. Jul. I see you have a month's mind to them. Luc. Ay, madam, you may say what sights you see; I see things too, although you judge I wink. Jul. Come, come, wilt please you go? [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A room in Antonio's House.

Enter Antonio and Panthino.
Ant. Tell me, Panthino, what sad talk was that, Wherewith my brother held you in the cloister?
Pan. 'Twas of his nephew Proteus, your son.
Ant. Why, what of him?
Pan. He wonder'd, that your lordship Would suffer him to spend his youth at home; While other men, of slender reputation, Put forth their sons to seek preferment out: Some, to the wars, to try their fortune there; Some, to discover islands far away; Some, to the studious universities. For any, or for all these exercises, He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet: And did request me, to importune you, To let him spend his time no more at home, Which would be great impeachment to his age, In having known no travel in his youth. [that, Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me to Whereon this month I have been hammering. I have consider'd well his loss of time; And how he cannot be a perfect man, Not being tried, and tutor'd in the world: Experience is by industry achieved, And perfected by the swift course of time; Then, tell me, whither were I best to send him?
Pan. I think, your lordship is not ignorant, How his companion, youthful Valentine, Attends the emperor in his royal court.
Ant. I know it well. [him thither:
Pan. 'Twere good, I think, your lordship sent There shall he practise tilts and tournaments,
Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen;
And be in eye of every exercise,
Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth.

Ant. I like thy counsel; well hast thou advised:
And, that thou may'st perceive how well I like it,
The execution of it shall make known;
Even with the speediest execution
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court.

Pan. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Al-
With other gentlemen of good esteem, [phonso,
Are journeying to salute the emperor,
And to commend their service to his will. [go:
Ant. Good company; with them shall Proteus
And, in good time,—now will we break with him.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart;
Here is her oath for love, her honour's own:
O, that our fathers would applaud our loves,
To seal our happiness with their consents!
O heavenly Julia! [there?

Ant. How now? what letter are you reading
Pro. May't please your lordship, 'tis a word or
Of commendation sent from Valentine, [two Deliver'd by a friend that came from him.

Ant. Lend me the letter; let me see what news.
Pro. There is no news, my lord; but that he
How happily he lives, how well-beloved, [writes
And daily graced by the emperor;
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.
Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?
Pro. As one relying on your lordship's will,
And not depending on his friendly wish.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—MILAN. An Apartment in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Speed. Sir, your glove,

Val. Not mine; my gloves are on. [but one.

Speed. Why then this may be yours; for this is
Val. Ha! let me see; ay, give it me, it's mine:—
Sweet ornament that decks a thing divine!
Ah Silvia! Silvia!

Speed. Madam Silvia! madam Silvia!
Val. How now, sirrah?

Speed. She is not within hearing, sir.

Val. Why, sir, who bade you call her?

Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook.

Val. Well, you'll still be too forward. [slow.

Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too

Val. Go to, sir; tell me, do you know madam Silvia?

Speed. She that your worship loves?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Speed. Marry, by these special marks: First, you have learned, like sir Proteus, to wreath your arms like a mallabrant; to solace a love-song, like a Robin-red-breast; to walk alone, like one that had the pestilence; to sigh, like a school-boy that had lost his A, B, C; to weep, like a young wench that had buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes diet; to watch, like one that fears robbing; to speak puling, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laughed, to crow like a cock; when you walked, to walk like one of the lions; when you fasted, it was presently after dinner; when you looked sadly, it was for want of money: and now you are metamorphosed with a mistress, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.

Val. Are all these things perceived in me?

Speed. They are all perceived without you.

Val. Without me? they cannot.

Speed. Without you? nay, that's certain, for, without you were so simple, none else would: but you are so without these follies, that these follies are within you, and shine through you like the water in an urn; that not an eye, that sees you, but is a physician to comment on your malady.

Val. But tell me, dost thou know my lady Silvia?

Speed. She, that you gaze on so, as she sits at supper?

Val. Hast thou observed that? even she I mean.

Speed. Why, sir, I know her not.

Val. Dost thou know her by my gazing on her,
and yet knowest her not.

Speed. Is she not hard favoured, sir?

Val. Not so far but, as well favoured.

Speed. Sir, I know that well enough.

Val. What dost thou know?

Speed. That she is not so fair as (of you) well favoured.

Val. I mean, that her beauty is exquisite, but hers favour infinite.

Speed. That's because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.
Val. How painted? and how out of count?
Speed. Marry, sir, so painted, to make her fair, that no man counts of her beauty.
Val. How esteemedst thou me? I account of her beauty.
Sp. You never saw her since she was deformed.
Val. How long hath she been deformed?
Speed. Ever since you loved her.
Val. I have loved her ever since I saw her; and still I see her beautiful.
Speed. If you love her, you cannot see her.
Val. Why?
Speed. Because love is blind. O, that you had mine eyes; or your own eyes had the lights they were wont to have, when you chid at sir Proteus for going ungartered!
Val. What should I see then?
Speed. Your own present folly, and her passing deformity; for he, being in love, could not see to garner his hose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.
Val. Belike, boy, then you are in love; for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.
Speed. True, sir; I was in love with my bed; I thank you, you swung me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.
Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.
Speed. I would you were set; so, your affection would cease.
Val. Last night she enjoined me to write some lines to one she loves.
Speed. And have you?
Val. I have.
Speed. Are they not lamely writ?
Val. No, boy, but as well as I can do them;— Peace, here she comes.

Enter Silvia.

Speed. O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet! now will he interpret to her.
Val. Madam and mistress, a thousand good-mornings.
Speed. O, 'give you good even! here's a million of manners. [Aside.
Sil. Sir Valentine and servant, to you two thousand.
Speed. He should give her interest, and she gives it him.
Val. As you enjoind me, I have writ your letter,
Unto the secret nameless friend of yours;
Which I was much unwilling to proceed in,
But for my duty to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you gentle servant; 'tis very clerkly done.
Val. Now trust me, madam, it came hardly off;
For, being ignorant to whom it goes,
I writ at random, very doubtfully. [pains?
Sil. Perchance you think too much of so much
Val. No, madam; so it stead you, I will write,
Please you command, a thousand times as much:
And yet:—
Sil. A pretty period! Well I guess the sequel;
And yet I will not name it:—and yet I care not;—
And yet this again:— and yet I thank you;
Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.
Speed. And yet you will; and yet another. [Aside.
Val. What means your ladyship? do you not like it?
Sil. Yes, yes; the lines are very quaintly writ:
But since unwillingly, take them again;
Nay, take them.
Val. Madam, they are for you.
Sil. Ay, ay, you writ them sir, at my request;
But I will none of them; they are for you:
I would have had them writ more movingly.
Val. Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.
Sil. And when it's writ, for my sake read it over;
And if it please you, so: if not, why, so.
Val. If it please me, madam! what then?
Sil. Why, if it please you, take it for your labour.
And so good morrow, servant. [Exit Silvia.
Speed. O jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible.
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple! [siruit,
My master sues to her; and she hath taught her He being her pupil, to become her tutor.
O excellent device! was there ever heard a better?
That my master being scribe, to himself should write the letter?
Val. How now, sir? what are you reasoning with yourself?
Speed. Nay, I was ryming: 'tis you that have the reason.
Val. To do what?
Speed. To be a spokesman from madam Silvia.
Val. To whom?
Speed. To yourself: why, she wos you by a figure.
Sil. What figure?
Speed. By a letter, I should say.
Val. Why she hath not writ to me?
Speed. What needs she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the Val. No, believe me.
[jest?
Sil. No believing you indeed, sir; But did you perceive her earnest?
Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.
Speed. Why, she hath given you a letter.
Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend.
Speed. And that letter hath she deliver'd, and there an end.
Val. I would it were no worse.
Speed. I'll warrant you, 'tis as well:
For often you have writ to her; and she, in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply;
Or fearing else some messenger, that might her mind discover,
Herself hath taught her love himself to write unto her lover.—
All this I speak in print, for in print I found it.—
Why muse you, sir? 'tis dinner time.
Val. I have dined.
Speed. Ay, but hearken, sir; though the cameo Leon Love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourished by my victurnials, and would fain have meat; O, be not like your mistress; be moved, be moved.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—VERONA. A Room in JULIA's House.

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.
Jul. I must, where is no remedy.
Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.
Jul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner:
Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.
[Giving a ring.}
Pro. Why then we'll make exchange; here, take you this.
Jul. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.
Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy; And when that hour o'er-erips me in the day, Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake, The next ensuing hour some foul mischance Torment me for my love's forgetfulness! My father stays my coming; answer not: The tide is now: nay, not thy tide of tears That tide will stay me longer than I should: [Exit JULIA.

Enter PANTHINO.
Pan. Sir Proteus, you are staid for.
Pro. Go; I come, I come:—
Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Street.

Enter LAUNCE, leading a dog.

Laun. Nay, 'twill be this hour ere I have done weeping; all the kind of the Launces have this very fault: I have received my proportion, like the prodigious son, and am going with Sir Proteus to the Imperial's court. I think, Crab my dog be the sourest-natured dog that lives: my mother weeping, my father wailing, my sister crying, our maid howling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted cur shed one tear; he is a stone, a very pebble stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog: a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting; why my grandam having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll shew you the manner of it: This shoe is my father:—no, this left shoe is my father;—no, no, this left shoe is my mother;—no that cannot be so neither; yes, it is so, it is so; it hath the worse role: This shoe with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father: A vengeance on't! there 'tis: now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lily, and as small as a wand; this hat is Nan our maid; I am the dog:—no the dog is himself, and I am the dog,—O, the dog is me, and I am myself; ay, so, so. Now come I to my father; Father, your blessing; now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping; now should I kiss my father; well, he weeps on:—now come I to my mother, (O, that she could speak now!) like a wood woman,—well, I kiss her:—why there 'tis; here's my mother's breath up and down; now come I to my sister; mark the moan she makes: now the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word; but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter PANTHINO.

Pan. Launcel, away, away, aboard; thy master is shipped, and thou art to post after with oars. What's the matter! why weep'st thou, man? Away, ass; you will lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Laun. It is no matter if the tide were lost; for it is the unkindest tied that ever man tied.

Pan. What's the unkindest tide?
to give your followers; for it appears by their bare liveries that they live by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more; here comes my father.

Enter Duke.

Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset. Sir Valentine, your father's in good health: What say you to a letter from your friends Of much good news?

Val. My lord, I will be thankful To any happy messenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Don Antonio, your countryman?

Val. Ay, my good lord, I know the gentleman To be of worth, and worthy estimation, And not without desert so well reputed.

Duke. Hath he not a son?

Val. Ay, my good lord; a son, that well deserves The honour and regard of such a father.

Duke. You know him well?

Val. I knew him, as myself; for from our infancy We have conversed, and spent our hours together: And though myself have been an idle truant, Omitting the sweet benefit of time, To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection; Yet hath sir Proteus, for that's his name, Made use and fair advantage of his days; His years but young, but his experience old; His head unmellow'd, but his judgment ripe; And, i' a word, (for far behind his worth Come all the praises that I now bestow,) He is complete in feature, and in mind, With all good grace to grace a gentleman.

Duke. Beshrew me, sir, but, if he make this good, He is as worthy for an empress' love, As meet to be an emperor's counsellor. Well, sir; this gentleman is come to me, With commendation from great potentates; And here he means to spend his time awhile: I think, 'tis no unwelcome news to you.

Val. Should I have wish'd a thing, it had been he.

Duke. Welcome him then according to his worth; Silvia, I speak to you: and you, sir Thurio:—

For Valentine, I need not cite him to it: I'll send him hither to you presently. [Exit Duke.]

Val. This is the gentleman, I told your ladyship, Had come along with me, but that his mistress Did hold his eyes lock'd in her crystal looks. Sil. Belike, that now she hath enfranchised them Upon some other pawn for fealty.

Val. Nay, sure, I think she holds them prisoners still.

Sil. Nay, then he should be blind; and, being blind, How could he see his way to seek out you?

Val. Why, lady, love hath twenty pair of eyes. Thu. They say, that love hath not an eye at all. Val. To see such lovers, Thurio, as yourself; Upon a homely object love can wink.

Enter Proteus.

Sil. Have done, have done; here comes the gentleman.

Val. Welcome, dear Proteus!—Mistress, I beseech you, Confirm his welcome with some special favour.

Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither, If this be he you oft have wish'd to hear from.

Val. Mistress, it is: sweet lady, entertain him To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship.

Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant

Pro. Not so, sweet lady; but too mean a servant To have a look of such a worthy mistress.

Val. Leave off discourse of disability:—

Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant.

Pro. My duty will I boast of, nothing else.

Sil. And duty never yet did want his meed; Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress. Pro. I'll die on him that says so, but yourself.

Sil. That you are welcome?

Pro. No; that you are worthless.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, my lord your father would speak with you.

Sil. I'll wait upon his pleasure. [Exit Servant. Come, sir Thurio,

Go with me:—Once more, new servant, welcome: I'll leave you to confer of home affairs; When you have done, we look to hear from you.

Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship.

[Exeunt Silvia, Thurio, and SPEED.]

Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came?

Pro. Your friends are well, and have them much commended.

Val. And how do yours?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your lady? and how thrives your love?

Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you; I know, you joy not in a love-discourse.

Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now: I have done penance for contemning love; Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me With bitter fasts, with penitential groans, With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs; For, in revenge of my contempt of love, Love hath chased sleep from my enthrall'd eyes, And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow. O, gentle Proteus, love's a mighty lord; And hath so humbled me, as I confess, There is no woe to his correction, Nor, to his service, no such joy on earth! Now, no discourse, except it be of love; Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep, Upon the very naked name of love.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye: Was this the idol that you worship so?

Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint?

Pro. No; but she is an earthly paragon.

Val. Call her divine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O, flatter me; for love delights in praises.

Pro. When I was sick, you gave me bitter pills; And I must minister the like to you.

Val. Then speak the truth by her; if not divine, Yet let her be a princeliness, Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my mistress.

Val. Sweet, except not any;

Except thou wilt except against my love.

Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her too: She shall be dignified with this high honour,— To bear my lady's train; lest the base earth Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss, And, of so great a favour growing proud, Disdain to root the summer-swelling flower, And make rough winter everlasting.
Scene VI.

Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?
Val. Pardon me, Proteus: all I can, is nothing
To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing;
She is alone.

Pro. Then let her alone.
Val. Not for the world: why, man, she is mine own;
And I as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold.
Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love.
My foolish rival, that her father likes,
Only for his possessions are so huge,
Is gone with her along; and I must after,
For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.

Pro. But she loves you?
Val. Ay, we are betroth d
Nay, more, our marriage hour,
With all the cunning manner of our flight,
Determined of; how I must climb her window;
The ladder made of cords; and all the means
Plotted; and 'greed on, for my happiness.
Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,
In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel.

Pro. Go on before; I shall enquire you forth:
I must unto the road, to disembark
Some necessities that I needs must use;
And then I'll presently attend you.

Val. Will you make haste?

Pro. I will. [Exit Val.

Even as one heat another heat expels,
Or as one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
Is it mine eye, or Valentins' praise,
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless, to reason thus?
She's fair; and so is Julia, that I love:
That I did love, for now my love is th' dust;
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.
Methinks, my zeal to Valentine is cold;
And that I love him not, as I was wont:
O! but I love his lady too, too much;
And that's the reason I love him so little.
How shall I dote on her with more advice,
That thus without advice begin to love her?
'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld,
And that hath dazzled my reason's light;
But when I look on her perfections,
There is no reason but I shall be blind.
If I can check my erring love, I will;
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill. [Exit.

Scene V.—The same. A Street.

Enter Speed and Laun.

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to Milan.

Laun. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth; for I am not welcome. I reckon this always—that a man is never undone, till he be hanged; nor never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say, welcome.

Speed. Come on, you mad-caps, I'll to the ale-house with you presently: where, for one shot of five-pence, thou shalt have five thousand welcomes.
But, sirrah, how did thy master part with madam Julia?

Laun. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Laun. No.

Speed. How then? shall he marry her?

Laun. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Laun. No, they are both as whole as a fish.

Speed. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Laun. Marry, thus; when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.

Speed. What an ass art thou? I understand thee not.

Laun. What a block art thou, that thou canst not? My staff understands me.

Speed. What thou say'st?

Laun. Ay, and what I do, too; look thee, I'll but lean, and my staff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.

Laun. Why, stand under and understand is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will't be a match?

Laun. Ask my dog: if he say, ay, it will; if he say, no, it will; if he shake his tail, and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is then, that it will.

Laun. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. 'Tis well that I get it so. But, Launce, how say'st thou, that my master is become a notable
lover?

Laun. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than how?

Laun. A notable lubber, as thou reportest him to be.

Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mistakest me.

Laun. Why fool, I meant not thee, I meant thy master.

Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover.

Laun. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love. If thou wilt go with me to the ale-house, so; if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Laun. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee, as to go to the ale with a Christian: Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service. [Exeunt.

Scene VI.—The same. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn;
To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn;
To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworn;
And even that power, which gave me first my oath
Provokes me to this threefold perjury.
Love bade me swear, and love bids me forswear:
O sweet-suggestive love, if thou hast sinn'd,
Teach me, thy tempted subject, to excuse it,
At first I did adore a twining star,
But now I worship a celestial sun.
Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken;
And he wants wit, that wants resolved will
To learn his wit to exchange the bad for better.—
Fie, fie, unreverend tongue! to call her bad.
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast prefer'd
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths.
I cannot leave to love, and yet I do;
But there I leave to love, where I should love.
Julia I lose, and Valentine I lose:
If I keep them, I must needs lose myself;
If I lose them, thus find I by their loss,
For Valentine, myself: for Julia, Silvia.
I to myself am dearer than a friend:
For love is still more precious in itself;
And Silvia, witness heaven, that made her fair!
Shows Julia but a swarthy Ethiopie.
I will forget that Julia is alive,
Rememb'ring that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,
Aiming at Silvia as a sweeter friend.
I cannot now prove constant to myself,
Without some treachery used to Valentine:
This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder,
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber-window;
Myself in counsel, his competitor:
Now presently I'll give her father notice
Of their disguisings, and pretended flight;
Who, all enraged, will banish Valentine;
For Thurius, he intends, shall wed his daughter:
But, Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross,
By some sly trick, blunt Thurius's dull proceeding.
Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift! [Exit.

SCENE VII.—VERONA. A Room in JULIA's House.

Enter JULIA and LUCETTA.

JUL. Counsel, Lucetta! gentle girl, assist me!
And, even in kind love, I do conjure thee,—
Who art the table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly character'd and engraved,—
To lesson me; and tell me some good mean,
How, with my honour, I may undertake
A journey to my loving Proteus.

LUC. Alas! the way is very wearisome and long.

JUL. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps;
Much less shall she, that hath love's wings, to fly;
And when the flight is made to one so dear,
Of such divine perfection, as sir Proteus.

LUC. Better forbear, till Proteus make return.

JUL. O, know'st thou not, his looks are my soul's
Pity the dearth that I have pined in, [food?
By longing for that food so long a time.
Didst thou but know the inky touch of love,
Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

LUC. I do not seek to quench your love's hot
But qualify the fire's extreme rage, [fire;
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

JUL. The more thou donn'st it up, the more it burns;
The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But, when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with the enamel'd stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge.

He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
And so by many winding nooks he strays,
With willing sport, to the wild ocean.
Then let me go, and hinder not my course:
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,
And make a pasture of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love;
And there I'll rest, as, after much turmoil,
A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

LUC. But in what habit will you go along?

JUL. Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men;
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds
As may beseech some well-reputed page.

LUC. Why then your ladyship must cut your hair.

JUL. No, girl; I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots:
To be fantastic, may become a youth
Of greater time than I shall show to be.

LUC. What fashion, madam, shall I make your breeches?

[lord.

JUL. That fits as well, as—"tell me, good my
"What compass will you wear your farthingale?"
Why, even that fashion thou best lik'st, Lucetta.

LUC. You must needs have them with a cod-piece, madam.

JUL. Out, out, Lucetta! that will be ill-favour'd.

LUC. A round hose, madam, now's not worth a
Unless you have a cod-piece to stick pins on. [pin

JUL. Lucetta, as thou lov'st me, let me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly:
But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me
For undertaking so unfast a journey?
I fear me, it will make me scandalised.

LUC. If you think so, then stay at home, and go

JUL. Nay, that I will not. [not.

LUC. Then never dream on infamy, but go,
If Proteus like your journey, when you come,
No matter who's displeas'd, when you are gone:
I fear me, he will scarce be pleased withal.

JUL. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear:
A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears,
And instances as infinite of love,
Warrant me welcome to my Proteus.

LUC. All these are servants to deceitful men.

JUL. Base men, that use them to so base effect!
But truer stars did govern Proteus' birth:
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate;
His tears, pure messengers sent from his heart;
His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.

LUC. Pray heaven, he prove so, when you come to him!

JUL. Now, as thou lov'st me, do him not that
To bear a hard opinion of his truth:
Only deserve my love, by loving him;
And presently go with me to my chamber,
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me upon my long journey.
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,
My goods, my lands, my reputation;
Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence:
Come, answer not, but to it presently;
I am impatient of my tarriance.

[Exeunt.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Proteus.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile; we have some secrets to confer about. [Exit Thurio.

Now, tell me, Proteus, what’s your will with me?

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I could dis-

The law of friendship bids me to conceal: [cover,

But, when I call to mind your gracious favours

Done to me, undeserving as I am,

My duty pricks me on to utter that

Which else no worldly good should draw from me.

Know, worthy prince, sir Valentine, my friend,

This night intends to steal away your daughter;

Myself am one made privy to the plot.

I know, you have determined to bestow her

On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;

And should she thus be stolen away from you,

It would be much vexation to your age.

Thus, for my duty’s sake, I rather chose

To cross my friend in his intended drift,

Than, by concealing it, heap on your head

A pack of sorrows, which would press you down,

Being unprovided, to your timeless grave.

Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest care;

Which to requite, commend me while I live.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,

Haply, when they have judged me fast asleep;

And oftentimes have purposed to forbid

Sir Valentine her company, and my court:

But, fearing lest my jealous aim might err,

And so, unworthily, disgrace the man,

(A rashness that I ever yet have shunn’d.)

I gave him gentle looks; thereby to find

That which thusfar hast now disclos’d to me.

And, that thou mayst perceive my fear of this,

Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,

I nightly lodge her in an upper tower,

The key whereof myself have ever kept;

And thence she cannot be convey’d away.

Pro. Know, noble sir, they have devised a mean

How he her chamber-window will ascend,

And with a corded ladder fetch her down;

For which the youthful lover now is gone,

And this way comes he with it presently;

Where, if it please you, you may intercept him.

But, good my lord, do it so cunningly,

That my discovery be not aimed at;

For love of you, not hate unto my friend,

Hath made me publisher of this pretence.

Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know

That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Allen, my lord; sir Valentine is coming. [Exit.

Enter Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?

Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger

That stays to bear my letters to my friends,

And I am going to deliver them.

Duke. Be they of much import?

Val. The tenor of them doth but signify

My health, and happy being at your court.

Duke. Nay, then no matter; stay with me a

I am to break with thee of some affairs, [while;

That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.

’Tis not unknown to thee, that I have sought

To match my friend, sir Thurio, to my daughter.

Val. I know it well, my lord; and, sure, the match

Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman

Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities

Beseeing such a wife as your fair daughter:

Cannot your grace win her to fancy him? [ward,

Duke. No, trust me; she is peevish, sullen, fro-

Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty;

Neither regarding that she is my child,

Nor fearing me as if I were her father:

And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers,

Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her;

And, where I thought the remnant of mine age

Should have been cherish’d by her child-like duty,

I am now full resolved to take a wife,

And turn her out to who will take her in:

Then let her beauty be her wedding-dower;

For me and my possession she esteems not.

Val. What would your grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a lady, sir, in Milan, here,

Whom I affect; but she is nice, and coy,

And nought esteems my aged eloquence:

Now, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor

(For long ago I have forgot to court:

Besides, the fashion of the time is chang’d;)

How, and which way, I may bestow myself,

To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.

Val. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words;

Dumb jewels often, in their silent kind,

More than quick words, do move a woman’s mind.

Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her,

[tenure her:

Val. A woman sometimes scorns what best con-

Send her another; never give her o’er;

For scorn at first makes after-love the more.

If she do frown, ’tis not in hate of you,

But rather to beget more love in you:

If she do chide, ’tis not to have you gone;

For why, the foes are mad, if left alone.

Take no refusal, what soever she doth say:

For, get you gone, she doth not know away:

Flatter, and praise, commend, extol their graces;

Though ne’er so black, say, they have angels’ faces.

That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,

If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

Duke. But she I mean is promised by her friends

Unto a youthful gentleman of worth;

And kept severely from resort of men,

That no man hath access by day to her.

Val. Why then I would resort to her by night.

Duke. Ay, but the doors be lock’d, and keys kept safe,

That no man hath recourse to her by night.

Val. What lets but one may enter at her window?

Duke. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground

And built so shelving, that one cannot climb it

Without apparent hazard of his life.

Val. Why then, a ladder, quaintly made of cords,

To cast up with a pair of anchoring hooks,

Would serve to scale another Hero’s tower,

So bold Leander would adventure it.

Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood,

Advise me where I may have such a ladder.
Val. When would you use it? pray, sir, tell me that.

Duke. This very night; for love is like a child,
That longs for every thing that he can come by.

Val. By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder.

Duke. But, hark thee; I will go to her alone;
How shall I best convey the ladder thither?

Val. It will be light, my lord, that you may bear it
Under a cloak, that is of any length.

Duke. A cloak as long as thine will serve the Val. Ay, my good lord. [Turn.

Duke. Then let me see thy cloak:
I'll get me one of such another length. [lour.

Val. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?

I pray thee, let me feel thy cloak upon me.—
What letter is this same? What's here?—To Silvia?
And here an engine fit for my proceeding! I'll be so bold to break the seal for once. [Reads.

My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly;
And slaves they are to me, that send them flying.
O, could their master come and go as lightly,
Himself would lodge, where senseless they are lying.

My herald thoughts, in thy pure bosom rest them;
While I, their king, that thither them imprompte,
Do curse the grace that with such grace hath bless'd them,
Because myself do want my servants' fortune:
I curse myself, for they are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord should be.
What's here?

Silvia, this night I will enfranchise thee:
'Tis so; and here's the ladder for the purpose.
Why, Phaeton, (for thou art Merops' son,) Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car,
And with thy daring folly burn the world?
Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee?
Go, base intruder! I over-weening slave!
Bestow thy flattering smiles on equal mates;
And think, my patience, more than thy desert,
Is privilege for thy departure hence:
Thank me for this, more than for all the favours Which, all too much, I have bestow'd on thee.
But if thou linger in my territories,
 Longer than swiftest expedition
Will give thee time to leave our royal court,
By heaven, my wrath shall far exceed the love
I ever bore my daughter, or myself.
Be gone, I will not hear thy vain excuse,
But, as thou lov'st thy life, make speed from hence. [Exit Duke.

Val. And why not death, rather than living tortoise, is to be banish'd from myself? [ment?
And Silvia is myself: banish'd from her,
Is self from self: a deadly banishment!
What light is light, if Silvia be not seen?
What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?
Unless it be to think that she is by,
And feed upon the shadow of perfection.
Except I be by Silvia in the night,
There is no music in the nightingale;
Unless I look on Silvia in the day.
There is no day for me to look upon:
She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence.
Foster'd, illumined, cherish'd, kept alive.
I fry not death, to fry his deadly doom:
Tarry I here, I but attend on death;
But, fly hence, I fly away from life.
And, ere I part with thee, confer at large
Of all that may concern thy love-affairs:
As thou lov'st Silvia, though not for thyself,
Regard thy danger, and along with me.

Val. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest my boy,
Bid him make haste, and meet me at the north-gate.

Val. O my dear Silvia, hapless Valentine!

Laun. I am but a fool, look you; and yet I have the wit to think, my master is a kind of knave:
but that's all one, if he be but one knave. He lives not now, that knows me to be in love: yet
I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me; nor who 'tis I love, and yet 'tis a woman: but what woman, I will not tell myself; and yet 'tis a milk-maid; yet 'tis not a maid, for she hath had gossips: yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages. She hath more qualities than a water-spaniel,—which is much in a bare-christian. Here is the cat-log [Pulling out a paper] of her conditions. Im-primis, She can fetch and carry. Why, a horse can do no more: nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore she better than a jade.
Item, She can milk; look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Enter Speed.

Speed. How now, signior Launce? what news with your mastership?

Laun. With my master's ship? why it is at sea.
Speed. Was your old vice still; mistake the word:
What news then in your paper?

Laun. The blackest news that ever thou heard'st.
Speed. Why, man, how black?

Laun. Why as black as ink.

Speed. Let me read them.

Laun. Fie on thee, jolt-head; thoucanst notread.
Speed. Thou liest, I can.

Laun. I will try thee: Tell me this: Who begot thee?

Speed. Marry, the son of my grandfather.

Laun. O illiterate fellow! it was the son of thy grandmother: this proves, that thou canst not read.

Speed. Come, fool, come: try me in thy paper.

Laun. There; and St. Nicholas be thy speed!

Speed. Imprimis, She can milk.

Laun. Ay, that she can.

Speed. Item, She brews good ale.

Laun. And thereof comes the proverb,—Blessing of your heart, you brew good ale.

Speed. Item, She can sew.

Laun. That's as much as to say, can she so?

Speed. Item, She can knit.

Laun. What need a man care for a stock with a wench, when she can knit him a stock.

Speed. Item, She can wash and scour.

Laun. A special virtue; for then she need not be washed and scoured.

Speed. Item, She can spin.

Laun. Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.

Speed. Item, She hath many nameless virtues.

Laun. That's as much as to say, bastard virtues; that, indeed, know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.

Speed. Here follow her vices.

Laun. Close at the heels of her virtues.

Speed. Item, She is not to be kissed fastening, in respect of her breath.

Laun. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast: Read on.

Speed. Item, She hath a sweet mouth.

Laun. That makes amends for her sour breath.

Speed. Item, She doth talk in her sleep.

Laun. It's no matter for that, so she sleep not in her talk.

Speed. Item, She is slow in words.

Laun. O villain, that set this down among her vices! To be slow in words, is a woman's only virtue: I pray thee, out with 't; and place it for her chief virtue.

Speed. Item, She is proud.

Laun. Out with that too; it was Eve's legacy, and cannot be ta'en from her.

Speed. Item, She hath no teeth.

Laun. I care not for that neither, because I love crusts.

Speed. Item, She is curst.

Laun. Well; the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.

Speed. Item, She will often praise her liquor.

Laun. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised.

Speed. Item, She is too liberal.

Laun. Of her tongue she cannot; for that's writ down she is slow of: of her purse she shall not;
for that I'll keep shut: now of another thing she may; and that I cannot help. Well, proceed.

Speed. Item, She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wealth than faults.

Laun. Stop thee, I'll have her: she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article:
Rehearse that once more.

Speed. Item, She hath more hair than wit,— Laun. More hair than wit,—it may be: I'll prove it: The cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt; the hair that covers the wit, is more than the wit; for the greater hides the less. What's next?

Speed.—And more faults than hairs,—

Laun. That's monstrous: O, that that were out!

Speed.—And more wealth than faults.

Laun. Why, that word makes the faults gracious: Well, I'll have her: And if it be a match as nothing is impossible,—

Speed. What then?

Laun. Why, then will I tell thee,—that thy master stays for thee at the north gate.

Speed. For me?

Laun. For thee? ay: who art thou? he hath staid for a better man than thee.

Speed. And must I go to him?

Laun. Thou must run to him, for thou hast staid so long, that going will scarce serve the turn.

Speed. Why didst not tell me sooner? 'pox of your love-letters! [Exit.

Laun. Now will he be swunged for reading my letter: An unmannely slave, that will thrust himself into secrets!—I'll after, to rejoice in the boy's correction.

[Exit.

SCENE 11.—The same. A Room in the Duke's
Palace.

Enter Duke and Thurio; Proteus behind.

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not, but that she will love you,

Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.

Thur. Since his exile she hath despised me most,
Forsworn my company, and sail'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her.

Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure Trenched in ice; which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water and doth lose his form.
A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.—

How now, sir Proteus? Is your countryman,
According to our proclamation, gone?

Pro. Gone, my good lord.

Duke. My daughter takes his going grievously.
Pro. A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.

Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so.—

Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee,
(For thou hast shown some sign of good desert,)

Makes me the better to confer with thee.

Pro. Longer than I prove loyal to your grace,
Let me not live to look upon your grace.

[Effect]

Duke. Thou know'st how, willingly I would
The match between Sir Thurio and my daughter.

Pro. I do, my lord.

Duke. And also, I think, thou art not ignorant how she opposes her against my will.

Pro. She did, my lord, when Valentine was here.

Duke. Ay, and perversely she perserves so.

What might we do, to make the girl forget
The love of Valentine, and love Sir Thurio?

Pro. The best way is, to slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent;
Three things that women highly hold in hate.

Duke. Ay, but she'll think, that it is spoke in Pro. Ay, if his enemy deliver it:

Therefore it must, with circumstance, be spoken by one, whom she esteemeth as his friend.

Duke. Then you must undertake to slander him.

Pro. And that, my lord, I shall be loth to do:
'Tis an ill office for a gentleman;
Especially, against his very friend.

Duke. Where your good word cannot advantage
Your slander never can endanger him;

Therefore the office is indifferent,
Being entreated to it by your friend.

Pro. You have prevail'd, my lord: if I can do it,
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him.

But say, this weed her love from Valentine,
It follows not that she will love Sir Thurio.

Thu. Therefore, as you unwind her love from

Lest it should ravel, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom on me:
Which must be done, by praising me as much
As you in worth disparze sir Valentine.

Duke. And, Proteus, we dare trust you in this Because we know, on Valentine's report,

[kind]

You are already love's firm votary,
And cannot soon revolt and change your mind.

Upon this warrant shall you have access,
Where you with Silvia may confer at large;
For she is lumpish, heavy, melancholy,
And, for your friend's sake, will be glad of you;
Where you may temper her, by your persuasion,
To hate young Valentine, and love my friend.

Pro. As much as I can do, I will effect:—

But you, sir Thurio, are not sharp enough;
You must lay lime, to tangle her desires,
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhymes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vows.

Duke. Ay, much the force of heaven-bred poesy.

Pro. Say, that upon the altar of her beauty
You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart;
Write till your ink be dry; and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity:
For Orpheus' lute was strung with poets' sinews;
Whose golden touch could soften steel and stones,
Make tigers tame, and huge levitans
Forsake unsounded deeps to dance on sands.

After your dire lamenting elegies,
Visit by night your lady's chamber-window
With some sweet concert: to their instruments

Tune a deploring dump; the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining griev-
This, or else nothing will inherit her.

[anec.]

Duke. This discipline shows thou hast been in love.

Thu. And thy advice this night I'll put in prac-
Therefore, sweet Proteus, my direction-giver,
Let us into the city presently
To sort some gentlemen well skill'd in music:
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn,
To give the onset to thy good advice.

Duke. About it, gentlemen.

[upper]

Pro. We'll wait upon your grace, till after
And afterward determine our proceedings.

Duke. Even now about it; I will pardon you.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Scene I.—A Forest, near Mantua.

Enter certain Outlaws.

1 Out. Fellows, stand fast; I see a passenger
2 Out. If there be ten, shrink not, but down with 'em.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

3 Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about you;
If not, we'll make you sit, and rife you.

Speed. Sir, we are undone: these are the villains
That all the travellers do fear so much.

Val. My friends,—
1 Out. That's not so, sir; we are your enemies.
2 Out. Peace; we'll hear him.
3 Out. Ay, by my beard, will we;
For he's a proper man.
I kill'd a man, whose death I much repent;
But yet I slew him manfully in fight.
Without false vantage, or base treachery.
1 Out. Why, ne'er repent it, if it were done so:
But were you banish'd for so small a fault?
Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.
2 Out. Have you the tongues?
Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy;
Or else I often had been miserable. [Enter Hood's Serenade.
This fellow were a king for our wild faction.
1 Out. We'll have him; sirs, a word.
Speed. Master, be one of them;
It is an honourable kind of thievry.
1 Out. Peace, villain!
2 Out. Tell us this: Have you anything to take
Val. Nothing, but my fortune. [to?
3 Out. Know then, that some of us are gentle-
Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth [men,
Thrust from the company of awful men:
Myself was from Verona banish'd,
For practising to steal away a lady,
An heir, and near allied unto the duke.
2 Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman,
Whom, in my mood, I stab'd unto the heart.
1 Out. And I, for such like petty crimes as these.
But to the purpose,—(for we cite our faults
That they may hold excused our lawless lives,)
And, partly, seeing you are beautified
With: a goodly shape; and by your own report
A linguist; and a man of such perfection,
As we do in our quality much want:—
2 Out. Indeed, because you are a banish'd man,
Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you:
Are you content to be our general?
To make a virtue of necessity.
And live, as we do, in this wilderness?
3 Out. What say'st thou? wilt thou be of our Say, ay, and be the captain of us all: [consort?
We'll do thee homage, and be ruled by thee,
Love thee as our commander, and our king.
1 Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou diest.
2 Out. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have
Val. I take your offer and will live with you;
Provided that you do no outrages
On silly women, or poor passengers.
3 Out. No, we detest such vile base practices.
Come, go with us, we'll bring thee to our crews,
And shew thee all the treasure we have got;
Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—MILAN. Court of the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine,
And now I must be as unjust to Thurio.
Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer;
But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthless gifts.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend:
When to her beauty I commend my vows,
She bids me think how I have been forsworn
In breaking faith with Julia whom I loved:
And, notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, spaniel-like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still.
But here comes Thurio: now must we to her window,
And give some evening music to her ear.

Enter Thurio and Musicians.

Thur. How now, sir Proteus? are you crept before us?
Pro. Ay, gentle Thurio; for you know, that
Will crawl in service where it cannot go. [love
Thur. Ay, but, I hope, sir, that you love not here.
Pro. Sir, but I do; or else I would be hence.
Thur. Whom? Silvia?
Pro. Ay, Silvia,—for your sake.
Thur. I thank you for your own. Now, gentle-
Let's tune, and to it lustily awhile. [men,

Enter Host, at a distance; and Julia in boy's clothes.
Host. Now, my young guest! methinks you're allycholly; I pray you, why is it?
Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.
Host. Come, we'll have you merry: I'll bring you where you shall hear music, and see the gentleman that you ask'd for.
Jul. But shall I hear him speak?
Host. Ay, that you shall.
Jul. That will be music.

[Music plays

Host. Hark! hark!
Jul. Is he among these?
Host. Ay; but peace, let's hear 'em.

SONG.

Who is Silvia? what is she,
That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise is she,
The heavens such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.
Is she kind as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness;
Love doth to her eyes repair,
And, being help'd, inhabits there.
Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing,
Upon the dull earth dwelling:
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now? are you sadder than you were before?

How do you, man? the music likes you not.
Jul. You mistake; the musician likes me not.
Host. Why, my pretty youth?
Jul. He plays false, father.
Host. How? out of tune on the strings?
Jul. Not so; but yet so false that he grieves my very heart-strings.
Host. You have a quick ear.
Jul. Ay, I would I were deaf! it makes me have a slow heart.
Host. I perceive you delight not in music.
Jul. Not a whit, when it jars so.
Host. Hark, what fine change is in the music!
Jul. Ay; that change is the spite.
Host. You would have them always play but one thing?
Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.
But, host, doth this sir Proteus, that we talk on,
frequent resort unto this gentlewoman?
Host. I'll tell you what Launce, his man, told me, he loved her out of all nick.
Jul. Where is Launce?
Host. Gone to seek his dog; which, to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to this lady.
Jul. Peace! stand aside! the company parts.
Pro. Sir Thurio, fear not you! I will so please,
That you shall say, my cunning drift excels.
Thu. Where meet we?
Pro. At saint Gregory’s well.
Thu. Farewell.
[Exeunt Terno and Musicians.
SILVIA appears above, at her window.
Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen:
Who is that, that spake?
Pro. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart's truth,
You'd quickly learn to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.
Sil. What is your will?
Pro. That I may compass yours.
Sil. You have your wish; my will is even this,—
That presently you hie you home to bed,
Thou subtle, perjured, false, disloyal man!
Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitless,
To be seduced by thy flattery,
That hast deceived so many with thy vows?
Return, return, and make thy love amends.
For me,—by this pale queen of night I swear,
I am so far from granting thy request,
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit;
And by and by intend to chide my self,
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.
Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady;
But she is dead.
Jul. 'Twere false, if I should speak it;
For, I am sure, she is not buried.
[Aside.
Sil. Say that she be; yet Valentine, thy friend,
Survives; to whom, thyself art witness,
I am betrothed: And art thou not ashamed
To press him with thy importunity?
Pro. I likewise hear, that Valentine is dead.
Sil. And so, suppose, am I; for in his grave
Assure thyself my love is buried.
Pro. Sweet lady, let me rake it from the earth.
Sil. Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;
Or, at the least, in hers sepulchre thine.
Jul. He heard not that.
[Aside.
Pro. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate,
Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love,
The picture that is hanging in your chamber;
To that I'll speak, to that I'll sigh and weep:
For, since the substance of your perfect self
Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;
And to your shadow I will make true love.
Jul. If 'twere a substance, you would, sure,
deceive it,
And make it but a shadow, as I am.
[Aside.
Sil. I am very loth to be your idol, sir;
But, since your falsehood shall become you well
To worship shadows, and adore false shapes,
Send to me in the morning, and I'll send it:
And so, good rest.
[Aside.
Pro. As wretches have o'er-night,
That wait for execution in the morn.
[Exeunt Proteus and Silvia, from above.
Host. Marry, at my house: Trust me, I think
'tis almost day.
Jul. Not so; but it hath been the longest night
That e'er I watch'd, and the most heaviest.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.
Enter Eglamour.
Egl. This is the hour that madam Silvia
Entreated me to call, and know her mind;
There's some great matter she'd employ me in.—
Madam, madam!
Sil. Who calls?
Egl. Your servant, and your friend;
One that attends your ladyship's command.
Sil. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good-morrow.
Egl. As many, worthy lady, to yourself.
According to your ladyship's impose,
I am thus early come, to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me in.
Sil. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman,
(Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not,) Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplisht.
Thou art not ignorant what dear good will
I bear unto the banish'd Valentine;
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhorre't.
Thyself hast loved; and I have heard thee say
No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
As when thy lady and thy true love died,
Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.
Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine,
To Mantua, where I hear, he makes abode;
And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose.
Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
But think upon my grief, a lady's grief;
And on the justice of my dying hence,
To keep me from a most unholy match,
Which heaven and fortune still reward with plagues.
I do desire thee, even from a heart
As full of sorrows as the sea of sands,
To bear me company, and go with me:
If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.
Egl. Madam, I pity much your grievances;
Which since I know they virtuously are placed,
I give consent to go along with you;
Recking as little what betideth me
As much I wish all good befavour you.
When will you go?
Sil. This evening coming.
Egl. Where shall I meet you?
Sil. At friar Patrick's cell,
Where I intend holy confession.
Egl. I will not fail your ladyship:
Good morrow, gentle lady.
Sil. Good morrow, kind sir Eglamour.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same.
Enter Launce, with his dog.
When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look you, it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I saved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

SCENE IV.

Pro. Sebastian is thy name? I like thee well, And will employ thee in some service presently.

Jul. In what you please; — I will do what I can.

Pro. I hope thou wilt. — How now, you whore-son peasant? To LAUNCE.

Where have you been these two days loitering? Laun. Marry, sir, I carried mistress Silvia the dog you bade me.

Pro. And what says she to my little jewel? Laun. Marry, she says, your dog was a cur; and tells you, curish thanks is good enough for such a present.

Pro. But she received my dog? Laun. No, indeed, she did not; nor have I brought him back again.

Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me? Laun. Ay, sir; the other squirrel was stolen from me by the hangman’s boys in the marketplace: and then I offered her mine own; who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.

Pro. Go, get thee hence, and find my dog again, Or ne’er return again into my sight. Away, I say: Stay’st thou to vex me here? A slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame. [Exit LAUNCE.

Sebastian, I have entertain’d thee, Partly, that I have need of such a youth, That can with some discretion do my business, For 'tis no trusting to yond foolish lout: But, chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour; Which (if my augury deceive me not) Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth: Therefore know thou, for this I entertain thee.

Go presently, and take this ring with thee, Deliver it to madam Silvia: She loved me well, deliver’d it to me.

Jul. It seems you loved not her, to leave her She’s dead, belike. [token: Pro.

Jul. Alas! Pro. Why dost thou cry, Alas! Jul. I cannot choose but pity her. Pro. Wherefore should’st thou pity her? Jul. Because, methinks, that she loved you as You do so love your lady Silvia: [well She dreams on him, that has forgot her love; You dote on her, that cares not for your love. 'Tis pity, love should be so contrary; And thinking on it makes me cry, Alas! Pro. Well, give her that ring, and therewithal This letter; — that’s her chamber. — Tell my lady, I bid the promise for her heavenly picture. Your message done, be home unto my chamber, Where thou shalt find me sad and solitary. [Exit PROTEUS.

Jul. How many women would do such a message? Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain’d A fox, to be the shepherd of thy lambs; Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him That with his very heart desipeth me? Because he loves her, he desipeth me; Because I love him, I must pity him. This ring I gave him, when he parted from me, To bind him to remember my good will: And now am I (unhappy messenger) To plead for that, which I would not obtain; To carry that which I would have refused; To praise his faith, which I would have disparaged. I am my master’s true confirmed love; But cannot be true servant to my master, Unless I prove false traitor to myself. Yet will I woo for him; but yet so coldly, As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed.

Enter SILVIA, attended.

Gentlewoman, good day! I pray you, be my mean To bring me where to speak with madam Silvia. Sil. What would you with her, if I be she? Jul. If she be, I do entreat your patience To hear me speak the message I am sent on. Sil. From whom? Jul. From my master, sir Proteus, madam. Sil. O — he sends you for a picture? Jul. Ay, madam.

Sil. Ursula, bring my picture there.

[Picture brought.]

Go, give your master this: tell him from me, One Julia, that his changing thoughts forget; Would better fit his chamber, than this shadow. Jul. Madam, please you peruse this letter. — Pardon me, madam; I have unadvised Delivered you a paper that I should not. This is the letter to your ladyship.

Sil. I pray thee, let me look on that again. Jul. It may not be; good madam, pardon me. Sil. There, hold. I will not look upon your master’s lines: I know, they are stuff’d with protestations, And full of howling oaths, which he will break, As easily as I do tear his paper.

Jul. Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. An Abbey.

Enter EGLAMOUR.

Egl. The sun begins to gild the western sky:
And now, it is about the very hour
That Silvia, at Patrick’s cell, should meet me.
She will not fail; for lovers break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time;
So much they spur their expedition.

Enter Silvia.

See where she comes: Lady, a happy evening!
Sil. Amen, amen! go on, good EGLAMOUR!
Out at the postern by the abbey-wall;
I fear, I am attended by some spies.

Egl. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off:
If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exeunt.

---

SCENE II.—The same. An Apartment in the Duke’s Palace.

Enter Thero, Proteus, and Julia.

Thu. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit?
Pro. O, sir, I find her milder than she was;
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.

Thu. What, that my leg is too long?

Pro. No; that it is too little. [Rouder.

Thu. I’ll wear a boot, to make it somewhat

That my poor mistress, mov’d therewithal,
Wept bitterly; and, would I might be dead,
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow!
Sil. She is beholden to thee, gentle youth!—
Alas, poor lady! desolate and left:
I weep myself, to think upon thy words.
Here, youth, there is my purse; I give thee this
For thy sweet mistress’ sake, because thou lov’st her.

Farewell. [Exit Silvia.

Thu. And she shall thank you for’t, if c’er you know her.
A virtuous gentlewoman, mild, and beautiful.
I hope my master’s suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress’ love so much.
Alas, how love can trifle with itself!
Here is her picture: Let me see; I think,
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers:
And yet the painter flatter’d her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much.
Her hair is, brown, mine is perfect yellow.
If that be all the difference in his love,
I’ll get me such a colour’d periwig;
Her eyes are blue as glass; and so are mine:
Ay, but her forehead’s low, and mine’s as high.
What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respective in myself,
If this fond love were not a blinded god?
Come, shadow, come, and take this shadow up,
For ‘tis thy rival. O thou senseless form,
Thou shalt be worshipp’d, kiss’d, loved, and adored;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statute in thy stead.
I’ll use thee kindly for thy mistress’ sake,
That used me so; or else, by Jove I vow,
I should have scratch’d out your unseen eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. [Exit.

ACT V.

Pro. But love will not be spurr’d to what it loathes.
Thu. What says she to my face?

Pro. She says, it is a fair one.

Thu. Nay, then the wanton lies; my face is black.

Pro. But pearls are fair; and the old saying is,
Black men are pearls in beauteous ladies’ eyes.

Jul. ’Tis true, such pearls as put out ladies’ eyes;
For I had rather wink than look on them. [Aside.

Thu. How likes she my discourse?

Pro. Ill, when you talk of war.

Thu. But well, when I discourse of love and peace.

Jul. But better, indeed, when you hold your peace.

[Aside.

Thu. What says she to my valour?

Pro. O, sir, she makes no doubt of that.

Jul. She needs not, when she knows it cowardice.

[Aside.

Thu. What says she to my birth?

Pro. That you are well derived.

Jul. True; from a gentleman to a fool. [Aside

Thu. Considers she my possessions?

Pro. O, ay; and pities them.

Thu. Wherefore?

Jul. That such an ass should owe them. [Aside
Pro. That they are out by lease.

Jul. Here comes the duke.

Enter Duke

Duke. How now, sir Proteus? how now, Thurio?

Which of you saw sir Eglamour of late?

Thu. Not I.

Pro. Nor I.

Duke. Why, then she's fled unto that peasant, Valentine;

And Eglamour is in her company.

'Tis true; for friar Lawrence met them both,

As he in penance wander'd through the forest:

Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;

But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it:

Besides, she did intend confession

At Patrick's cell this even; and there she was not:

These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence.

Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse,

But mount you presently; and meet with me

Upon the rising of the mountain-foot

That leads towards Mantua, whither they are fled.

Dispatch, sweet gentlemens, and follow me. [Exit.

Thu. Why this it is to be a peevish girl,

That flies her fortune when it follows her;

I'll after; more to be revenged on Eglamour,

Than for the love of reckless Silvia. [Exit.

Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love,

Than hate of Eglamour that goes with her. [Exit.

Jul. And I will follow more to cross that love,

Than hate for Silvia, that is gone for love. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Frontiers of Mantua. The Forest.

Enter Silvia, and Outlaws.

1 Out. Come, come; be patient, we must bring you to our captain.

Sil. A thousand more mischances than this one

Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.

2 Out. Come, bring her away.

1 Out. Where is the gentleman that was with her?

Out. Being nimble-footed, he hath out-run us,

But Moses, and Valerius, follow him.

Go thou with her to the west end of the wood,

There is our captain; we'll follow him that's fled.

The thicket is beset, he cannot 'scape.

1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain's cave;

Fear not; he bears an honourable mind,

And will not use a woman lawlessly.

Sil. O Valentine, this I endure for thee. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter Valentine.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man!

This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,

I better brook than flourishing peopled towns:

Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,

And to the nightingale's complaining notes,

Tune my distresses, and record my woes.

0 thou that dost inhabit in my breast,

Leave not the mansion so long tenantless;

Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall,

And leave no memory of what it was!

Repair me with thy presence, Silvia;

Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain—

What halloing, and what stir is this to-day?

These are my mates, that make their wills their law,

Have some unhappy passenger in chase:

They love me well; yet I have much to do,

To keep them from uncivil outrages.

 Withdraw thee, Valentine; who's this comes here?

[Speak aside.

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service I have done for you,

(Though you respect not aught your servant doth,)—

To hazard life, and rescue you from him

That would have forced your honour and your love.

Vouchsafe me, for my meed, but one fair look;

A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,

And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.

Val. How like a dream is this I see and hear!

Love, lend me patience to forbear a while. [Aside.

Sil. O miserable, unhappy that I am!

Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;

But, by my coming, I have made you happy.

Sil. By thy approach thou makest me most unhappy.

Jul. And me, when he approacheth to your presence.

[Aside.

Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,

I would have been a breakfast to the beast,

Rather than have false Proteus rescue me.

O, heaven be judge, how I love Valentine,

Whose life's as tender to me as my soul;

And full as much, (for more there cannot be,)—

I do detest false perjured Proteus:

Therefore be gone, solicit me no more.

Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,

Would I not undergo for one calm look?

O, 'tis the curse in love, and still approved,

When women cannot love, where they're beloved.

Sil. When Proteus cannot love where he's read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,[]...
Pro. My shame and guilt confound me.—
Forgive me, Valentine: if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender it here; I do as truly suffer,
As e'er I did commit.
Val. Then I am paid;
And once again I do receive thee honest.—
Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth; for these are pleased;
By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeased:—
And, that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia, I give thee.
Jul. O me, unhappy!
[Paints.
Pro. Look to the boy.
Val. Why, boy! why, wag! how now? what is Look up; speak. [the matter?
Jul. O good sir, my master charged me
To deliver a ring to madam Silvia;
Which, out of my neglect, was never done.
Pro. Where is that ring, boy?
Jul. Here 'tis: this is it. [Gives a ring.
Pro. How! let me see:
Why this is the ring I gave to Julia.
Jul. O, cry you mercy, sir, I have mistook;
This is the ring you sent to Silvia.
Pro. But, how camest thou by this ring? at my
I gave this unto Julia. [depart,
Jul. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.
Pro. How! Julia!
Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertain'd them deeply in her heart:
How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the root?
O Proteus, let this habit make thee blush!
Be thou ashamed, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment; if shame live
In a disguise of love:
It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,
[Gods.
Women to change their shapes, than men their Pro. Than men their minds! 'tis true; O heaven! were man
But constant, he were perfect: that one error
Fills him with faults; makes him run through all Inconstancy falls off, ere it begins: [th's sins: What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julia's, with a constant eye?
Val. Come, come, a hand from either:
Let me be blest to make this happy close;
'Twere pity two such friends should be long foes.
Pro. Bear witness, Heaven, I have my wish for
Jul. And I have mine. [ever.

Enter Outlaws, with Duke and Thurio.

Out. A prize, a prize, a prize!

Val. Forbear, I say; it is my lord the duke.
Your grace is welcome to a man disgraced,
Banished Valentine.
Duke. Sir Valentine!
Thu. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine.
Val. Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death;
Come not within the measure of my wrath;
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Milan shall not behold thee. Here she stands,
Take but possession of her with a touch:—
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.—
Thu. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I;
I hold him but a fool, that will endanger
His body for a girl, that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.
Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.—
Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress' love.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again.—
Plead a new state in thy unrivall'd merit,
To which I thus subscribe,—sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman, and well derived;
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserved her.
Val. I thank your grace: the gift hath made me happy.
I now beseech you, for your daughter's sake,
To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.
Duke. I grant it, for thine own, what'er it be.
Val. These banish'd men, that I have kept withal,
Are men ended with worthy qualities;
Forgive them what they have committed here,
And let them be recall'd from their exile:
They are reform'd, civil, full of good,
And fit for great employment, worthy lord.
Duke. Thou hast prevail'd; I pardon them,
and thee,
Dispose of them, as thou know'st their deserts.
Come, let us go; we will include all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.
Val. And, as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile:
What think you of this page, my lord?
Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him; he blushes.
Val. I warrant you, my lord; more grace than Duke. What mean you by that saying? [boy
Val. Please you, I'll tell you, as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortuned—
Come, Proteus; 'tis your penance, but to hear
The story of your loves discover'd:
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.

[Exeunt
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

SIR JOHN FALSTAFF.
Fenton.
SHALLOW, a Country Justice.
SLENDER, Cousin to SHALLOW.
Mr. Ford.
Mr. PAGE, two Gentlemen dwelling at Windsor.
WILLIAM PAGE, a boy, son to Mr. PAGE.
Sir Hugh Evans, a Welsh Parson.
Dr. Caius, a French Physician.
Host of the Garter Inn.
BARDOLPH, Pistol, Followers of Falstaff.
NYM,

SCENE.—Windsor; and the parts adjacent.

ACT I.

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shal. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber matter of it: if he were twenty sir John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

Slender. In the county of Gloster, justice of peace, and coronet.

Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and Cust-alarum.

Slender, and ratolorum too; and a gentleman born, master parson; who writes himself armigerous; in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, armigerous.

Shal. Ay, that we do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

Slender. All his successors, gone before him, have done't; and all his ancestors, that came after him, may: they give the dozen white laces in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

Evans. The dozen white louses do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant: it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies—love.

Shal. The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

Evans. I may quarter, coz?

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Evans. It is marrying, indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Evans. Yes, py'r-lady; if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures: but this is all one: If sir John Falstaff have committed disparagements unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compromises between you.

Shal. The Council shall hear it; it is a riot.

Evans. It is not meet the Council hear a riot;

there is no fear of Got in a riot: the Council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot; take your vizamens in that.

Shal. Hallo! o' my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.

Evans. It is better that friends is the sword, and end it: and there is also another device in my prin, which, peradventure, prings good discretions with it: There is Anne Page, which is daughter to master George Page, which is pretty virginy.

Slender. Mistress Anne Page? She has brown hair, and speaks small like a woman.

Evans. It is that fery person for all the 'orld, as just as you will desire; and seven hundred pounds of monies, and gold, and silver, is her grandsire, upon his death's-bed, (Got deliver to a joyful resurrections!) give, when she is able to overtake seventeen years old: it were a goot motion, if we leave our priddles and prabbles, and desire a marriage between master Abraham, and mistress Anne Page.

Shal. Did her grandsire leave her seven hundred pound?

Evans. Ay, and her father is make her a petter penny.

Shal. Know the young gentlewoman; she has good gifts.

Evans. Seven hundred pounds, and possibilities, is goot gifts.

Shal. Well, let us see honest master Page: Is Falstaff there?

Evans. Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar, as I do despise one that is false; or, as I despise one that is not true. The knight, sir John, is there; and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door [knocks] for master Page. What, hoa! Got pless your house here!
Page. Who's there?

Eva. Here is Got's blessing, and your friend, and justice Shallow: and here young master Slender; that, peradventure, shall tell you another tale, of matters grow to your likings. Page. I am glad to see your worship's well: I thank you for your venison, master Shallow.

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you; Much good do it your good heart! I wished your venison better; it was ill killed:—How doth good mistress Page?—and I love you always with my heart, la; with my heart.

Page. Sir, I thank you.

Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do. Page. I am glad to see you, good master Slender.

Slon. How does your fellow greyhound, sir? I heard say, he was out on Cotswale.

Page. It could not be judged, sir.

Slon. You'll not confess, you'll not confess.

Shal. That he will not;—'tis your fault, 'tis your fault:—'Tis a good dog.

Page. A cur, sir.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog; Can there be more said? he is good, and fair. Is sir John Falstaff here?

Page. Sir, he's within; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Eva. It is spoke as a Christians ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me, master Page.

Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confess it.

Shal. If it be confess'd, it is not redress'd; is not that so, master Page? He hath wrong'd me; indeed, he hath;—at a word he hath;—believe me; Robert Shallow, esquire, saith, he is wrong'd.

Page. Here comes sir John.

Enter sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fal. Now, master Shallow; you'll complain of me to the king?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kiss'd your keeper's daughter?

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answer'd.

Fal. I will answer it straight;—I have done all this:—That is now answer'd.

Shal. The Council shall know this.

Fal. 'Twere better for you, if it were known in counsel: you'll be laugh'd at.

Eva. Pauca verba, sir John, goot worts.

Fal. Good worts! good cabbage.—Slender, I broke a fellow's head; What matter have you against me?

Slon. Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you; and against your coney-catching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol. They carried me to the tavern, and made me drunk, and afterwards picked my pocket.

Bard. You Banbury cheese!

Slon. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephostophilus?

Slon. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say! pauca, pauca; slice! that's my humour.

Slon. Where's a Simple, my man?—can you tell, cousin?

Eva. Peace: I pray you! Now let us understand: There is three umpires in this matter, as I understand: that is—master Page, fideliciet, master Page; and there is myself, fideliciet, myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter.

Page. We three, to hear it, and end it 'tween them.

Eva. Pery goot: I will make a brief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards 'ork upon the cause, with as great discretly as we can.

Fal. Pistol.

Pist. He hears with ears.

Eva. The tevil and his tam! what phrase is this, He hears with ear? Why, it is affectations.

Fal. Pistol, did you pick master Slender's purse?

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he, (or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else,) of seven groats in mill-sixpences, and two Edward shovel-boards, that cost me two shilling and two pence a-piece of Yead Miller, by these gloves.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Eva. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner!—Sir John and master mine, I combat challenge of this latten bilbo: Word of denial in thy labras here; Word of denial: froth and scum, thou liest.

Slon. By these gloves, then 'twas he.

Nym. Be advised, sir, and pass good humours: I will say, marry trap, with you, if you run the nut-hook's humour on me: that is the very note of it.

Slon. By this hat, then, he in the red face had it: for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fal. What say you, Scarlet and John?

Bard. Why, sir, for my part, I say, the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Eva. It is his five senses: he what the ignorance is.

Bard. And being sap, sir, was, as they say, casher'd; and so conclusions pass'd the carriees.

Slen. Ay, you spake in Latin then too; but 'tis no matter: I'll ne'er be drunk whilst I live again, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk, I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Eva. So Got 'udge me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fal. You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

Slen. O heaven! this is Mistress Anne Page.

Page. How now, mistress Ford?

Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met; by your leave, good mistress. [Kissing her.

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome:— Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner; come gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness. [Exit all but Shal., Slon., and Evans.

Slen. I had rather than forty shillings, I had my Book of Songs and Sonnets here:—

Enter Simple.

Page. How now, Simple! Where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? You have not The Book of Riddles about you, have you?

Sin. Book of Riddles! why, did not you lend it to Alice Shortcake upon Alihallowmass last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?
Shal. Come, coz; come, coz; we stay for you. A word with you, coz: marry this, coz; There is, as 'twere, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by sir Hugh here.—Do you understand me? Slen. Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable; if it be so, I shall do that which is reason. Shal. Nay, but understand me. Slen. So do I, sir. Eva. Give ear to his motions, master Slender: I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it. Slen. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says: I pray you, pardon me; he's a justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here. Eva. But this is not the question; the question is concerning your marriage. Shal. Ay, there's the point, sir. Eva. Marry, it is; the very point of it; to mistress Anne Page. Slen. Why, if it be so, I will marry her, upon any reasonable demands. Eva. But can you affections the oman? Let us command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips; for divers philosophers hold, that the lips is parcel of the mouth:—Therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid? Shal. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her? Slen. I hope, sir,—I will do, as it shall become one that would do reason. Eva. Nay, Got's lords and his ladies, you must speak possible, if you can carry her your desires towards her. Slen. That you must: Will you, upon good dowry, marry her? Slen. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason. Shal. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, sweet coz; what I do, is to pleasure you, coz: Can you love the maid? Slen. I will marry her, sir, at your request; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet Heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are married, and have more occasion to know one another: I hope, upon familiarity will grow more contempt: but if you say, marry her, I will marry her, that I am freely dissolved, and discretely. Eva. It is a fery discretion answer; save, the foul is in the 'ort dissolutely: the 'ort is, according to our meaning, resolutely:—his meaning is good. Shal. Ay, I think my cousin meant well. Slen. Ay, or else I would might be hanged, la. Re-enter Anne Page. Shal. Here comes fair mistress Anne:—Would I were young, for your sake, mistress Anne! Anne. The dinner is on the table; my father desires your worship's company. Shal. I will wait on him, fair mistress Anne. Eva. Od's pressed will! I will not be absence at the grace. [Exeunt Shallow and Sir H. Evans. Anne. Will't please your worship to come in, sir? Slen. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily; I am very well. Anne. The dinner attends you, sir. Slen. I am not a-hungry, I thank you, forsooth. 'O, sirrah, for all you are my man, go wait upon my cousin Shallow; [Exit Simple.] A justice of peace sometime may be beholden to his friend for a man:—I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead: But what though? yet I live like a poor gentleman born. Anne. I may not go in without your worship, they will not sit, till you come. Slen. I'faith, I'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did. Anne. I pray you, sir, walk in. Slen. I had rather walk here, I thank you; I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, three veins for a dish of stewed prunes; and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears i' the town? Anne. I think there are, sir; I heard them talk'd of. Slen. I love the sport well; but I shall as soon quarrel at it, as any man in England:—You are afraid, if you see the bear loose, are you not? Anne. Ay, indeed, sir. Slen. That's meat and drink to me now. I have seen Sackerson loose twenty times; and have taken him by the chain: but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shriek'd at it, that it pass'd:—but women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill favour'd rough things. Re-enter Page. Page. Come, gentle master Slender, come; we stay for you. Slen. I'll eat nothing, I thank you, sir. Page. By cock and pyc, you shall not choose, sir: come, come. Slen. Nay, pray you, lead the way. Page. Come on, sir. Slen. Mistress Anne, yourself shall go first. Anne. Not I, sir; pray you, keep on. Slen. Truly, I will not go first; truly, la: I will not do you that wrong. Anne. I pray you, sir. Slen. I'll rather be unmann'd than troublesome: you do yourself wrong, indeed, la. [Exeunt — SCENE II.—The same. Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple. Eva. Go your ways, and ask of Doctor Caius' house, which is the way: and there dwells one mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. Simp. Well, sir. Eva. Nay, it is better yet:—give her this letter; for it is a 'oman that altogether's acquaintance with mistress Anne Page: and the letter, is, to desire and require her to solicit your master's desires to mistress Anne Page: I pray you, begone; I will make an end of my dinner; there's pippins and cheese to come. [Exeunt — SCENE III.—A Room in the Garter Inn. Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin. Fal. Mine host of the Garter,— Host. What says my bully-rook? Speak scholar'ly, and wisely.
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

ACT I.

Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.

Host. Discard, bully Hercules; cashier: let them wag; trot, trot.

Fal. I sit at ten pounds a week.

Host. Thou'rt an emperor, Caesar, Keisar, and Phceesar. I will entertain Bardolph; he shall draw, he shall tap; said I well, bully Hector?

Fal. Do so, good mine host.

Host. I have spoke; let him follow: Let me see thee froth, and lime: I am at a word: follow. [Exit Host.

Fal. Bardolph, follow him: a tapster is a good trade: an old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered servingman, a fresh tapster: Go; adieu.

Bard. It is a life that I have desired; I will thrive.

Pist. O base Gondarian wight! wilt thou the spigot wield?

Nym. He was gotten in drink: Is not the humour conceited? His mind is not heroic, and there's the humour of it.

Fal. I am glad, I am so acquit of this tinder-box; his thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time.

Nym. The good humour is, to steal at a minute's rest.

Pist. Convey, the wise it call: Steal! foh; a fiction! the phrase!

Fal. Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels.

Pist. Why then, let kibes ensue.

Fal. There is no remedy; I must coney-catch; I must shift.

Pist. Young ravens must have food.

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?

Pist. I ken the wight; he is of substance good.

Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.

Pist. Two yards, and more.

Fal. No quips now, Pistol; Indeed I am in the waist two yards about: But I am now about no waste: I am about shift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife; I spy entertainment in her; she discourses, she carves, she gives the leer of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be English'd rightly, is, I am sir John Falstaff's.

Pist. He hath studied her well, and translated her well; out of honesty into English.

Nym. The anchor is deep: Will that humour pass?

Fal. Now, the report goes, she has all the rule of her husband's purse; she hath legions of angels.

Pist. As many devils entertain; and, To her, boy, say I.

Nym. The humour rises; it is good: humour me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Page's wife: who even now gave me good eyes too, examined my parts with most judicious eyebrows: sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.

Pist. Then did the sun on dunghill shine.

Nym. I thank thee for that humour.

Fal. O, she did so course o'er my extremities with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass! Here's another letter to her; she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guians, all gold and bounty.
him; Does he not hold up his head, as it were? and strut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed does he.

Quick. Well, Heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! Tell master parson Evans, I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish—

Re-enter Rugby.

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master.

Quick. We shall all be shent: Run in here, good young man; go into this closet. [Shuts Simple in the Door.] He will not stay long.—What, John Rugby! John, John, what John, I say!—Go, John, go enquire for my master; I doubt, he be not well, that he comes not home:—and down, down, down, adown-a, &c. [Sings.

Enter Doctor Caiss.

Caiss. Vat is you sing? I do not like dese toys; Pray you, go and vetch me in my closet un boillier verd; a box, a green-a-box; Do intend vat I speak? a green-a-box.

Quick. Ay, forsooth, I'll fetch it you. I am glad he went not in himself: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad. [Aside.

Caiss. Fe, fe, fe, fe! ma fai, il fait fort chaud, Je m'en vais à la Cour, la grande affaire.

Quick. Is it this, sir?

Caiss. Ouy; mette le au mon pocket; Depeche, quickly.—Vere is dat knave Rugby?

Quick. What, John Rugby! John?

Rug. Here, sir.

Caiss. You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby: Come, take-a your rapier, and come after my heel to do court.

Rug. 'Tis ready, sir, here in the porch.

Caiss. By my troth, I tarry too long:—Od's me! Qu'ay joublié? dere is some simples in my closet, dat I will not for the vارد I shall leave behind.

Quick. Ah me! he'll find the young man there, and be mad!

Quick. Good master, be content.

Caiss. Vorefore shall I be content-a!

Quick. The young man is an honest man.

Caiss. Vat shall de honest man do in my closet? dere is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

Quick. I beseech you, be not so flagmattic; hear the truth of it: He came of an errand to me, from parson Hugh.

Caiss. Well?

Sim. Ay, forsooth, to desire her to—

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caiss. Peace-a your tongue:—Speak-a your tale. Sim. To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to Mrs. Anne Page for my master, in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, la; but I'll ne'er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caiss. Sir Hugh send-a you?—Rugby, ballez me some paper: Tarry you a little-a while. [Writing.

Quick. I am glad he is so quiet: if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and so melancholy:—But notwithstanding, man, I'll do your master what good I can: and the very yea and the no is, the French doctor, my master,—I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself:—

Sim. 'Tis a great charge, to come under one body's hand.

Quick. Are you avis'd o' that? you shall find it a great charge: and to be up early and down late;—but notwithstanding, (to tell you in your ear; I would have no words of it;) my master himself is in love with mistress Anne Page: but notwithstanding that,—I know Anne's mind,—that's neither here nor there.

Caiss. You jack'nape; give-a dis letter to sir Hugh; by gar, it is a challenge: I will cut his treat in de park; and I will teach a scurrv jack-a-nape priest to meddle or make:—you may be gone; it is not good you tarry here:—by gar, I vill cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have a stone to trow at his dog. [Exit SIMPLE.

Quick. Als, he speaks but for his friend.

Caiss. It is no matter-a for dat:—do not you tell-a me dat I shall have Anne Page for myself?—by gar, I will kill de Jack Priest; and I have appointed mine host of de Jarterre to measure our weapon:—by gar, I vill myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well: we must give folks leave to prate: What, the good-jer!

Caiss. Rugby, come to de court vit me:—By gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door:—Follow my heels, Rugby [Exit Caiss and Rugby.

Quick. You shall have An fool's-head of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that: never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind, than I do; nor can do more than I do with her, I thank heaven.

Fent. [Within.] Who's within there? ho!

Quick. Who's there, I trow? Come near the house, I pray you.

Enter Fenton.

Fent. How now, good woman; how dost thou?

Quick. The better, that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? how does prettymistress Anne?

Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way; I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, think'st thou? Shall I not lose my suit?

Quick. Troth, sir, all is in his hands above: but notwithstanding, master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book, she loves you:—Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that?

Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale,—good faith, it is such another Nan;—but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread: We had an hour's talk of that wart:—I shall never laugh but in that maid's company! But, indeed, she is given too much to allicholly, and musing: But for you—Well, go to.

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day; Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me—

Quick. Will I? i'faith, that we will; and I will tell your worship more of the wart, the next time we have confidence; and of other woorers.

Fent. Well, farewell; I am in great haste now.

[Exit.

Quick. Farewell to your worship.—Truly, an honest gentleman; but Anne loves him not; for I know Anne's mind as well as another does:—Out upon't! what have I forgot? [Exit
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Page’s House.

Enter Mistress Page, with a Letter.

Mrs. Page. What have I scaped love-letters in the holiday time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see: [Reads.]

Ask me no reason why I love you; for though love use reason for his precision, he admits him not for his counsellor: You are not young, no more am I; go to then, there’s sympathy: you are merry, so am I; Ha! ha! then there’s more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; Would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice then, mistress Page, (at the least, if the love of a soldier can suffice,) that I love thee. I will not pity me, ’tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, love me by me, Thine own true knight, By day or night, Or any kind of light, With all his might, For thee to fight, JOHN FALSTAFF.

What a Herod of Jewry is this?—O wicked, wicked world!—one that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked (with the devil’s name) out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company!—What should I say to him?—I was then frugal of my mirth:—heaven forgive me!—Why I’ll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of men. How shall I be revenged on him? for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house!

Mrs. Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I’ll ne’er believe that; I have to show to the contrary.

Mrs. Page. ’Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do, then; yet, I say, I could show you to the contrary: O, mistress Page, give me some counsel!

Mrs. Page. What’s the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman, if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honour!

Mrs. Page. Hang the trifle, woman; take the honour: What is it?—dispense with triles;—what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment, or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What? thou liest!—Sir Alice Ford!—These knights will hack; and so thou shalt not alter the article of thy gentry.

Mrs. Ford. We burn day-light:—here, read, read;—perceive how I might be knighted.—I shall think the wits of the men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men’s likings: And yet he would not swear; praised women’s modesty: And gave such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words: but they do no more adhere and keep place together than the hundredth psalm to the tune of Green sleeves. What tempest, I throw, threw this whale, with so many tuna of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease.—Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. Letter for letter; but that the name of Page and Ford differs!—To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here’s the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first; for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names, (sure more,) and these are of the second edition: He will print them out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press when he would put us two. I had rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion. Well; I will find you twenty lascivious turtles, ere one chaste man.

Mrs. Ford. Why is this the very same; the very hand, the very words: What doth he think of us? Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not; It makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty. I’ll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he know some strain in me, that I know not myself, he would never have bored me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. Boarding, call you it? I’ll be sure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I; if he come under my hatches, I’ll never to sea again. Let’s be revenged on him: let’s appoint him a meeting; give him a show of comfort in his suit; and lead him on with a fine baited delay, till he hath pawn’d his horses to mine Host of the Garter.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villany against him, that may not sully the chariness of our honesty. O, that my husband saw this letter! it would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look, where he comes; and my good man too; he’s as far from jealousy, as I am from giving him cause; and that, I hope, is an unmeasurable distance.

Mrs. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mrs. Page. Let’s consult together against this greedy knight: Come hither. [They retire.

Enter Ford, Pistol, Page, and Nym.

Ford. Well, I hope, it be not so.

Pistol. Like a curtail dog in some affairs: Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford. Why, sir, my wife is not young.

Pistol. He wos both: high and low, both rich and poor, Both young and old, one with another, Ford; He loves thy gally-mawfy; Ford, perpend.

Pistol. With liver burning hot: Prevent, or go Like sir Acteon he, with Ring-wood at thy heels:— O, odious is the name.

Ford. What name, sir?

Pistol. The horn! I say: Farewell. [night: Take heed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds do Away, sir corporal Nym.——— [sing.— Believe it, Page; he speaks sense. [Exit Pistol.

Ford. I will be patient; I will find out this.

Nym. And this is true [to Page.] I like not the humour of lying. He hath wronged me in some humours: I should have borne the humoured
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

SCENE I.

Letter to her; but I have a sword, and it shall bite upon my necessity. He loves your wife; there's the short and the long. My name is corporal Nym; I speak, and I avouch. 'Tis true:—my name is Nym, and Falstaff loves your wife.—Adieu! I love not the humour of bread and cheese; and there's the humour of it. Adieu. [Exit Nym.

Page. The humour of it, quoth 'a! here's a fellow frets humour out of his wits.

Ford. I will seek out Falstaff.

Page. I never heard such a drawing, affecting rogue.

Ford. If I do find it, well.

Page. I will not believe such a Caatania, though the priest of the town commended him for a true man.

Ford. 'Twas a good sensible fellow: Well. Page. How now, Meg?

Mrs. Page. Whither go you, George?—Hark you.

Ford. I am not melancholy. Get you home, go.

Mrs. Ford. 'Faith, thou hast some crotchets in thy head now.—Will you go, mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Have with you.—You'll come to dinner, George? who comes yonder: she shall be our messenger to this paltry knight.

[Aside to Mrs. Ford.

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Mrs. Ford. Trust me, I thought on her: she'll fit it.

Mrs. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne?

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and I pray, how does good mistress Anne?

Mrs. Page. Go in with us, and see; we have an hour's talk with you.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Quickly.

Ford. You heard what this knave told me; did you not?

Page. Yes; and you heard what the other told me?

Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?

Page. Hang 'em, slaves; I do not think the knight would offer it: but these that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men: very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry, were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that.—Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets of her more than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Ford. I do not misdoubt my wife; but I would be loath to turn them together: A man may be too confident: I would have nothing lie on my head: I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Look, where my ranting host of the Garter comes: there is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily.—How now, mine host?

Enter Host and Shallow.

Host. How now, bully-rook! thou'rt a gentleman: cavalero-justice, I say.

Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow.—Good even, and twenty, good master Page! Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand.

Host. Tell him, cavalero-justice; tell him, bully-rook.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought, between sir Hugh the Welch priest, and Calus the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine host o' the Garter, a word with you.

Host. What say'st thou, bully-rook?

Shal. Will you [to Page] go with us to behold it? My merry host hath had the measuring of their weapons; and, I think, he hath appointed them contrary places: for, believe me, I hear, the parson is no jester. Hark, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Host. Hast thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavalier?

Ford. None. I protest: but I'll give you a bottle of burnt sack to give me recourse to him, and tell him, my name is Brook; only for a jest.

Host. My hand, bully: thou shalt have egress and regress; said I well? and thy name shall be Brook: It is a merry knight.—Will you go on hearts?

Shal. Have with you, mine host.

Page. I have heard the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Shal. Tut, sir, I could have told you more: in these times you stand on distance, your passes, stoccadoes, and I know not what: 'tis the heart, master Page; 'tis here, 'tis here. I have seen the time, with my long sword, I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.

Host. Here, boys, here, here! shall we wag?

Page. Have with you:—I had rather hear them scold than fight.

[Exit Host, Shallow, and Page.

Ford. Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily: She was in his company at Page's house; and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will look further into't; and I have a disguise to sound Falstaff; if I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, 'tis labour well bestowed.

[Exit.

SCENE II. A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Pistol.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why, then your lordship's mine oyster, Which I with sword will open,—I will retort the sum in equipage.

Fal. Not one penny. I have been content, sir, you should lay my countenance to pawn: I have granted upon my good friends for three reprieves for you and your coach-fellow, Nym; or else you had looked through the grate, like a genny of ba-boons. I am damned in hell, for swearing to gentlemen my friends, you were good soldiers, and tall fellows: and when mistress Bridget lost the handle of her fan, I took't upon mine honour, thou hadst it not.

Pist. Didst thou not share? hadst thou not fifteen pence?

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason: Think'st thou I'll endanger my soul gratis? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no gibbet for you;—go. —A short knife and a thong;—to your manor of Pickthatch, go.—You'll not hear a letter for me, you rogue!—you stand upon your honour!—Why, thou unconfounded baseness, it is as much as I think to keep the terms of my honour precise. I, I, myself sometimes, leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet you, rogue, will ensconce your rags, your cat-a-mountain looks, your red lattice phrases, and your bold-basting oaths, under the shelter of your honour! You will not do it, you? —Pist. I do relent; what wouldst thou more of man?

Enter Robin.

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quick. Give your worship good-morrow.

Fal. Good-morrow, good wife.

Quick. Not so, an't please your worship.

Fal. Good maid, then.

Quick. I'll be sworn; as my mother was, the first hour I was born.

Fal. I do believe the sweerer: what with me? Quick. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman: and I'll vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Quick. There is one mistress Ford, sir;—I pray, come a little nearer this ways:—I myself dwell with master doctor Caius.

Fal. Well, on; mistress Ford, you say,—Quick. Your worship says very true: I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways.

Fal. I warrant thee, nobody hears;—mine own people, mine own people.

Quick. Are they so? Heaven bless them, and make them his servants!

Fal. Well: Mistress Ford;—what of her?

Quick. Why, sir, she's a good creature. Lord, lord! your worship's a wanton: Well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray!

Fal. Mistress Ford;—come, mistress Ford,—Quick. Marry, this is the short and the long of it; you have brought her into such a canaries, as 'tis wonderful. The best courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canary. Yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches; I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift; smelling so sweetly, (all musk) and so rushing, I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such alligant terms; and in such wine and sugar of the best, and the fairest, that would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her.—I had myself twenty angels given me this morning; but I defy all angels, (in any such sort, as they say,) but in the way of honesty:—and, I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all: and yet there has been ears, nay, which is more, pensioners; but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal. But what says she to me? be brief, my good she Mercury.

Quick. Marry, she hath received your letter; for which she thanks you a thousand times; and she gives you to notify, that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven?

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, that you wrought:—master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealous man: she leads a very frumpold life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven: woman, commend me to her; I will not fail her.

Quick. Why you say well: But I have another messenger to your worship: Mistress Page hath her hearty recommendations to you too;—and let me tell you in your ear, she's as furtuous a civil modest wife, and true (I tell you) that will not miss you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, whose'er be the other: and she bade me tell your worship, that her husband is seldom from home; but, she hopes, there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man; surely, I think you have charms, la; yes, in truth.

Quick. Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for't!

Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife, and Page's wife, acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jest, indeed!—they have not so little grace, I hope:—that were a trick, indeed! But mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves: her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page: and, truly, master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does; do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, all as she will; and, truly, she deserves it: for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page; no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do so then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and, in any case, have a nay-word, that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to understand any thing; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickedness: old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Pare thee well: commend me to them both: there's my purse; I am yet thy debtor.—Boy, go along with this woman. This news distracts me!

[Exeunt Quickly and Robin.

Pist. This punk is one of Cupid's carriers: Clap on more sails; pursue, up with your fights; Give fire; she is my prize, or oceanwhelm them all! (Exit Pistol.

Fal. Say'st thou so, old Jack? go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expense, be so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee: Let them say, 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Sir John, there's one master Brook belon; would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Fal. Brook, is his name?

Bard. Ay, sir.
Fal. Call him in; [Exit BARDOLPH.] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflow such liquor. Ah! hal! mistress Ford and mistress Page, have I encompassed you! go to; via!

Re-enter BARDOLPH, with FORD disguised.

Ford. Bless you, sir.

Fal. You're welcome; what's your will? Give us leave, drawer. [Exit BARDOLPH.

Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Brook.

Fal. Good master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good sir John, I sue for yours: not to charge you; for I must let you understand, I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are: the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion: for they say, if money go before, all ways do be open.

Fal. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me: if you will help me to bear it, sir John, take all, or half for easing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter.

Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing.

Fal. Speak, good master Brook; I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar,—I will be brief with you; and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfection: but, good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your easier; sith you yourself know, how easy it is to be such an offender.

Fal. Very well, sir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford.

Fal. Well, sir.

Ford. I have long loved her, and I protest to you bestowed much on her; followed her with a doating observance; engrossed opportunities to meet her; fee'd every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her; not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what she would have given: briefly, I have pursued her, as love hath pursued me; which hath been on the wing of all occasions. But whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my means, meed, I am sure, I have received none; unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchased at an infinite rate; and that hath taught me to say this:

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;

Pursuing that it flies, and flying what pursues.

Fal. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Have you importuned her to such a purpose?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Of what quality was your love, then?

Ford. Like a fair house, built upon another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice, by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that, though she appear honest to me, yet, in other places, she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shred of construction made of her. Now, sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: You are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed, for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O, sir!

Ford. Believe it, for you know it:—There is money; spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have; only give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife; use your art of wooing, win her to consent to you; if any man may, you may as soon as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks, you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

Ford. O, understand my drift! she dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself; she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves; I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me: What say you to't, sir John?

Fal. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand: and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

Ford. O good sir!

Fal. Master Brook, I say you shall.

Ford. Want no money, sir John, you shall want none.

Fal. Want no mistress Ford, master Brook, you shall want none. I shall be with her, (I may tell you,) by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous rascally knave, her husband, will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, sir?

Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not:—yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say, the jealous wittily knave hath masses of money; for which his wife seems to me well-favoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckold's rogue's coffers; and there's my harvest-home.

Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir; that you might avoid him, if you saw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue. I will start him out of his wits; I will saw him with my cudgel: it shall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns: master Brook, thou shalt know, I will predominate o'er the peasant, and thou shalt lie with his wife.—Come to me soon at night:—Ford's a knife, and I will aggravate his stile: thou, master Brook, shalt know him for a knife and cuckold:—come to me soon at night. [Exit.

Ford. What a damned Epicurean rascal is this!—My heart is ready to crack with impatience.—Who says, this is improvident jealousy? My wife hath sent to him, the hour is fixed, the match is made. Would any man have thought this?—See the hell of having a false woman! my bed shall be abused, my coiffers ransacked, my reputation guann'd; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong.

Terms! names! —Amainon sounds well; Lucifer, well; Barbason, well; yet they are devils' additions, the names of fiends: but cuckold! wittol-cuckold! the devil himself hath not such a name. Page is an ass, a secure ass! he will trust his wife, he will not be jealous! I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welchman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua-vite bottle, or a thief to walk and gamboling gelding, than my wife with herself: then she plots, then she ruminates, then she devises: and what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. Heaven be praised for my jealousy!—Eleven o'clock the hour;—I will prevent this, detect my wife, he revenged on Falstaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it; better three hours too soon, than a minute too late. Fie, fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold! [Exit.

SCENE III.—Windsor Park.

Enter CAIUS and RUGBY.

Caius. Jack Rugby!

Rug. Sir.

Caius. Vat is de clock, Jack?

Rug. 'Ts past the hour, sir, that sir Hugh promised to meet.

Caius. By gar, he has save his soul, dat he is no come; he has pray his Pible vell, dat he is no come: by gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.

Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew, your worship would kill him, if he came.

Caius. By gar, de herring is no dead, so as I will kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I will tell you how I will kill him.

Caius. Villany, take your rapier.

Rug. Forbear; here's company.

Enter Host, Shallow, Slender, and Page.

Host. Bless thee, bully doctor.

Shal. Save you, master doctor Caius.

Page. Now, good master doctor!

Slend. Give you good morrow, sir.

Caius. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?

Host. To see thee fight, to see thee foin, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy punto, thy stock, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant. Is he dead, my Ethiopian? is he dead, my Francisco? ha, bully! What says my Ascalapius? my Galen? my heart of elder? ha! is he dead, bully Stale? is he dead?

Caius. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of the world; he is not show his face.

Host. Thou art a Castilian king, Urinal! Hector of Green, my boy?

Caius. I pray you, bear witness that me have stay six, or seven, two, tree hours for him, and he is no come.

Shal. He is the wiser man, master doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions; is it not true, master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Bodykins, master Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itching to make one; though we are justices, and doctors, and churchmen, master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us; we are the sons of women, master Page.

Page. 'Tis true, master Shallow.

Shal. It will be found so, master Page. Master doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace; you have showed yourself a wise physician, and sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and patient churchman: you must go with me, master doctor.

Host. Pardon, guest justice:—A word, monsieur Muck-water.

Caius. Muck-water! vat is dat?

Host. Muck-water, in our English tongue, is valour, bully.

Caius. By gar, then I have as much muck-water as de Englishman:—Scurvy jack-dog priest by gar, he vill cut his ears.

Host. He will clapper-claw thee tightly, bully.

Caius. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?

Host. That is, he will make thee amends.

Caius. By gar, me do look, he shall clapper-de-claw me; for, by gar, me will have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.

Caius. Me tank you for dat.

Host. And moreover, bully.—But first, master guest, and master Page, and eke cavalero Slender, go you through the town to Frogmore.

[Aside to them.

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?

Host. He is there: see what humour he is in; and I will bring the doctor about by the fields: will it do well?

Shal. We will do it.

Caius. By gar, me vill kill de priest; for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.

Host. Let him die: but, first, sheath thy impatience; throw cold water on thy choler; go about the fields with me through the Frogmore; I will bring thee where mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house, a feasting: and thou shalt wool her; Cry'd game, said I well?

Caius. By gar, me tank you for dat: by gar, I love you; and I shall procure-a you de good guest, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For the which, I will be thy adversary towards Anne Page; said I well?

Caius. By gar, 'tis good; well said.

Host. Let us wag then.

Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby. [Exeunt.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Field near Frogmore.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Eva. I pray you now, good master Slender's serving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for master Caius, that calls himself Doctor of Physick?

Sim. Marry, sir, the city-ward, the park-ward, every way; old Windsor way, and every way but the town way.

Eva. I most vehemently desire you, you will also look that way.

Sim. I will, sir.

Eva. 'Tis my soul! how full of choler I am, and trembling of mind!—I shall be glad, if he have deceived me:—how melancholies I am!—I will knog his urinals about his knave's costard, when I have good opportunities for the 'ork—pleas my soul! [Sings.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals;
There will we make our peds of roses,
And a thousand fragrant posies.

To shallow—

'Mercy on me! I have a great dispositions to cry.

Melodious birds sing madrigals—
When as I sat in Babylon—
And a thousand vagrant posies.

To shallow—

Sim. Yonder he is coming, this way, sir Hugh.

Eva. He's welcome:

To shallow rivers, to whose falls

Heaven prosper the right!—What weapons is he?

Sim. No weapons, sir: There comes my master, master Shallow, and another gentleman, from Frogmore, over the stile, this way.

Eva. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Shal. How now, master parson? Good-morrow, good sir Hugh. Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Sten. Ah, sweet Anne Page!

Page. Save you, good sir Hugh!

Eva. 'Tis my soul! all of you! Shal. What! the sword and the word! do you study them both, master parson?

Page. And youthful still, in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day?

Eva. There is reasons and causes for it.

Page. We are come to you, to do a good office, master parson.

Eva. Fery well: What is it?

Page. Yonder is a most reverend gentleman, who, befike having received wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience, that ever you saw.

Shal. I have lived fourscore years, and upward: I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wide of his own respect.

Eva. What is he?

Page. I think you know him; master doctor Caius, the renowned French physician.

Eva. Got's will, and his passion of my heart!

I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.

Page. Why?

Eva. He has no more knowledge in Hibocrates and Galen,—and he is a knave besides; a cowardly knave, as you would desires to be acquainted with.

Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.

Shlen. O, sweet Anne Page!

Shal. It appears so, by his weapons.—Keep them asunder;—here comes doctor Caius.

Enter Host, Caius, and Rugby.

Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.

Shal. So do you, good master doctor.

Host. Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English.

Caius. I pray you, let-a me speak a word vit your ear: Verefere vill you not meet-a me?

Eva. Pray you, use your patience: In good time.

Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John ape.

Eva. Pray you, let us not be laughing-stogs to other men's humours; I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends:—I will knog your urinals about your knave's cogscomb, for missing your meetings and appointments.

Caius. Diable—Jack Rugby,—mine Host de Jarterre, have I not stay for him, to kill him? have I not, at de place I did appoint?

Eva. As I am a christians soul, now, look you, this is the place appointed; I'll be judgment by mine host of the Garter.

Host. Peace, I say, Gallia and Gaul, French and Welch; soul-curer and body-curer.

Caius. Ay, dat is very good! excellent!

Host. Peace, I say; hear mine host of the Garter. Am I politick? am I subtle? am I a Machiavel? Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions, and the motions. Shall I lose my parson? my priest? my sir Hugh? no; he gives me the proverbs and the no-verbs.—Give me thy hand, terrestrial; so;—Give me thy hand, celestial; so.—Boys of art, I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places; your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burrut sack be the issue.—Come, lay their swords to pawn;—Follow me, lad of peace; follow, follow, follow.

Shal. Trust me, a mad host.—Follow, gentle-man, follow.

Shlen. O, sweet Anne Page!

[Exeunt Shallow, Slender, Page, and Host.

Caius. Ha! do I perceive dat? have you make-a de set of us? ha, ha!

Eva. This is well; he has made us his vloutning-stog.—I desire you, that we may be friends; and let us knog our prains together, to be revenge on this same scall, scurry, coggung companion, the host of the Garter.

Caius. By gar, vit all my heart; he promise to bring me vere is Anne Page; by gar, he deceive me too.

Eva. Well, I will smite his noddles;—Pray you, follow.
SCENE II.—The Street in Windsor.

Enter, Mistress Page and Robin.

Mrs. Page. Well met, mistress Page: Whither go you?

Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife; Is she at home?

Ford. Well met, mistress Page: Whither go you?

Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on's name. There is such a league between my good man and he!—Is your wife at home, indeed?

Ford. Indeed, she is.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir;—I am sick, till I see her. [Exit Mrs. Page and Robin.]

Ford. Has Page any brains? hath he any eyes? hath he any thinking? Sure, they sleep; he hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty miles, as easy as a cannon will shoot point-blank twelve score. He pieces-out his wife's inclination; he gives her folly motion and advantage: and now she's going to my wife, and Falstaff's boy with her!—Good plots!—they are laid; and our revolted wives have damnation together. Well; I will take him, then torture my wife, pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page, divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Action; and to these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry arm. [Clock strikes.] The clock gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me search; there I shall find Falstaff: I shall be rather praised for this, than mocked; for it is as positive as the earth is firm, that Falstaff is there: I will go.

Enter Page, Shallow, Slender, Host, Sir Hugh Evans, Caius and Rugby.

Shal. Page, &c. Well met, master Ford.

Ford. Trust me, a good knight: I have good cheer at home; and, I pray you, all go with me.

Shal. I must excuse myself, master Ford.

Slan. And so must I, sir; we have appointed to dine with mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I'll speak of.

Shal. We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer.

Slen. I hope I have your good will, father Page.

Page. You have, master Slender; I stand wholly for you—but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.

Caius. Ay, by gar; and de maid is love a-me; my nursh-a Quickly tell me so much.

Host. What say you to young master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holiday, he smiles April and May: he will carry't, he will carry't; 'tis in his buttons; he will carry't.

Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild Prince and Poinset; he is of too high a region, he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will show you a monster.—Master doctor, you shall go;—so shall you, master Page;—and you, sir Hugh.

Shal. Well, fare you well:—we shall have the freer wooing at master Page's.

[Exeunt Shallow and Slender.]

Caius. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon. [Exeunt.]

Host. Farewell, my hearts; I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him. [Exit Host.]

Ford. [Aside.] I think, I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Will you go, gentlemen?

All. Have with you, to see this monster. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! what, Robert!

Mrs. Page. Quickly, quickly: Is the buck-basket—

Mrs. Ford. I warrant:—What, Robin, I say.

Enter Servants, with a basket.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge; we must be brief.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John, and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brewhouse; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and (without any pause, or staggering,) take this basket on your shoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whitsters in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch, close by the Thames side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?

Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over; they lack no direction: Be gone, and come when you are called. [Exit Servants.]

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

[Enter Robin.]

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyes-musket? what news with you?

Rob. My master, sir John, is come in at your back-door, mistress Ford; and requests your company.

Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-lent, have you been true to us?

Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn: My master knows not of your being here; and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears, he'll turn me away.

Mrs. Page. Thou'rt a good boy; this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. —I'll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so;—Go tell thy master, I am alone. Mistress Page, remember you your cue. [Exit Robin.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee; if I do not act it, kiss me. [Exit Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel? Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough; this is the period of my ambition; O this blessed hour!

Mrs. Ford. O sweet sir John!

Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead; I'll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I your lady, sir John! alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another; I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched bent of the brow, that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian admittance.

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, sir John: my brows become nothing else; nor that well neither.

Fal. Thou art a traitor to say so: thou wouldst make an absolute courtier; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a semi-circled farthingale. I see what thou wert, if fortune thy foe were not; nature is thy friend: Come, thou canst not hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that persuade thee, thou'st something extraordinary in thee. Come, I cannot cog, and say, thou art this and that, like a many of these lispig haw-thorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Buckler's-bury in simple-time; I cannot: but I love thee; none but thee; and thou deservest it.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir: I fear, you love mistress Page.

Fal. Thou might'st as well say, I love to walk on the Counter-gate; which is as hateful to me as the reek of a lime-kiln.

Mrs. Ford. Well, heaven knows, how I love you; and you shall one day find it.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do; or else I could not be in that mind.

Rob. [within] Mistress Ford, mistress Ford! here's mistress Page at the door, sweating, and blowing, and looking wildly, and would needs speak with you presently.

Fal. She shall not see me; I will ensconce me behind the arras.

Mrs. Ford. Pray you, do so: she's a very tatting woman. —[Falstaff hides himself.

Enter Mistress Page and Robin.

What's the matter? how now?

Mrs. Page. O mistress Ford, what have you done? You're shamed, you are overthrown, you are undone for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What's the matter, good mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. O well-a-day, mistress Ford! having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion!

Mrs. Ford. What cause of suspicion?

Mrs. Page. What cause of suspicion?—out upon you! how am I mistook in you?

Mrs. Ford. Why, alas! what's the matter?

Mrs. Page. Your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a gentleman, that, he says, is here now in the house, by your consent, to take an ill advantage of his absence: You are undone.

Mrs. Ford. Speak louder. —[Aside.] —'Tis not so, I hope.

Mrs. Page. Pray heaven it be not so, that you have such a man here; but 'tis most certain your husband's coming with half Windsor at his heels, to search for such a one. I came before to tell you: if you know yourself clear, why I am glad of it: but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amazed; call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What shall I do?—There'sa gentleman, my dear friend; and I fear not mine own shame, so much as his peril: I had rather than a thousand pound, he were out of the house.

Mrs. Page. For shame, never stand you had rather, and you had rather; your husband's here at hand, befriend you of some conveyance: in the house you cannot hide him. —O, how have you deceived me! —Look, here is a basket; if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creep in here; and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking; Or, it is whitting-time, send him by your two men to Datchet mead.

Mrs. Ford. He's too big to go in there: What shall I do?

Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. Let me see't, let me see't! O let me see't! I'll in, I'll in; follow your friend's counsel; —I'll in.

Mrs. Page. What! Sir John Falstaff! Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. I love thee, and none but thee; help me away: let me creep in here; I'll never— [He goes into the basket; they cover him with foul linen.

Mrs. Page. Help to cover your master, boy: Call your men, mistress Ford: —You dissembling knight!

Mrs. Ford. What John, Robert, John! [Exit Robin. Re-enter Servants.] Go take up these clothes here, quickly; where's the cowl-staff? look, how you drumble; carry them to the laundress in Datchet mead; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Cogin, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near: if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest; I deserve it. —How now? whither bear you this?

Page. To the laundress, forsooth.

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whither they bear it? You were best meddle with buckwashing.

Ford. Buck? I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck? Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck; and of the season too; it shall appear. [Exit Servants with the basket.] Gentlemen, I have dreamed to-night; I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: ascend my chambers, search, seek, find out: I'll warrant we'll unkennel the fox.—Let me stop this way first:—so, now uncape.

Page. Good master Ford, be contented: you wrong yourself too much.

Ford. True, master Page.—Up, gentlemen; you shall see sport anon: follow me, gentlemen.

[Exit.]

Eva. This is fiery fantastical humours and jealouſies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no de fashion of France: it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen; see the issue of his search.

[Exit Evans, Page and Caius.]

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this?

Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a talking was he in, when your husband asked who was in the basket!

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all of the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here; for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that: And we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff: his disolution will scarce obey this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish carrion, mistress Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water; and give him another hope, to betray him to another punishment?

Mrs. Page. We'll do it; let him be sent for to-morrow eight o'clock, to have amends.

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be the knave bragged of that he could not compass.

Mrs. Page. Heard you that?

Mrs. Ford. Ay, ay, peace:—You use me well, master Ford, do you?

Ford. Ay, I do so.

Mrs. Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

Ford. Amen.

Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, master Ford.

Ford. Ay, ay; I must bear it.

Eva. If there be any pody in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment!

Caius. By gar, nor I too; dere is no—bodies.

Page. Fie, fie, master Ford! are you not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not have your distemper in this kind, for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, master Page: I suffer for it.

Eva. You suffer for a pad conscience: your wife is as honest a 'omans, as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Caius. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.

Ford. Well;—I promised you a dinner:—

Come, come, walk in the park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you, why I have done this.—Come, wife;—come, mistress Page; I pray you, pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but, trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll birding together; I have a fine hawk for the bush: Shall it be so?

Ford. Any thing.

Eva. If there is one, I shall make two in the company.

Caius. If there be one or two, I shall make a de turd.

Eva. In your teeth: for shame.

Ford. Pray you go, master Page.

Eva. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knave, mine host.

Caius. Dat is good; by gar, vit all my heart.

Eva. A lousy knave; to have his gibes and his mockeries.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Page's House.

Enter Fenton and Mistress Anne Page.

Fent. I see, I cannot get thy father's love;

Therefore no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

Anne. Alas! how then?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;

And that, my state being gull'd with my expense,

I seek to heal it only by his wealth:

Besides these, other bars he lays before me,—

My riots past, my wild societies;

And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible

I should love thee, but as a property.

Anne. May be, he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to Albeit, I will confess, thy father's wealth [come!]

Was the first motive that I wou'd thee, Anne:

Yet, wooing thee I found thee of more value

Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags;

And 'tis the very riches of thyself

That now I aim at.

Anne. Gentle master Fenton,

Yet seek my father's love; still seek it, sir;

If opportunity and humblest suit

Cannot attain it, why then.—Hark you hither.

[They converse apart.

Enter Shallow, Slender, and Mrs. Quickly.

Shal. Break their talk, mistress Quickly; my kinsman shall speak for himself.

Slender. I'll make a shaft or a bolt ou't: slid, 'tis but venturing.

Shal. Be not dismay'd.

Slender. No, she shall not dismay me: I care not for that,—but that I am afraid.

Quick. Hark ye; master Slender would speak a word with you.

Anne. I come to him. — This is my father's choice.

O, what a world of vile ill-favour'd faults

Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year!

[Aside.

Quick. And how does good master Fenton? Pray you, a word with you.

Shal. She's coming; to her, cox. O boy, thou hast a father!

Slender. I had a father, mistress Anne;—my uncle can tell you good jests of him:—Pray you, uncle, tell mistress Anne the jest, how my father stole two geese out of a pen, good uncle.

Shal. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you
SCENE V. MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Slen. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Slen. Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a 'squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jointure.

Anne. Good master Shallow, let him woo for himself.

Shal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, cow; I'll leave you.

Anne. Now, master Slender.

Slen. Now, good mistress Anne.

Anne. What is your will?

Slen. My will? 'od's heartlings, that's a pretty jest, indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.

Anne. I mean, master Slender, what would you with me?

Slen. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you: Your father, and my uncle, have made motions; if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his doe! They can tell you how things go, better than I can: You may ask your father; here he comes.

Page. Now, master Slender! —Love him, daughter Anne.

Why, how now! what does master Fenton here? You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house: I told you, sir, my daughter is disposed of.

Fent. Nay, master Page, be not impatient.

Mrs. Page. Good master Fenton, come not to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fent. Sir, will you hear me?

Page. No, good master Fenton. Come, master Shallow; come, son Slender; in:— Knowing my mind, you wrong me, master Fenton. [Exeunt Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Quick. Speak to mistress Page.

Fent. Good mistress Page, for that I love your daughter

In such a righteous fashion as I do,
Perforce, against all checks, rebukes, and manners,
I must advance the colours of my love,
And not retire: Let me have your good will.

Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to yond fool.

Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better husband.

Quick. That's my master, master doctor.

Anne. Alas, I had rather be set quick i' the And bow'dl to death with turnips. [earth,

Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourself: Good master Fenton,

I will not be your friend, nor enemy:
My daughter will I question how she loves you,
And as I find her, so am I affected;
Till then, farewell, sir:—She must needs go in;
Her father will be angry.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page and Anne.

Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress; farewell, Nan.

Quick. This is my doing now;—Nay, said I, will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician? Look on master Fenton:—this is my doing.

Fent. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to-night
Give my sweet Nan this ring: There's for thy pains. [Exit.

Quick. Now heaven send thee good fortune! A kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet, I would my master had mistress Anne; or I would master Slender had her; or, in sooth, I would master Fenton had her: I will do what I can for them all three; for so I have promised, and I'll be as good as my word; but speciously for master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses; What a beast am I to slack it!

SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, I say,—

Bard. Here, sir.

Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in't. [Exit Bardolph. Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal; and to be thrown into the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains tu'en out, and butter'd, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen i't the litter: and you may know by my size, that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking; if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should down. I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow: a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man; and what a thing should I have been, when I had been swelled! I should have been a mountain of mummy.

—Re-enter Bardolph, with the wine.

Bard. Here's mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames Slender; for my belly's as cold as if I had swallowed snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

Bard. Come in, woman.

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quick. By your leave; I cry you mercy: Give your worship good-morrow.

Fal. Take away these chalices: Go, brew me a pot of sack finely.

Bard. With eggs, sir?

Fal. Simple of itself; I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage.—[Exit Bardolph.—]How now?

Quick. Marry, sir, I come to your worship from mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford! I have had ford enough: I was thrown into the ford: I have my belly full of ford.

Quick. Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they mistook their erection.

Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.

Quick. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a birding; she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine; I must carry her word quickly: she'll make you amend, I warrant you.
Fal. Well, I will visit her: Tell her so; and bid her think what a man is: let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

Quick. I will tell her.

Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, say'st thou?

Quick. Eight and nine, sir.

Fal. Well, be gone: I will not miss her.

Quick. I shall be with you, sir. [Exit.

Fal. I marvel, I hear not of master Brook; he sent me word to stay within: I like his money well. O here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bless you, sir! Fal. Now, master Brook? you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford's wife.

Ford. That, indeed, sir John, is my business.

Fal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you; I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

Ford. And how sped you, sir?

Fal. Very ill-favouredly, master Brook.

Ford. How so, sir? Did she change her determination?

Fal. No, master Brook; but the peaking cornuto her husband, master Brook, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper, and forsooth, to search his house for his wife's love.

Ford. What, while you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?

Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one mistress Page; gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and, by her invention and Ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.

Ford. A buck-basket!

Fal. By the Lord, a buck-basket: rammed me in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, and greasy napkins; that, master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell, that ever offended nostril.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you shall hear, master Brook, what I have suffered to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knives, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchet-lane: they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knife their master in the door; who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket: I quaked for fear, lest the lunatic knife would have searched it; but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well: on went he for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, master Brook: I suffered the pangs of three several deaths: first, an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten bell-weather: next, to be compassed, like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head: and then, to be stopped in, like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that fretted in their own grease: think of that,— a man of my kidney,—think of that: that am as subject to heat, as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw; it was a miracle, to escape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled, glowing hot, in that surge, like a horse-shoe; think of that,—bissing hot,—think of that, master Brook.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit then is desperate; you'll undertake her no more.

Fal. Master Brook, I will be thrown into Etna, as I have been into Thanes, ere I will leave her thus. Her husband is this morning gone a birding; I have received from her another embassy of meeting: 'tis eight and nine is the hour, Master Brook.

Ford. 'Tis past eight already, sir.

Fal. Is it? I will then address me to my appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I speed; and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her: Adieu. You shall have her, master Brook; master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford. [Exit.

Ford. Hum! ha! is this a vision? is this a dream? do I sleep? Master Ford, awake; awake, master Ford; there's a hole made in your best coat, master Ford. This 'tis to be married! this 'tis to have linen, and buck-baskets!—Well, I will proclaim myself what I am: I will now take the lecher; he is at my house: he cannot 'scape me; 'tis impossible he should; he cannot creep into a halfpenny purse, nor into a pepper-box; but, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not, shall not make me tame; if I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, sir Hugh? no school to-day?

Ev. No; master Slender is let the boys leave to play.

Quick. Blessing of his heart! Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says, my son profits nothing in the world at his book; I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence.

Ev. Come hither, William; hold up your head; come.

Mrs. Page. Come on, sirrah: hold up your head; answer your master, be not afraid.
SCENE II.

MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Mrs. Page. William, how many numbers is in nouns?
Will. Two.
Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more; because they say, od's nouns.
Mrs. Page. Peace your tattlings. What is fair, William?
Will. Pulcher.
Quick. Polecats! there are fairer things than polecats, sark.
Mrs. Page. You are a very simplicity, 'oman; I pray you peace. What is lapsis, William?
Will. A stone.
Mrs. Page. And what is a stone, William?
Will. A pebble.
Mrs. Page. No, it is lapsis: I pray you remember in your pain.
Will. Lapis.
Mrs. Page. That is good, William. What is he, William, that does lend articles?
Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun; and be thus declined, Singulariter, nominativo, hie, hee, hie.
Mrs. Page. nominativo, hie, lag, lag:—pray you, marks: genitivo, hujus: Well, what is your accusative case?
Will. Accusativo, hinc.
Mrs. Page. I pray you have your remembrance, child; Accusativo, hing, hang, hog.
Quick. Hang hog is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.
Mrs. Page. Leave your prabbles, 'oman. What is the focative case, William?
Will. O—eocativo, O.
Mrs. Page. Remember, William, focative is, caret.
Quick. And that's a good root.
Mrs. Page. 'Oman, forbear.
Mrs. Page. Peace.
Mrs. Page. What is your genitive case plural, William?
Will. Genitivo case?
Mrs. Page. Nv.
Will. Genitivo—horum, horum, horum.
Quick. 'Vengeance of Jenny's case! fie on her!
—never name her, child, if she be a whore.
Mrs. Page. For shame, 'oman.
Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words: he teaches him to hick and to hack, which they'll do fast enough of themselves, and to call horum: fie upon you!
Mrs. Page. 'Oman, art thou lunatics? hast thou no understandings for thy cases, and the numbers of the genders? Thou art as foolish christian creatures as I would desires.
Mrs. Page. Pr'ythee, hold thy peace.
Mrs. Page. Show me now, William, some declensions of your pronouns.
Will. Forsooth, I have forgot.
Mrs. Page. It is ki, ka, ked; if you forget your kies, your kes, and your cods, you must be preeches. Go your ways, and play, go.
Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was.
Mrs. Page. He is a good sprag memory. Farewell, mistress Page.
Mrs. Page. Adieu, good sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh.] Get you home, boy.—Come, we stay too long.
[Exeunt.]
Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, sir John. Unless you go out disguised,—
Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?
Mrs. Page. Alas the day, I know not. There is no woman’s gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape.

Ford. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity, rather than a mischief.
Mrs. Ford. My maid’s aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.
Mrs. Page. On my word, it will serve him; she’s as big as he is: and there’s her thum’d hat, and her muffle, too: Run up, sir John.
Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet sir John: mistress Page and I, will look some linen for your head.
Mrs. Page. Quick, quick; we’ll come dress you straight: put on the gown the while.

Mrs. Ford. I would, my husband would meet him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford; he swears, she’s a witch, forbade her my house, and hath threatened to beat her.
Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband’s cudgel; and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards!
Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming?
Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness, is he; and he talks of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We’ll try that; for I’ll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he’ll be here presently: let’s go dress him like the witch of Brentford.
Mrs. Ford. I’ll first direct my men, what they shall do with the basket. Go up, I’ll bring linen for him straight.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest varlet! we cannot misuse him enough. We’ll leave a proof, by that which we will do, Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We do not act, that often jest and laugh;
’Tis old but true, Still suive eat all the draf.

Mrs. Ford. Go, sir, take the basket on your shoulders: your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him: quickly, despatch.

Mrs. Ford. Come, come, take it up.
2 Serv. Pray heaven, it be not full of the knight again.
3 Serv. I hope not; I had as lief bear so much lead.

Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Caust, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again?—Set down the basket, villain:—Somebody call my wife:—You, youth in a basket, come out here!—O, you panderly rascals! there’s a knot, a gin, a pack, a conspiracy against me: Now shall the devil be shamed. What! wife, I say! come, come forth; behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this passes! Master Ford, you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinioned.
Eva. Why, this is lunatics! this is mad as a mad dog!
Shal. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed.

Enter Mrs. Ford.

Ford. So say I too, sir.—Come hither, mistress Ford; mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband!—I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness, you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.
Ford. Well said, brazen-face; hold it out. Come forth, sirrah.

Page. This passes!

Mrs. Ford. Are you not ashamed? let the clothes alone.
Ford. I shall find you anon.
Eva. ’Tis unreasonable! Will you take up your wife’s clothes? Come away.
Ford. Empty the basket, I say.
Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why,—

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket: Why may not he be there again? In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealousy is reasonable: Pluck me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a flea’s death.

Page. Here’s no man.
Shal. By my fidelity, this is not well, master Ford; this wrongs you.

Ford. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealousies.

Ford. Well, he’s not here I seek for.
Page. No, nor no where else, but in your brain.
Ford. Help to search my house this one time: if I find not what I seek, show no colour for my extremity, let me for ever be your table sport; let them say of me, As jealous as Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife’s leman. Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

Mrs. Ford. What, hoa, mistress Page! come you, and the old woman down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! What old woman’s that?
Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid’s aunt of Brentford.

Ford. A witch, a queen, an old cozening queen! Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what’s brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling. She works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and such daubery as this is; beyond our element: we know nothing.——Come down, you witch, you bag you; come down, I say.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband;—good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

Enter Falstaff in women’s clothes, led by Mrs. Page.
Mrs. Page. Come, mother Prat, come, give me your hand.

Ford. I’ll prat her:——Out of my door, you witch, [beats him] you rag, you baggage, you polecat, you ronyon! out! out! I’ll conjure you, I’ll fortune-tell you.

Page. Are you not ashamed? I think, you have killed the poor woman.
Mrs. Ford. Nay, he will do it:—’Tis a goodly credit for you.

Ford. Hang her, witch!

Eva. By yea, and no, I think, the ‘oman is a SCENE IV.

MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Yet once again, to make us public sport,
Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow,
Where we may take him, and disgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way than that they spoke of.

Page. How! to send him word they'll meet him in the park at midnight; fie, fie; he'll never come.

Eva. You say, he has been thrown into the rivers;
and has been grievously peaten, as an old 'oman;
methinks, there should be terrors in him, that he should not come; methinks, his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too. — [he comes,
Mrs. Ford. Deceive but how you'll use him when
And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne
the hunter,

Sometime a keeper here in Windsor forest,
Doth all the winter time, at still midnight,
Walk round about an oak, with great rag'd horns;
And there he blasts the tree, and takes the cattle;
And makes milk-kine yield blood, and shakes a
In a most hideous and dreadful manner:
[chain
You have heard of such a spirit; and well you know,
The superstitious idle-headed old
Received, and did deliver to our age,
This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.
[fear
Page. Why, yet there want not many, that do
In deep of night to walk by this Herne's oak:
But what of this?

Mrs. Ford. Marry, this is our device;
That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us,
Disguised, like Herne, with huge horns on his head.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come,
And in this shape: When you have brought him
this other,
What shall be done with him? what is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewise have we thought upon, and thus:

Nan Page my daughter, and my little son,
And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress
Like archins, ouphes, and fairies, green and white,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands; upon a sudden,
As Falstaff, she, and I, are newly met,
Let them from forth a saw-pit rush at once
With some diffused song; upon their sight,
We two in great amazedness will fly:
Then let them all encircle him about,
And fairy-like, to pinch the unclean knight;
And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread,
In shape profane.

Mrs. Ford. And ill he tell the truth,
Let the supposed fairies pinch him sound,
And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known,
We'll all present ourselves; dis-horn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must
Be practised well to this, or they'll ne'er do't;
Eva. I will teach the children their behaviours;
and I will be like a jack an-apes also, to burn
the knight with my taber.

Ford. That will be excellent. I'll go buy them vizards.

Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. That silk will I go buy;—and in that time Shall master Slender steal my Nan away. [Aside. And marry her at Eton.—Go, send to Falstaff straight.

Ford. Nay, I'll to him again, in name of Brook; He'll tell me all his purpose: Sure, he'll come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that: Go, get us pro- And tricking for our faires. [perties, Eva. Let us about it: It is admirable pleasures, and very honest knaverys.

[Exeunt Page, Ford, and Eva.

Mrs. Page. Go, mistress Ford, Send quickly to Sir John to know his mind.

[Exit Mrs. Ford.

I'll to the doctor; he hath my good will, And none but he, to marry with Nan Page. That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot; And he my husband best of all affects: The doctor is well money'd, and his friends Potent at court; he, none but he, shall have her, Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? what, thick-skin? speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, snap.

Sim. Marry, sir, I come to speak with Sir John Falstaff from master Slender.

Host. There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed, and truckle-bed; 'tis painted about with the story of the Prodigal, fresh and new; Go, knock and call; he'll speak like an Anthropophaginian unto thee: Knock, I say.

Sim. There's an old woman, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber; I'll be so bold as say, sir, till she come down; I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman! the knight may be robbed: I'll call. —Bully knight! Bully Sir John! speak from thy lungs military: Art thou there? it is thine host, thine Ephesian, calls.

Fal. [above.] How now, mine host?

Host. Here's a Bohemian-Tartar tarries the coming down of thy fat woman; Let her descend, bully, let her descend; my chambers are honourable: Fye! privacy? fye!

[Enter Falstaff.

Fal. There was, mine host, an old fat woman, even now with me; but she's gone.

Sim. Pray you, sir, was't not the wise woman of Brentford?

Fal. Ay, marry, was it, muscle-shell; What would you with her?

Sim. My master, sir, my master Slender, sent to her, seeing her go thorough the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nym, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain, or no.

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what says she, I pray, sir?

Fal. Marry, she says, that the very same man, that beguiled master Slender of his chain, cozened him of it.

Sim. I would, I could have spoken with the woman herself; I had other things to have spoken with her too, from him.

Fal. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, come; quick.

Sim. I may not conceal them, sir.

Fal. Conceal them, or thou diest.

Sim. Why, sir, they were nothing but about mistresse Anne Page; to know if it were my master's fortune to have her, or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What, sir?

Fal. To have her,—or no: Go; say, the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be so bold to say so, sir?

Fal. Ay, sir Tike; who more bold?

Sim. I thank your worship: I shall make my master glad with these tidings.

[Exit Simplex.

Host. Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly, sir John: Was there a wise woman with thee?

Fal. Ay, that there was, mine host; one that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life: and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

[Enter Barolow.

Bar. Out, alas, sir! cozenage! mere cozenage! Host. Where be my horses? speak well of them, varletto.

Bar. Run away with the cozeners: for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off, from behind one of them, in a slough of mire; and set spurs, and away, all three German devils, three Doctor Faustuses.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain: do not say, they be fled; Germans are honest men.

[Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Eva. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Eva. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town, tells me, there is three cousin Germans, that has cozened all the hosts of Readings, of Maidenhead, of Colebrook, of horses and money. I tell you for good-will, look you: you are wise, and full of gibes and slutting-stops; and 'tis not convenient you should be cozened: Fare you well.

[Exit.

[Enter Dr. Cajus.

Cajus. Vere is mine Host de Jarriere?

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity, and doubtful dilemma.

Cajus. I cannot tell vat is dat: But it is tell-a me, dat you make grand preparation for a duke de Jarmaney: by my trot, dere is no duke, dat de court is know to come; I tell you for good vill: adieu.

[Exit.

Host. Hue and ery, villain, go:—assist me, knight; I am undone: fly, run, hue and ery, villain! I am undone! [Exit Host and Barolow.

Fal. I would, all the world might be cozened; for I have been cozened, and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court, how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been washed and cudgelled, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor fisher- men's boots with me; I warrant, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as crest-fallen as a dried pear. I never prospered since I for- swore myself at primo. Well, if my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would re- pent.—

[Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now! whence come you?

Quick. From the two parties, forsooth.

Fal. The devil take one party, and his dam the other, and so they shall be both bestowed! I have suffered more for their sakes, more, than the villainous inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear.
Quick. And have not they suffered? Yes, I warrant; specially one of them; mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.
Val. What tell'st thou me of black and blue?
I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, deliver'd me, the knave constable had set me i' the stocks, i' the common stocks, for a witch.
Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber: you shall hear how things go; and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts, what ado here is to bring you together! Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so crossed.
Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly.

Fal. Pr'ythee, no more Prattling: go.—I'll hold: This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Away, go; they say, there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death.—Away.
Quick. I'll provide you a chain: and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.
Fal. Away, I say; time wears: hold up your head, and minee. [Exit Mrs. Quickly.

Enter Ford.

How now, master Brook? Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak, and you shall see wonders.
Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?
Fal. I went to her, master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man; but I came from her, master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knife, Ford her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever govern'd frenzy. I will tell you. He beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam; because I know also, life is a shuttle. I am in haste; go along with me; I'll tell you all, master Brook. Since I pluck'd geese, play'd truant, and whipp'd top, I knew not what it was to be beaten, till lately. Follow me: I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom tonight I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand. Follow: Strange things in hand, master Brook! follow. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Windsor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come, come; we'll couch i' the castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies.—Remember, son Slender, my daughter.
Slender. Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with her, and we have a say-word, how to know one another
I come to her in white, and cry, _mum_; she cries _budget_; and by that we know one another.

_Shall_. That's good too: but what needs either _your mum_ or _her budget_? the white will decipher her well enough.—It hath struck ten o'clock.

_Page_. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven, prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. _The Street in Windsor._

_Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Dr. Caius._

_Mrs. Page_. Master Doctor, my daughter is in green: when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the dammery, and despatch it quickly: Go before into the park; we two must go together.

_Caius_. I know vat I have to do; Adieu.

_Mrs. Page_. Fare you well, sir. [Exeunt Caius.

My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter: but 'tis no matter; better a little chiding, than a great deal of heart-break.

_Mrs. Ford_. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies? and the Welch devil, Hugh?

_Mrs. Page_. They are all couch'd in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which, at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

_Mrs. Ford_. That cannot choose but amaze him.

_Mrs. Page_. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

_Mrs. Ford_. We'll betray him finely.

_Mrs. Page_. Against such lewdsters, and Their Those that betray them do no treachery. [Rechery, _Mrs. Ford_. The hour draws on; To the oak, to the oak! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. _Windsor Park._

_Enter Sir Hugh Evans, and Fairies._

_Eva_. Trib, trib, fairies; come: and remember your parts: be bold, I pray you; follow me into the pit; and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you; Come, come, trib, trib. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. _Another part of the Park._

_Enter Falstaff disguised, with a buck's head on._

_Fal_. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on: Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me:—Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns.—O powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man; in some other, a man a beast. You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda:—O, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goat!—A fault done first in the form of a beast;—_O Jove_, a beastly fault! and then another fault in the sequence of a foul! think en't, _Jove_; a foul fault.—When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, i' the forest: Send me a cool rut-time, _Jove_, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? Who comes here? my doe?

_Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page._

_Mrs. Ford_. Sir John? art thou there, my deer? my male deer?

_Fal_. My doe with the black scut?—Let the sky rain potatoes: let it thunder to the tune of Green Sleeves; hail kissing-comfits, and snow eringoes: let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter here. [Embracing her.

_Mrs. Ford_. Mistress Page is come with me, sweetheart.

_Fal_. Divide me like a bribe-buck, each a haunch: I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the fellow of this walk, and my horns I bequeath your husbands. Am I a woodman? ha! Speak I like Herne the hunter?—Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome! [Noise within.

_Mrs. Page_. Alas! what noise?

_Mrs. Ford_. Heaven forgive our sins!

_Fal_. What should this be?

_Mrs. Ford_. _Away, away._ [They run off.

_Fal_. I think, the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that is in me should set hell on fire; he would never else cross me thus.

_Enter Sir Hugh Evans, like a satyr; Mrs. Quickly, and Pistol. Ann Page, as the Fairy Queen, attended by her brother and others, dressed like fairies, with waxen tapes on their heads._

_Quick_. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white, You moon-shine revellers, and shades of night, You orphan-heirs of fixed destiny, Attend your office, and your quality.

_Pistol_. Elves, list your names; silence, you airy toys.

_Criet_. to Windsor chimney-shafts thou leas: Where fires thou find'st unraked, and heart's unswept, There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry: Our radiant queen hates sluts and sluttary.

_Fal_. They are fairies; he, that speaks to them, shall die:

_I'll wink and cough: no man their works must eye._

_Eva_. Where's _Pedro_?—Go you, and where you find a maid

_That, ere she sleep, has thrice her prayers said, Raise up the organs of her fantasy, Sleep she as sound as careless infancy; But those as sleep, and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, Quick. About, about;_ [And shins. Search Windsor-castle, elves, within and out: Strew good luck, ophues, on every sacred room; That it may stand till the perpetual doom, In state as wholesome, as in state 'tis fit; Worthy the owner, and the owner it. The several chairs of order look you scour With juice of balm, and every precious flower: Each fair instalment, coat, and several crest, With loyal blazon, evermore be best! And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing, Like to the Garter's compass, in a ring: The expression that it bears, green let it be, More fertile-fresh than all the field to see; And, _Inyos set qui mai y penes, write_, In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white: Like sapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery, Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knees: _Fairies use flowers for their charactery._

Away; disperse: But, till 'tis one o'clock, Our dance of custom, round about the oak Of Herne the hunter, let us not forget.
Eva. Pray you, lock hand in hand; yourselves in order set: And twenty glow-worms shall our lanterns be, To guide our measure round about the tree.

But, stay: I smell a man of middle earth.

Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welch fairy! lest he transform me to a piece of cheese!

Pist. Vile worm, thou wast o’erlook’d even in thy birth.

Quick. With trial-fire touch me his finger-end: If he be chaste, the flame will back descend, And turn him to no pain; but if he start, It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Pist. A trial, come.

Eva. Come, will this wood take fire? [They burn him with their taper.

Fal. Oh, oh, oh! Quick. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire! About him, faires; sing a scornful rhyme; And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

Eva. It is right; indeed he is full of lecheries and iniquity.

SONG

Eye on sinful fantasy! Eye on lust and luxury! Lust is but a bloody fire, Kindled with unchaste desire, Fed in heart; whose flames aspire, As thoughts do blow them, higher and higher. Pinch him, faires, mutually; Pinch him for his villany; Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about, Till candles, and star-light, and moon-shine be out.

During this song, the faires pinch Falstaff. Doctor Causr comes one way, and steals away a fairy in green; SLENDER another way, and takes off a fairy in white; and Fenton comes, and steals away Mrs. Anna Page. A noise of hunting is made within. All the faires run away. Falstaff pulls off his buck’s head, and rides.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, and Mrs. Ford. They lay hold on him.

Page. Nay, do not fly; I think, we have watch’d you now:

Will none but Herne the hunter serve your turn? Mrs. Page. I pray you, come; hold up the jest no higher.

Now, good sir John, how like you Windsor wives? See you these, husband? do not these fair yokes Become the forest better than the town? Ford. Now, sir, who’s a cuckold now?—Master Brook, Falstaff’s a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, master Brook: And, master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford’s but his buck-basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money; which must be paid to master Brook; his horses are arrested for it, master Brook.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my deer.

Fal. I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Fal. And these are not faires? I was three or four times in the thought, they were not faires: and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my spirit, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were faires. See now, how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent, when ’tis upon ill employment.

Eva. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and faires will not piny you.

Ford. Well said, Fairy Hugh.

Eva. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. Have I laid my brain in the sun, and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross o’reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welch goat too? Shall I have a coxcomb of prize? ’Tis time I were chocked with a piece of toasted cheese.

Eva. Seese is not good to give putton; your pelly is all putton.

Fal. Seese and putton! have I lived to stand at the tanta of one that makes fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust and late-walking, through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hodge-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puffed man?

Page. Old, cold, withered, and of intolerable entrails?

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Eva. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and sack, and wine, and metheglins, and to drinkings, and swearings, and starings, prubbles, and prolusses?

Fal. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welch flannel: ignorance itself is a plummet o’er me; use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we’ll bring you to Windsor, to one master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pandar: over and above that you have suffered, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, husband, let that go to make another:—Forgive that sum, and so we’ll all be friends.

Ford. Well, here’s my hand; all’s forgiven at last.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee: Tell her, master Slenor hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Caus’ wife. [Aside Enter Slenor.

Slen. Who—ho! ho! father Page!

Page. Son! how now? how now, son? have you despatched?

Slen. Despatched!—I’ll make the best in Glos- cestershire know on’t; would I were hanged, la, else.

Page. Of what, son?

Slen. I came yonder at Eton to marry mistress Anne Page, and she’s a great lubberly boy; If it had not been i’ the church, I would have swung him, or he should have swung me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir, and 'tis a post-master's boy.

Page. Upon my life then you took the wrong.

Slen. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl: If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you, how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slen. I went to her in white, and cried mum, and she cried budget, as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not Anne, but a post-master's boy.

Eva. Jeshu! master Slender, cannot you see but marry boys?

Page. Oh, I am vexed at heart: What shall I do?

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deanery, and there married.

Enter Caius.

Caius. Vere is mistress Page? By gar, I am cozened; I ha' married un garçon, a boy; un paizan, by gar, a boy; it is not Anne Page: by gar, I am cozened.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in green?

Caius. Ay, by gar, 'n' tis a boy: by gar, I'll raise all Windsor. [Exit Caius.

Ford. This is strange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me; Here comes master Fenton.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

How now, master Fenton?

Anne. Pardon, good father! good my mother, pardon!

Page. Now, mistress, how chance you went not with master Slender?

Mrs. Page. Why went you not with master doctor, maid?

Fent. You do amaze her: Hear the truth of it.

Page. Upon my life then you took the wrong.

Ford. Stand not amazed: here is no remedy:

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy!

Ford. This is strange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me; Here comes master Fenton.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

Ford. Let it be so:—Sir John,

Page. Now, mistress, how chance you went not with master Slender?

Mrs. Page. Why went you not with master doctor, maid?

Fent. You do amaze her: Hear the truth of it.

Page. Upon my life then you took the wrong.

Ford. Stand not amazed: here is no remedy:

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy!

Ford. This is strange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me; Here comes master Fenton.
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

OBERON, Duke of Illyria.
SEBASTIAN, a young Gentleman, brother to VIOLA.
ANTONIO, a Sea Captain, friend to SEBASTIAN.
A Sea Captain, friend to VIOLA.
VALENTINE, } Servants to OLIVIA
CURIO, } OLIVIA, a rich Countess.
Sir Toby Belch, Uncle of OLIVIA.
Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.
MALPOLIO, Steward to OLIVIA.

SCENE,—A City in Illyria; and the Sea-coast near it.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Curio, Lords; Musicians attending.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on,
Give me excess of it; that surfeiting
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again;—it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet south,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing, and giving odour.—Enough; no more;
'Tis not so sweet now, as it was before.
O spirit of love, how quick and fresh art thou!
That, notwithstanding thy capacity
Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch soever,
But falls into abatement and low price,
Even in a minute! so full of shapes is fancy,
That it alone is high-fantastical.

Cur. What will you go hunt, my lord?

Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have:
O, why mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought, she purged the air of pestilence;
That instant was I turn'd into a hart;
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me.—How now? what news
from her?

Enter VALENTINE.

Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do return this answer:
The element itself, till seven years' heat,
Shall not behold her face at ample view;
But, like a cloisteress, she will velled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this, to season
A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh,
And lasting, in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O, she that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich, golden shaft,
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else

That live in her! when liver, brain, and heart,
These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd,
(He sweet perfections,) with one self king!—
Away before me to sweet beds of flowers;
Love-thoughts lie rich, when canopied with bowers.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Sea-coast.

Enter VIOLA, Captain, and Sailors.

Vio. What country, friends, is this?

Cap. Illyria, lady.

Vio. And what should I do in Illyria?

My brother he is in Elysium. [sailors? Perchance, he is not drown'd:—What think you, Cap. It is perchance, that you yourself were saved,

Vio. O my poor brother! and so, perchance, may he be.

Cap. True, madam; and, to comfort you with Assure yourself, after our ship did split, [chance,
When you, and that poor number saved with you,
Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother,
Most provident in peril, bind himself
(Courage and hope both teaching him the practice)
To a strong mast, that lived upon the sea;
Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves,
So long as I could see.

Vio. For saying so, there's gold:
Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope,
Whereeto thy speech serves for authority,
The like of him. Know'st thou this country?

Cap. Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born,
Not three hours' travel from this very place.

Vio. Who governs here?

Cap. A noble duke, in nature
As in his name.

Vio. What is his name?

Cap. Orsino.

Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him
He was a bachelor then.
Cap. And so is now,
Or was so very late: for but a month
Ago I went from hence; and then 'twas fresh
In murmur, (as, you know, what great ones do,
The less will prattle of,) that he did seek
The love of fair Olivia.
Vio. What's she?
Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
That died some twelvemonth since; then leaving
In the protection of his son, her brother, [her
Who shortly also died: for whose dear love,
They say, she hath abjured the company
And sight of men.
Vio. Of that I served that lady!
And might not be delivered to the world,
Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
What my estate is.
Cap. That were hard to compass: Because she will admit no kind of suit,
No, not the duke's.
Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
I will believe, thou hast a mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward character.
I pray thee, and I'll pay thee bounteously,
Conceal me what I am; and be my aid
For such disguise as, haply, shall become
The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke;
Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him,
It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing,
And speak to him in many sorts of music,
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap, to time I will commit;
Only shape thou thy silence to my wit.
Cap. Be you his eunuch, and your name I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see!
Vio. I thank thee: Lead me on. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in OLIVIA'S House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, and MARIA.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take
The death of her brother thus? I am sure, care's an enemy to life.
Mar. By my troth, sir Toby, you must come in earlier o' nights; your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her except before excepted.
Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.

Sir To. Confine? I'll confine myself no finer than I am: these clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too; an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Mar. That qualifying and drinking will undo you:
I heard my lady talk of it yesterday; and of a foolish knight, that you brought in one night here, to be her wooer.

Sir To. Who? Sir Andrew Ague-check?
Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.
Mar. What's that to the purpose?

Sir To. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.
Mar. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats: he's a very fool, and a prodigal.

Sir To. Eye, that you'll say so! he plays o' the viol-de-gamb to, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and latl. all tll. good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath, indeed,—almost natural for:
besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller:
and, but that he hates the gift of a coward to alay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent, he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are scoundrels, and substractors, that say so of him. Who are they?
Mar. They that add moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece; I'll drink to her, as long as there is a passage in my throat, and drink in Illyria: He's a coward, and a cosyrill, that will not drink to my niece, till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top. What wench? Castilian-vulgo! for here comes Sir Anrew Ague-face.

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir And. Sir Toby Belch! how now, Sir Toby Belch?

Sir To. Sweet sir Andrew?

Sir And. Bless you, fair shrew.

Mar. And you too, sir.

Sir To. Accost, sir Andrew, accost.

Sir And. What's that?

Sir To. My niece's chamber-maid.

Sir And. Good mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Mar. My name is Mary, sir.

Sir And. Good mistress Mary Accost.—

Sir To. You mistake, knight; accost, is, from her, board her, woo her, assail her.

Sir And. By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of accost?

Mar. Fare you well, gentlemen.

Sir To. An thou let part so, sir Andrew, 'would thou might'st never draw sword again.

Sir And. An you part so, mistress, I would I might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?

Mar. Sir, I have not you by the hand.

Sir And. Marry, but you shall have; and here's my hand.

Mar. Now, sir, thought is free: I pray you, bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink.

Sir And. Wherefore, sweetheart? what's your metaphor?

Mar. It's dry, sir.

Sir And. Why, I think so; I am not such an ass, but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?

Mar. A dry jest, sir.

Sir And. Have you full of them?

Mar. Ay, sir; I have them at my fingers' ends:
marry, now I let go your hand, I am barren.

[Exit MARIA.

Sir To. O knight, thou lack'st a cup of canary:
When did I see thee so put down?

Sir And. Never in your life, I think; unless you see canary put me down: Methinks sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian, or an ordinary man has: but I am a great eater of beef, and, I believe, that does harm to my wit.

Sir To. No question.

Sir And. An I thought that, I'd forswear it.
I'll ride home to-morrow, sir Toby.

Sir To. Pourquoy, my dear knight?
Sir And. What is pourquoi? do or not do? I would I had bestowed that time in the tongues, that I have in fencing, dancing, and bear-baiting: O, had I but followed the arts!

Sir To. Then hadst thou an excellent head of hair.

Sir And. Why, would that have mended my hair?

Sir To. Past question; for thou seest, it will not curl by nature.

Sir And. But it becomes me well enough, doesn't it?

Sir To. Excellent; it hangs like flax on a distaff; and I hope to see a housewife take thee between her legs, and spin it off.

Sir And. 'Faith, I'll home to-morrow, Sir Toby: your niece will not be seen; or, if she be, it's four to one she'll none of me: the count himself, here hard by, wooes her.

Sir To. She'll none o' the count; she'll not match above her degree, neither in estate, years, nor wit; I have heard her swear it. Tut, there's life in't, man.

Sir And. I'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow o' the strangest mind i' the world; I delight in masques and revels sometimes altogether.

Sir To. Art thou good at these kick-shaws, knight?

Sir And. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters; and yet I will not compare with an old man.

Sir To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?

Sir And. 'Faith, I can cut a caper.

Sir To. And I can cut the mutton to't.

Sir And. And, I think, I have the back-trick, simply as strong as any man in Illyria.

Sir To. Wherefore are these things hid? wherefore have these gifts a curtain before them? are they like to take dust, like mistress Mall's picture? why dost thou not go to church in a galliard, and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jig; I would not so much as make water, but in a single pace. What dost thou mean? is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galliard.

Sir And. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a flame-coloured stock. Shall we set about some revels?

Sir To. What shall we do else? were we not born under Taurus?

Sir And. Taurus? that's sides and heart.

Sir To. No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee caper: ha! higher: ha, ha!—excellent! [Exit.]

---

Val. If the duke continue these favours towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced: he hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Vio. You either fear his humour, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love: Is he inconstant, sir, in his favours?

Val. No, believe me. [Exit.

---

Enter Duke, Cuno, and Attendants.

Vio. I thank you. Here comes the count.

Duke. Who saw Cesario, ho?

Vio. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Duke. Stand you awhile aloof.—Cesario, Thou know'st no less but all; I have unclasped To thee the book even of my secret soul: Therefore, good youth, address thy gaze unto her; Be not denied access, stand at her doors, And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow, Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord, If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Duke. Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds, Rather than make unprofited return.

Vio. Say, I do speak with her, my lord. What then?

Duke. O, then unfold the passion of my love, Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith: It shall become thee well to act my woes; She will attend it better in thy youth, Than in a nuncio of more grave aspect.

Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Duke. Dear lad, believe it
For they shall yet belie thy happy years, That say, thou art a man: Diana's lip Is not more smooth, and rubious; thy small pipe Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound, And all is semblative a woman's part. I know, thy constellations is right apt For this affair:—Some four, or five, attend him: All, if you will; for I myself am best, When least in company:—Prosper well in this, And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord, To call his fortunes thine.

Vio. I'll do my best, To woo your lady: yet, [Aside.] a barful strife! Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife.

SCENE V.—A Room in OLIVIA'S House.

Enter MARIA and Clown.

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips, so wide as a bristle may enter, in way of thy excuse: my lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clo. Let her hang me: lie, that is well hanged in this world, needs to fear no colours.

Mar. Make that good.

Clo. He shall see none to fear.

Mar. A good Lenten answer: I can tell thee where that saying was born, of, I fear no colours. Clo. Where, good mistress Mary?

Mar. In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

Clo. Well, God give them wisdom, that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.

Mar. Yet you will be hanged, for being so long absent: or, to be turned away: is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and, for turning away, let summer bear it out.

Mar. You are resolute then?

Clo. Not so neither; but I am resolved on two points.

Mar. That, if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fall.
Clo. Apt, in good faith; very apt! Well, go thy way; if sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more o'that; here comes my lady: make your excuse wisely, you were best. [Exit.

Enter OLIVIA and MALVOLIO.

Clo. Wit, and 'tbe thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and I, that am sure I lack thee, may pass for a wise man: For what says Quinapalus? Better a witty fool, than a foolish wit.—God bless thee, lady!

Oli. Take the fool away.

Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Oli. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clo. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; bid the dishonest man mend himself; if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the butcher mend him: Any thing that's mended, is but patched; virtue, that transgresses, is but patched with sin; and sin that amends, is but patched with virtue: If that this simple syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calamity, so beauty's a flower:—the lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

Oli. Sir, I bade them take away you.

Clo. Misprision in the highest degree!—Lady, Cucullus non facit monachum; that's as much as to say, I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexterously, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna; Good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness, I'll bide your proof.

Clo. Good madonna, why mourn'st thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother's death.

Clo. I think, his soul is in hell, madonna.

Oli. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool you, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven.—Take away the fool, gentlemen.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes; and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him: Infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

Clo. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox; but he will not pass his word for two-pence that you are no fool.

Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio?

Mal. I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascal; I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool, that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already; unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagged. I protest, I take these wise men, that crow so at these set kind of fools, no better than the fools' zanies.

Oli. O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for bird-bolts, that you deem cannon-bullets: There is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury endue thee with causing, for thou speakest well of fools!

Re-enter MARIA.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gentleman, much desires to speak with you.

Oli. From the count Orsino, is it?

Mar. I know not, madam; 'tis a fair young man, and well attended.

Oli. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Oli. Fetch him off, I pray you; he speaks nothing but madman: Fye on him! [Exit MARIA.

Clo. Go you, Malvolio: if it be a suit from the count, I am sick, or not at home; what you will, to dismiss it. [Exit MALVOLIO.] Now you see, sir, how your fooling grows old, and people dislike it.

Clo. Thou hast spoke for us, madonna, as if thy eldest son should be a fool: whose skull Jove cram with brains, for here he comes, one of thy kin, has a most weak pie mater.

Enter Sir TONY BELCH.

Oli. By mine honour, half drunk.—What is he at the gate, cousin?

Sir To. A gentleman.

Oli. A gentleman? What gentleman?

Sir To. 'Tis a gentleman here.—A plague o'these pickle-herrings!—How now, sot?

Clo. Good Sir Toby,

Oli. Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this lethargy?

Sir To. Lecchery! I defy lechery: There's one at the gate.

Oli. Aye, marry; what is he?

Sir To. Let him be the devil, an he will, I care not: give me faith, say I. Well, it's all one. [Exit.

Oli. What's a drunken man like, fool?

Clo. Like a drowned man, a fool, and a madman: one draught above heat makes him a fool; the second made him; and a third drowns him.

Oli. Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him sit o' my coz; for he's in the third degree of drink, he's drown'd: go, look after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna; and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit CLOWN.

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. Madam, yond young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick; he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you; I told him you were asleep; he seems to have a fore-knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? he's fortified against any denial.

Oli. Tell him, he shall not speak with me.

Mal. He has been told so; and he says, he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post, and be the supporter of a bench, but he'll speak with you.

Oli. What kind of man is he?

Mal. Why, of mankind.

Oli. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner; he'll speak with you, will you, or no,
Oli. Of what personage, and years, is he?
Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a peascod, or a codling when 'tis almost an apple: 'tis with him e'en standing water, between boy and man. He is very well-favoured, and he speaks very shrewishly; one would think, his mother's milk were scarce out of him.

Oli. Let him approach: Call in my gentlewoman.

Mal. Gentlewoman, my lady calls. [Exit.

Re-enter Maria.

Oli. Give me my veil: come, throw it o'er my head, for we'll once more hear Orsino's embassy. [Face; Enter Viola.

Vio. The honourable lady of the house, which is she?
Oli. Speak to me, I shall answer for her: Your will.
Vio. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty,—I pray you, tell me, if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her: I would be loath to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penn'd, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn; I am very comptible, even to the least sinister usage.

Oli. Whence came you, sir?
Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance, if you be the lady of the house, that I may proceed in my speech.

Oli. Are you a comedian?
Vio. No, my profound heart: and yet, by the very fangs of malice, I swear I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

Oli. If I do not usurp myself, I am.
Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself; for what is yours to bestow, is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission: I will on with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

Oli. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praise.
Vio. Alas, I took great pains to study it, and 'tis poetical.

Oli. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard you were saucy at my gates; and allowed your approach, rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief: 'tis not that time of moon with me, to make one in so skipping a dialogue. [Exit.

Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your anchor.
Vio. No, good swabber; I am to haul here a little longer.—Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady.

Oli. Tell me your mind.
Vio. I am a messenger.

Oli. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your office.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overtune of war, no taxation of homage; I hold the olive in my hand: my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oli. Yet you began rudely. What are you? what would you?

Vio. The rudeness that hath appeared in me, have I learned from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maidenhead: to your ears, divinity; to any other's, profanation.

Oli. Give us the place alone: we will hear this divinity. [Exit Maria.] Now, sir, what is your text?

Vio. Most sweet lady,—

Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text?
Vio. In Orsino's bosom.

Oli. In his bosom? In what chapter of his bosom?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

Oli. O, I have read it; it is heresy. Have you no more to say?

Vio. Good madam, let me see your face.

Oli. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? you are now out of your text: but we will draw the curtain, and shew you the picture. Look you, sir, such a one as I was this present: Is't not well done? [Unveiling.

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Oli. 'Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather. [White.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blunt, whose red and Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on: Lady, you are the cruel'st she alive, If you will lead these graces to the grave, And leave the world no copy.

Oli. O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted; I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: It shall be inventoried; and every particle and uten- sil labelled to my will: as, item, two lips indifferent red; item, two grey eyes, with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Vio. I see you what you are: you are too proud; But if you were the devil, you are fair. My lord and master loves you; O, such love Could be but recompensed, though you were crown'd The nonpareil of beauty!

Oli. How does he love me?

Vio. With adorations, with fertile tears, With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.

Oli. Your lord does know my mind, I cannot love him:
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble, Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth; In voices well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and valiant, And, in dimension, and the shape of nature, A gracious person: but yet I cannot love him; He might have took his answer long ago.

Vio. If I did love you in my master's flame, With such a suffering, such a deadly life, In your denial I would find no sense, I would not understand it.

Oli. Why, what would you?

Vio. Make me a willow cabin at your gate, And call upon my soul within the house; Write loyal cantons of contemned love, And sing them loud even in the dead of night; Holla your name to the reverberate hills, And make the babbling gossip of the air Cry out, Olivia! O, you should not rest Between the elements of air and earth, But you should pity me. [Exit.

Oli. You might do much: What is your parent?
Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman. [Exit.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not, that I go with you?

Seb. By your patience, no: my stars shine darkly over me; the malignity of my fate might, perhaps, distemper yours; therefore I shall crave of you your leave, that I may bear my evils alone: It were a bad recompense for your love, to lay any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

Seb. No, 'sooth, sir; my determinate voyage is mere extravagancy. But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in; therefore it charges me in manners the rather to express myself. You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Rodorigo; my father was that Sebastian of Messaline whom, I know, you have heard of: he left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in an hour. If the heavens had been pleased, 'twould we had so ended! but, you, sir, altered that; for, some hours before you took me from the breach of the sea, was my sister drowned.

Ant. Alas the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not, with such estimable wonder, offer believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publish her, she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair: she is drowned, already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O, good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered, desire it not. Fare ye well at once; my bosom is full of kindness; and I am yet so near the manners of my mother, that upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the Count Orsino's court—farewell.

[Exit.

Methinks, I feel this youth's perfections, With an invisible and subtle stealth, To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.—

Oli. Get you to your lord; I cannot love him: let him send no more; Unless, perchance, you come to me again, To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well: I thank you for your pains: spend this for me. I'll, I am a gentleman, lady, keep your purse; My master, not myself, lacks recompense. Love make his heart of flint, that you shall love; And let your fervour, like my master's, be Placed in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty. [Exit.

Oli. What is your parentage? Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman. — I'll be sworn thou art; Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit, Do give thee five-fold blazon: Not too fast:— soft! soft!

Unless the master were the man. How now? Even so quickly may one catch the plague?

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Viola; Malvolio following.

Mal. Were not you even now with the countess Olivia?

Vio. Even now, sir; on a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir; you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him: And one thing more; that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord's taking of this. Receive it so.

Vio. She took the ring of me: I'll none of it.

Mal. Come, sir, you peevishly threw it to her; and her will is, it should be so returned; If it be worth stooping for, there it lies in your eye: if not, be it his that finds it.

Vio. I left no ring with her: What means this lady?

Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orsino's court, Else would I very shortly see thee there:
But, come what may, I do adore thee so, That danger shall seem sport, and I will go. [Exit.

Fortune forbid, my outside have not charm'd her! She made good view of me; indeed, so much, That, sure, methought, her eyes had lost her tongue, For she did speak in starts distractedly. She loves me, sure; the cunning of her passion Invites me in this churlish messenger. None of my lord's ring! why, she sent her none. I am the man; — if it be so, (as 'tis,) Poor lady, she were better love a dream. Disguise, I see, thou art a wretchedness, Wherein the pregnant enemy does much. How easy is it, for the proper-false In women's waxen hearts to set their forms! Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we; For, such as we are made of, such we be. How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly And I, poor monster, fond as much on him; And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me: What will become of this! As I am man.
My state is desperate for my master's love;
As I am woman, now alas the day!
What thriftless sighs shall poor Olivia breathe?
O time, thou must untangle this, not I;
It is too hard a knot for me to untie.

(Scene III.—A Room in Olivia's House.)

Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Aquecheek.

Sir To. Approach, sir Andrew: not to be a-bed after midnight, is to be up betimes; and diluculo surgere, thou know'st.

Sir And. Nay, by my troth, I know not: but I know, to be up late, is to be up late.

Sir To. A false conclusion; I hate it as an unfilled can: To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then is early: so that, to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Do not our lives consist of the four elements?

Sir And. 'Faith, so they say; but, I think, it rather consists of eating and drinking.

Sir To. Thou art a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink.—Marian, I say! —a stoop of wine.

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, 'tis faith.

Clo. How now, my hearts? Did you never see the picture of we three?

Sir To. Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg; and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spokst of Sigismondo, of the Vapians passing the equinocial of Cebicus; 'twas very good, 'tis faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy leman: Hadst it?

Clo. I did impetecos thy gratification; for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock: My lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.

Sir And. Excellent! Why, this is the best fooling, when all is done, Now, a song.

Sir To. Come on; there's sixpence for you: let's have a song.

Sir And. There's a testril of me too: if one knight give a—

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay; I care not for good life.

Song.

Clo. O mistress mine, where are you roaming?
O, stay and hear: your true love's coming,
That can sing both high and low;
Trip no further, pretty sweeting;
Journeys end in lovers' meeting,
Every wise man's son doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, 'tis faith.

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love? 'tis not hereafter;
Present mirth hath present laughter;
What's to come is still unsure:
In delay there lies no plenty;
Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,
Young's stuff will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true night.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, 'tis faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is dulcet in contagion. But shall we make the welkin dance indeed? Shall we rouse the night-owl in a catch, that will draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't: I am dog at a catch.

Clo. By'r'lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain: let our catch be, Thou knave.

Clo. Hold thy peace, thou knave, knight? I shall be constrain'd in't to call thee knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the first time I have constrain'd one to call me knave. Begin, fool; it begins, Hold thy peace.

Clo. I shall never begin, if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good, 'tis faith! Come, begin. [They sing a catch.

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a catterwauling do you keep here!
If my lady have not called up her steward, Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Sir To. My lady's a Catinian, we are politicians; Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsay, and Three merry men be we. Am not I consanguinous? am I not of her blood? Tilly-valley, lady! There dwell a man in Babylon, lady, lady. [Singing.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough, if he be disposed, and so do I too; he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. O, the twelfth day of December.—[Singing.

Mar. For the love o' God, peace.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. My masters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an ale-house of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your coziers' catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time, in you?

Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catches. Sneck up!

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that, though she harbours you as her kinsman, she's nothing allied to your disorders. If you can separate yourself and your misdemeanors, you are welcome to the house; if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone.

Mar. Nay, good Sir Toby.

Clo. His eyes do show his days are almost done.

Mal. Is't even so?

Sir To. But I will never die.

Clo. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

Sir To. Shall I bid him go?

Clo. What an if you do?

Sir To. Shall I bid him go, and spare not?

Clo. O no, no, no, you dare not.

Sir To. Out o' tune? sir, ye lie.—Art any more than a steward? Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

Clo. Yes, by Saint Anne; and ginger shall be hot i'the mouth too.
Sir To. Thou'rt i'the right.—Go, sir, rub your chain with crumbs:—A stoop of wine, Maria!
Mal. Mistress Mary, if you priz'd your lady's favour at any thing more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule; she shall know of it, by this hand.

[Exit.
Mar. Go shake your ears.
Sir To. Do't, knight; I'll write thee a challenge; or I'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.
Mar. Sweet sir Toby, be patient for to-night;
since the youth of the count's was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For monsieur Mal-volio, let me alone with him. If I do not gull him into an essay, and make him a common recreant, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed: I know, I can do it.
Sir To. Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him.
Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritan.
Sir And. O, if I thought that, I'd beat him like a dog.
Sir To. What, for being a Puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?
Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for't, but I have reason good enough.
Mar. The devil a Puritan that he is, or any thing constantly but a time pleased; an affection'd ass that consists state without book, and utters it by great swarths: the best persuaded of himself, so crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies, that it is his ground of faith, that all, that on look on him, love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.
Sir To. What wilt thou do?
Mar. I will drop in his ways some obscure epistles of love; wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expression of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated: I can write very like my lady, your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.
Sir To. Excellent! I smell a device.
Sir And. I have't in my nose too.
Sir To. He shall think, by the letters that thou wilt drop, that they come from my niece, and that she is in love with him.
Mar. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of that colour.
Sir And. And your horse now would make him an ass.
Mar. Ass, I doubt not.
Sir And. O 'twill be admirable.
Mar. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know, my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter; observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell. [Exit.
Sir To. Good night, Penthesilae.
Sir And. Before me, she's a good wench.
Sir And. She's a beggar, true bred, and one that adores me; what 'o that?
Sir And. I was adored once too.
Sir To. Let's to bed, knight.—Thou must need send for more money.
Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out.
Sir To. Send for money, knight; if thou hast her not i'the end, call me Cut.
Sir And. If I do not, never trust me, take it how you will.
Sir To. Come, come; I'll go burn some sack, tis too late to go to bed now: come, knight; come,
knight.
[Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke, Viola, Corio, and others.
Duke. Give me some music:—Now, good morrow, friends:——
Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,
That old and antique song we heard last night;
Methought it did relieve my passion much;
More than light airs and recollected terms,
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times:——
Come, but one verse.
Cur. He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it.
Duke. Who was it?
Cur. Feste, the jester, my lord; a fool, that the lady Olivia's father took much delight in: he is about the house.
Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune the while.
[Exit Curio.—Music
Come hither, boy; If ever thou shalt love,
In the sweet pangs of it, remember me:
For, such as I am, all true lovers are;
Unstaid and skittish in all motions else,
Save, in the constant image of the creature
That is below'd.—How dost thou like this tune?
Vio. It gives a very echo to the seat
Where Love is throned.
Duke. Thou dost speak masterly:
My life upon't, young though thou art, thine eye
Hath stayed upon some favour that it loves;
Hath it not, boy?
Vio. A little, by your favour.
Duke. What kind of woman is't?
Vio. Of your complexion.
Duke. She is not worth thee, then. What years,
Vio. About your years, my lord. [i'th'faith?
Duke. Too old, by heaven; Let still the woman
An elder than herself; so wears she to him, [take
So sways she level in her husband's heart.
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves;
Our fancies are more giddy and unmirth.
More long, wavering, sooner lost and worn
Than women are.
Vio. I think it well, my lord.
Duke. Then let thy love be younger than thyself
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent:
For women are as roses; whose fair flower,
Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour.
Vio. And so they are: alas, that they are so;
To die, even when they to perfection grow!
Re-enter Curio and Clown.
Duke. O fellow, come, the song we had last
Mark it, Cesario; it is old and plain: [night:—
The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maids, that weave their thread with
Do use to chant it: it is silly sooth, [bones.
And dallies with the innocence of love,
Like the old age.
Clo. Are you ready, sir?
Duke. Ay; pr'ythee, sing. [Music
SCENE V.

TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

71

SONG.

Clo. Come away, come away, death,
And in sad cypress let me be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath:
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,
O, prepare it;
My part of death no one so true
Did share it.
Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black coffin let there be strown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet,
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown:
A thousand thousand signs to save,
Lay me, O, where
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To weep there.

Duke. There's for thy pains.

Clo. No pains, sir; I take pleasure in singing, sir.

Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure then.

Clo. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.

Duke. Give me now leave to leave thee.

Clo. Now, the melancholy god protect thee; and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffata, for thy mind is a very opal!—I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be every thing, and their intent every where; for that's it, that always makes a good voyage of nothing.—Farewell. [Exit Clown.

Duke. Let all the rest give place.

[Exeunt Cuso and Attendants.]

Once more, Cesario,
Get thee to some same sovereign cruelty,
Tell her, my love, more noble than the world,
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands;
The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune;
But 'tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks her in, attracts my soul.

Vio. But, if she cannot love you, sir?

Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.

Vio. 'Sooth, but you must,
Say, that some lady, as, perhaps, there is,
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart
As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her;
You tell her so; Must she not then be answer'd?

Duke. There is no woman's sides,
Can bide the beating of so strong a passion
As love doth give my heart: no woman's heart
So big, to hold so much: they lack retention.
Alas, their love may be called appetite,—
No motion of the liver, but the palate,—
That suffer surfeit, cloyment, and revolt;
But mine is all as hungry as the sea,
And can digest as much: make no compare
Between that love a woman can bear me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know,—

Duke. What dost thou know?

Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe:
In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
My father had a daughter loved a man,
As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman,
I should your lordship.

Duke. And what's her history?

Vio. A blank, my lord: She never told her love,
But let concealment, like a worm i'the bud,
Feed on her damask cheek: she pined in thought;
And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
She sat like patience on a monument,

Smiling at grief. Was not this love, indeed?
We men may say more, swear more; but, indeed,
Our shows are more than will; for still we prove
Much in our vows, but little in our love.

Duke. But did thy sister of her love, my boy
Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's house.
And all the brothers too;—and yet I know not.—
Sir, shall I to this lady?

Duke. Ay, that's the theme.
To her in haste: give her this jewel; say,
My love can give no place, bide no denary. [Exit.
Sir To. Fire and brimstone!
Fab. O, peace, peace.
Mal. And then to have the humour of state: and after a demure travel of regard,—telling them, I know my play, as I would that should do theirs,—to ask for my kinsman Toby:
Sir To. Bolts and shackles!
Fab. O, peace, peace! peace! now, now.
Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient start, make out for him: I frown the while; and, perchance, wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel. Toby approaches; court'sies there to me:
Sir To. Shall this fellow live?
Fab. Though our silence be drawn from us with care.
Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control:
Sir To. And does not Toby take you a blow o'
the lips then?
Mal. Saying, Cousin Toby, my fortunes having cast me on your niece, give me this prerogative of speech:—
Sir To. What, what?
Mal. You must amend your drunkenness.
Sir To. Out, scab!
Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.
Mal. Besides, you waste the treasures of your time with a foolish knight;
Sir And. That's me, I warrant you.
Mal. One Sir Andrew:
Sir And. I knew, 'twas I; for many do call me fool.
Mal. What employment have we here?
[Taking up the letter.
Fab. Now is the woodcock near the gin.
Sir To. O, peace! and the spirit of humourous intimate reading aloud to him!
Mal. By my life, this is my lady's hand: these be her very C's, her U's, and her T's: and thus makes she her great P's. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.
Sir And. Her C's, her U's, and her T's: Why
that?
Mal. [reads.] To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes: her very phrases!—By your leave, wax.—Soft! and the impression her Lucrece, with which she uses to seal: 'tis my lady: To whom should this be?
Fab. This wins him, liver and all.
Mal. [reads.] Jove knows, I love:
But who?
Lips do not move,
No man must know.
No man must know.—What follows? the numbers altered!—No man must know:—If this should be thee, Malvolio?
Sir To. Marry, hang thee, brock!
Mal. I may command, where I adore:
But silence, like a Lucrece knife,
With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore;
M, O, A, I, doth sway my life.
Fab. A fustian riddle!
Sir To. Excellent wench, say I.
Mal. M, O, A, I, doth sway my life.—Nay, but first, let me see,—let me see,—let me see.
Fab. What a dish of poison hath she dressed him!
Sir To. And with what wing the stannyl checks at it!
Mal. I may command where I adore. Why, she could, I serve her, she is my lady.
Mal. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity. There is no obstruction in this:—And the end,—What should that alphabetical position portend? if I could make that resemble something in me,— Soften!—M, O, A, I.
Sir To. O, ay! make up that:—he is now at a cold scent.
Fab. Sower will cry upon't, for all this, though it be as rank as a fox.
Mal. M,—Malvolio; —M,—why, that begins my name.
Fab. Did not I say, he would work it out? the cur is excellent at faults.
Mal. But then there is no consonancy in the sequel; that suffers under probation: A should follow, but O does.
Fab. And O shall end, I hope.
Sir To. Ay, or I'll cudgel him, and make him cry, O.
Mal. And then I comes behind.
Fab. Ay, an you had any eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels, than fortunes before you.
Mal. M, O, A, I;—This simulation is not as the former:—and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft; here follows prose.—If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my stars I am above thee;
but be not afraid of greatness: Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them. Thy fates open their hands; let thy blood and spirit embrace them. And, to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants: let thy tongue tongue arguments of state;
put thyself into the trick of singularly: She thus advises thee, that sighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings; and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered: I say, remember.
Go to; thou art made, if thou deservest to be so;
if not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch fortunate's fingers.
Farewell. She that would alter services with thee,
The fortunate unhappy.

Day-light and champain discovers not more: this is open, I will be thorough, I will read politic authors, I will baffle Sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-de-vice, the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me; for every reason excites to this, that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late, she did praise my leg being cross-gartered; and in this she manifests herself to my love, and, with a kind of induction, drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove, and my stars be praised!—Here is yet a postscript. Thou connot choose but know, whom I am. If thou ent-tainest my love, let it appear in thy smiling; thy smiles become thee well: therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I pr'ythee. Jove, I thank thee.—I will smile: I will do every thing that thou wilt have me.
[Exit.
Fab. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Sophy.
SCENE I.—OLIVIA'S GARDEN.

Enter Viola, and Clown with a tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy music: Dost thou live by thy tabor?

Clo. No, sir, I live by the church.

Vio. Art thou a churchman?

Clo. No such matter, sir; I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

Vio. So thou may'st say, the king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or the church stands by thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church.

Clo. You have said, sir.—To see this age!—A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit; How quickly the wrong side may be turned outward!

Vio. Nay, that's certain: they that dally nicely with words, may quickly make them wanton.

Clo. I would therefore, my sister had had no name, sir.

Vio. Why, man?

Clo. Why, sir, her name's a word; and to dally with that word, might make my sister wanton: But indeed, words are very rascals, since bonds disgraced them.

Vio. Thy reason, man?

Clo. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am loath to prove reason with them.

Vio. I warrant, thou art a merry fellow, and carest for nothing.

Clo. Not so, sir, I do care for something: but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you; if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

Vio. Art not thou the lady Olivia's fool?

Clo. No, indeed, sir; the lady Olivia has no fool: she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands, as pilchards are to herrings, the husband's the bigger; I am, indeed, not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

Vio. I saw thee late at the count Orsino's.

Clo. Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb, like the sun; it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master, as with my mistress: I think, I saw your wisdom there.

Vio. Nay, an thou pass upon me, I'll no more with thee. Hold, there's expenses for thee.

Mar. Nay, but say true; does it work upon him?

Sir To. Like aqua-vite with a midwife.

Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady: he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors; and cross-gartered, a fashion she detests; and he will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt: if you will see it, follow me.

Sir To. To the gates of Tartar, thou most excellent devil of wit!

Sir And. I'll make one too.

ACT III.

CLO. Now Jove, in his next commodity of hair, send thee a beard!

Vio. By my troth, I'll tell thee; I am almost sick for one; though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?

Clo. Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?

Vio. Yes, being kept together, and put to use.

Clo. I would play lord Pandarus of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.

Vio. I understand you, sir; 'tis well begg'd.

Clo. The matter, I hope, is not great, sir, begg'ing but a beggar: Cressida was a beggar. My lady is within, sir. I will construe to them whence you come; who you are, and what you would are out of my wilkin: I might say element; but the word is over-worn.

Vio. This fellow's wise enough to play the fool; And, to do that well, craves a kind of wit: He must observe their mood on whom he jests, The quality of persons, and the time; And, like the haggard, check at every feather That comes before his eye. This is a practice, As full of labour as a wise man's art: For folly, that he wisely shows, is fit; But wise men, folly-fallen, quite taint their wit.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, and Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek.

Sir To. Save you, gentleman.

Vio. And you, sir.

Sir And. Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

Sir And. I hope, sir, you are; and I am yours.

Sir To. Will you encounter the house? my niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Vio. I am bound to your niece, sir: I mean, she is the list of my voyage.

Sir To. Taste your legs, sir, put them to motion. Vio. My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.

Sir To. I mean, to go, sir, to enter.

Vio. I will answer you with gait and entrance: But we are prevented.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odours on you.

Sir And. That youth's a rare courtier! Rain odours! well.

Vio. My matter hath no voice, lady, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear.
Sir And. Odours, pregnant, and vouchsafed:—
I' ll get 'em all three ready.

Oli. Let the garden door be shut, and leave me to my hearing.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.

Give me your hand, sir.

Vio. My duty, madam, and most humble service.

Oli. What is your name?

Vio. Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess.

Oli. My servant, sir! 'Twas never merry world,
Since lowly reigning was call'd compliment:
You are servant to the count Orsino, youth.

Vio. And he is yours, and must needs be your servant's servant is your servant, madam.

Oli. For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts,
Would they were blanks, than fill'd with me!

Vio. Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts
On his behalf:—

Oli. O, by your leave, I pray you;
I bade you never speak again of him:
But, would you undertake another suit,
I had rather hear you to solicit that,
Than music from the spheres.

Vio. Dear lady,

Oli. Give me leave, I beseech you: I did send
After the last enchantment you did here.
A ring in chase of you; so did I abuse
Myself, my servant, and, I fear me, you:
Under your hard construction must I sit;
To force that on you, in a shameful cunning,
Which you knew none of yours: What might you think?

Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And bated it with all the unmuzzled thoughts That tyrannous heart can think? To one of your receiving
Enough is shown; a cypris, not a bosom,
Hides my poor heart: So let me hear you speak.

Vio. I pity you.

Oli. That's a degree to love.

Vio. No, not a grise; for 'tis a vulgar proof,
That very oft we piti enemies.

Oli. Why, then, methinks, 'tis time to smile again:
O world, how apt the poor are to be proud!
If one should be a prey, how much the better
To fall before the lion, than the wolf? [Clock strikes.
The clock upbraids me with the waste of time.—
Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you:
And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest,
Your wife is like to reap a proper man:
There lies your way due-west.

Vio. Then westward-hoe:
Grace, and good disposition 'tend your ladyship!
You'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?

Oli. Stay:
I pr'ythee, tell me, what thou think'st of me.

Vio. That you do think, you are not what you are.

Oli. If I think so, I think the same of you.

Vio. Then think you right; I am not what I am.

Oli. I would, you were as I would have you be:

Vio. Would it be better, madam, than I am,
I wish it might; for now I am your fool.

Oli. O. What a deal of scorn looks beautiful
In the contempt and anger of his lip!
A mur'drous guilt shows not itself more soon
Than love that would seem hid: love's night is noon.

Cesario, by the roses of the spring,
By maidhood, honour, truth, and every thing,

I love thee so, that, maugre all thy pride,
Nor wit, nor reason, can my passion hide:
Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,
For, that I woo, thou therefore hast no cause:
But, rather, reason thus with reason fetter:
Love sought is good, but given unsought, is better.

Vio. By innocence I swear, and by my youth,
I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth,
And that no woman has; nor never none
Shall mistress be of it, save I alone.

And so adieu, good madam; never more
Will I my master's tears to you deplore.

Oli. Yet come again: for thou, perhaps, may'st move
That heart, which now abhors, to like his love.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in OLIVIA'S House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek and Fabian.

Sir And. No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.

Sir To. Thy reason, dear venom, give thy reason.

Fab. You must needs yield your reason, sir
Andrew.

Sir And. Marry, I saw your niece do more favours to the count's serving man, than ever she bestowed upon me; I saw 't in the orchard.

Sir To. Did she see thee the while, old boy? I tell me that.

Sir And. As plain as I see you now.

Fab. This was a great argument of love in her bending to you.

Sir And. 'Slight! will you make an ass o' me?

Fab. I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.

Sir To. And they have been grand jury-men, since before Noah was a sailor.

Fab. She did do show favour to the youth in your sight, only to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse valour, to put fire in your heart, and brimstone in your liver: You should then have acosted her; and with some excellent jests, fire new from the mint, you should have bangered the youth into dumbness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was baulked: the double gift of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now sailed into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt, either of valour, or polity.

Sir And. And't be any way, it must be with valour: for policy I hate; I had as lief be a Brownist, as a politician.

Sir To. Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour. Challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places;
my niece shall take note of it: and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more pre vail in man's commendation with woman, than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this, Sir Andrew.

Sir And. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

Sir To. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curst and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be elo quent and full of invention; taunt him with the licence of ink: if thou thou'st him some thrice, it shall not be amiss; and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em down; go about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink; though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter: About it.

Sir And. Where shall I find you?
Sir To We'll call thee at the cubiculo: Go. [Exit Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a dear manakin to you, sir Toby. Sir To I have been dear to him, lad; some two thousand strong, or so.

Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him: but you'll not open it. Sir To Never trust me then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Fab. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great pressage of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Look where the youngest wren of nine comes.

Mar. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me: yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegado; for there is no Christian, that means to be saved by believing rightly, can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness. He's in yellow stockings.

Sir To. And cross-gartered?

Mar. Most villainously; like a pedant that keeps a school i' the church—I have dogged him, like his murderer: He does obey every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him. He does smile his face into more lines than are in the new map, with the augmentation of the Indies: you have not seen such a thing as 'tis; I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know my lady will strike him; if she do, he'll smile, and take't for a great favour.

Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Seb. I would not by my will have troubled you; But, since you make your pleasure of your pains, I will no further chide you.

Ant. I could not stay behind you; my desire, More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth; And not all love to see you, (though so much, As might have drawn one to a longer voyage,) But jealousy what might befal your travel, Being skillless in these parts; which to a stranger, Unguided, and unfriended, often prove Rough and unhospitable: My willing love, The rather by these arguments of fear, Set forth in your pursuit.

Seb. My kind Antonio, I can no other answer make, but, thanks, And thanks, and ever thanks: Often good turns Are shuffled off with such unequal pay: But, were my worth, as is my conscience, firm, You should find better dealing. What's to do? Shall we go see the reliques of this town?

Ant. To-morrow, sir; best, first, go see your lodging.

Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night;

I pray you let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials, and the things of fame,
That do renown this city.

Ant. 'Would, you'd pardon me:
I do not without danger walk these streets:
Once, in a sea-fight, 'gainst the count his galleys,
I did some service; of such note, indeed,
That, were I ta'en here, it would scarce be answered.

Seb. Belike, you slew great number of his people.

Ant. The offence is not of such a bloody nature;
Albeit the quality of the time, and quarrel,
Might well have given us bloody argument.

It might have since been answered in repaying
What we took from them; which, for traffic's sake,
Most of our city did: only myself stood out:
For which, if I be lapsed in this place,
I shall pay dear.

Seb. Do not then walk too open.

Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here's my purse;
In the south suburbs, at the Elephant,
Is best to lodge: I will bespeak our diet,
While you beguile the time, and feed your knowledge.

With viewing of the town; there shall you have me.

Seb. Why I your purse?

Ant. Happly, your eye shall light upon some toy
You have desire to purchase; and your store,
I think, is not for idle markets, sir.

Seb. I'll be your purse-bearer, and leave you for an hour.

Ant. To the Elephant.

Seb. I do remember. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Olivia's Garden.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Oli. I have sent after him. He says he'll come;
How shall I feast him? what bestow on him?
For youth is bought more oft, than begged, or bor
I speak too loud.—— [Rowed.

Where is Malvolio?—he is sad, and civil,
And suits well for a servant with my fortunes;—

Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He's coming, madam;
But in strange manner. He is sure possessed.

Oli. Why, what's the matter? does he rave?

Mar. No, madam,
He does nothing but smile: your ladyship
Were best have guard about you, if he come;
For, sure, the man is tainted in his wits.

Oli. Go call him hither. — I'm as mad as he,
If sad and merry madness equal be.—— [Enter Malvolio.

How now, Malvolio?

Mal. Sweet lady, ho, ho. [Smiles fantastically.
Oli. Smil'st thou?
I sent for thee upon a sad occasion.

Mal. Sad, lady? I could be sad: this does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; But what of that, if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet is: Please one, and please all.

Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?

Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs: It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed. I think, we do know the sweet Roman hand.
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio?

Mal. To bed? ay, sweet-heart; and I'll come to thee.

Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile on, and kiss thy hand so oft?

Mar. How do you, Malvolio?

Mal. At your request? Yes; Nightingales answer daws.

Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?

Mal. _Be not afraid of greatness:_ 'twas well with you. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?

Mal. Some are born great,—

Oli. Ha?

Mal. Some achieve greatness,—

Oli. What say'st thou?

Mal. And some have greatness thrust upon them.

Oli. Heaven restore thee!

Mal. Remember, who commended thy yellow stockings;—

Oli. Thy yellow stockings?

Mal. And wished to see thee cross-gartered;—

Oli. Cross-gartered?

Mal. Go to: thou art made, if thou desirest to be so;—

Oli. Am I made?

Mal. If not, let me see thee a servant still.

Oli. Why, this is very middensummer madness.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, the young gentleman of the count Orsino's is returned; I could hardly entreat him back: he attends your ladyship's pleasure.

Oli. I'll come to him. [Exit Servant.] Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him; I would not have him miscarry for the half of my dowry.

[Re-enter OLIVIA and MARIA.]

Mal. Oh, ho! do you come near me now? no worse man than Sir Toby to look to me? This concurs directly with the letter: she sends him on purpose, that I may appear stubborn to him; for she incites me to that in the letter. _Cast thy humble slough,_ says she;—_be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants._—Let thy tongue hang with arguments of state,—_put thyself into the trick of singularity_;—and, consequently, sets down the manner how; as, a sad face, a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have limed her; but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful! And, when she went away now, _Let this fellow be looked to:_ Fellow! not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why, every thing adheres together; that no draught of a scribble, no scribble of a scribble, no obstacle, no incredible or unsafe circumstance, —What can be said? Nothing, that can be, can come between me and the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

[Re-enter MARIA, with SIR TOBY BELCH and FABIAN.]

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils of hell be drawn in little, and Legion himself possessed him, yet I'll speak to him.

Fab. Here he is, here he is:—How is't with you, sir? how is't with you, man?

Mal. Go off; I discard you; let me enjoy my private; go off.

Mar. Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him! did not I tell you?—Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

Mal. Ah, ah! does she so?

Sir To. Go to, go to; peace, peace, we must deal gently with him; let me alone. How do you, Malvolio? how is't with you? What, man! defy the devil! consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

Mal. Do you know what you say?

Mar. La you, an you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart! Pray God, he be not bewitched.

Fab. Carry his water to the wise woman.

Mar. Marry, and it shall be done to-morrow morning, if I live.* My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.

Mal. How now, mistress?

Mar. O lord!

Sir To. Pr'ythee, hold thy peace; this is not the way: Do you not see, you move him? let me alone with him.

Fab. No way but gentleness; gently, gently: the fiend is rough, and will not be roughly used.

Sir To. Why, how now, my bailoock? how dost thou, chuck?

Mal. Sir?

Sir To. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What, man! 'tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan: Hang him, foul collier!

Mar. Get him to say his prayers; good Sir Toby, get him to pray.

Mal. My prayers, minx?

Mar. No, I warrant you, he will not hear of godliness.

Mal. Go, hang yourselves all! you are idle shallow things: I am not of your element; you shall know more hereafter.

[Exit.]

Sir To. Is't possible?—

Fab. If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.

Sir To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

Mar. Nay, pursue him now; lest the device take air, and taint.

Fab. Why, we shall make him mad, indeed.

Mar. The house will be the quieter.

Sir To. Come, we'll have him in a dark room, and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he is mad; we may carry it thus, for our pleasure, and his penance, till our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him: at which time, we will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. But see, but see.

[Enter SIR ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.]

Fab. More matter for a May morning.

Sir And. Here's the challenge, read it; I warrant, there's vinegar and pepper in't.

Fab. Is't so saucy?

Sir And. Ay, is it, I warrant him: do but read.

Sir To. Give me. [Reads.] Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a servile fellow.

Fab. Good, and valiant.

Sir To. Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no reason for't.

Fab. A good note: that keeps you from this blow of the law.
Remarkable. TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Sir To. Thou comest to the lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly: but thou liest in thy throat, that is not the matter I challenge thee for.

Fab. Very; brief, and exceeding good sense-less.

Sir To. I will lay thee going home; where if it be thy chance to kill me,——

Fab. Good.

Sir To. Thou killest me like a rogue and a villain.

Fab. Still you keep o’ the windy side of the law: Good.

Sir To. Fare thee well; and God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thouwert him, and thy sworn enemy, Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir To. If this letter move not, his legs cannot: I’ll give’t him.

Mar. You may have very fit occasion for’t; he is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

Sir To. Go, sir Andrew; scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bum-bailiff; so soon as ever thou seest him, draw; and, as thou drawest, swear horrible; for it comes to pass oft, that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away.

Sir And. Nay, let me alone for swearing. [Exit.

Sir To. Now will not I deliver his letter; for the behaviour of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding; his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less; therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth, he will find it comes from a clodpole. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon Ague-cheek a notable report of valour; and drive the gentleman, (as I know his youth will aptly receive it,) into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity. This will so fright them both, that they will kill one another by the look, like cockstrices.

Enter Olivia and Viola.

Fab. Here he comes with your niece: give them way, till he take leave, and presently after him.

Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

[Exit Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria.

Oli. I have said too much unto a heart of stone, and laid mine honour too uncharily on it: There’s something in me, that reproves my fault; but such a headstrong tenant fault it is, That it but mocks reproof.

Vio. With the same ‘haviour that your passion Go on my master’s griefs. [bears.

Oli. Here, wear this jewel for me, ’tis my picture; Refuse it not, it hath no tongue to vex you: And, I beseech you, come again to-morrow.

What shall you ask of me, that I’ll deny? That honour, saved, may upon asking give? Vio. Nothing but this, your true love for my master.

Oli. How with mine honour may I give him that Which I have given to you?

Vio. I will acquit you.

Oli. Well, come again to-morrow: Fare thee well; A fiend, like thee, might bear my soul to hell. [Exit.

Sir To. Thou Gentleman, God save thee.

Vio. And you, sir.

Sir To. That defence thou hast, betake thee to’t of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not; but thy interceptor, full of despatch, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end: dismount thy trick, be yare in thy preparation, for thy assailant is quick, skilful, and deadly.

Vio. You mistake, sir; I am sure, no man hath any quarrel to me; my remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man.

Sir To. You’ll find it otherwise, I assure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill, and wrath, can furnish man withal.

Vio. I pray you, sir, what is he?

Sir To. He is knight, dubbed with unhack’d rapier, and on carpet consideration; but he is a devil in private brawl; souls and bodies hath he divorced three; and his incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulchre: hoh, nob, is his word; give’t, or take’t.

Vio. I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady. I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men, that put quarrels purposely on others, to taste their valour: belike, this is a man of that quirk.

Sir To. Sir, no; his indignation derives itself out of a very competent injury; therefore, get you on, and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me, which with as much safety you might answer him: therefore, on, or strip your sword stark naked; for meddle you must, that’s certain, or forswear to wear iron about you.

Vio. This is as uncivil, as strange. I beseech you, do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my necessity, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I will do so. Signor Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit Sir Tovv.

Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

Fab. I know, the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria: Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for’t: I am one, that would rather go with sir priest, than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle.

[Exit.

Re-enter Sir Toby with Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Why, man, he’s a very devil; I have not seen such a virago. I had a pass with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stick-in, with such a mortal motion, that’it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on: They say, he has been fencer to the Sopby.

Sir And. Pox on’t, I’ll not meddle with him.
Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on't; as I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in fence, I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, gray Capulet.

Sir. To. I'll make the motion: Stand here, make a good show on't; this shall end without the perdition of souls: Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you. [Aside.

Re-enter Fabian and Viola.  I have his horse [to Fab.] to take up the quarrel; I have persuaded him the youth's a devil.

Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him; and pants, and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. There's no remedy, sir; he will fight with you for his oath sake: marry, he hath better bethought him of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking off: therefore draw, for the supportance of his vow; he protests, he will not hurt you.

Vio. Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man. [Aside.

Fab. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, sir Andrew, there's no remedy; the gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the devil avoid it; but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on: to't.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oath. [Draws.

Enter Antonio.

Vio. I do assure you 'tis against my will. [Draws.

Ant. Put up your sword—If this young gentleman

Have done offence, I take the fault on me; If you offend him, I for him defy you. [Drawing

Sir To. You, sir? why what are you?

Ant. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. [Draws.

Enter two Officers.

Fab. O good sir Toby, hold; here come the officers.

Sir To. I'll be with you anon.  [To Antonio, Vio. Pray, sir, put up your sword, if you please.  [To Sir Andrew.

Sir And. Marry, will I, sir; and, for that I promised you, I'll be as good as my word: He will bear you easily, and reins well.

1 Off. This is the man; do thy office.

2 Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit Of count Orsino.

Ant. You do mistake me, sir.

1 Off. No, sir, no jot; I know your favour well, Though now you have no sea-cap on your head.— Take him away; he knows, I know him well.

Ant. I must obey.—This comes with seeking you; But there's no remedy; I shall answer it. What will you do? Now my necessity Makes me to ask you for my purse: It grieves me Much more, for what I cannot do for you, Than what befalls myself. You stand amazed; But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money. Vio. What money, sir?

For the fair kindness you have showed me here, And, part, being prompted by your present trouble, Out of my lean and low ability I'll lend you something: my having is not much; I'll make division of my present with you; Hold, there is half my coffee.

Ant. Will you deny me now? Is't possible, that my deserts to you Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery, Lest that it make me so unsound a man As to upbraid you with those kindnesses That I have done for you. Vio. I know of none Nor know I you by voice, or any feature: I hate ingratitude more in a man, Than lying, vainness, babbling, drunkenness, Or any taint of vice, whose strong corruption Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth that you see here, I snatched one half out of the jaws of death; Relieved him with such sanctity of love,— And to his image, which methought did promise Most venerable worth, did I devotion.

1 Off. What's that to us? The time goes by; away.

Ant. But, O, how vile an idol proves this god!— Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame,— In nature there's no blemish, but the mind; None can be called deformed, but the unkind: Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous-evil Are empty trunks, o'erflourished by the devil.

1 Off. The man grows mad; away with him.

Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on.  [Exeunt Officers with Antonio.

Vio. Methinks, his words do from such passion That he believes himself; so do not I.  [Fly.

Prove true, imagination, O, prove true, That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you! Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian; we'll whisper o'er a couple or two of most sage saws.

Vio. He named Sebastian; I my brother know Yet living in my glass; even such, and so, In favour was my brother; and he went Still in this fashion, colour, ornament, For him I imitate: O, if it prove, Tempests are kind, and salt waves fresh in love!  [Exit.

Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

Fab. A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.

Sir And. 'Slid, I'll after him again, and beat him.

Sir To. Do, cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

Sir And. An I do not,—  [Exit.

Fab. Come, let's see the event.

Sir To. I dare lay any money, 'twill be nothing yet.  [Exeunt.
SCENE I.—The Street before OLIVIA’s house.

Enter SEBASTIAN and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe, that I am not sent for you?

Seb. Go to go to, thou art a foolish fellow;
Let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well held out, faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady, to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither.—

Nothing, that is so, is so.

Seb. I pr’ythee, vent thy folly somewhere else: Thou know’st not me.

Clo. Vent my folly! he has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney.—I pr’ythee now, ungird thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady; Shall I vent to her, that thou art coming?—

Seb. I pr’ythee, foolish Greek, depart from me; There’s money for thee; if you tarry longer, I shall give worse payment.

Clo. By my troth, thou hast an open hand:— These wise men, that give fools money, get themselves a good report after fourteen years’ purchase.

Enter Sir ANDREW, Sir TOBY, and FABIAN.

Sir AND. Now, sir, have I met you again? there’s for you. [Striking Sebastian.]

Seb. Why, there’s for thee, and there, and there: Are all the people mad? [Beating Sir Andrew.]

Sir TOBY. Hold, sir, or I’ll throw your dagger o’er the house.

Clo. This will I tell my lady straight: I would not be in some of your coats for two-pence. [Exit Clown.]

Sir TOBY. Come on, sir; hold.

[Halting Sebastian.]

Sir AND. Nay, let him alone, I’ll go another way to work with him; I’ll have an action of battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria: though I struck him first, yet it’s no matter for that.

Seb. Let go thy hand.

Sir TOBY. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron: you are well fleshed; come on.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldst thou now?

If thou dar’st tempt me further, draw thy sword.

[Draws.]

Sir TOBY. What, what? Nay, then I must have an ounce or two of this malapert blood from you. [Draws.]

Enter OLIVIA.

Oli. Hold, Toby; on thy life, I charge thee, hold.

Sir TOBY. Madam?

Oli. Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch, Fit for the mountains and the barbary caves, Where manners ne’er were preach’d; out of my sight!
Be not offended, dear Cesario!—
Rudesby, be gone!—I pr’ythee, gentle friend, [Exit Sir TOBY, Sir ANDREW, and Fabian.

Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway
In this uncivil and unjust extent
Against thy peace. Go with me to my house;
And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks

IV.

This ruffian hath both’d up, that thou thereby
May’st smile at this: thou shalt not choose but go;
Do not deny: Beshrew his soul for me,
He started one poor heart of mine in thee.

Seb. What relish is in this? how runs the stream:
Or am I mad, or else this is a dream.—
Let fancy still my sense in Lethe steep;
If it be thus to dream, still let me sleep!

Oli. Nay, come, I pr’ythee: ‘Would thou’dst be ruled by me?

Seb. Madam, I will.

Oli. O, say so, and so be! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in OLIVIA’S House.

Enter MARIA and Clow.

Mar. Nay, I pr’ythee, put on this gown, and this beard; make him believe thou art Sir Topas the curate; do it quickly: I’ll call sir Toby the whilst. [Exit Maria.]

Clo. Well, I’ll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in’t; and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. I am not fat enough to become the function well: nor lean enough to be thought a good student: but to be said, an honest man, and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly, as to say, a careful man, and a great scholar. The competitors enter.

Enter Sir TOBY BEECH and Maria.

Sir TOBY. Jove bless thee, master parson.

Clo. Bonos dies, sir Toby: for as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of king Gorbadoc, That, that, is so: so I, being master parson, am master parson: For what is that, but that? and is, but is?

Sir TOBY. To him, sir Topas.

Clo. What, hoa, I say, — Peace in this prison!

Sir TOBY. The knave counterfeit’s well; a good knave.

Mal. [in an inner chamber.] Who calls there?

Clo. Sir Topas, the curate, who comes to visit Malvolio the lunatic.

Mal. Sir Topas, sir Topas, good sir Topas, go to my lady.

Clo. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexest thou this man? talkest thou nothing but of ladies?

Sir TOBY. Well said, master parson.

Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged: good sir Topas, do not think I am mad; they have laid me here, in hideous darkness.

Clo. Fye, thou dishonest Sathan I call thee by the most modest terms; for I am one of those gentle ones, that will use the devil himself with courtesy: Say’st thou, that house is dark?

Mal. As hell, sir Topas.

Clo. Why, it hath bay-windows, transparent as barricades, and the clear stories towards the south-north are as lustrous as ebony; and yet complainsest thou of obstruction?

Mal. I am not mad, sir Topas; I say to you, this house is dark.

Clo. Madman, thou errest: I say, there is no darkness, but ignorance; in which thou art more puzzled, than the Egyptians in their fog.

Mal. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say, there was never man thus abused: I am no more mad than you are; make the trial of it in any constant question.

_Clo._ What is the opinion of Pythagoras, concerning wild-fowl?

_Mal._ That the soul of our grandam might happily inhabit a bird.

_Clo._ What think'st thou of his opinion?

_Mal._ I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.

_Clo._ Fare thee well: Remain thou still in darkness: thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits; and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.

_Mal._ Sir Topas, sir Topas,—

_Sir To._ My most exquisite sir Topas!

_Clo._ Nay, I am for all waters.

_Mal._ Thou might'st have done this without thy beard, and gown; he sees thee not.

_Sir To._ To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him: I would, we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would he were; for I am now so far in offence with my niece, that I cannot pursue, with any safety, this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber. [Exit Sir Toby and MARIA.

_Clo._ Hey, Robin, jolly Robin,

_Tell me how thy lady does._ [Singing.

_Mal._ Fool._

_Clo._ My lady is unkind, perdy.

_Mal._ Fool,—

_Clo._ Alas, why is she so?

_Mal._ Fool, I say;—

_Clo._ She loves another—Who calls, ha?

_Mal._ Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper; as I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for't.

_Clo._ Master Malvolio!

_Mal._ Ay, good fool.

_Clo._ Alas, sir, how tell you besides your five wits?

_Mal._ Fool, there was never man so notoriously abused: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.

_Clo._ But as well? then you are mad, indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

_Mal._ They have here propertiéd me; keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, asses, and do all they can to face me out of my wits.

_Clo._ Advise you what you say; the minister is here.—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bibble-babble.

_Mal._ Sir Topas._

_Clo._ Maintain no words with him, good fellow.—

_Who, I, sir? not I, sir. God b'w'you, good sir Topas._—Marry, amen.—I will, sir, I will.

_Mal._ Fool, fool, fool, I say,—

_Clo._ Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am shent for speaking to you.

_Mal._ Good fool, help me to some light, and some paper; I tell thee, I am as well in my wits as any man in Illyria.

_Clo._ Well-a-day,—that you were, sir!

_Mal._ By this hand, I am: Good fool, some ink, paper, and light, and convey what I will set down to my lady; it shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did.

_Clo._ I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you not mad, indeed? or do you but counterfeit?

_Mal._ Believe me, I am not; I tell thee true.

_Clo._ Nay, I'll never believe a madman, till I see his brains. I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.

_Mal._ Fool, I'll require it in the highest degree. I pr'ythee, be gone.

_Clo._ I am gone, sir,

_And anon, sir,

_I'll be with you again,

_In a trice,

_Like to the old vice,

_Your need to sustain;

_Who with dagger of beth,

_In his rage and his wrath,

_Cries, ah, ha! to the devil:

_Like a mad lad,

_Fare thy natio, dad,

_Adieu, Goodman Driev._ [Exit.

SCENE III.—OLIVIA'S GARDEN.

_Enter Sebastian._

_Seb._ This is the air; that is the glorious sun;

_This pearl she gave me, I do feel't, and see't: _

_And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,

_Yet 'tis not madness. Where's Antonio then? I _could not find him at the Elephant;_

_Yet there he was; and there I found this credit,_

_That he did range the town to seek me out._

_His counsel now might do me golden service;_

_For though my soul disputes well with my sense,_

_That this may be some error, but no madness,_

_Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune_

_So far exceed all instance, all discourse,_

_That I am ready to distrust mine eyes,_

_And wrangle with my reason, that persuades me_

_To any other trust, but that I am mad,_

_Or else the lady's mad; yet if 'twere so, _[lowers, She_ _could not suffer her house, command her fol- _

_Take, and give back, affairs, and their despatch, _

_With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing, _

_As, I perceive, she does: there's something in't, _

_That is deceivable. But here comes the lady._

_Enter Olivia and a Priest._

_Oli._ Blame not this haste of mine: If you mean Now go with me, and with this holy man, _[well, Into the chantry by: there, before him, _

_And underneath that consecrated roof, _

_Plift me the full assurance of your faith; _

_That my most jealous and too doubtful soul_

_May live at peace: He shall conceal it, _

_While you are willing it shall come to note; _

_What time we will our celebration keep _

_According to my birth.—What do you say? _

_Seb._ I'll follow this good man, and go with you;_

_And, having sworn truth, ever will be true._

_Oli._ Then lead thou way, good father; _—And_ _heavens so shine, _

_That they may fairly note this act of mine! _[Exeunt.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—The street before OLIVIA's House.

Enter Clown and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou lovatest me, let me see his letter.

Cl. Good master Fabian, grant me another request.

Fab. Any thing.

Cl. Do not desire to see this letter.

Fab. That is, to give a dog, and, in recompense, desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, Violan, and Attendants.

Duke. Belong you to the lady Olivia, friends?

Cl. Ay, sir; we are some of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well; How dost thou, my good fellow?

Cl. Truly, sir, the better for my foes, and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy friends.

Cl. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be?

Cl. Marry, sir, they praise me, and make an ass of me; now my foes tell me plainly I am an ass: so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself; and by my friends I am abused: so that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why, then the worse for my friends, and the better for my foes.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

Cl. By my troth, sir, no; though it please you to be one of my friends.

Duke. Thou shalt not be the worse for me; there's gold.

Cl. But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

Duke. O, you give me ill counsel.

Cl. Put your grace in your pocket, sir, for his once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Duke. Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double-dealer; there's another.

Cl. Primo, secundo, terto, is a good play; and the old saying is, the third pays for all: the triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of St. Bennet, sir, may put you in mind; One, two, the three.

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Cl. Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty, till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think, that, my desire of having is the sin of covetousness: but, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. [Exit Clown.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well; yet, when I saw it last, it was besmeared as black as Vulcan, in the smoke of war: a haywring vessel was he captain of, for shallow draught, and bulk, unprizable; with which such scathful grapple did he make with the most noble bottom of our fleet, that very envy, and the tongue of loss, cried fame and honour on him.—What's the matter?

Off. Orsino, this is that Antonio, [ter? That took the Phœnix, and her fraught from Candy; And this is he, that did the Tiger board, When your young nephew Titus lost his leg: Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state In private, brabbled we apprehend him. Vio. He did me kindness, sir; drew on my side; But, in conclusion, put strange speech upon me, I know not what 'twas, but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate! thou salt-water thief! What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies, Whom thou, in terms so bloody, and so dear, Hast made thine enemies?

Ant. Orsino, noble sir, Be pleased that I shake off these names you give Antonio never yet was thief, or pirate, [me; Though, I confess, on base and ground enough, Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither: That most ingrateful boy there, by your side, From the rude sea's enraged and foamy mouth Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was: His life I gave him, and did thereto add My love, without retention, or restraint, All his in dedication: for his sake, Did I expose myself, pure for his love, Into the danger of this adverse town; Drew to defend him, when he was best; Where being apprehended, his false cunning, (Not meaning to partake with me in danger,) Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance, And grew a twenty-years-removed thing, While one would wink; denied me mine own purse Which I had recommended to his use Not half an hour before.

Vio. How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town?

Ant. To-day, my lord; and for three months (No interim, not a minute's vacancy) [before, Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter Olivia and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the countess; now heaven walks on earth.—

But for thee, fellow, fellow, thy words are madness: Three months this youth hath tended upon me: But more of that anon.—Take him aside.

Oli. What would my lord, but that he may not Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable? — [have, Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Vio. Madam?

Oli. What do you say, Cesario? — Good my Vio. My lord would speak, my duty hushes me. Oli. If it be aught to the old tune, my lord. It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear, As howling after music.

Duke. Still so cruel?

Oli. Still so constant, lord.

Duke. What! to perverseness? you uncivil lady To whose ingrate and unauspicious altars My soul the faithfull'st offerings hath breath'd out, That 'er devotion tendered! What shall I do? Oli. Even what it please my lord, that shall be done. [do it, Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to Like to the Egyptian thief, at point of death, Kill what I love; a savage jealousy, That sometime savours nobly?—But hear me this: Since you to non-regardance cast my faith, G
And that I partly know the instrument
That screws me from my true place in your favour,
Live you, the marble-breasted tyrant, still;
But this your minion, whom, I know, you love,
And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly,
Him will I tear out of that cruel eye.
Where he sits crowned in his master's spite.—
Come boy, with me; my thoughts are ripe in mis-
I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,  [chief:
To spite a raven's heart within a dove.  [Going.

Vio. And I, most jocund, apt, and willingly,
To do you rest, a thousand deaths would die.

[Following.

Oli. Where goes Cesario?

Vio. After him I love,
More than I love these eyes, more than my life,
More, by all mores, than e'er I shall love wife;
If I do feign, you witnesses above,
Punish my life, for tainting of my love!
Oli. Ah me, detested! how am I beguiled!

Vio. Who does beguile you? who does do you wrong?

Oli. Hast thou forgot thyself? Is it so long?—

Call forth the holy father.  [Erit an ATTENDANT.

Duke. Come away.  [To VIOLA.

Duke. Husband?

Oli. Ay, husband, can he that deny?

Duke. Her husband, sirrah?

Vio. No, my lord, not I.

Oli. Alas, it is the baseness of thy fear,
That makes thee strange thy propriety:
Fear not, Cesario, take thy fortunes up;
Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear'st.—O, welcome, father!

Re-enter ATTENDANT and PRIEST.

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence,
Here to unfold (though lately we intended
To keep in darkness, what occasion now
Reveals before 'tis ripe,) what thou dost know,
Hath newly past between this youth and me.

PRIEST. A contract of eternal bond of love,
Confirmed by mutual joiner of your hands,
Attested by the holy close of lips,
Strength'en'd by interchange of your rings;
And all the ceremony of this compact
Sealed in my function, by my testimony:
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my
I have travelled but two hours.  [grave.

Duke. O, thou dispensing club! what wilt thou
When thou hast bowed a grizzle on thy case? [he,
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?
Farewell, and take her; but direct thy feet,
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.

Vio. My lord, I do protest,—

Oli. O, do not swear;
Hold little faith, though 'tou hast too much fear.

Enter SIR ANDREW, LOYAL-CHEER, with his head broke.

SIR AND. For the love of God, a surgeon; send one presently to sir Toby.

Oli. What's the matter?

SIR AND. He has broke my head across, and has given sir Toby a bloody coxcomb too: for the love of God, your help: I had rather than forty pound,
I were at home.

Oli. Who has done this, sir Andrew?

SIR AND. The count's gentleman, one Cesario:

we took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incardinate.

Duke. My gentleman, Cesario?

SIR AND. O'ds lifelings, here he is:—You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by sir Toby.  [you:

Vio. Why do you speak to me? I never hurt
You drew your sword upon me, without cause;
But I bespeak you fair, and hurt you not.

SIR AND. If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me; I think, you set nothing by a bloody coxcomb.

Enter SIR TOBY, BENCH, drear, led by the CLOWN.

Here comes sir Toby halting, you shall hear more:
but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

Duke. How now, gentleman? how is't with you?

SIR TO. That's all one; he has hurt me, and there's the end on't.—Sot, did'st see Dick surgeon, sot?

Clo. O he's drunk, sir Toby, an hour ago;
his eyes were set at eight i' the morning.

SIR TO. Then he's a rogue. After a passy-measure, or a pavin, I hate a drunken rogue.

Oli. Away with him: Who hath made this havoc with them?

SIR AND. I'll help you, sir Toby, because we'll dressed together.

SIR TO. Will you help an ass-head, and a cox-comb, and a knave? a thin-faced knave, a gull?

Oli. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be looked to.

[Exeunt Clown, SIR TOBY, and SIR ANDREW.

Enter SEBASTIAN.

SCH. I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman;
But, had it been the brother of my blood,
I must have done no less, with wit, and safety.
You throw a strange regard upon me, and
By that I do perceive it hath offended you;
Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows
We made each other but so late ago.

Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons;—

A natural perspective, that is, and is not.

SCH. Antonio, O my dear Antonio!
How have the hours rack'd and tortur'd me,
Since I have lost thee.

ANT. Sebastian are you?

SCH. Fear'st thou that, Antonio?

ANT. How have you made division of yourself?—

An apple, cleft in two, is not more twin Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

SCH. Most wonderful!—

SEB. Do I stand there? I never had a brother
Nor can there be that deity in my nature,
Of here and everywhere. I had a sister,
Whom the blind waves and surges have devoured:—

Of charity, what kin are you to me?  [To VIOLA.

What countryman? what name? what parentage?

VIOLA. Of Messaline: Sebastian was my father;
Such a Sebastian was my brother too;
So went he suited to his watery tomb;

If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us.

SEB. A spirit I am, indeed:

But am in that dimension grossly clad,
Which from the womb I did participate.

Were you a woman, as the rest goes even
I should my tears let fall upon your cheek,
And say—Thrice welcome, drowned Viola!
Vio. My father had a mole upon his brow.
Seb. And so had mine.
[Exit Fabian.
Vio. And died that day when Viola from her
Had numbered thirteen years.
Seb. O, that record is lively in my soul!
He finished, indeed, his mortal act,
That day that made my sister thirteen years.
Vio. If nothing lets to make us happy both
But this masculine usurp’d attire,
Do not embrace me, till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere, and jump,
That I am Viola: which to confirm,
I’ll bring you to a captain in this town,
Where lie my maiden weeds; by whose gentle help
I was preserv’d, to serve this noble count;
All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath been between this lady and this lord.
Seb. So comes it, lady, you have been mistook:
[To Olivia.
But nature to her bias drew in that.
You would have been contracted to a maid;
Nor are you therein, by my life, deceived,
You are betroth’d both to a maid and man.
Duke. Be not amazed; right noble is his blood.—
If this be so, as yet the glass seems true,
I shall have share in this most happy wreck:
Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand times,
Thou never should’st love woman like to me.
Vio. And all those sayings will I over-swear;
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As doth that orbed continent the fire
That seized day from night.
Duke. Give me thy hand;
And let me see thee in thy woman’s weeds.
Vio. The captain, that did bring me first on shore,
Hath my maid’s garments: he upon some action,
Is now in durance; at Malvolio’s suit,
A gentleman, and follower of my lady’s.
Oli. He shall enlarge him:—Fetch Malvolio
And yet, alas, now I remember, [hither:—
They say, poor gentleman, he’s much distract.
[Re-enter Clown, with a letter.
A most extracting frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance clearly banished his.—
How does he, sirrah?
Clo. Truly, madam, he holds Belzebub at the stave’s end, as well as a man in his case may do:
he has here writ a letter to you, I should have given it you to-day morning; but as a madman’s epistles are no gospels, so it skills not much,
when they are delivered.
Oli. Open it, and read it.
Clo. Look then to be well edified, when the fool delivers the madman:—By the Lord, madam,— Oli. How now! art thou mad?
Clo. No, madam, I do but read madness: an your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow it.
Oli. Pr’ythee read it thy right wits.
Clo. So I do, madonna; but to read his right wits, is to read thus: therefore perpend, my princi-pess, and give ear.
Oli. Read it you, sirrah.
[To Fabian.
Fab. [reads.] By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it: though you have put me into darkness, and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that suit-ed me to the semblance I put on;
with the which I doubt not but to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please. I leave my duty a little unthought of, and speak out of my injury.
The madly used Malvolio.
Oli. Did he write this?
Clo. Ay, madam.
Duke. This savours not much of distraction.
Oli. See him delivered, Fabian; bring him hither.
[Exeunt Fabian.
My lord, so please you, these things further thought on.
To think me as well a sister as a wife,
One day shall crown the alliance on’t, so please
Here at my house, and at my proper cost. [you,
Duke. Madam, I am most apt to embrace your offer.— [service done him,
Your master quits you; [To Viola.] and, for your
So much against the mettle of your sex,
So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,
And since you called me master for so long,
Here is my hand; you shall from this time be
Your master’s mistress.
Oli. A sister?—you are she.
[Re-enter Fabian with Malvolio.
Duke. Is this the madman?
Oli. Ay, my lord, this same;
How now, Malvolio?
Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.
Mal. Lady, you have. Pray you, peruse that
You must not now deny it is your hand, [letter:
Write from it, if you can, in hand, or phrase;
Or say, ‘tis not your seal, nor your invention:
You can say none of this: Well, grant it then,
And tell me, in the modesty of honour,
Why you have given me such clear lights of favour:
Bade me come smiling, and cross-gartered to you.
To put on yellow stockings, and to frown
Upon sir Toby, and the lighter people:
And, acting this in an obedient hope,
Why have you suffered me to be imprison’d,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious giek, and gull,
That e’er invention play’d on? tell me why.
Oli. Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing;
Though I confess, much like the character:
But, out of question, ‘tis Maria’s hand.
And now I do think me, it was the [smiling,
First told me, thou wast mad; then can’st in
And in such forms which here were presuppos’d
Upon thee in the letter. Pr’ythee, be content:
This practice hath most shrewdly pass’d upon thee:
But, when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge
Of thine own cause.
Fab. Good madam, hear me speak;
And let no quarrel, nor no brawl to come,
Taint the condition of this present hour,
Which I have wonder’d at. In hope it shall not,
Most freely I confess, myself, and Toby,
Set this device against Malvolio here.
Upon some stubborn and uncourteous parts
We had conceiv’d against him: Maria writ
The letter, at sir Toby’s great importance:
In recompense whereof, he hath married her.
How with a sportful malice it was follow’d,
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge;
If that the injuries be justly weigh’d,
That have on both sides past.

Oh. Alas, poor fool! how have they baffled thee!
Clo. Why, some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrown upon them. I was one, sir, in this interlude; one sir Topas, sir; but that’s all one:—By the Lord, fool, I am not mad;—But do you remember? Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? an you smile not, he’s gagged: And thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.
Mal. I’ll be revenged on the whole pack of you.

Exit.

Oli. He hath been most notoriously abused.
Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace:—He hath not told us of the captain yet;
When that is known and golden time convents,
A solemn combination shall be made
Of our dear souls—Mean time, sweet sister,
We will not part from hence.—Cesario, come;
For so you shall be while you are a man;

But, when in other habits you are seen,
Orsino’s mistress, and his fancy’s queen. [Exeunt.

SONG.
Clo. When that I was and a little tiny boy,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man’s estate,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
Gainst knave and thief men shut their gate,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas! to wife,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
By swaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my bed,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
With toaste-pots still had drunken head,
For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world begun,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
But that’s all one, our play is done,
And we’ll strive to please you every day.

[Exit.

SCENE,—Vienna.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Escalus, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke. Escalus,—Escal. My lord.

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold, Would seem in me to affect speech and discourse; Since I am put to know, that your own science Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice My strength can give you: Then no more remains But that to your sufficiency, as your worth is able, And let them work. The nature of our people, Our city's institutions, and the terms For common justice, you are as pregnant in, As art and practice hath enriched any That we remember: There is our commission, From which we would not have you warp.—Call I say, bid come before us Angelo.—[hither, Enter an ATTENDANT.

What figure of us think you he will bear? For you must know, we have with special soul Elected him our absence to supply; Lent him our terror, drest him with our love; And given his deputation all the organs Of our own power: What think you of it? Escal. If any in Vienna be of worth To undergo such ample grace and honour, It is lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duke. Look, where he comes. Ang. Always obedient to your grace's will, I come to know your pleasure.

Duke. Angelo, There is a kind of character in thy life, That, to the observer, doth thy history Fully unfold: Thyself and thy belongings Are not thine own so proper, as to waste Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee. Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do; Not light them for themselves: for if our virtues Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touched But to fine issues: nor nature never lends The smallest scruple of her excellence, But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor, Both thanks and use. But I do bend my speech To one that can my part in him advertise; Hold therefore, Angelo; In our remove, be thou at full self: Mortality and mercy in Vienna Live in thy tongue and heart: Old Escalus, Though first in question, is thy secondary: Take thy commission.

Ang. Now, good my lord, Let there be some more test made of my metal, Before so noble and so great a figure Be stamped upon it.

Duke. No more evasion: We have with a leaven'd and prepared choice Proceeded to you; therefore take your honours. Our haste from hence is of so quick condition, That it prefers itself, and leaves unquestioned Matters of needful value. We shall write to you, As time and our concernings shall imprompte, How it goes with us; and do look to know What doth befall you here. So, fare you well: To the hopeful execution do I leave you Of your commissions.

Ang. Yet, give leave, my lord That we may bring you something on the way.

Duke. My haste may not admit it; Nor need you, on mine honour, have to do With any scruple: your scope is as mine own: So to enforce, or qualify the laws.
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand; I'll privily away: I love the people, But do not like to stage me to their eyes: Though it do well, I do not relish well Their loud applause, and even vehement: Nor do I think the man of safe discretion, That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes! Escal. Lead forth, and bring you back in happiness.

Duke. I thank you: Fare you well. [Exit. Escal. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave To have free speech with you; and it concerns me To look into the bottom of my place: A power I have; but of what strength and nature, I am not yet instructed.

Ang. 'Tis so with me:—Let us withdraw together, And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point. Escal. I'll wait upon your honour. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke, with the other dudes, come not to composition with the king of Hungary, why, then all the dudes fall upon the king.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the king of Hungary's!

2 Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou considerest like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the ten commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

2 Gent. Thou shalt not steal?

Lucio. Ay, that he razed.

1 Gent. Why, 'twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions; they put forth to steal: There's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, doth relish the petition well that prays for peace.

1 Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for, I think, thou never wast where grace was said.

2 Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1 Gent. What? in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion, or in any language.

1 Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay: why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy: As for example; Thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

1 Gent. Well, there went but a pair of sheers between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet: Thou art the list.

1 Gent. And thou the velvet: thou art good velvet; thou art a three-piled piece, I warrant thee: I had as lief be a list of an English kersey, as be piled, as thou art piled, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.

1 Gent. I think, I have done myself wrong; have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou hast; whether thou art tainted, or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where madam Mitigation comes! I have purchased as many diseases under her roof, as come to—

2 Gent. To what, I pray?

1 Gent. Judge.

2 Gent. To three thousand dollars a-year.

1 Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

1 Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error; I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound, as things that are hollow: thy bones ar hollow: impiety has made a feast of thee.

Enter Bawd.

1 Gent. How now? Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

Bawd. Well, well; there's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

1 Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Bawd. Marry, sir, that's Claudio, signior Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to prison! 'tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know, 'tis so: I saw him arrested; saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head's to be chopped off.

Lucio. But, after all this foolish, I would not have it so: Art thou sure of this?

Bawd. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promised to meet me two hours since; and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

2 Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1 Gent. But most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away; let's go learn the truth of it.

[Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallowes, and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk. How now? what's the news with you?

Enter Clown.

Clo. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Bawd. Well: what has he done?

Clo. A woman.

Bawd. But what's his offence?

Clo. Grooping for trouts in a peculiar river.

Bawd. What, is there a maid with child by him?

Clo. No; but there's a woman with maid by him: You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Bawd. What proclamation, man?

Clo. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be plucked down.

Bawd. And what shall become of those in the city?

Clo. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burguer put in for them.

Bawd. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull'd down?

Clo. To the ground, mistress.

Bawd. Why, here's a change, indeed, in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Clo. Come; fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients: though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still. Courage; there will be pity taken on you: you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service you will be considered.
Lucio. I warrant, it is: and thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

Claud. I have done so, but he's not to be found. I pr'ythee, Lucio, do me this kind service; this day my sister should the cloister enter, and there receive her approbation: Acquaint her with the danger of my state; implore her, in my voice, that she make friends to the strict deputy; bid herself assay him; I have great hope in that: for in her youth there is a prone and speechless dialect, such as moves men; beside, she hath prosperous art when she will play with reason and discourse, and well she can persuade.

Lucio. I pray, she may: as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition; as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack. I'll to her.

Claud. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

Lucio. Within two hours,—

Claud. Come, officer, away. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Monastery.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No; holy father; throw away that thought; believe not that the dribbling dart of love can pierce a complete bosom: why I desire thee to give me secret harbour, hath a purpose more grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends of burning youth.

Fri. May your grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you how I have ever loved the life removed, and held in idle price to haunt assemblies, where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keeps. I have deliver'd to lord Angelo (a man of stricture, and firm abstinence.) My absolute power and place here in Vienna, and he supposes me travell'd to Poland; for so have I swear'd it in the common ear, and so it is received: now, pious sir, you will demand of me, why I do this?

Fri. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes, and most biting laws, (the needful bits and curbs for head-strong steeds,) which for these fourteen years we have let sleep; even like an o'er-grown lion in a cave, that goes not out to prey: now, as fond fathers having bound up the threat'ning twigs of birch, only to stick it in their children's sight, for terror, not to use; in time the rod becomes more mock'd than fear'd: so our decrees, dead to inflection, to themselves are dead; and liberty plucks justice by the nose; the baby beats the nurse, and quite a' thwart goes all decorum.

Fri. It rested in your grace to unloose this tied-up justice, when you pleas'd: and it in you more dreadful would have seem'd, than in lord Angelo.

Duke. I do fear, too dreadful: Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope, 'twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them. For what I bid them do: for we bid this be done, when evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment. Therefore, indeed, my
I have on Angelo imposed the office; [father,
Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home,
And yet my nature never in the sight,
To do it slander: And to behold his sway,
I will, as 'twere a brother of your order,
Visit both prince and people: therefore, I pr'ythee,
Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear me
Like a true friar. More reasons for this action,
At our more leisure shall I render you;
Only, this one:—Lord Angelo is precise;
Stands at a guard with envy; scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: Hence shall we see,
If power change purpose, what our seemers be. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Nunnery.

Enter Isabella and Francisca.

Isab. And have you nuns no further privileges?
Fran. Are not these large enough?
Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more;
But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votaries of St. Clare.

Lucio. Ho! Peace be in this place! [Within.
Isab. Who's that which calls?

Fran. It is a man's voice: Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him;
You may, I may not; you are yet unsworn:
When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men,
But in the presence of the prioresse:
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face;
Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.
He calls again; I pray you answer him.

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is't that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be; as those check-roses
Proclaim you are no less! Can you so steady me
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place, and the fair sister
To her unhappy brother Claudio?

Isab. Why her unhappy brother? let me ask
The rather, for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella, and his sister.

Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets
Not to be weary with you, he's in prison. [you.

Isab. Woe me! For what?

Lucio. For that, which if myself might be his judge,
He should receive his punishment in thanks:
He hath got his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make me not your story.

Lucio. It is true.

Isab. I would not—though 'tis my familiar sin.
With maidens to seem the lapwing, and to jest
Tongue far from heart,—play with all virgins so:
I hold you as a thing nasty'd, and sainted;

By your renouncement, an immortal spirit;

And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a saint.

Isab. You do blaspheme the good, in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Frewness and truth,
This thus:
Your brother and his lover have embraced:
As those that feed grow full; as blossoming time,
That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison; even so her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full tithe and husbandry.

Isab. Some one with child by him?—My cousin
Lucio. Is she your cousin? [Juliet?

Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their
By vain thought apt affectation. [names,

Lucio. She it is.

Isab. O, let him marry her!

Lucio. This is the point.

The duke is very strangely gone from hence;
Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,
In hand, and hope of action: but we do learn
By those that know the very nerves of state,
His givings out were of an infinite distance
From his true-meaned design. Upon his place,
And with full line of his authority,
Governs lord Angelo: a man, whose blood
Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense;
But doth rebate and blust his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study, and fast.
He (to give fear to use and liberty,
Which have, for long, run by the hideous law,
As mice by lions,) hath pick'd out an act,
Under whose heavy sense your brother's life
Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it;
And follows close the rigour of the statute,
To make him an example; all hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo: and that's my pith
Of business 'twixt you and your poor brother.

Isab. Dost he so seek his life?

Lucio. Has censur'd him
Already; and, as I hear, the provost hath
A warrant for his execution.

Isab. Alas! what poor ability's in me
To do him good?

Lucio. Assay the power you have.

Isab. My power! Alas! I doubt,—

Lucio. Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt: Go to lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,
All their petitions are as freely theirs
As they themselves would owe them.

Isab. I'll see what I can do.

Lucio. But, speedily.

Isab. I will about it straight;
No longer staying but to give the mother
Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you:
Commend me to my brother: soon at night
I'll send him certain word of my success.

Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Isab. Good sir, adieu. [Exeunt
ACT II.

SCENE I. —A Hall in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, a Justice, Provost, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ang. We must not make a scare-crow of the law, Setting it up to fear the birds of prey, And let it keep one shape, till custom make it Their perch, and not their terror.

Escal. Ay, but yet Let us be keen, and rather cut a little, Than fall, and bruise to death: Alas! this gentleman, Whom I would save, had a most noble father. Let but your honour know, (Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue,) That, in the working of your own affections, Had time cohered with place, or place with wishing, Or that the resolute acting of your blood Could have attain'd the effect of your own purpose, Whether you had not sometime in your life Err'd in that point which now you censure him, And pull'd the law upon you.

Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus, Another thing to fall. I do not say, The jury, passing on the prisoner's life, May, in the sworn twelve, have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try: What's open made to justice, That justice seizes. What know the laws, That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very pregnant, The jewel that we find, we stoop and take it, Because we see it; but what we do not see, We tread upon, and never think of it. You may not so extenuate his offence, For I have had such faults; but rather tell me, When I, that censure him, do so offend, Let mine own judgment pattern out my death, And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.

Ang. Where is the provost?

Prov. Here, if it like your honour.

Ang. See that Claudio Be executed by nine to-morrow morning: Bring him his confessor, let him be prepared; For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage.

[Exit Provost.]

Escal. Well, heaven forgive him! and forgive us all!

Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall: Some run from brakes of vice, and answer none; And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Froth, Clown, Officers, &c.

Elb. Come, bring them away: if these be good people in a common-weal, that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law; bring them away.

Ang. How now, sir! What's your name? and what's the matter?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke's constable, and my name is Elbow; I do lean upon justice, sir, and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors? Well; what benefactors are they? are they not malefactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are: but precise villains they are, that I am sure of; and void of all profanation in the world, that good christians ought to have.

Escal. This comes off well; here's a wise officer.

Ang. Go to; What quality are they of? Elbow is your name? Why dost thou not speak, Elbow?

Clo. He cannot, sir; he's out at elbow.

Ang. What are you, sir?

Elb. He, sir? a tapster, sir; parcel-bawd; one that serves a bad woman; whose house, sir, was, as they say, pluck'd down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house too.

Escal. How know you that?

Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before heaven and your honour,— Escal. How! thy wife?

Elb. Ay, sir; who, I thank heaven, is an honest woman,—

Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pitty of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?

Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinaly given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by mistress Overdone's means: but as she spit in his face, so she defied him.

Clo. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man, prove it.

Escal. Do you hear how he misplaces?

[To Angelo.]
Clo. Sir, she came in great with child; and prolonging (saving your honour's reverence,) for strew'd prunes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence; your honours have seen such dishes; they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

Escal. Go to, go to; no matter for the dish, sir.

Clo. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right: but, to the point: As I say, this mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great bellied, and longling, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the dish, as I said, master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly:—for, as you know, master Froth, I could not give you three-pence again.

Froth. No, indeed.

Clo. Very well: you being then, if you be remembers't, cracking the stones of the aforesaid prunes.

Froth. Ay, so I did, indeed.

Clo. Why, very well: I telling you then, if you be remembers't, that such a one, and such a one, were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you.

Froth. All this is true.

Clo. Why, very well then.

Escal. Come, you are a tedious fool: to the purpose.—What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.
Clo. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.
Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.
Clo. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave: And, I beseech you, look into master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pounds a year;
whose father died at Hallowmas—Was't not at Hallowmas, master Froth?
Froth. All-halloweend eve.
Clo. Why, very well; I hope here be truths:
He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir;—
'twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit; Have you not?
Froth. I have so; because it is an open room,
and good for winter.
Clo. Why, very well then,—I hope here be truths.
Aug. This will last out a night in Russia,
When nights are longest there: I'll take my leave,
And leave you to the hearing of the cause;
Hoping, you'll find good cause to whip them all.
Escal. I think no less: Good morrow to your lordship. [Exit ANGELICO.
Now, sir, come on: What was done to Elbow's wife, once more?
Clo. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.
Eli. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man called your wife.
Clo. I beseech you your honour, ask me.
Escal. Well, sir: what did this gentleman to her?
Clo. I beseech you sir, look in this gentleman's face:—Good master Froth, look upon his honour;
'tis for a good purpose: Do thy honour mark his face?
Escal. Ay, sir, very well.
Clo. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.
Escal. Well, I do so.
Clo. Doth your honour see any harm in his face?
Escal. Why, no.
Clo. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him: Good then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.
Escal. He's in the right: Constable, what say you to it?
Eli. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.
Clo. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.
Eli. Varlet, thou liest; thou liest, wicked varlet:
the time is yet to come, that she was ever respected,
with man, woman, or child.
Clo. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.
Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice, or Iniquity?—Is this true?
Eli. O thou cafiai! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her, before I was married to her? If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me, thou, the duke's officer:—Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.
Escal. If he took you a box o' th' ear, you might have your action of slander too.
Eli. Marry, I thank your good worship for it:
What is't your worship's pleasure I should do with this wicked cafiai?
Clo. I thank your worship for your good counsel; but I shall follow it, as the flesh and fortune shall better determine.
Whip me? No, no; let carman whip his jade; The valiant heart's not whipt out of his trade. [Exit.
Escal. Come hither to me, master, Elbow; come hither, master Constable. How long have you been in this place of constable?
Elb. Seven year and a half, sir.
Escal. I thought, by your readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time: You say, seven years together?
Elb. And a half, sir.
Escal. Alas! it hath been great pains to you! They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't: Are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?
Elb. Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters: as they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them; I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.
Escal. Look you, bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.
Elb. To your worship's house, sir?
Escal. To my house: Fare you well. [Exit
Elb. [within.] What's o'clock, think you?
Just. Eleven, sir.
Escal. I pray you home to dinner with me.
Just. I humbly thank you.
Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio; But there's no remedy.
Just. Lord Angelo is severe.
Escal. It is but needful:
Mercy is not itself, that oft looks so;
Pardon is still the nurse of second woe:
But yet,—Poor Claudio!—There's no remedy.
Come, sir. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Provost and a Servant.
Serv. He's hearing of a cause; he will come I'll tell him of you. [straight.
Prov. Pray you do. [Exit Servant.] I'll know His pleasure; may be, he will relent: Alas, He hath but as offended in a dream! All seets, all ages, smack of this vice; and he I o' die for it!—

Enter Angelo

Ang. Go to; let that be mine:
Do you your office, or give up your place, And you shall well be spared.
Prov. I crave your honour's pardon.—
What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet? She's very near her hour.
Ang. Dispose of her To some more fitter place; and that with speed.
Re-enter Servant.
Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemned, Desires access to you.
Ang. Hath he a sister?
Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid, And to be shortly of a sisterhood, If not already.
Ang. Well, let her be admitted. [Exit Servant.

See you, the fornicatress be remov'd; Let her have needful, but not lavish, means; There shall be order for it.

Enter Lucio and Isabella.
Prov. Save your honour! [Offering to retire.
Ang. Stay a little while,—[To Isab.] You are welcome: What's your will?
Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour, Please but your honour hear me.
Ang. Well; what's your suit?
Isab. There is a vice, that most I do abhor, And most desire should meet the blow of justice; For which I would not plead, but that I must; For which I must not plead, but that I am At war 'twixt will, and will not.
Ang. Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die: I do beseech you, let it be his fault, And not my brother.
Prov. Heaven give thee moving graces.
Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it! Why, every fault's condemn'd, ere it be done: Mine were the very cipher of a function, To find the faults, whose fine stands in record, And let go by the actor.
Isab. O just, but severe law! I had a brother then.—Heaven keep your honour! [Retiring.
Lucio. [To Isab.] Give't not o'er so: to him again, intreat him; Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown; You are too cold; if you should need a pin, You could not with more tame a tongue desire it: To him, I say.
Isab. Must he needs die?
Ang. Maiden, no remedy.
Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him,
And neither heaven, nor man, grieve at the mercy. Ang. I will not do.
Isab. But can you, if you would?
Ang. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do.
Isab. But might you do't, and do the world no wrong,
If so your heart were touched with that remorse As mine is to him?
Ang. He's sentenced; 'tis too late.
Lucio. You are too cold. [To Isabella
Isab. Too late? why, no; I, that do speak a word, May call it back again: Well, believe this, No ceremony that to great ones 'longs, Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword, The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe, Become them with one half so good a grace. As mercy does. If he had been as you, And you as he, you would have slit like him; But he, like you, would not have been so stern.
Ang. Pray you, begone.
Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency, And you were Isabel: should it then be thus? No; I would tell what 'twere to be a judge, And what a prisoner.
Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law, And you but waste your words.
Isab. Alas! alas!

With all the souls that were, were forfeit once;
And He that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy: How would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that;
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.

Ang. Be you content, fair maid;
It is the law, not I, condemns your brother:
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should be thus with him;—he must die to-morrow.

Isab. To-morrow? O, that's sudden! Spare him,
He's not prepared for death! Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season; shall we serve heaven
With less respect than we do minister
To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink
Who is it that hath died for this offence? [you:
There's many has committed it.

Lucio. Ay, well said.

Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it had hatched:
Those many had not dared to do that evil,
If the first man that did the edict infringe,
Had answered for his deed: now, 'tis awake;
Takes note of what is done; and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils,
(Either now, or by remissness new-conceived,
And so in progress to be hatched and born,) are Now to have no successive degrees,*
But, where they live, to end.

Isab. Yet show some pity.

Ang. I show it most of all, when I show justice;
For he that pity those I do not know,
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall;
And do him right, that answering one foul wrong,
Lives not to act another. Be satisfied;
Your brother dies to-morrow;—be content.

Isab. So you must be the first, that gives this sentence;
And he, that suffers: O, it is excellent.
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

Lucio. That's well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder
As Jove himself does, Jove would ne'er be quiet,
For every peeling, petty officer,
Would use his heaven for thunder: nothing but Merciful heaven! [thunder.
Thou rather, with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt,
Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle;—O, but man, proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority;
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
His glassy essence,—like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep; who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.

Lucio. O, to him, to him, wench: he will relent;
He's coming, I perceive't.

Prov. Pray heaven, she win him!

Isab. We cannot weigh our brother with ourselves:
Great men may jest with saints: 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation.

Lucio. Thou'rt in the right, girl; more o' that.

Isab. That in the captain's but a choleric word,
Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me?

Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,
Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice o' the top: Go to your bosom;
Knock there; and ask your heart, what it doth know
That's like my brother's fault: if it confess
A natural guiltiness, such as is his,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

Ang. She speaks, and 'tis such sense, that my sense breeds with it.—Fare you well.

Isab. Marry my lord, turn back.

Ang. I will bethink me:—Come again to-morrow.

Isab. Hark, how I'll bribe you: Good my lord, turn back.

Ang. How! bribe me?

Isab. Ay, with such gifts, that heaven shall share with you.

Lucio. You had marr'd all else.

Isab. Not with fond shekels of the tested gold:
Or stones, whose rates are either rich, or poor,
As fancy values them: but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven, and enter there,
Ere sun-rise: prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maids, whose minds are delicate
To nothing temporal.

Ang. Well; come to me
To-morrow.

Lucio. Go to; it is well; away.

[Aside to ISABEL.

Isab. Heaven keep your honour safe!

Ang. Amen: for I
Am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.

Isab. At what hour to-morrow
Shall I attend your lordship?

Ang. At any time 'fore noon.

[Exeunt Lucio, Isabella, and PROVOST.

Ang. From thee; even from thy virtue!—
What's this? what's this? Is this her fault, or mine?
The tempter or the tempted, who sins most? Ha! Not she; nor doth she tempt: but it is I,
That lying by the violet, in the sun,
Do, as the carrioes, not as the flower,
Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our sense
Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground enough,
Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,
And pitch our evils there? O, fye, fye, fye!
What dost thou? or what art thou, Angelo?
Dost thou desire her fouly, for those things
That make her good? O, let her brother live:
Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges steal themselves. What? do I love
That I desire to hear her speak again,
Hear, and feast upon her eyes? What is't I dream on?
O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue: never could the trumpet,
With all her double vigour, art, and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite:—Ever till now,
When men were fond, I smiled and wondered how.

[Exit.
SCENE III.—A Room in a Prison.

Enter Duke, habited like a Friar, and Provost.

Duke. Hail to you, provost! so, I think you are.

Prov. I am the provost: What's your will, good friar?

Duke. Bound by my charity, and my bless'd order, I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison: do me the common right To let me see them; and to make me know The nature of their crimes, that I may minister To them accordingly.

Prov. I would do more than that, if more were needful.

Enter Juliet.

Look, here comes one; a gentlewoman of mine, Who falling in the flames of her own youth, Hath blistered her report: She is with child; And he that got it, sentenced: a young man More fit to do another such offence, Than die for this.

Duke. When must he die?

Prov. As I do think, to-morrow.—I have provided for you; stay awhile, [To Juliet. And you shall be conducted.

Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry? Juliet. I do; and bear the shame most patiently. Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience, And try your penitence, if it be sound, Or hollowly put on. Juliet. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wronged you?

Juliet. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

Duke. So then, it seems, your most offenceful act Was mutually committed?

Juliet. Mutually.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his. Juliet. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but lest you do repent, As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,— Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven; Showing, we would not spare heaven, as we love it, But as we stand in fear,— Juliet. I do repent me, as it is an evil; And take the shame with joy.

Duke. There rest. Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow, And I am going with instruction to him.—

Grace go with you! Benedicite! [Exit. Juliet. Must die to-morrow! O, injurious love, That respires me a life, whose very comfort Is still a dying horror!

Prov. Tis pity of him! [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and say To several subjects: heaven hath my empty words: Whilst my invention, hearing not my tongue, Anchors on Isabel: Heaven in my mouth, As if I did but only chew his name; And in my heart, the strong and swelling evil Of my conception: The state whereon I studied,

Is like a good thing, being often read, Grown fear'd and tedious; yea, my gravity, Wherein (let no man hear me) I take pride, Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume, Which the air beats for vain. O place! O form! How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit, Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls To thy false seeming? Blood, thou still art blood. Let's write good angel on the devil's horn, 'Tis not the devil's crest.

Enter Servant.

How now, who's there?

Serv. One Isabel, a sister, Desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv. O heavens! Why does my blood thus must to my heart: Making both it unable for itself, And dispossessing all the other parts Of necessary fitness? So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons; Come all to help him, and so stop the air By which he should revive: and even so The general, subject to a well-wished king, Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love Must needs appear offence.

Enter Isabella.

How now, fair maid?

Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.

Ang. That you might know it, would much better please me, [live. Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot Isab. Even so?—Heaven keep your honour! [Retiring: Ang. Yet may he live a while; and it may be, As long as you, or I: yet he must die.

Isab. Under your sentence?

Ang. Yea.

Isab. When, I beseech you? that in his reprieve, Longer, or shorter, he may be so fitted, That his soul sicken not.

Ang. Ha! Foe these filthy vices! It were as To pardon him, that hath from nature stolen (good A man already made, as to remit Their saucy sweetness, that do coin heaven's image, In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy Falsely to take away a life true made, As to put mettle in restrained means, To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.

Ang. Say you so? then I shall poise you quickly, Which had you rather, That the most just law Now take your brother's life; or, to redeem him, Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness, As she that he hath stained?

Isab. Sir, believe this, I had rather give my body than my soul.

Ang. I talk not of your soul; Our compell'd sins Stand more for number than accompt.

Isab. How say you?

Ang. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak Against the thing I say. Answer to this;— I, now the voice of the recorded law, Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life: Might there not be a charity in sin, To save this brother's life?

Isab. Please you to do't.
I'll take it as a peril to my soul,
It is no sin at all, but charity.

Ang. Plea'sd you to do't, at peril of your soul,
Were equal poise of sin and charity.

Isab. That I do beg his life, if it be sin,
Heaven, let me hear it! you granting of my suit,
If that be sin, I'll make it my morn prayer
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your answer.

Ang. Nay, but hear me:
Your sense pursues not mine: either you are ignorant,
Or seem so, craftily; and that's not good.

Isab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But graciously to know I am no better.

Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright,
When it doth tax itself: as these black masks
Proclaim an ensnared beauty ten times louder
Than beauty could display. — But mark me;
To be received plain, I'll speak more gross:
Your brother is to die.

Isab. So.

Ang. And his offence is so, as it appears Accountant to the law upon that pain.

Isab. True.

Ang. Admit no other way to save his life,
(As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the loss of question,) that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desired of such a person,
Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-binding law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this supposed, or else let him suffer;
What would you do?

Isab. As much for my poor brother, as myself:
That is, Were I under the terms of death,
The impression of keen whip I'd wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death, as to a bed
That longing I have been sick for, ere I'd yield
My body up to shame.

Ang. Then must your brother die.

Isab. And 'twere the cheaper way
Better it were, a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die for ever.

Ang. Were not you then as cruel as the sentence
That you have slandered so?

Isab. Ignominy in ransom, and free pardon,
Are of two houses: lawful mercy is Nothing akin to foul redemption.

Ang. You seem'd of late to make the law a tyrant;
And rather proved the sliding of your brother
A merriment than a vice.

Isab. O, pardon me, my lord; it oft falls out,
To have what we'd have, we speak not what we mean:
I something do excuse the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love.

Ang. We are all frail.

Isab. Else let my brother die,
If not a foedary, but only he,
Owe, and succeed by weakness.

Ang. Nay, women are frail too.

Isab. Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves;
Which are as easy brok as they make forms.

Women! — Help heaven! men their creation mar
In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail;
For we are soft as our complexions are,
And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I think it well:
And from this testimony of your own sex,
(Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger Than faults may shake our frames,) let me be bold; —
I do arrest your words; Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
If you be one, (as you are well expressed
By all external warrants,) show it now,
By putting on the destined livery.

Isab. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord,
Let me intreat you speak the former language.

Ang. Plainly conceive, I love you.

Isab. My brother did love Juliet; and you tell me,
That he shall die for it.

Ang. He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

Isab. I know, your virtue hath a licence in't,
Which seems a little fouler than it is,
To pluck on others.

Ang. Believe me, on mine honour,
My words express my purpose.

Isab. Ha! little honour to be much believed,
And most pernicious purpose! — Seeming, seem
I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for': [ing
Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
Or, with an outstretched'd throat, I'll tell the world
Aloud, what man thou art.

Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unsoil'd name, the austereness of my life,
My vouch against you, and my place i' the state,
Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifle in your own report,
And smell of calumny. I have begun;
And now I give my sensual race the rein:
Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite;
Lay by all witty, and profliquis brashes,
That banish what they sue for; redeem thy brother,
By yielding up thy body to my will;
Or else he must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
To lingering sufferance: answer me to-morrow;
Or, by the affection that now guides me most,
I'll prove a tyrant to him: As for you,
Say what you can, my false o'erweighs your true.

[Exit.

Isab. To whom shall I complain? Did I tell this,
Who would believe me? O perilous mouths,
That bear in them one and the self-same tongue,
Either of condemnation or approb
Bidding the law make court'sy to their will;
Hocking both right and wrong to the appetite,
To follow as it draws! I'll to my brother:
Though he hath fallen by prompture of the blood,
Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour,
That had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up,
Before his sister should her body stoop
To such abhorred pollution.
Then Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die:
More than our brother is our chastity.
I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request,
And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest.

[Exit.}
ACT III.

Isab. Why, as all comforts are; most good in Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven, [deed: Intends you for his swift ambassador, Where you shall be an everlasting leiger: Therefore your best appointment make with speed; To-morrow you set on.]

Claud. Is there no remedy? Isab. None, but such remedy, as, to save a head, To cleave a heart in twain.

Claud. But is there any? Isab. Yes, brother, you may live: There is a devilish mercy in the judge, If you'll implore it, that will free your life, Butetter you till death.

Claud. Perpetual durance? Isab. Ay, just, perpetual durance; a restraint, Though all the world's vastidity you had, To a determined scope.

Claud. But in what nature? Isab. In such a one as (you consenting to't) Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear And leave you naked.

Claud. Let me know the point. Isab. O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake, Lest thou a feverous life should'st entertain, And six or seven winters more respect Than a perpetual honour. Dar'st thou die? The sense of death is most in apprehension; And the poor beetle that we tread upon, In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great As when a giant dies.

Claud. Why give you me this shame? Think you I can a resolution fetch From flowery tenderness? If I must die, I will encounter darkness as a bride, And hug it in mine arms.

Isab. There spake my brother; there my father's grave Did utter forth a voice! Yes, thou must die; Thou art too noble to conserve a life In base appliances. This outward-sainted deputy,— Whose settled visage and deliberate word Nips youth 't the head, and follies doth ennue, As falcon doth the fowl,—is yet a devil; His filth within being cast, he would appear A pond as deep as hell.

Claud. The princely Angelo? Isab. O, tis the cunning liver of hell, The damned' st body to invest and cover In princely guards! Dost thou think, Claudio, If I would yield him my virginity, Thou might'st be freed?

Claud. Thou shalt not do't. Isab. O, were it but my life, I'd throw it down for your deliverance As frankly as a pin.

Claud. Thanks, dear Isabel. Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to morrow.

Claud. Yes.—Has he affections in him, That thus can make him bite the law by the nose;
When he would force it? Sure it is no sin;
Or of the deadly seven it is the least.
Isab. Which is the least?
Claud. If it were damnable, he, being so wise,
Why, would he for the momentary trick
Be needlessly fined?—O Isabel!
Isab. What says my brother?
Claud. Death is a fearful thing.
Isab. And shamed life a hateful.
Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
[where;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick-ribbed ice;
To be imprison’d in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent world; or to be worse than worst
Of those, that lawless and uncertain thoughts
Imagine howling!—’tis too horrible!
The rarest and most loathed worldly life,
That age, acher, penury, and imprisonment
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death.
Isab. Alas! alas!
Claud. Sweet sister, let me live:
What sin you do to save a brother’s life,
Nature dispenses with the deed so far,
That it becomes a virtue.
Isab. O, you beast!
O, faithless coward! O, dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is’t not a kind of incest, to take life
From thine own sister’s shame? What should I think?
Heaven shield, my mother play’d my father fair!
For such a warped slip of wilderness
Ne’er issued from his blood. Take my defance:
Die; perish! might but my bending down
Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed
I’ll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.
Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.
Isab. O fye, fye, fye!
Thy sin’s not accidental, but a trade:
Merey to thee would prove itself a bawd:
’Tis best that thou diest quickly.
[Going.
Claud. O hear me, Isabella.
[Re-enter Duke.
Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one word.
Isab. What is your will?
Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you: the satisfaction I would require is likewise your own benefit.
Isab. I have no superfluous leisure; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you a while.
Duke. [To Claudio aside.] Son, I have overheard
what hath past between you and your sister.
Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an essay of her virtue, to practise his judgment with the disposition of natures; she, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive: I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true;
therefore prepare yourself to death: Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible: tomorrow you must die; go to your knees, and make ready.
Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal; and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.

Duke. This fore-named maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection; his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo; answer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point: only refer yourself to this advantage,—first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience: this being granted in course, now follows all. We shall advise this wronged maid to stand up your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense: and here, by this, is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Marianna advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled. The maid will I frame, and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already; and, I trust, it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up: Hasten you speedily to Angelo; if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to St. Luke's; there, at the mosted grange, resides this dejected Marianna: At that place call upon me; and despatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort: Fare you well, good father.

[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE. II.—The Street before the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar; to him Elbow, Clown, and Officers.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

Duke. O, heavens! what stuff is here?

Clo. 'Twas never merry world, since, of two usuries, the merriest was put down, and the worer allow'd by order of law a fur'd gown to keep him warm; and fur'd with fox and lamb-skins, too, to signify, that craft, being richer than innocence, stands for the facing.

Elb. Come your way, sir:—Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father: What offence hath this man made you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law; and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, which we have sent to the deputy.

Duke. Fye, sirrah; a bawd, a wicked bawd! The evil that thou causest to be done, That is thy means to live: Do thou but think What 'tis to cram a maw, or clothe a back, From such a filthy vice: say to thyself,— From their abominable and beastly touches I drink. I eat, array myself, and live.

Canst thou believe thy living is a life, So stinkingly depending? Go, mend, go, mend.

Clo. Indeed, it does stink in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove —— [for sin,

Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison, officer; Correction and instruction must both work Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning: the deputy cannot abide a whoremaster: if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be, Free from our faults, as faults from seeming free!

Enter Lucio.

Elb. His neck will come to your waist, a cord, sir.

Clo. I spy comfort; I cry bail: Here's a gentleman, and a friend of mine.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey? What, at the heels of Caesar? Art thou led in triumph? What, is there none of Tygmalion's images, newly made woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket, and extracting it clutch'd? What reply? Ha? What say'st thou to this tune, matter, and method? If not drown'd! the last rain? Ha? What say'st thou to this trot? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? Or how? The trick of it?

Duke. Still thus, and thus! still worse!

Lucio. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress? Procurers she still? Ha?

Clo. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is herself in the tub.

Lucio. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it: it must be so: Ever your fresh whore, and your powder'd bawd: An unshunn'd consequence; it must be so: Art going to prison, Pompey?

Clo. Yes, faith, Sir.

Lucio. Why, 'tis not amiss, Pompey: Farewell! Go; say, I sent thee thither. For debt, Pompey: Or how?

Elb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. Well, then imprison him: If imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why, 'tis his right: Bawd is he, doubtless, and of antiquity too: bawd born. Farewell, good Pompey: Command me to the prison, Pompey: You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Clo. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage: if you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more: Adieu, trusty Pompey,—Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey? Ha?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Clo. You will not bai me then, sir?

Lucio. Then, Pompey? nor now.—What news abroad, friar? What news?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Lucio. Go,—to kennel, Pompey, go:

[Exeunt Elbow, Clown, and Officers.

What news, friar, of the duke?

Duke. I know none: Can you tell me of any?

Lucio. Some say he is with the emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: But where is he, think you?
Duke. I know not where: But wheresoever, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him, to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence: he puts transgression to't.

Duke. He does well in't.

Lucio. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him: something too crabb'd that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied: but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say, this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after the downright way of creation: Is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made then?

Lucio. Some report, a sea-maid spawn'd him:—

Some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes:—

But it is certain, that when he makes water, his urine is congeal'd ice; that I know to be true: and he is a motion ungenerative, that's infallible.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir; and speak apace.

Lucio. Why what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a cod-piece, to take away the life of a man? Would the duke, that is absent, have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand: He had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women; he was not inclined that way.

Lucio. O, sir, you are deceived.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Lucio. Who? not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty;—and his use was, to put a ducat in her clack-dish: the duke had crotchets in him: He would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his: A shy fellow was the duke: and, I believe, I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What, I pr'ythee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No,—pardon;—'tis a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips: but this I can let you understand,—The greater file of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Duke. Wise? why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking; the very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testified in his own bringings forth, and he shall appear to the curious, a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier: Therefore, you speak unskilfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darken'd in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love takes but better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, (as our prayers are he may,) let me desire you to make your answer before him: If it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it: I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name?

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio; well known to the duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. A bawd, sir, the duke will return no more; or you imagine me too unfruitful an opposition. But, indeed, I can do you little harm: you'll forswear this again.

Lucio. I'll be hanged first: thou art deceiv'd in me, friar. But no more of this: Canst thou tell, if Claudio die to-morrow, or no?

Duke. Why should he die, sir?

Lucio. Why? for filling a bottle with a tun-dish. I would, the duke, we talk of, were return'd again: this ungenitor'd agent will unpeople the province with continuency; sparrows must not build in his house-caves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answer'd; he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd! Marry, this Claudio is condemn'd for untrussing. Farewell, good friar: I pr'ythee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's now past it; yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic: say, that I said so.

Farewell. [Exit.]

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality Can censure 'scape; back-wounding calumny The whitest virtue strikes: What king so strong, Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? But who comes here?

Enter Escalus, Provost, Bawd, and Officers.

Escal. Go, away with her to prison.

Bawd. Good my lord, be good to me; your honour is accounted a merciful man: good my lord.

Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind? This would make mercy swear, and play the tyrant.

Prov. A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honour.

Bawd. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me: mistress Kate Keep-down was with child by him in the duke's time, he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob: I have kept it myself; and see how he goes about to abuse me.

Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much licence:—let him be called before us.—Away with her to prison: Go to; no more words. [Exeunt Bawd and Officers.] Provost, my brother Angelo will not be alter'd, Claudio must die to-morrow: let him be furnish'd with divines, and have all charitable preparation: if my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

Prov. So please you, this friar hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of death.

Escal. Good even, good father.

Duke. Bliss and goodness on you!

Escal. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is To use it for my time: I am a brother [now Of gracious order, late come from the see,] In special business from his holiness.

Escal. What news abroad i' the world?

Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. There is scarce truth enough alive, to make societies secure; but security enough to make fellowships accur'd: much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

Escal. One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself.

Duke. What pleasure was he given to?

Escal. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at anything which professed to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous; and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared. I am made to understand, that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice: yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his fruithy, many deceiving promises of life; which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die.

Escal. You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labour'd for the poor gentleman, to the extremest shore of my modesty; but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him, he is indeed—justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the strictness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein, if he chance to fail, he hath sentenced himself.

Escal. I am going to visit the prisoner: Fare you well.

Duke. Peace be with you!

[Escuut Escalus and Provost.

He, who the sword of heaven will bear, Should be as holy as severe; Pattern in himself to know, Grace to stand, and virtue go; More nor less to others paying, Than by self-offences weighing. Shame to him, whose cruel striking Kills for faults of his own liking! Twice treble shame on Angelo, To weed my vice, and let his grow! O, what may man within him hide, Though angel on the outward side! How may likeness, made in crimes, Making practice on the times, Draw with idle spiders' strings Most pond'rous and substantial things! Craft against vice I must apply: With Angelo to-night shall lie His old betrothed, but despised; So disguise shall, by the disguised, Pay with falsehood false exacting, And perform an old contracting.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Room in Mariana's House.

MARIANA discovered sitting; a Boy singing.

SONG.

Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again,
Bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain,
Seal'd in vain.

MARI. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away;
Here come a man of comfort, whose advice Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.—

[Exit Boy.

Duke. I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish You had not found me here so musical:
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,—
My mirth it much displeas'd, but pleas'd my woe.

Duke. 'Tis good: though music hath such a charm
To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquir'd for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet.

MARI. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

Isabella enters.

Duke. I do constantly believe you:—The time is come, even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little, may be, I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

Isabella. I do desire the like.

Duke. Do you persuade yourself, that I respect you?

MARI. I am always bound to you.

Duke. Very well met, and welcome.

What is the news from this good deputy?

Isab. He hath a garden circummur'd with brick, Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd; And to that vineyard is a planched gate, That makes his opening with this bigger key: This other doth command a little door, Which from the vineyard to the garden leads; There have I made my promise to call on him, Upon the heavy middle of the night.

Duke. But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

Isab. I have ta'en a due and wary note upon't; With whispering and most guilty diligence, In action all of precept, he did show me The way twice o'er.

Duke. Are there no other tokens
Between you 'greed, concerning her observance?

Isab. No, none, but only a repair i' the dark;
And that I have possess'd him, my most stay Can be but brief: for I have made him know, I have a servant comes with me along, That stays upon me; whose persuasion is, I come about my brother.

Duke. 'Tis well borne up.
I have not yet made known to Mariana A word of this:—What, hol! within! come forth.

Re-enter Mariana.

Isabella. I pray you be acquainted with this maid;
She comes to do you good.

Duke. Go you persuade yourself, that I respect you?
Measure for Measure.

MARI. Good friar, I know you do; and have found it.

DUKE. Take then this for your guide; by the
Who hath a story ready for your ear: [hand, I shall attend your leisure; but make haste;
The vaporous night approaches.

MARI. Will't please you walk aside? [Exit MARIANA and ISABELLA.

DUKE. O place and greatness, millions of false Are stunk upon thee! volumes of report [eyes Run with these false and most contrarious quests Upon thy doings! thousand 'scopes of wit Make thee the father of their idle dream, And rack thee in their fancies!—Welcome! How agreed!

Re-enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.

ISAB. She'll take the enterprise upon her, father, If you advise it.

DUKE. It is not my consent, But my intreaty too.

ISAB. Little have you to say, When you depart from him, but, soft and low, Remember now my brother.

MARI. Fear me not.

DUKE. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all: He is your husband on a pre-contract: To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin; Sith that the justice of your title to him Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go; Our corn's to reap, for yet our tithes to sow. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter PROVOST and Clowns.

PROV. Come hither, sirrah! Can you cut off a man's head?

CLO. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he is his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

PROV. Come, sir, leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine: Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gyves; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unpitied whipping; for you have been a notorious bawd.

CLO. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a law-ful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

PROV. What ho, Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there?

Enter ABHORSON.

ABHOR. Do you call, sir?

PROV. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution: If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him: He cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd.

Abhor. A bawd, sir? Fye upon him, he will dis credit our mystery.

PROV. Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale. [Exit.

CLO. Pray, sir, by your good favour, (for, surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,) do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

ABHOR. Ay, sir; a mystery.

CLO. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, do prove my occupation a mystery: but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

ABHOR. Sir, it is a mystery.

PROV. Every true man's apparel fits your thief: If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter PROVOST.

PROV. Are you agreed?

CLO. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find, your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth offer to ask forgiveness.

PROV. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe, to-morrow four o'clock.

ABHOR. Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade; follow.

CLO. I do desire to learn, sir; and, I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare: for, truly sir, for your kindness, I owe you a good turn.

PROV. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio. [Exit Clowns and Abhorson.

One has my pity; not a jot the other. Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death: 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

CLAUD. As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless labour When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones: He will not wake.

Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit CLAUDIO. By and by:—

I hope it is some pardon, or reprieve, For the most gentle Claudio.—Welcome, father.

Enter Duke.

DUKE. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night Envelop you, good provost! Who called here of late?

PROV. None, since the curfew rang.

DUKE. Not Isabel! [Exit.

PROV. No.

DUKE. They will then, ere't be long.

PROV. What comfort is for Claudio?

DUKE. He's some in hope.

PROV. It is a bitter deputy.

DUKE. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd Even with the stroke and line of his great justice; He doth with holy abstinence subdue That in himself, which he spurs on his power To qualify in others: were he meal'd With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous; But this being so, he's just.—Now are they come. [Knocking within.—PROVOST goes out.
This is a gentle provost: Seldom, when
The steed's4 gaoler is the friend of men.—
How now? what noise? That spirit's possess'd with haste,
That wounds the unsisting postern with these
Provost returns, speaking to one at the door.
Prov. There he must stay, until the officer
Arise to let him in; he is call'd up.
Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But he must die to-morrow?
Prov. None, sir, none.
Duke. As near the dawning, Provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.
Prov. Happily, You something know; yet, I believe, there comes
No countermand; no such example have we:
Besides, upon the very siege of justice,
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Profess'd the contrary.

Enter a Messenger.

Duke. This is his lordship's man.
Mess. My lord hath sent you this note; and by me this further charge, that you swerve not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good-morrow; for as I take it, it is almost day.

Prov. I shall obey him. [Exit Messenger.

For which the pardoner himself is in:
Hence hath offence his quick celerity,
When it is borne in high authority:
When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That for the fault's love, is the offender friend.—
Now, sir, what news?

Prov. I told you: Lord Angelo, belike thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on: methinks, strangely; for he hath not used it before.

Duke. Pray you, let's hear.

Prov. [Reads.] Whosoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock; and, in the afternoon, Barnardine: for my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by five. Let this be duly perform'd; with a thought, that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril.

What say you to this, sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in the afternoon?

Prov. A Bohemian born; but here nursed up and bred: one that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it, that the absent duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty, or executed him? I have heard, it was ever his manner to do so.

Prov. His friends still wrought reprevisions for him:
And, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of lord Angelo, came not to an undisputable proof.

Duke. Is it now apparent?

Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison? How seems he to be touch'd?

Prov. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come;
insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

Prov. He will hear none; he hath evermore had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not: ‘tis drunk many times e'en day, if not many days entirely drunk. 'We have very often awaked him, as if to carry him, to execution, and, shew'd him a seeming warrant for it; it hath not moved him at all.'

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, Provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me; but in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom here you have a warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo who hath sentenced him: To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days' respite; for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Prov. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack! how may I do it? having the hour limited; and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine order, I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.

Duke. O, death's a great disposer: and you may add to it. Shave the head and tie the beard; and say, it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death: You know, the course is common. If any thing fail to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Prov. Pardon me, good father: it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?

Prov. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

Prov. But what likelihood is in that?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful, that neither my coat, integritv, nor my persuasion, can with ease attempt you, I will go further than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the duke. You know the character, I doubt not; and the signet is not strange to you.

Prov. I know them both.

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure; where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing, that Angelo knows not:
for he this very day receives letters of strange tenor:
perchance, of the duke's death; perchance, entering into some monastery; but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the shepherd: Put not yourself into amazement.
how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present shrift, and advise him for a better place.
Yet you are amazed: but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn.

[Exit]
SCENE III.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Clown.

Clo. I am as well acquainted here, as I was in our house of profession: one would think, it were mistress Overdone’s own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here’s young master Rash; he’s in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, ninescore and seventeen pounds; of which he made five marks, ready money: marry, then, ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one master Caper, at the suit of master Three-pile the merchant, for some four suits of peach-colour’d satin, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dizy, and young master Deep-vow, and master Copper-spar, and master Starve-lackey the rapier and dagger-man, and young Drop-heir that kill’d dusty Pudding, and master Fortbright the tilter, and brave master Shoe-tie the great traveller, and wild Half-can that stab’d Pots, and, I think, forty more; all great doers in our trade, and are now for the Lord’s sake.

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

Clo. Master Barnardine! you must rise and be hang’d, master Barnardine!

Abhor. What, ho, Barnardine!

Barnar. [Within.] A pox o’ your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you? Clo. Your friend, sir; the hangman: You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

Barnar. [Within.] Away, you rogue, away; I am sleepy. Abhor. Tell him he must awake, and that quickly too.

Clo. Pray, master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

Abhor. Go in to him, and fetch him out.

Clo. He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

Enter Barnardine.

Abhor. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?

Clo. Very ready, sir.

Barnar. How now, Abhorson? what’s the news with you?

Abhor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; for, look you, the warrant’s come.

Barnar. You rogue, I have been drinking all night; I am not fitt’d for’t.

Clo. O, the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hang’d betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter Duke.

Abhor. Look you, sir, here comes your ghostly father; Do we jest now, think you?

Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.

Barnar. Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets: I will not consent to die this day, that’s certain.

Duke. O, sir, you must; and therefore, I beseech you, Look forward on the journey you shall go.

Barnar. I swear, I will not die to-day for any man’s persuasion.

Duke. But hear you,—

Barnar. Not a word; if you have anything to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day.

[Exit Duke. Enter Provost.

Duke. Unfit to live, or die: O, gravel heart!—

After him, fellows; bring him to the block.

[Exit Abhorson and Clown.

Prov. Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?

Duke. A creature unprepared, unmeet for death; And, to transport him in the mind he is, Were damnable.

Prov. Here, in the prison, father, There died this morning of a cruel fever One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate, A man of Claudio’s years; his beard, and head, Just of his colour: What if we do omit This reprobate, till he were well inclined; And satisfy the deputy with the visage Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?

Duke. O, ’tis an accident that Heaven provides Despatch it presently; the hour draws on Prefix’d by Angelo: See, this be done, And sent according to command; whilsts I Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die. Prov. This shall be done, good father, presently But Barnardine must die this afternoon: And how shall we continue Claudio, To save me from the danger that might come, If he were known alive?

Duke. Let this be done;—Put them in secret Both Barnardine and Claudio: Ere twice [holds] The sun hath made his journal greeting To the under generation, you shall find Your safety manifested.

Prov. I am your free dependant.

Duke. Quick, despatch, And send the head to Angelo. [Exit Provost.

Now will I write letters to Angelo, The provost, he shall bear them,—whose contents Shall witness to him, I am near at home; And that, by great injunctions, I am bound To enter publicly: him I’ll desire To meet me at the consecrated fount, A league below the city; and from thence, By cold gradation and weal-balanced form, We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Here is the head; I’ll carry it myself.

Duke. Convenient is it: Make a swift return; For I would commune with you of such things, That want no ear but yours.

Prov. I’ll make all speed.

[Exit.

Isab. [Within.] Peace, ho, be here! [know,

Duke. The tongue of Isabel:—She’s come to If yet her brother’s pardon be come hither: But I will keep her ignorant of her good, To make her heavenly comforts of despair When it is least expected.

Enter Isabel.

Isab. Ho, by your leave. [daughter

Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious Isabel. The better, given me by so holy a man. Hath yet the deputy sent my brother’s pardon?

Duke. He hath released him, Isabel, from the His head is off, and sent to Angelo. [world
SCENE V.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Isab. Nay, but it is not so.

Duke. It is no other:
Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience.

Isab. O, I will to him, and pluck out his eyes.

Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.

Isab. Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabel!

Injurious world! Most damned Angelo!

Duke. This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot:
Forbear it, therefore; give your cause to heaven.
Mark what I say; which you shall find

By every syllable, a faithful verity:
The duke comes home to-morrow;—nay, dry your
One of our convent, and his confessor, "eyes;"
Gives me this instance: Already he hath carried Notice to Escalus and Angelo;

Who do prepare to meet him at the gates,
There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom
In that good path that I would wish it go;
And you shall have your bosom on this wretch,
Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart,
And general honour.

Isab. I am directed by you.

Duke. This letter then to Friar Peter give;
'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return:
Say, by this token, I desire his company
At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause, and yours,
I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you
Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo
Accuse him home, and home. For my poor self,
I am combined by a sacred vow,
And shall be absent. Wendi you with this letter:
Command these fretting waters from your eyes
With a light heart; trust not my holy order,
If I pervert your course.—Who's here?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Good even!

Friar, where is the provost?

Duke. Not within, sir.

Lucio. O, pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient:
I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran;
I dare not for my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me 'to't: But they say the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel,
I loved thy brother: if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he lived.

[Exit Isabella.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou takest him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee; I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true: if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you much a thing?

Lucio. Yes, tarry, did I: but was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest: Rest you well.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end: If bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it; Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr, I shall stick.

Exeunt

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath disavouched other.

Ang. In most uneven and distracted manner.

His actions show much like to madness: pray heaven, his wisdom be not tainted! And why should he meet him at the gates, and redeliver our authorities there?

Escal. I guess not.

Ang. And why should we proclaim it in an hour before his entering; that, if any crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the streets?

Escal. He shows his reason for that: to have a despatch of complaints; and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Ang. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed: Betimes 't the morn, I'll call you at your house: Give notice to such men of sort and suit, As are to meet him.

Escal. I shall, sir: fare you well. [Exit.

Ang. Good night.—This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant, And dull to all proceedings. A dewflower'd maid! And by an eminent body, that enforced The law against it!—But that her tender shame Will not proclaim against her maiden loss, How might she tongue me? Yet reason dares For my authority bears a credent bulk, [her?—no:—]
That no particular scandal once can touch, [lived, But it confounds the breather. He should have Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense, Might, in the times to come, have ta'en revenge, By so receiving a dishonoured life. [lived! With ransom of such shame. 'Would yet he had Alack, when once our grace we have forgot.
Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—Fields without the Town.

Enter Duke in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me.

[Giving Letters.

The provost knows our purpose, and our plot.
The matter being afoot, keep your instruction, And hold you ever to our special drift; Though sometimes you do blench from this to that, As cause doth minister. Go, call at Flavius' house, And tell him where I stay: give the like notice To Valentineus, Rowland, and to Erassus, And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate; But send me Flavius first.

F. Peter. It shall be speeded well.

[Exit Friar.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste:
Come, we will walk: There's other of our friends Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius.

[Exeunt.
SCENE VI.—Street near the City Gate.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speak so indirectly, I am loath; I would say the truth; but to accuse him so, That is your part: yet I'm advised to do it; He says, to veil full purpose.

Mari. Be ruled by him.

Isab. Besides, he tells me, that, if peradventure He speak against me on the adverse side, I should not think it strange; for 'tis a physic, That's bitter to sweet end.

Mari. I would, friar Peter.

Isab. O, peace; the friar is come.

Enter Friar Peter.

F. Peter. Come, I have found you out a stand most fit, Where you may have such vantage on the duke, He shall not pass you; Twice have the trumpets The generous and gravest citizens [sounded; Have hent the gates, and very near upon The duke is entering; therefore hence, away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE I.—A public Place near the City Gate.

MARIANA (veiled), ISABELLA, and PETER, at a distance.

Enter at opposite doors Duke, VARRIES, LORDS; ANGELo, ESCALUS, LUCIO, PROVOST, OFFICERS, and CITIZENS.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met:—
Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you. Ang. and Escal. Happy return be to your royal grace!

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both.
We have made inquiry of you; and we hear Such goodness of your justice, that our soul Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks, Forerunning more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O, your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong it, To lock it in the wards of covert bosom, When it deserves with characters of brass A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time, And razeure of oblivion; Give me your hand, And let the subject see, to make them know That outward courtesies would fain proclaim Favours that keep within.—Come, Escalus; You must walk by us on our other hand; And good supporters are you.

Peter and Isabella come forward.

F. Peter. Now is your time; speak loud, and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Vail your regard Upon a wrong'd, I'd fain have said, a maid! O worthy prince, dishonour not your eye By throwing it on any other object, Till you have heard me in my true complaint, And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

Duke. Relate your wrongs: In what? By whom? Be brief:
Here is lord Angelo shall give you justice! Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O, worthy duke,
You bid me seek redemption of the devil:
Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak Must either punish me, not being belier'd,
Or wring redress from you: hear me, O, hear me, here.

Ang. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm: She hath been a suitor to me for her brother, Cut off by course of justice!

Isab. By course of justice!

Ang. And she will speak most bitterly, and strange.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak:

That Angelo's forsworn; is it not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer; is't not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterer, a thief, An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;
Is it not strange, and strange?

Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo,
Than this is all as true as it is strange:
Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth
To the end of reckoning.

Duke. Away with her:—Poor soul, She speaks this in the infirmity of sense.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ'st There is another comfort than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion, That I am touch'd with madness: make not impossible.

Lucio. But which that but seems unlike: 'tis not impossible But one, the wicked'st caitiff on the ground, May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute, As Angelo: even so may Angelo, In all his dressings, characters, titles, forms, Be an arch-villain; believe it, royal prince, If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more, Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty, If she be mad, as I believe no other, Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense, Such a dependency of thing on thing, As e'er I heard in madness.

Isab. O gracious duke, Harp not on that: nor do not banish reason For inequality; but let your reason serve To make the truth appear, where it seems hid; And hide the false, seems true.

Duke. Many that are not mad, Have, sure, more lack of reason.—What would you say?

Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemn'd upon the act of fornication To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo: I, in probation of a sisterhood, Was sent to by my brother: One Lucio As then the messenger:—

Lucio. That's I, an't like your grace: I came to her from Claudio, and desired her To try her gracious fortune with lord Angelo, For her poor brother's pardon.

Isab. That's he, indeed.

Duke. You were not bid to speak.

Lucio. No, my good lord; Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now then;
Pray you, take note of it: and when you have
A business for yourself, pray heaven, you then
Be perfect.

Lucio. I warrant your honour.

Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed to it.

Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale.

Lucio. Right.

Duke. It may be right; but you are in the wrong
To speak before your time.—Proceed.

Isab. I went
To this pernicious caitiff deputy.

Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it;
The phrase is to the matter.

Duke. Mended again; the matter;—Proceed.

Isab. In brief,—to set the needless process by,
How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd,
How he refell'd me, and how I replied;
(For this was of much length,) the vile conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter:
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscent intemperate lust,
Release my brother; and, after much debatement,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him: But the next morn betimes,
His purpose surfetting, he sends a warrant
For my poorer brother's head.

Duke. This is most likely!

Isab. O, that it were as like as it is true!

Duke. By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st not what thou speak'st;
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour,
In hateful practice: First, his integrity
Stands without blemish:—next, it imports no reason,
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himself; if he had so offended,
He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself,
And not have cut him off: Some one hath set you Confess the truth, and say by whose advice [on;
Thou canst here to complain.

Isab. And is this all?
The word, oh, blessed ministers above,
Keep me in patience; and, with ripen'd time,
Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up
In countenance,—Heaven shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go!

Duke. I know, you'd fain be gone:—An officer!
To prison with her:—Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.
—Who knew of your intent, and coming hither?

Isab. One that I would were here, friar Lodowick.
Duke. A ghostly father, belike: Who knows that Lodowick?

[friar.

Lucio. My lord, I know him; 'tis a meddling man
I do not like the man: had he been lay, my lord,
For certain words he spake against your grace
In your retirement, I had swing'd him soundly.

Duke. Words against me? This a good friar,
And to set on this wretched woman here .[belike] Against our substitute!—Let this friar be found.

Lucio. But yesternight, my lord, she and that I saw them at the prison: a saucy friar,
[friar
A very scurvy fellow.

P. Peter. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abus'd: First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accus'd your substitute;
Who is as free from touch or soil with her,
As she from one ungot.

Duke. We did believe no less.
Know you that friar Lodowick, that she speaks of?

P. Peter. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my trust, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouchers, misreport your grace.

Lucio. My lord, most villainously! believe it.

P. Peter. Well, he in time may come to clear
But at this instant he is sick, my lord, [himself;
Of a strange fever: Upon his mere request
(Being come to knowledge that there was complaint Intended 'gainst lord Angelo,) came I hither,
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true, and false; and what he with his oath,
And all probation, will make up full clear,
Whenever he's convenient. First, for this woman;
(To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accus'd,) Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.

Duke. Good friar, let's hear it.

Isabella is carried off, guardia; and Mariana comes forward.

Do you not smile at this, lord Angelo?—
O heaven! the vanity of wretched fools!
Give us some seats.—Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause. —Is this the witness, friar?
First, let her show her face; and, after, speak
Mari, Pardon, my lord; I will not show my face,
Until my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. Are you a maid?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. A widow, then?

Mari. Neither, my lord.

Duke. Why, you are nothing then:—Neither maid, widow, nor wife?

Lucio. My lord, she may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.

Duke. Silence that fellow: I would, he had some
To prattle for himself. [cause

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Mari. My lord, I do confess I ne'er was married;
And, I confess, besides, I am no maid:
I have known my husband; yet my husband knows
That ever he knew me. [not,

Lucio. He was drunk then, my lord; it can be no better.

Duke. For the benefit of silence, would thou wert so too.

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Duke. This is no witness for lord Angelo.

Mari. Now I come to't, my lord:
She, that accuses him of fornication,
In self-same manner doth accuse my husband;
And charges him, my lord, with such a time,
When I'll depose I had him in mine arms,
With all the effect of love.

Ang. Charges she more than me?

Mari. Not that I know.

Duke. No? you say, your husband.

Mari. Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo,
Who thinks, he knows, that he ne'er knew my body,
But knows, he thinks, that he knows Isabel's.

Ang. This is a strange abuse:—Let's see thy face.

Mari. My husband bids me; now I will unmask.

[Unveiling
This is that face, thou cruel Angelo,
Which, once thou swor'st, was worth the looking on:
This is the hand, which, with a vow'd contract,
Was fast belock'd in thine: this is the body
That took away the match from Isabel,
And did supply thee at thy garden-house,
In her imagin'd person.

_Duke._ Know you this woman? _Lucio._ Carnally, she says.
_Duke._
_Lucio._ Enough, my lord. _Ang._ My lord, I must confess, I know this
And, five years since, there was some speech of marriage
Betwixt myself and her; which was broke off,
Partly, for that her promised proportions
Came short of composition; but, in chief,
For that her reputation was disvalued
In levity: since which time of five years,
I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her,
Upon my faith and honour.

_Mari._ Noble prince,
As there comes light from heaven, and words from breath,
As there is sense in truth, and truth in virtue,
I am affianced this man's wife, as strongly
As words could make up vows: and, my good lord,
But Tuesday night last gone, in his garden-house,
He knew me as a wife: as this is true
Let me in safety raise me from my knees;
Or else for ever be confixed here,
A marble monument!

_Ang._ I did but smile till now;
Now, good my lord, give me the scope of justice;
My patience here is touch'd: I do perceive,
These poor informal women are no more
But instruments of some more mighty member,
That sets them on: Let me have way, my lord,
To find this practice out.

_Duke._ Ay, with my heart;
And punish them unto your height of pleasure.—
Thou foolish friar; and thou pernicious woman, Compact with her that's gone! think'st thou, thy oaths,
Though they would swear down each particular saint,
Were testimonies against his worth and credit,
That's seal'd in approbation?—You, Lord Escalus,
Sit with my cousin; lend him your kind pains
To find out this abuse, whence 'tis derived,—
There is another friar that set them on;
Let him be sent for.

_F. Peter._ Would he were here, my lord; for he indeed,
Hath set the women on to this complaint:
Your provost knows the place where he abides,
And he may fetch him.

_Duke._ Go, do it instantly.
[Exit Provost.]
And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best,
In any chastisement: I for a while
Will leave you: but stir not you, till you have well
Determined upon these slanderers.

_Escal._ My lord, we'll do it thoroughly.
[Exit Duke.] Signior Lucio, did not you say, you knew that friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

_Lucio._ Cæcillus non facit monachum: honest in nothing, but in his clothes; and one that hath spoken most villainous speeches of the duke.

_Escal._ We shall entreat you to abide here till he

---

come, and enforce them against him: we shall find this friar a notable fellow.

_Lucio._ As any in Vienna, on my word.
_Escal._ Call that same Isabel here once again;
[To an Attendant.] I would speak with her: Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.

_Lucio._ Not better than he, by her own report.
_Escal._ Say you?
_Lucio._ Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess: perchance, publicly she'll be ashamed.

Re-enter Officers, with _Isabella_; _the Duke_, in _the Friar's habit, and Provost._

_Escal._ I will go darkly to work with her.
_Lucio._ That's the way; for women are light at midnight.

_Escal._ Come on, mistress: [To _Isabella._] here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.
_Lucio._ My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of;
here with the provost.

_Escal._ In very good time:—speak not you to him, till we call upon you.

_Lucio._ Mum.

_Escal._ Come, sir: Did you set these women on to slander lord Angelo? they have confess'd you did.
_Duke._ 'Tis false.

_Escal._ How! know you where you are?
_Duke._ Respect to your great place! and let the devil
Be sometime honour'd for his burning throne:—
Where is the duke? 'tis he should hear me speak.
_Escal._ The duke's in us; and we will hear you
Look, you speak justly.
[Speaks.
_Duke._ Boldly, at least: But, O, poor souls,
Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox?
Good night to your redress. Is the duke gone?
Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust,
Thus to retract your manifest appeal
And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
Which here you come to accuse.

_Lucio._ This is the rascal; this is he I spoke of.
_Escal._ Why, thou unrenvered and unhallow'd
friar?
Is't not enough, thou hast suborn'd these women,
To accuse this worthy man; but, in foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper ear,
To call him villain?
And then to glance from him to the duke himself;
To tax him with injustice? Take him hence;
To the rack with him:—We'll touze you joint by joint,
But we will know this purpose:—What! unjust?
_Duke._ Be not so hot, the duke
Dare no more stretch this finger of mine, than he Dare rack his own; his subject am I not,
Nor here provincial: My business in this state
Made me a looker-on here in Vienna,
Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble;
Till it o'er-run the stew; laws, for all faults;
But faults so countenanced, that the strong statutes
Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop,
As much in mock as mark.

_Escal._ Slander to the state! Away with him to prison.

_Ang._ What can you vouch against him, signior
Is this the man that you did tell us of?
[Lucio?]

_Lucio._ 'Tis he, my lord. Come hither, goodman bald-pate: Do you know me?
_Duke._ I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice. I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke.

Lucio. O did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

Duke. Most notably, sir.

Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a flesh-monger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse.

Lucio. O thou damned fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose, for thy speeches?

Duke. I protest I love the duke, as I love myself.

Ang. Hark! how the villain would close now, after his treaasonable abuses.

Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd with:—
Away with him to prison:—Where is the provost?—
Away with him to prison: lay bolts enough upon him: let him speak no more:—Away with those giglotts too, and with the other confederate companions.

[The Provost takes hands on the duke.]

Duke. Stay, sir; stay awhile.

Ang. What! resists he! Help him, Lucio.

Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir! come, sir; foh, sir: Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal! you must be hooded, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pox to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hang'd as a lunatic! Will't not off?

[Pulls off the Friar's hood, and discovers duke.]

Duke. Thou art the first knave, that e'er made a duke.—
First, provost, let me bail these gentle three:—
Sneak not away, sir [to Lucio]; for the friar and Must have a word anon:—lay hold on him. [you Lucio. This may prove worse than hangning.

Duke. What you have spoken, I pardon; sit you down.—

[To Escalus.]

We'll borrow place of him—Sir, by your leave:

Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence, That yet can do thee office? If thou hast, Rely upon it till my tale be heard, And hold no longer out.

Ang. O my dread lord, I should be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I can be undiscernible, When I perceive, your grace, like power divine, Hath look'd upon my passes; Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame, But let my trial be mine own confession: Immediate sentence then, and sequent death, Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither, Mariana:— Say, wast thou e'er contracted to this woman?

Ang. I was, my lord. [stantly.

Duke. Go, take her hence, and marry her, in Do you the office, friar; which consummate, Return him here again:—Go with him, provost.

[Exeunt Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost.]

Escal. My lord, I am more amazed at his dis Than at the strangeness of it. [honour, Duke. Come hither, Isabel: Your friar is now your prince: As I was then Advertising, and holy to your business, Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney'd at your service.

Isab. O give me pardon, That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd Your unknown sovereignty.
A due sincerity govern'd his deeds,
Till he did look on me; since it is so,
Let him not die: My brother had but justice.
In that he did the thing for which he died:
For Angelo,
His act did not o'ertake his bad intent;
And must be buried but as an intent
That perish'd by the way: thoughts are no subjects;
Intents but merely thoughts.

Provost.

Marry, how came it, Claudio was beheaded
At an unusual hour?

Duke. It was commanded so.

Provost. Did you a special warrant for the deed?

Duke. For which I do discharge you of your Give up your keys.

Provost. Pardon me, noble lord;
I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;
Yet did repent me, after more advice:
For testimony whereof, one in the prison,
That should by private order else have died,
I have reserved alive.

Duke. What's he?

Provost. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I would thou hast done so by Claudio,—
Go, fetch him hither; let me look upon him.

[Exit Provost.]

Escalus. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise
As you, lord Angelo, have still appear'd,
Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood,
And lack of temper'd judgment afterward.

Angelo. I am sorry, that such sorrow I procurement:
And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart,
That I crave death more willingly than mercy;
'Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.

Re-enter Provost, Barnardine, Claudio, and Juliet.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Provost. This, my lord.

Duke. There was a friar told me of this man:—
Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squarest thy life according. Thou'rt condemn'd;
But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all;
And pray thee, take this mercy to provide
For better times to come:—Friar, advise him;
I leave him to thy hand.—What muffled fellow's
that?

Provost. This is another prisoner, that I sav'd,
That should have died when Claudio lost his head;

As like almost to Claudio, as himself.

Unmuzzles Claudio.

Duke. If he be like your brother, [to Isabella.]—

For his sake
Is he pardon'd; And, for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: But fitter time for that.
By this, lord Angelo perceives he's safe;
Methinks, I see a quick'ning in his eye:—
Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well:
Look that you love your wife; her worth, worth
I find an apt remission in myself:—yours.
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon:—
You, sirrah, [to Lucio] that knew me for a fool,
a coward,
One all of luxury, an ass, a madman;
Wherin have I so deserv'd of you,
That you exalt me thus?

Lucio. 'Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick: If you will hang me for it, you may, but I had rather it would please you, I might be whipp'd.

Duke. Whipp'd first, sir, and hang'd after,— Proclaim it, provost, round about the city;
If any woman's wrong'd by this lewd fellow,
(As I have heard him swear himself, there's one Whom he begot with child,) let her appear,
And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd,
Let him be whipp'd and hang'd.

Lucio. I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore! Your highness said even now, I made you a duke; good my lord, do not recompense me,
in making me a cuckold.

Duke. Upon mine honour, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits:—Take him to prison:
And see our pleasure herein executed.

Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hanging.

Duke. Slander a prince deserves it.—
She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore.—
Joy to you, Mariana!—love her, Angelo;—
I have confess'd her, and I know her virtue,— Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness;
There's more behind, that is more gratulate.
Thanks, provost, for thy care, and secrecy;
We shall employ thee in a worthier place:—
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's;
The offence pardons itself.—Dear Isabel,
I have a motion much imports your good;
Whereeto if you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine:—
So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.

[Exeunt.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE,—Messen.

ACT I.

SCENE 1.—Before Leonato’s House.

Enter Leonato, Hero, Beatrice, and others, with a Messenger.

Leon. I learn in this letter, that Don Pedro of Aragon comes this night to Messina.

Mess. He is very near by this; he was not three leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?

Mess. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here, that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honour on a young Florentine, called Claudio.

Mess. Much deserved on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro: He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age; doing, in the figure of a lamb, the feats of a lion: he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an uncle here in Messina will be very much glad of it.

Mess. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears?

Mess. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness: There are no faces truer than those that are so washed. How much better is it to weep at joy, than to joy at weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is signior Montanto returned from the wars, or no?

Mess. I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any sort.

Leon. What is he that you ask for, niece?

Hero. My cousin means signior Benedick of Padua.

Mess. O, he is returned, and as pleasant as ever he was.

Beat. He set up his bills here in Messina, and challenged Cupid at the flight: and my uncle’s fool, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid, and challenged him at the bird-bolt.—I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? for, indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he’ll be meet with you, I doubt it not.

Mess. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

Beat. You had musty victual, and he hath holt to eat it: he is a very valiant trencher-man, he hath an excellent stomach.

Mess. And a good soldier too, lady.

Beat. And a good soldier to a lady;—But what is he to a lord?

Mess. A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed with all honourable virtues.

Beat. It is so, indeed: he is no less than a stuffed man: but for the stuffing,—Well, we are all mortal.

Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece: there is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet, but there is a skirmish of wit between them.

Beat. Alas, he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the old man governed with one: so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse; for it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be known a reasonable creature.—Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.

Mess. Is it possible?

Beat. Very easily possible: he wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat, it ever changes with the next block.

Mess. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books.
Beat. No: an he were, I would burn my study. But, I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now, that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

Mess. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Beat. O Lord! he will hang upon him like a disease: he is sooner caught than the pestilence, and the taker runs presently mad. God help the noble Claudio! if he have caught the Benedick, it will cost him a thousand pound ere he be cared.

Mess. I will hold friends with you, lady.

Beat. Do, good friend.

Leon. You will never run mad, niece.

Beat. No, not till a hot January.

Mess. Don Pedro is approached.

Enter Don Pedro, attended by Balthazar and others, Don John, Claudio, and Benedick.

D. Pedro. Good signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble: the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Leon. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain; but when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

D. Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly.—I think, this is your daughter.

Leon. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Bene. Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

D. Pedro. I knew very well who it was; for then were you a child.

Bene. You have it full, Benedick: we may guess by this what you are, being a man. Truly, the lady fathers herself:—be happy, lady! for you are like an honourable father.

Bene. If signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders, for all Messina, as like him as she is.

Beat. I wonder that you will still be talking, signior Benedick; nobody marks you.

Bene. What, my dear lady Disdain are you yet living?

Beat. Is it possible disdain should die, while she hath such meat to feed it, as signior Benedick? Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.

Bene. Then is courtesy a turn-coat:—But it is certain I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted: and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart: for, truly, I love none.

Beat. A dear happiness to women; they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. I thank God, and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that; I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

Bene. God keep your ladyship still in that mind! so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predes- tinate scratched face.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were.

Bene. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Beat. A bird of my tongue, is better than a beast of yours.

Bene. I would, my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuier: But keep your way! God a name; I have done.

Beat. You always end with a jade's trick; I know you of old.

D. Pedro. This is the sum of all: Leonato,— signior Claudio, and signior Benedick,—my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him, we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

Leon. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn.—Let me bid you welcome, my lord: being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

D. John. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato; we will go together.

[Exeunt all but Benedick and Claudio.

Claud. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

Bene. I noted her not: but I looked on her.

Claud. Is she not a modest young lady?

Bene. Do you question me as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment; or would you have me walk after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Claud. No, I pray thee, speak in sober judgment.

Bene. Why, 'i faith, methinks she is too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her; that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome; and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.

Claud. Thou thinkest I am in sport? I pray thee, tell me truly how thou likest her.

Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?

Claud. Can the world buy such a jewel?

Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow, or do you play the float- ing Jack; to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare carpenter? Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

Claud. In mine eye, she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

Bene. I can see yet without spectacles, and I see no such matter: there's her cousin, as she were not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty, as the first of May doth the last of Decem- ber. But I hope you have no intent to turn husband; have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

Bene. Is it come to this, 'i faith? Hath not the world one man, but he will bear his cap with sus- picion? Shall I never see a bachelor of three-score again? Go to, 'i faith; an thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, an sigh away Sundays. Look, Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?

Bene. I would, your grace would constrain me to tell.

D. Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Bene. You hear, Count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man, I would have you think so; but on my allegiance,—mark you this, on my allegiance:—He is in love. With who?—now that is your grace's part.—Mark, how short his answer is:—With Hero, Leonato's short daughter.
Much Ado About Nothing.

Claud. If this were so, so were it uttered.
Bene. Like the old tale, my lord: "it is not so, nor 'twas not so; but, indeed, God forbid it should be otherwise.
Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.
D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.
Claud. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord? D. Pedro. By my troth, I speak my thought.
Claud. And, in faith, my lord, I spoke mine.
Bene. And, by my two faiths and troths, my ord, I spoke mine.
Claud. That I love her, I feel.
D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.
Bene. That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me; I will die in it at the stake.
D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.
Claud. And never could maintain his part, but in the force of his will.
Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thank her; that she brought me up, I likewise give her her humble thanks: but that I will have a reechet window in my forehead, or hang my bLAG in an invisible baldric, all women shall pardon me: Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, (for the which I may go the finer,) I will live a bachelor.
D. Pedro. I shall see thee, ere I die, look pale with love.
Bene. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord; not with love: prove, that ever I lose more blood with love, than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad-maker's pen, and hang me up at the door of a brothel-house, for the sign of blind Cupid.
D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.
Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me; and he that hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.
D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:
In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke.
Bene. The savage bull may; but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull's horns, and set them in my forehead: and let me be vilely painted; and in such great letters as they write, Here is good horse to hire, let them signify under my sign,—Here you may see Benedick the married man.
Claud. If this should ever happen, thou would'st be horn-mad.
D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.
Bene. I look for an earthquake too then.
D. Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the hours. In the mean time, good signor Benedick, remind Leonato's; commend me to him, and tell him, I will not fail him at supper; for, indeed, he hath made great preparation.
Bene. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embassage; and so I commit you—
Claud. To the tuition of God: From my house,
D. Pedro. The sixth of July: Your loving friend, Benedick.
Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not: The body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, the guards are but slightly based; neither ere you float old ends any further, examine your conscience; and so I leave you. [Exit Benedick.
Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good. [but how.
D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach; teach it And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn Any hard lesson that may do thee good.
Claud. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?
D. Pedro. No child but Hero, she's his only Dost thou affect her, Claudia? [Heir:
Claud. O my lord, When you went onward on this resolved action, I looked upon her with a soldier's eye, That liked, but had a rougher task in hand Than to drive liking to the name of love: But now I am returned, and that war-thoughts Have left their places vacant, in their rooms Come thronging soft and delicate desires, All prompting me how fair young Hero is, Saying, I liked her ere I went to wars.
D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently, And tire the hearer with a book of words: If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it; And I will break with her, and with her father, And thou shalt have her: Was't not to this end, That thou began'st to twist so fine a story? Claud. How sweetly do you minister to love, That know love's grief by his complexion! But lest my liking might too sudden seem, I would have salved it with a longer treatise.
D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader than the flood? The fairest grant is the necessity: Look, what will serve, is fit: 'tis once, thou lov'st; And I will fit thee with the remedy. I know, we shall have revelling to-night; I will assume thy part in some disguise, And tell fair Hero I am Claudio; And in her bosom I'll unclasp my heart, And take her hearing prisoner with the force And strong encounter of my amorous tale: Then, after, to her father will I break; And, the conclusion is, she shall be thine: In practice let us put it presently. [Exeunt.

Scene II.—A Room in Leonato's House.
Enter Leonato and Antonio.
Leon. How now, brother? Where is my cousin, your son? Hath he provided this music?
Ant. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange news that you yet dreamed not of.
Leon. Are they good?
Ant. As the event stumps them; but they have a good cover, they show well outward. The prince and Count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in my orchard, were thus much overheard by a man of mine: The prince discovered to Claudio, that he loved my niece your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a banquet; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it. Leon. Hath the fellow any wilt, that told you this? Ant. A good sharp fellow; I will send for him, and question him yourself.
Leon. No, no; we will hold it as a dream, till it appear itself:—but I will acquaint my daughter withal, that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if peradventure this be true. Go you, and tell her of it. [Several persons cross the stage.] Cousins, you know what you have to do.—O, I cry you mercy, friend; you go with me, and I will use your skill:—Good cousins, have a care this busy time.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don John and Conrad.

Con. What the goujere, my lord! why are you thus out of measure sad?

D. John. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds it, therefore the sadness is withoutlimit. Con. You should hear reason.

D. John. And when I have heard it, what blessing bringeth it?

Con. If not a present remedy, yet a patient sufferance.

D. John. I wonder, that thou being (as thou say'st thou art) born under Saturn, goest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief. I cannot hide what I am: I must be sad when I have cause, and smile at no man’s jests; eat when I have stomach, and wait for no man’s leisure; sleep when I am drowsy, and 'tend to no man’s business; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yea, but you must not make the full show of this, till you may do it without controlment. You have of late stood out against your brother, and he hath ta'en you newly into his grace; where it is impossible you should take true root, but by the fair weather that you make yourself; it is needful that you frame the season for your own harvest.

D. John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his grace; and it better fits my blood to be disdained of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any: in this, though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, it must not be denied that I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle, and enfranchised with a clog: therefore I have decreed not to sing in my cage: If I had my mouth, I would bite; if I had my liberty, I would do my liking: in the mean time, let me be that I am, and seek not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no use of your discontent?

D. John. I make all use of it, for I use it only. Who comes here? What news, Borachio?

Enter Borachio.

Bora. I came yonder from a great supper; the prince, your brother, is royally entertained by Leonato; and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

D. John. Will it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he for a fool, that betroths himself to unquietness?

Bora. Marry, it is your brother's right hand.

D. John. Who? the most exquisite Claudio?

Bora. Even he.

D. John. A proper squire! And who, and who? which way looks he?

Bora. Marry, on Hero, the daughter and heir of Leonato.

D. John. A very forward March-chick! How came you to this?

Bora. Being entertained for a perfumer, as I was smoking a musty room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference: I whipt me behind the arras; and there heard it agreed upon, that the prince should woo Hero for himself, and having obtained her, give her to count Claudio.

D. John. Come, come, let us thither; this may prove food to my displeasure: that young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow; if I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way: You are both sure, and will assist me?

Con. To the death, my lord.

D. John. Let us to the great supper: their cheer is the greater, that I am subdued: 'Would the cook were of my mind!—Shall we go prove what's to be done?

Bora. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice, and others.

Leon. Was not count John here at supper?

Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. How tarty that gentleman looks! I never can see him, but I am heart-burned an hour after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He was an excellent man, that were made just in the mid-way between him and Benedick; the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other, too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling.

Leon. Then half signor Benedick's tongue in count John's mouth, and half count John's melancholy in signor Benedick's face,—

Beat. With a good leg, and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world,—if he could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Ant. In faith she is too curt.

ACT II.

Beat. Too curt is more than curt: I shall lessen God's sending that way: for it is said, Geo sends a curst cow short horns; but to a cow too curt he sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curt, God will send you no horns.

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which blessing, I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening: Lord! I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face: I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leon. You may light upon a husband, that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel, and make him my waiting gentlewoman? He that hath a beard, is more than a youth; and he that hath no beard, is less than a man: and he that is more than a youth, is not for me; and he that is less than a man I am not for him: Therefore I will even take sixpence in earnest of the bear-herd, and lead his apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, go you into hell?
Beat. No; but to the gate; and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maids: so deliver I up my ames, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens; he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. Well, niece, to Hero] I trust, you will be ruled by your father.

Beat. Yes, faith; it is my cousin's duty to make courtesy, and say, Father, as it please you—but yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another courtesy, and say, Father, as it please me.

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be over-mastered with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of her life to a cloud of wayward mirth? No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren; and truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you: if the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

Beat. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not woed in good time: if the prince be too importunate, tell him, there is measure in every thing, and so dance out the answer. For hear me, Hero; Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace: the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly modest, as a measure full of state and antiquity; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sink into his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

Beat. I have a good eye, uncle; I can see a church by day-light.

Leon. The revellers are entering: brother, make good room.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Halthazar; Don John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and others, masked.

D. Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So you walk softly, and look sweetly, and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and, especially, when I walk away.

D. Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so, when I please.

D. Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favour; for God defend, the lute should be like the case!

D. Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house is Jove.

Hero. Why, then your visor should be thatched.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love.

[Exit Hero and D. Pedro.

Bene. Well, I would you did like me.

Marg. So would not I, for your own sake, for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

Marg. I say my prayers aloud.

Bene. I love you the better; the hearers may cry, Amen.

Marg. God match me with a good dancer!

Balth. Amen.

Mary. And God keep him out of my sight, when the dance is done!—Answer, clerk.

Balth. No more words; the clerk is answer'd.

Urs. I know you well enough; you are signior Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. I know you by the wagging of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeited him.

Urs. You could never do him so ill-well, unless you were the very man: Here's his dry hand up and down: you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Come, come; do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself? Go to, mum, you are he: graces will appear, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was disdainful,—and that I had my good wit out of the Hundred merry Tales;—Well, this was signior Benedick that said so.

Bene. What's he?

Beat. I am sure, you know him well enough.

Bene. Not I, believe me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what is he?

Beat. Why, he is the prince's jester: a very dull fool; only his gift is in devising impossible slanders: none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy; for he both pleaseth men, and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him: I am sure he is in the fleet; I would he had boarded me.

Bene. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beat. Do, do: he'll but break a comparison or two on me: which, peradventure, not marked, or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partridge wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music within.] We must follow the leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Beat. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Music. Then exit all but Don John, Borachio, and Claudio.

D. John. Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it: The ladies follow her, and but one visor remains.

Bora. And that is Claudio: I know him by his bearing.

D. John. Are not you signior Benedick?

Claud. I know you me well; I am he.

D. John. Signior, you are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero; I pray you, dissuade him from her, she is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claud. How know you he loves her?

D. John. I heard him swear his affection.

Bora. So did I too; and he swore he would marry her to-night.

D. John. Come, let us to the banquet.

[Exeunt Don John and Borachio.

Claud. Thus answer I in name of Benedick, but hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio: 'Tis certain so;—the prince woos for himself. Friendship is constant in all other things,
Save in the office and affairs of love:
Therefore, all hearts in love use their own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itself,
And trust no agent: for beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood.
This is an accident of hourly proof,
Which I mistrusted not: Farewell therefore, Hero!

Re-enter Benedick.

Bene. Count Claudio?

Claud. Yea, the same.

Bene. Come, will you go with me?

Claud. Whither?

Bene. Even to the next willow, about your own business, count? What fashion will you wear the girdle of? About your neck, like an usurer's chain? or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf? You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your Hero.

Claud. I wish him joy of her.

Bene. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover; so they sell bullocks. But did you think, the prince would have served you thus?

Claud. I pray you, leave me.

Bene. Ho! now you strike like the blind man; 'twas the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.

Claud. If it will not be, I'll leave you. [Exit.

Bene. Alas! poor hurt foul! Now will he creep into sedges.—But, that my lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince's fool!—Ha, it may be I go under that title, because I am merry.—Yea; but so; I am apt to do myself wrong: I am not so reputed: it is the base, the bitter disposition of Beatrice, that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out. Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. Now, signior, where's the count?
Did you see him?

Bene. Truth, my lord, I have played the part of lady Fame. I found him here as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. I told him, and I think I told him true, that your grace had got the good will of this young lady; and I offered him my company to a willow tree, either to make him a Garland, as being forsooken, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipped.

D. Pedro. To be whipped! What's his fault?

Bene. The flat transgression of a school-boy; who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

D. Pedro. Will thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer.

Bene. Yet it had not been amiss, the rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself; and the rod he might have bestowed on you, who, as I take it, have stolen his bird's nest.

D. Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.

Bene. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

Don Pedro. The lady Beatrice hath a quarrell to you: the gentleman, that danced with her, told her, she is much wronged by you.

Bene. O, she misused me past the endurance of a block; an oak, but with one green leaf on it, would have answered her; my very visor began to assume life, and scold with her: she told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the prince's jester; that I was droller than a great thaw; huddling jest upon jest, with such impossible conveyance, upon me, that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me: She speaks poniards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her, she would infect to the north star. I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed: she would have made Hercules have turned spit; yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too. Come, talk not of her: you shall find her the infemal Até in good apparel. I would to God, some scholar would conjure her; for, certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell, as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither; so, indeed, all disquiet, horror, and perturbation follow her.

Re-enter Claudio and Beatrice, Leonato and Hero.

D. Pedro. Look, here she comes.

Bene. Will your grace command me any service to the world's end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes, that you can devise to send me on; I will fetch you a toothpickker now from the farthest inch of Asia; bring you the length of Prester John's foot; fetch you a hair off the great Chana's beard; do you any embassage to the Pigmies, rather than hold three words' conference with this harpy: You have no employment for me?

D. Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God, sir, here's a dish I love not; I cannot endure my lady Tongue.

[Exit.

D. Pedro. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of signior Benedick.

Beat. Indeed, my lord, he lent it me a while; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one: marry, once before, he won it of me with false dice, therefore your grace may well say, I have lost it.

D. Pedro. You have put him down, lady, you have had him down.

Beat. So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

D. Pedro. Why, how now, count? wherefore are you sad?

Claud. Not sad, my lord.

D. Pedro. How then? Sick?

Claud. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well: but civil, count; civil as an orange, and something of that jealous complexion.

D. Pedro. I'faith, lady, I think your blazon to be true; though, I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have wooed in thy name, and fair Hero is won; I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained: name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy!

Leon. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes; his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it!

Beat. Speak, count, 'tis your cue.

Claud. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I were but little happy, if I could say how much.—Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give away myself for you, and dote upon the exchange.

Beat. Speak, cousin; or, if you cannot, stop his mouth with a kiss, and let not him speak, neither.
SCENE II.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

115

D. Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart. Beat. Yea, my lord; I thank it, poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care:—My cousin tells him in his ear, that he is in her heart.

Claud. And so she doth, cousin.

Beat. Good lord, for alliance!—Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sun-burned; I may sit in a corner, and cry, heigh-ho! for a husband.

D. Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beat. I would rather have one of your father's getting: Hath your grace ne'er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?

Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days: your grace is too costly to wear every day: But, I beseech your grace, pardon me; I was born to speak all mirth, and no matter.

D. Pedro. Your silence most offends me, and to be merry best becomes you; for, out of question, you were born in a merry hour.

Beat. No, sure, my lord, my mother cried; but then there was a star danced, and under that was I born.—Cousins, God give you joy!

Leon. Niece, will you look to those things I told you of?

Beat. I cry you mercy, uncle.—By your grace's pardon. [Exit Beatrice.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady.

Leon. There's little of the melancholy element in her, my lord: she is never sad, but when she sleeps; and not ever sad then; for I have heard my daughter say, she hath often dreamed of unhappiness, and waked herself with laughing.

D. Pedro. She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.

Leon. O, by no means; she mocks all her woers out of suit.

D. Pedro. She were an excellent wife for Benedick.

Leon. O lord, my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.

D. Pedro. Count Claudio, when mean you to go to church?

Claud. To-morrow, my lord: Time goes on crusties, till love have all his rites.

Leon. Not till Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just seven-night; and a time too brief too, to have all things answer my mind.

D. Pedro. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing; but I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us; I will, in the interim, undertake one of Hercules's labours; which is, to bring signor Benedick and the lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection, the one with the other. I would fain have it a match; and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.

Leon. My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights' watchings.

Claud. And I, my lord.

D. Pedro. And you too, gentle Hero?

Hero. I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to a good husband.

D. Pedro. And Benedick is not the unhopefullest husband that I know: thus far can I praise him; he is of a noble strain, of approved valour, and confirmed honesty. I will teach you how to humour your cousin, that she shall fall in love with Benedick:—and I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedick, that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archer; his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you my drift. (Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don John and Borachio.

D. John. It is so; the count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Yea, my lord, but I can cross it.

D. John. Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicinal to me: I am sick in displeasure to him; and whatsoever comes at thwart his affection, ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?

Bora. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

D. John. Show me briefly how.

Bora. I think, I told your lordship, a year since, how much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting-gentlewoman to Hero.

Bora. I can, at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber-window.

D. John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bora. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the prince your brother; spare not to tell him, that he hath wronged his honour in marrying the renowned Claudio (whose estimation do you mightily hold up) to a contaminated state, such a one as Hero.

D. John. What proof shall I make of that?

Bora. Proof enough to misuse the prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato: Look you for any other issue?

D. John. Only to despite them, I will endeavour any thing.

Bora. Go then, find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the count Claudio, alone: tell them, that you know that Hero loves me; intend a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio, as—in love of your brother's honour who hath made this match; and his friend's reputation, who is thus like to be cozened with the semblance of a maid,—that you have discovered thus. They will scarcely believe this without trial: offer them instances; which shall bear no less likelihood, than to see me at her chamber-window; hear me call Margaret, Hero; hear Margaret term me Borachio; and bring them to see this, the very night before the intended wedding: for, in the mean time, I will so fashion the matter, that Hero shall be absent; and there shall appear such seeming truth of Hero's disloyalty, that jealousy shall be called assurance, and all the preparation overthrown.

D. John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice: Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats.

Bora. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

D. John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage. (Exeunt.
SCENE III.—LEONATO'S GARDEN.

Enter Benedick and a Boy.

Bene. In my chamber-window lies a book; bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am here already, sir.

Bene. I know that;—but I would have thee hence, and here again. [Exit Boy.]—I do much wonder, that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his own scorn, by falling in love: And such a man is Claudio. I have known, when there was no music with him but the drum and fife; and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe: I have known, when he would have walked ten mile a-foot, to see a good armour; and now will he lie ten nights awake, carving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain, and to the purpose, like an honest man, and a soldier; and now is he turned orator; his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted, and see with these eyes? I cannot tell; I think not: I will not be sworn, but love may transform me to an oyster; but I'll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me, he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair; yet I am well: another is wise; yet I am well; another virtuous; yet I am well: but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich, she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not I for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Ha! the prince and monsieur Love! I will hide me in the arbour. [Withdrawn.

Enter Don Pedro, Leonato, and Claudio.

D. Pedro. Come, shall we hear this music?

Claud. Yea, my good lord.—How still the even—As hushed on purpose to grace harmony! [ing is, D. Pedro. See you where Benedick hath hid himself?

Claud. O, very well, my lord: the music ended, We'll fit the kid-fox with a pennyworth.

Enter Balthazar, with Music.

D. Pedro. Come, Balthazar, we'll hear that song again.

Balth. O good my lord, tax not so bad a voice To slander music any more than once.

D. Pedro. It is the witness still of excellency, To put a strange face on his own perfection:— I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more.

Balth. Because you talk of wooing, I will sing: Since many a wooer doth commence his suit To her he thinks not worthy; yet he woos; Yet will he swear, he loves.

D. Pedro. Nay, pray thee, come: Or, if thou wilt hold longer argument, Do it in notes.

Balth. Note this before my notes, There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

D. Pedro. Why these are very crotchets that he speaks:

Note, notes, forsooth, and noting! [Music.

Bene. Now, Divine air! now is his soul ravished! —Is it not strange, that sheep's guts should hale souls out of men's bodies?—Well, a horn for my money, when all's done.

Balthazar sings.

I.

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more; Men were deceivers ever;

One foot in sea, and one on shore; To one thing constant never:

Then sigh not so,

But let them go,

And be you blithe and bonny; Converting all your sounds of woe Into, Hey nonny, nonny.

Sung no more ditties, sing no mo Of dumps so dull and heavy; The fraud of men was ever so,

Since summer first was leavy. Then sigh not so, &c.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a good song.

Balth. And an ill singer, my lord.

Claud. Ha! no; no, faith; thou singest well enough for a shift.

Bene. [Aside.] An he had been a dog, that should have howled thus, they would have hanged him and, I pray God, his bad voice bode no mischief! I had as lief have heard the night-raven, come that plague could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yea, marry; [to Claudio.]—Dost thou hear, Balthazar? I pray thee, get us some excellent music; for to-morrow night we would have it at the lady Hero's chamber-window.

Balth. The best I can, my lord.

D. Pedro. Do so: farewell. [Exit Balthazar and Music.] Come hither, Leonato: What was it you told me of to-day? that your niece Beatrice was in love with signior Benedick?

Claud. O, ay:—Stalk on, stalk on: the fowl sits [Aside to Pedro.] I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither; but most wonderful, that she should so dote on signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhor.

Bene. Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner? [Aside.

Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it; but that she loves him with an enraged affection,—it is past the infinite of thought.

D. Pedro. May be, she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. 'Faith, like enough.

Leon. O God! counterfeit! There was never counterfeit of passion came so near the life of passion, as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows she?

Claud. Bait the hook well; this fish will bite. [Aside.

Leon. What effects, my lord! She will sit you,— You heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you? You amaze me: I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Bene. [Aside.] I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it: knavery cannot, sure, hide itself in such reverence.

Claud. He hath ta'en the infection; hold it up. [Aside.

D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?
Leon. No; and swears she never will: that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true, indeed; so your daughter says: Shall I, says she, that have so oft encountered her with scorn, write to him that I love him?

Leon. This she says now, when she is beginning to write to him: for she'll be up twenty times a night: and there will she sit in her smock, till she have writ a sheet of paper — my daughter tells us all.

Leon. O! When she had writ it, and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheets.

Claud. That.

Leon. O! she tore the letter into a thousand half-pence; railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her: I measure him, says she, by my own spirit; for I should flout him, if he write to me; yea, though I love him, I should.

Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sobes, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, curses; — O sweet Benedick! God give me patience!

Leon. She doth indeed; my daughter says so: and the ecstasy hath so much overcome her, that my daughter is sometime afraid she will do a desperate outrage to herself; It is very true.

D. Pedro. It were good, that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.

Claud. To what end? He would but make a sport of it, and torment the poor lady worse.

D. Pedro. An he should, it were an alms to hang him; She's an excellent sweet lady; and, out of all suspicion, she is virtuous.

Claud. And she is exceeding wise.

D. Pedro. In everything, but in loving Benedick.

Leon. O my lord, wisdom and blood combating in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one that blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. Pedro. I would, she had bestowed this dotage on me; I would have daft'd all other respects, and made her half myself: I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what he will say.

Leon. Were it good, think you?

Claud. Hero thinks surely, she will die; for she says, she will die if he love her not; and she will die ere she makes her love known: and she will die if he woo her, rather than she will 'bate one breath of her accustomed crossness.

D. Pedro. She doth well: if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it: for the man, as you know all, hath a contemtible spirit.

Claud. He is a very proper man.

D. Pedro. He hath, indeed, a good outward happiness.

Claud. 'Tis true, God, and in my mind, very wise.

D. Pedro. He doth, indeed, show some sparks that are like wit.

Leon. And I take him to be valiant.

D. Pedro. As Hector, I assure you; and in the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise; for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most christian-like fear.

Leon. If he do fear God, he must necessarily keep peace; if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

D. Pedro. And so will he do; for the man doth fear God, lowsoever it seems not in him, by some large jests he will make. Well, I am sorry for your niece: Shall we go see Benedick, and tell him of her love?

Claud. Never tell him, my lord; let her wear it out with good counsel.

Leon. Nay, that's impossible; she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. Well, we'll hear further of it by your daughter: let it cool the while. I love Benedick well: and I could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy to have so good a lady.

Leon. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.

Claud. If it be not doat on her upon will, I will never trust my expectation. [Aside.

D. Pedro. Let there be the same net spread for her: and that must your daughter and her gentlewoman carry. The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter; that's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner.

[Exeunt Don Pedro, Claudia, and Leonato. Benedick advances from the audience.

Bene. This can be no trick: The conference was sadly borne. — They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady; it seems, her affections have their full bent. Love me! why, it must be requited. I hear how I am censured: they say, I will bear myself proudly, if I perceive the love come from her; they say too, that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. — I did never think to marry; — I must not seem proud: — Happy are they that hear their detractions, and can put them to mending. They say, the lady is fair; 'tis a truth, I can bear them witness: and virtuous — 'tis so, I cannot improve it; and wise, but for loving me: — By my troth, it is no addition to her wit; — nor no great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with her. — I may chance have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me, because I have railed so long against marriage: But doth not the appetite alter? A man loves the meat in his youth, that he cannot endure in his age; Shall quips, and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his humour? No: The world must be peopled. When I was a man, I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I were married. — Here comes Beatrice: By this day, she's a fair lady: I do spy some marks of love in her.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat. Against my will, I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Bene. Fair Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.

Beat. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you take pains to thank me; if it had been painful, I would not have come.

Bene. You take pleasure, then, in the message?

Beat. Yes, just so much as you may take upon a knife's point, and choke a daw withal: — You have no stomach, signior; fare you well.

Bene. Ha! Against my will I am sent to bid you come to dinner — there's a double meaning in that. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you took pains to thank me — that's as much as to say, Any pains that I take for you is as easy as thanks: — if I do not take pity of her, I am a villain; if I do not love her I am a Jew; I will go get her picture.

[Exit.]
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret, run thee into the parlour; There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice, Proposing with the Prince and Claudio: Whisper her ear, and tell her, I and Ursula, Walk in the orchard, and our whole discourse Is all of her; say, that thou overheard'st us; And bid her steal into the pleased bower, Where honeysuckles, ripened by the sun, Forbid the sun to enter;—like favourites, Made proud by princes, that advance their pride Against that power that bred it:—there will she hide her, To listen our propose: This is thy office, Bear thee well in it, and leave us alone.

Marg. I'll make her come, I warrant you, presently. [Exit.]

Hero. Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this alley up and down, Our talk must only be of Benedick: When I do name him, let it be thy part To praise him more than ever man did merit: My talk to thee must be, how Benedick Is sick in love with Beatrice: Of this matter Is little Cupid's crafty arrow made, That only wounds by hearsay. Now begin;

Enter Beatrice, behind.

For look where Beatrice, like a lapwing, runs, Close by the ground, to hear our conference. Urs. The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish Cut with her golden oars the silver stream, And greedily devour the treacherous bait: So angle we for Beatrice; who even now Is couched in the woodbine coverture: Fear you not my part of the dialogue. Hero. Then go we near her, that her ear lose nothing Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it.— [They advance to the bower. No, truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful; I know, her spirits are as coy and wild As bagiards of the rock.

Urs. But are you sure, That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely? Lord. Hero. So says the prince, and my new-trothed Urs. And did they bid you tell her of it, madam? Hero. They did intreat me to acquaint her of it But I persuaded them, if they loved Benedick, To wish him wrestle with affection, And never to let Beatrice know of it. Urs. Why did you so? Dost not the gentleman Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed, As ever Beatrice shall couch upon? Hero. O God of love! I know, he doth deserve As much as may be yielded to a man: But nature never framed a woman's heart Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice: Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes, Misprizing what they look on; and her wit Values itself so highly, that to her All matter else seems weak: she cannot love, Nor take no shape nor project of affection, She is so self-endear'd.

Urs. Sure, I think so; And therefore, certainly, it were not good She knew his love, lest she make sport at it. Hero. Why, you speak truth: I never yet saw man, How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featured, But she would spell him backward: if fair-faced, She'd swear, the gentleman should be her sister; If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick, Made a foul blot: if tall, a lance ill-headed; If low, an agate very vilely cut: If speaking, why, a vane blown with all winds; If silent, why, a block moved with none. So turns she every man the wrong side out; And never gives to truth and virtue, that Which simpleness and merit purchaseth. [Aside. Urs. Sure, sure, such carping is not commend- Hero. No; not to be so odd, and from all fashions, As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable: But who dare tell her so? If I should speak, She'd mock me into air; O, she would laugh me Out of myself, press me to death with wit. Therefore let Benedick, like covered fire, Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly: It were a better death than die with mock's; Which is as bad as die with tickling. Urs. Yet tell her of it; hear what she will say. Hero. No; rather I will go to Benedick, And counsel him to fight against his passion: And, truly, I'll devise some honest slander To stain my cousin with: One doth not know, How much an ill-word may epoison liking. Urs. O, do not do your cousin such a wrong. She cannot be so much without true judgment, (Having so swift and excellent a wit, As she is priz'd to have,) as to refuse So rare a gentleman as signior Benedick. Hero. He is the only man of Italy, Always excepted my dear Claudio. Urs. I pray you, be not angry with me, madam, Speaking my fancy; signior Benedick, For shape, for bearing, argument and valour, Goes foremost in report through Italy. Hero. Indeed, he hath an excellent good name. Urs. His excellence did earn it, ere he had it.— When are you married, madam?

Hero. Why, every day;—to-morrow: Come, go in; I'll show thee some attires; and have thy counsel, Which is the best to furnish me to-morrow. Urs. She's lim'd, I warrant you; we have caught her, madam. Hero. If it prove so, then loving goes by haps: Some Cupid kills with arrows, some with traps. [Exeunt Hero and Ursula.

Beatrice advances.

Beat. What fire is in mine ears? Can this be true? Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Contempt, farewell! and maiden pride, adieu! No glory lives behind the back of such. And, Benedick, love on, I will requite thee; Taming my wild heart to thy loving hand; If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite thee To bind our loves up in a holy band: For others say, thou dost deserve; and I Believe it better than reportingly. [Exit
SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and Leonato.

D. Pedro. I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then I go toward Arragon.

Claud. I’ll bring you thither, my lord, if you’ll vouchsafe me.

D. Pedro. Nay, that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage, as to show a child his new coat, and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth; he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid’s bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him: he hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper: for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.

Bene. Gallants, I am not as I have been. Leon. Say I? methinks you are sadler.

Claud. I hope he be in love.

D. Pedro. Hang him, truant; there’s no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touch’d with love: if he be sad, he wants money.

Bene. I have the tooth-ach.

D. Pedro. Draw it.

Bene. Hang it!

Claud. You must hang it first, and draw it afterwards.

D. Pedro. What? sigh for the tooth-ach?

Leon. Where is but a humour or a worm?

Bene. Well, every one can master a grief, but he that has it.

Claud. Yet, say I, he is in love.

D. Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises; as, to be a Dutchman to-day; a Frenchman to-morrow; or in the shape of two countries at once, as, a German from the waist downward, all slops; and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doubt: Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs; he brushes his hat o’ mornings: What should that bode?

D. Pedro. Hath any man seen him at the barber’s?

Claud. No, but the barber’s man hath been seen with him; and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis-balls.

Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

D. Pedro. Nay, he rubs himself with eiet; Can you smell him out by that?

Claud. That’s as much as to say, The sweet youth’s in love.

D. Pedro. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

Claud. And when was he wont to wash his face?

D. Pedro. Yes, or to paint himself? for the which, I hear what they say of him.

Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit; which is now crept into a lustrestring, and now governed by stops.

D. Pedro. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him: conclude, conclude, he is in love.

Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him.

D. Pedro. That would I know too; I warrant, one that knows him not.

Claud. Yes, and his ill conditions; and, in despite of all, dies for him.

D. Pedro. She shall be buried with her face up wards.

Bene. Yet is this no charm for the tooth-ach,— Old signior, walk aside with me; I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

[Exeunt Benedick and Leonato.

D. Pedro. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

Claud. ’Tis even so: Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice; and then the two bears will not bite one another, when they meet.

Enter Don John.

D. John. My lord and brother, God save you.

D. Pedro. Good den, brother.

D. John. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

D. Pedro. In private?

D. John. If it please you;—yet count Claudio may hear; for what I would speak of, concerns him.

D. Pedro. What’s the matter?

D. John. Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?

[To Claudio.

D. Pedro. You know, he does.

D. John. I know not that, when he knows what I know.

Claud. If there be any impediment, I pray you, discover it.

D. John. You may think, I love you not; let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest: For my brother, I think, he holds you well, and in dearness of heart hath hope to effect your ensuing marriage; surely, suit ill spent, and labour ill bestowed!

D. Pedro. Why, what’s the matter?

D. John. I came hither to tell you: and, circumstances shortened, (for she hath been too long a talking of,) the lady is disloyal.

Claud. Who? Hero?

D. John. Even she; Leonato’s Hero, your Hero, every man’s Hero.

Claud. Disloyal?

D. John. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness; I could say, she were worse; think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till further warrant: go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber-window entered; even the night before her wedding-day: if you love her then, to-morrow wed her; but it would better fit your honour to change your mind.

Claud. May this be so?

D. Pedro. I will not think it.

D. John. If you dare not trust that you see, confess not that you know: if you will follow me, I will show you enough; and when you have seen more, and heard more, proceed accordingly.

Claud. If I see any thing to-night why I should not marry her to-morrow; in the congregation, where I should wed, there will I shame her.

D. Pedro. And, as I woed for thee to obtain her, I will join with thee to disgrace her.

D. John. I will disarrange her no farther, till you are my witnesses: bear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.

D. Pedro. O day untowardly turned!

Claud. O mischief strangely thwarting!

D. John. O plague right well prevented!

So will you say, when you have seen the sequel.

[Exeunt]
SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges, with the Watch.

Dogb. Are you good men and true?
Verg. Yea, or else it were pity but they should suffer salvation, body and soul.

Dogb. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, being chosen for the prince's watch.

Verg. Well, give them their charge, neighbour Dogberry.

Dogb. First, who think you the most deserting man to be constable?

1 Watch. Hugh Oatcake, sir, or George Seacoal; for they can write and read.

Dogb. Come hither, neighbour Seacoal: God hath blessed you with a good name: to be a well-favoured man is the gift of fortune; but to write and read comes by nature.

2 Watch. Both which, master constable,—

Dogb. You have; I knew it would be your answer. Well, for your favour, sir, why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch; therefore bear you the lantern: This is your charge; You shall comprehend all vagrom men; you are to bid any man stand, in the prince's name.

2 Watch. How if 's will not stand?

Dogb. Why then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verg. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the prince's subjects.

Dogb. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects:—You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and talk, is most tolerable and not to be endured.

2 Watch. We will rather sleep than talk; we know what belongs to a watch.

Dogb. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman; for I cannot see how sleeping should offend: only, have a care that your bills be not stolen:—Well, you are to call at all the ale-houses, and bid them that are drunk get them to bed.

2 Watch. How if they will not?

Dogb. Why then, let them alone till they are sober; if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you took them for.

2 Watch. Well, sir.

Dogb. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man: and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more is for your honesty.

2 Watch. If we knew him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

Dogb. Truly, by your office you may; but, I think, they that touch pitch will be defiled: the most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

Verg. You have been always called a merciful man, partner.

Dogb. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will; much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Verg. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse and bid her still it.

2 Watch. How if the nurse be asleep, and will not hear us?

Dogb. Why, then, depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying: for the eve that will not hear her lamb when it baa, will never answer a calf when he bleats.

Verg. 'Tis very true.

Dogb. This is the end of the charge. You, constable, are to present the prince's own person; if you meet him in place in the night, you may stay him.

Verg. Nay by'r lady, that, I think, 'a cannot.

Dogb. Five shillings to one on't, with any man that knows the statues, he may stay him: marry, not without the prince be willing: for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man; and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verg. By'r lady, I think, it be so.

Dogb. Ha, ha, ha! Well, masters, good night an there be any matter of weight chances, call up me: keep your fellows' counsels and your own, and good night.—Come, neighbour Dogberry.

2 Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge: let us go sit here upon the church-bench, till two, and then all to-bed.

Dogb. One word more, honest neighbours: I pray you, watch about signior Leonato's door; for the wedding being there to-morrow, there is a great coil to-night: Adieu, be vigilant, I beseech you.

[Exit Dogberry and Verges.]

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bora. What! Conrade,—

Watch. Peace, sir not. [Aside]

Bora. Conrade, I say!

Con. Here, man, I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow itched; I thought, there would a scab follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close then under this pent-house, for it drizzles rain; and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Watch. [Aside.] Some treason, masters; yet stand close.

Bora. Therefore know, I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

Con. Is it possible that any villany should be so dear?

Bora. Thou should'st rather ask, if it were possible any villainy should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfirmed: Thou knowest, that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparel.

Bora. I mean, the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Tush! I may as well say, the foot's the fool. But see'st thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

Watch. I know that Deformed; 'a has been a vile thief this seven year; 'a goes up and down like a gentleman: I remember his name.

Bora. Did'st thou not hear somebody?

Con. No; 'twas the vane on the house.

Bora. Seest thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how giddily he turns about all the hot bloods, between fourteen and five-and-thirty? sometime, fashioning them like Pharaoh's soldiers in the reehey painting; sometime, like god Beli's priests in the old church window; sometime, like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry, where his cod-piece seems as massy as his club?

Con. All this I see; and see, that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man: But art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou last shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so neither; but know, that I have to-night wooed Margaret, the lady Hero's gentlewoman, by the name of Hero; she leans me out at her mistress's chamber-window, bids me a thousand times good-night,—I tell this tale vilely.—I should first tell thee, how the Prince, Claudio, and my master, planted, and placed, and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought they, Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the Prince and Claudio, but the devil my master knew she was Margaret; and partly by his oaths, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; swore he would meet her as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw over-night, and send her home again without a husband.

1 Watch. We charge you in the prince's name, stand.

2 Watch. Call up the right master constable; we have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in the commonwealth.

1 Watch. And one Deformed is one of them; I know him, 's wears a lock.

Con. Masters, masters!

2 Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Con. Masters,—

1 Watch. Never speak; we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

Bora. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills.

Con. A commodity in question, I warrant you. Come, we'll obey you. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs. I will, lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well.

Marg. 'Tis truth, I think, your other rabato were better.

Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear this.

Marg. By my troth, it's not so good; and I warrant, your cousin will say so.

Hero. My cousin's a fool, and thou art another; I'll wear none but this.

Marg. I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner: and your gown's a most rare fashion, I'faith. I saw the duchess of Milan's gown, that they praise so.

Hero. O, that exceeds, they say.

Marg. By my troth it's but a night-gown in respect of yours: Cloth of gold, and cuts, and laced with silver; set with pearls, down-sleeves, side-sleeves, and skirts round, underborne with a bluish time: but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.

Hero. God give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy!

Marg. 'Twill be heavier soon, by the weight of a man.

Hero. Fye upon thee! art not ashamed?

Marg. Of what, lady? of speaking honourably? Is not marriage honourable in a beggar? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think, you would have me say, saving your reverence,—a husband: an bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I'll offend nobody: Is there any harm in the heavier for a husband? None, I think, an it be the right husband, and the right wife; otherwise 'tis light, and not heavy: Ask my lady Beatrice else,—here she comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Hero. Good morrow, coz.

Beat. Good morrow, sweet Hero.

Hero. Why, how now! do you speak in the sick tune?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, methinks.

Marg. Clap us into Light o' love: that goes without a burden; do you sing it, and I'll dance it.

Beat. Yes, Light o' love, with your heels!—then if your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns.

Marg. O illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.

Beat. 'Tis almost five o'clock, cousin; 'tis time you were ready. By my troth, I am exceeding ill:—hey ho!

Marg. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?

Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H.

Marg. Well, an you be not turned Turk, there's no more sailing by the star.

Beat. What means the fool, trow?

Marg. Nothing I; but God send every one their heart's desire!

Hero. These gloves the count sent me, they are an excellent perfume.

Beat. I am stuffed, cousin, I cannot smell.

Marg. A maid, and stuffed! there's goodly catching of cold.

Beat. O, God help me! God help me! how long have you profess'd apprehension?

Marg. Ever since you left it: doth not my wit become me rarely?

Beat. It is not seen enough, you should wear it in your cap.—By my troth, I am sick.

Marg. Get you some of this distilled Cardus Benedictus, and lay it to your heart; it is the only thing for a qualm.

Hero. There thou prick'st her with a thistle.

Beat. Benedictus! why Benedictus? you have some moral in this Benedictus.

Marg. Moral? no, by my troth, I have no moral meaning; I meant, plain holy-thistle. You may think, perchance, that I think you are in love: nay, by'r Lady, I am not such a fool to think what I list; nor I list not to think what I can; nor, indeed, I cannot think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love: yet
Benedick was such another, and now is he become a man: he swore he would never marry; and yet now, in despite of his heart, he eats his meat without grudging: and how you may be converted, I know not; but, methinks, you look with your eyes as other women do.

Beat. What pace is this that thy tongue keeps?
Marg. Not a false gallop.

Re-enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, withdraw; the prince, the count, signior Benedick, Don John, and all the gallants of the town, are come to fetch you to church.

Hero. Help to dress me, good coz, good Meg, good Ursula.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, with Dogberry and Verges.

Leon. What would you with me, honest neighbour?

Dogb. Marry, sir, I would have some confidence with you, that decent you nearly.

Leon. Brief, I pray you; for you see, 'tis a busy time with me.

Dogb. Marry, this it is, sir.

Verg. Yes, in truth it is, sir.

Leon. What is it, my good friends?

Dogb. Goodman Verges, sir, speaks a little off the matter: an old man, sir, and his wits are not so blunt, as, God help me, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest, as the skin between his brows.

Verg. Yes, I thank God, I am as honest as any man living, that is an old man, and no homester than I.

Dogb. Comparisons are odorous: palavras, neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Dogb. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poor duke's officers; but, truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.

Leon. All thy tediousness on me! ha!

Dogb. Yea, and 'twere a thousand times more than 'tis: for I hear as good exclamation on your worship, as of any man in the city; and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

Verg. And so am I.

Leon. I would fain know what you have to say.

Verg. Marry, sir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship's presence, have ta'en a couple of as arrant knaves as any in Messina.

Dogb. A good old man, sir; he will be talking; as they say, When the age is in, the wit is out; God help us! it is a world to see!—Well said, 'faith, neighbour Verges:—well, God's a good man; an two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind:—An honest soul, 'faith, sir; by my troth he is, as ever broke bread: but, God is to be worshipped: All men are not alike; alas, good neighbour!

Leon. Indeed, neighbour, he comes too short of you.

Dogb. Gifts, that God gives.

Leon. I must leave you.

Dogb. One word, sir: our watch, sir, have, indeed, comprehended two suspicious persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

Leon. Take their examination yourself, and bring it me; I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto you.

Dogb. It shall be sufficiency.

Leon. Drink some wine ere you go: fare you well.

[Enter a Messenger.]

Mess. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband.

Leon. I will wait upon them; I am ready.

[Exeunt Leonato and Messenger.

Dogb. Go, good partner, go, get you to Francis Sencioal, bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the gaol: we are now to examination these men.

Verg. And we must do it wisely.

Dogb. We will spare for no wit, I warrant you; here's that [touching his forehead] shall drive some of them to a non com: only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the gaol.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Bene. How now! Interjections? Why, then, some be of laughing, as, ha! ha! ha!

Claud. Stand thee by, friar,—Father, by your Will you with free and unconstrained soul [leave; Give me this maid, your daughter?

Leon. As freely, son, as God did give her me.

Claud. And what have I to give you back, whose worth

May counterpoise this rich and precious gift?

D. Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her again.

Claud. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thank-There, Leonato, take her back again; [fulness.—

Give not this rotten orange to your friend; She's but the sign and semblance of her honour:—Behold, how like a maid she blushes here

O, what authority and show of truth

Can cunning sin cover itself withal!

Comes not that blood, as modest evidence,

To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE I.

All you that see her, that she were a maid,
By these exterior shows? But she is none:
She knows the heat of a luxurious bed:
Her blush is guileless, not modesty.
Leon. What do you mean, my lord?
Claud. Not to be married,
Not knit my soul to an approved wanton.
Leon. Dear my lord, if you, in your own proof
Have vanquish'd the resistance of her youth,
And made defeat of her virginity,—
Claud. I know what you would say; if I have known her,
You'll say, she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the 'forehand sin:
Claud. I never tempted her with word too large;
But, as a brother to his sister, show'd
Bashful sincerity, and comely love.
Hero. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you?
Claud. Out on thy seeming! I will write against
You seem to me as Dian in her orb; [it:
As chaste as is the bud ere it be blown;
But you are more intertempore in your blood
Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality.
Hero. Is this my lord, that he doth speak so wide?
Leon. Sweet prince, why speak not you?
D. Pedro. What should I speak?
I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common stale.
Leon. Are these things spoken? or do I but dream?
D. John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.
Bene. This looks not like a nuptial.
Hero. True, O God!
Claud. Leonato, stand I here?
Is this the prince? Is this the prince's brother?
Is this face Hero's? Are our eyes our own?
Leon. All this is so; but what of this, my lord?
Claud. Let me but move one question to your
And, by that fatherly and kindly power [daughter;
That you have in her, bid her answer truly.
Leon. I charge thee do so, as thou art my child.
Hero. O God defend me! how am I beset!—
What kind of catechising call you this?
Claud. To make you answer truly to your name.
Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name
With any just reproach?
Marry, that can Hero;
Hero itself can blot out Hero's virtue.
What man was he talk'd with you yesternight
Out at your window, betwixt twelve and one?
Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.
Hero. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord.
D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maiden.—
Leonato,
I am sorry you must hear; Upon mine honour,
Myself, my brother, and this griev'd count,
Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night,
Talk with a ruffian at her chamber-window;
Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain,
Confess'd the vile encounters they have had
A thousand times in secret.
D. John. Fye, fye! they are Not to be named, my lord, not to be spoke of;
There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence, to utter them: Thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.
Claud. O Hero! what a Hero hadst thou been,
If half thy outward graces had been placed
About thy thoughts, and counsels of thy heart!
But, fare thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell,
That pure impiety, and impious purity!
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eye-lids shall conjecture hang,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.
Leon. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?
[HERO SINGS.
Beat. Why, how now, cousin? wherefore sink you down?
D. John. Come, let us go: these things, come thus to light,
Smother her spirits up.
[Exit DON PEDRO, DON JOHN, AND CLAUDIO.
Bene. How doth the lady?
Beat. Dead, I think:—help, uncle:—
Hero! why, Hero!—Uncle!—Signior Benedick!—
—friar!
Leon. O fate, take not away thy heavy hand!
Death is the fairest cover for her shame
That may be wish'd for.
Beat. How now, cousin Hero?
Friar. Have comfort, lady.
Leon. Dost thou look up?
Friar. Yea; wherefore should she not?
Leon. Wherefore? Why, doth not every earthly thing
Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny
The story that is printed in her blood?—
Do not live, Hero; do not ope thine eyes:
For did I think thou would'st not quickly die,
Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shame,
Myself would, on the rearward of reproaches,
Strike at thy life. Griev'd I; I had but one
Chill I for that at fragal nature's frame?
O, one too much by thee! Why had I one?
Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?
Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates;
Who smirched thus, and mired with infamy,
I might have said, No part of it is mine,
This shame deriveth itself from unknown loins?
But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I prais'd,
And mine that I was proud on; mine so much,
That I myself was to myself not mine,
Valuing of her; why, she—O, she is fallen
Into a pit of ink! that the wide sea
 Hath drops too few to wash her clean again;
And salt too little, which may season give
To her foul tainted flesh!
Bene. Sir, sir, be patient:
For my part I am so attir'd in wonder,
I know not what to say.
Beat. O, on my soul, my cousin is belied!
Bene. Lady, were you her bedfellow last night?
Beat. No, truly not; although, until last night,
I have this twelvemonth been her bedfellow.
Leon. Confirm'd, confirm'd! O, that is stronger
Made,
Which was before barr'd up with ribs of iron!
Would the two princes lie? and Claudio lie?
Who lov'd her so, that, speaking of her foulness,
Wash'd it with tears? Hence from her; let her die.
Friar. Hear me a little;
For I have only been silent so long,
And given way unto this course of fortune,
By noting of the lady; I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions start
Into her face; a thousand innocent shames
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparel’d in more precious habit,
More moving delicate, and full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his soul,
Than when she liv’d indeed—then shall he mourn,
(If ever love had interest in his liver),
And wish he had not so accused her:
No, though he thought his accusation true.
Let this be so, and doubt not but success
Will fashion the event in better shape
Than I can lay it down in likelihood.
But if all aim but this be levell’d false,
The supposition of the lady’s death
Will quench the wonder of her infamy:
And, if it sort not well, you may conceal her
(As best befits her wounded reputation),
In some reclusive and religious life,
Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.

Bene. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you:
And though, you know, my inwardsness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio,
Yet, by mine honour, I will deal in this
As secretly, and justly, as your soul
Should with your body.

Leon. Being that I flow in grief
The smallest twine may lead me.

Friar. ‘Tis well consented; presently away;
For to strange sores strangely they strain the Come, lady, die to live: this wedding day, [cure.-
Perhaps, is but prolonged; have patience, and endure. [Execut Friar, Hero, and Leonato.

Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?

Beat. Yea, and I will weep a while longer.

Bene. I will not desire that.

Beat. You have no reason, I do it freely.

Bene. Surely, I do believe your fair cousin is wrong’d.

Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me, that would right her!

Bene. Is there any way to show such friendship?

Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.

Bene. May a man do it?

Beat. It is a man’s office, but not yours.

Bene. I do love nothing in the world so well as you; Is not that strange?

Beat. As strange as the thing I know not: It were as possible for me to say, I loved nothing so well as you: but believe me not; and yet I lie not;
I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing: I am sorry for my cousin.

Bene. By my sword, Beatrice, thou lovtest me.

Beat. Do not swear by it, and eat it.

Bene. I will swear by it, that you love me; and I will make him eat it, that says I love not you.

Beat. Will you not eat your word?

Bene. With no sauce that can be devised to it:
I protest, I love thee.

Beat. Why, then, God forgive me!

Bene. What offence, sweet Beatrice?

Beat. You have staid me in a happy hour; I was about to protest I loved you.

Bene. And do it with all thy heart?

Beat. I love you with so much of my heart, that none is left to protest.

Bene. Come, bid me do anything for thee.

Beat. Kill Claudio.

Bene. Ha! not for the wide world.

Beat. You kill me to deny it. Farewell.

Bene. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.
BEAT. I am gone, though I am here;—There is no love in you:—Nay, I pray you, let me go.

BENE. BEATRICE,—

BEAT. In faith, I will go.

BENE. We'll be friends first.

BEAT. You dare easier be friends with me, than fight with mine enemy.

BENE. Is Claudio thine enemy?

BEAT. Is he not approved in the height a villain, that hath slandered, scorned, dishonoured my kinswoman?—O, that I were a man!—What! bear her in hand until they come to take hands; and then with public accusation, uncovered slander, unmitigated rancour,—O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place!

BENE. Hear me, Beatrice;—

BEAT. Talk with a man out at a window?—a proper saying!

BENE. Nay but, Beatrice;—

BEAT. Sweet Hero!—she is wronged, she is slandered, she is undone.

BENE. BEAT.

BEAT. Princes, and counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a goodly count-contect; a sweet gallant, surely! O that I were a man for his sake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is melted into courtesies, valour into compliment, and men are only turned into tongue, and true ones too: he is now as valiant as Hercules, that only tells a lie, and swears it:—I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.

BENE. Tarry, good Beatrice: By this hand, I love thee.

BEAT. Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.

BENE. Think you in your soul the count Claudio hath wronged Hero?

BEAT. Yea, as sure as I have a thought, or a soul.

BENE. Enough, I am engaged, I will challenge him; I will kiss your hand, and so leave you: By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account: As you hear of me, so think of me. Go, comfort your cousin: I must say, she is dead; and so farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Prison.

Enter DOGBERRY, VERGES, and SEXTON, in gowns; and the Watch, with CONRAD and BORACHIO.

DOGB. Is our whole assembly appeared?

VERGES. O, a stool and a cushion for the sexton! SEXTON. Which be the malefactors?

DOGB. Marry, that am I and my partner.

VERGES. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.

SEXTON. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

DOGB. Yea, marry, let them come before me.—What is your name, friend?

BORACHIO.

DOGB. Pray write down.—Borachio.—Yours, sirrah?—Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrade.

DOGB. Write down—master gentleman Conrade.—Masters, do you serve God?

CON. BORA. Yea, sir, we hope.

DOGB. Write down—that they hope they serve God:—and write God first; for God defend but God should go before such villains!—Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves; and it will go near to be thought soshortly. How answer you for yourselves?

CON. Marry, sir, we say we are none.

DOGB. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go about with him.—Come you either, sirrah; a word in your ear, sir; I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

BORA. Sir, I say to you, we are none.

DOGB. Well, stand aside.—'Fore God, they are both in a tale: Have you writ down—that they are none?

SEXTON. Master constable, you go not the way to examine; you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

DOGB. Yea, marry, that's the eatest way:—Let the watch come forth:—Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.

1 Watch. This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.

DOGB. Write down—prince John a villain:—Why this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother—villain.

BORA. Master constable,—

DOGB. Pray thee, fellow, peace; I do not like thy look, I promise thee.

SEXTON. What heard you him say else?

2 Watch. Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John, for accusing the lady Hero wrongfully.

DOGB. Flat burglary, as ever was committed.

VERGES. Yea, by the mass, that it is.

SEXTON. What else, fellow?

1 Watch. And that count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

DOGB. O villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting redemption for this.

SEXTON. What else?

2 Watch. This is all.

SEXTON. And this, I say, masters, than you can deny. Prithee, John is this morning secretly stolen away; Hero was in this manner accused, in this very manner refused, and upon the grief of this, suddenly died.—Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato's; I will go before, and show him their examination. [Exit.

DOGB. Come, let them be opinioned.

VERGES. Let them be in band.

CON. Off, coxcomb!

DOGB. God's my life! where's the sexton? let him write down—the prince's officer, coxcomb.—Come, bind them:—Thou naughty varlet!—

CON. Away! you are an ass, you are an ass.

DOGB. Dost thou not suspect my place? Dost thou not suspect my years?—O that he were here to write me down—an ass! but, masters, remember, that I am an ass; though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass:—No, thou villain, thou art full of piety, as shall be proved upon thee by good witness, I am a wise fellow; and, which is more, an officer; and, which is more, a householder; and, which is more, as pretty a piece of flesh as any is in Messina; and one that knows the law, go to; and a rich fellow enough, go to; and a fellow that hath had losses; and one that hath two gowns, and every thing handsome about him:—Bring him away. O, that I had been writ down—an ass! [Exeunt.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato’s House.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself;
And 'tis not wisdom, thus to second grief
Against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee, cease thy counsel,
Which falls into mine ears as profitless
As water in a sieve: give not me counsel;
Nor let no comforter delight mine ear,
But such a one whose wrongs do suit with mine.
Bring me a father, that so loved his child,
Whose joy of her is overwhelm’d like mine,
And bid him speak of patience;
Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine,
And let it answer every strain for strain;
As thus for thus, and such a grief for such,
In every lineament, branch, shape, and form:
If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard;
Cry—sorrow, wag! and hem, when he should groan;
Patch grief with provers; make misfortune drunk
With candle-wasters; bring him yet to me,
And I of him will gather patience.
But there is no such man: For, brother, men
Can counsel, and speak comfort to that grief
Which they themselves do feel; but, tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage,
Fort strong madness in a silken thread,
Charm ache with air, and agony with words:
No, no; 'tis all men’s office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow;
But no man’s virtue, nor sufficiency,
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself; therefore give me no counsel:
My griefs cry louder than advertisement.

Ant. Thereto do men from children nothing differ.

Leon. I pray thee, peace; I will be flesh and
For there was never yet philosopher, [blood;
That could endure the tooth-ach patiently;
However they have writ the style of gods,
And make a phis at chance and sufferance.
Ant. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself;
Make those, that do offend you, suffer too.

Leon. There thou speak’st reason: nay, I will
My soul doth tell me, Hero is belied; [do so:
And that shall Claudio know, so shall the prince,
And all of them, that thus dishonour her.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio.

Ant. Here comes the prince, and Claudio, hastily.

D. Pedro. Good den, good den.

Claud. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Hear you, my lords,—

D. Pedro. We have some haste, Leonato.

Leon. Some haste, my lord—I well, fare you well, my lord:—
Are you so hasty now?—well, all is one.

D. Pedro. Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old man.

Ant. If he could right himself with quarrelling,
Some of us would lie low.

Claud. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry,
Thou, thou dost wrong me; thou dissembler, thou:—

Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword—
I fear thee not.

Claud. Marry, beshrew my hand,
If it should give your age such cause of fear:
In faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Leon. Tush, tush, man, never fleer and jest at
I speak not like a dotard, nor a fool; [me:
As, under privilege of age, to brag
What I have done being young, or what would do,
Were I not old: Know, Claudio, to thy head,
Thou hast so wronged mine innocent child and me,
That I am forc’d to lay my reverence by;
And, with grey hairs, and bruise of many days,
Do challenge thee to trial of a man.
I say, thou hast belied mine innocent child;
Thy slander hath gone through and through her
And she lies buried with her ancestors: [heart,
O! in a tomb where never scandal slept,
Save this of hers, framed by thy villain.

Claud. My villany!

Leon. Thine, Claudio; thine, I say.

D. Pedro. You say not right, old man.

Leon. My lord, my lord,
I’ll prove it on his body, if he dare;
Despite his nice fence, and his active practice,
His May of youth, and bloom of lusthhood.

Claud. Away! I will not have to do with you.

Leon. Caust thou so daff me? Thou hast killed
my child;
If thou kill’st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Ant. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed;
But that’s no matter; let him kill one first:—
Win me and wear me,—let him answer me,—
Come, follow me, boy; come, boy, follow me:
Sir boy, I’ll whip you from your foining fence;
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon. Brother,—

Ant. Content yourself: God knows, I loved my
And she is dead, slandered to death by villains;
That dare as well answer a man, indeed,
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue:
Boys, apes, braggers, Jacks, milksoys!—

Leon. Brother Antony,—

Ant. Hold you content: What, man! I know them, yea,
And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple:
Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mong’ring boys,
That lie, and cog, and flout, deprave, and slander,
Go antickly, and show outward hideousness,
And speak off half a dozen dangerous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst,
And this is all.

Leon. But, brother Antony,—

Ant. Come, 'tis no matter;
Do not you meddle, let me deal in this.

D. Pedro. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience.

My heart is sorry for your daughter’s death;
But, on my honour, she was charged with nothing
But what was true and very full of proof.

Leon. My lord, my lord,—

D. Pedro. I will not hear you.

Leon. No?

Brother, away:—I will be heard;—

And shall,
Or some of us will smart for it.

[Exeunt Leonato and Antonio.]
Enter Benedick.

D. Pedro. See, see; here comes the man we want to seek.

Claud. Now, signior! what news?

Bene. Good day, my lord.

D. Pedro. Welcome, signior; You are almost come to part almost a fray.

Claud. We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.

D. Pedro. Leonato and his brother: What think'st thou? Had we fought, I doubt, we should have been too young for them.

Bene. In a false quarrel there is no true valour: I came to seek you both.

Claud. We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high proof melancholy, and would fain have it beaten away: Wilt thou use thy wit?

Bene. It is in my scabbard; shall I draw it?

D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?

Claud. Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit...—I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels; draw, to pleasure us.

D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks pale:—Art thou sick, or angry?

Claud. What! courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, an you charge it against me...I pray you, choose another subject.

Claud. Nay, then give him another staff; this last was broke cross.

D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more; I think, he be angry indeed.

Claud. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.

Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear?

Claud. God bless me from a challenge!

Bene. You are a villain;—I jest not:—I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare:—Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you: Let me hear from you.

Claud. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

D. Pedro. What, a feast? a feast?

Claud. I'faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a calf's head and a capon, the which if I do not carve most curiously, say, my knife's naught.—Shall I not find a woodcock too?

Bene. Sir, your wit ambles well; it goes easily.

D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day: I said, thou hadst a fine wit; True, says she, a fine little one: No, said I, a great wit; Right, says she, a great gross one: Nay, said I, a good wit; Just, said she, it hurts no body: Nay, said I, the gentleman is wise; Certain, said she, a wise gentleman: Nay, said I, he hath the tongues; That I believe, said she, for he swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forswore on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue; there's two tongues. Thus did she, an hour toger- ther, trans-shape thy particular virtues; yet, at last, she concluded with a sigh, thou want the properest man in Italy.

Claud. For the which she wept heartily, and said, she cared not.

D. Pedro. Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly: the old man's daughter told us all.

Claud. All, all; and moreover, God saw him when he was hid in the garden.

D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensible Benedick's head?

Claud. Yes, and text underneath: Here dwells Benedick the married man?

Bene. Fare you well, boy; you know my mind; I will leave you now to your glossip-like humour: you break jests as braggarts do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not.—My lord, for your many courtesies I thank you: I must discontinue your company: your brother, the bastard, is fled from Messina; you have, among you, killed a sweet and innocent lady: For my lord Lack-heard, there, he and I shall meet; and till then, peace be with him.

D. Pedro. He is in earnest.

Claud. In most profound earnest; and I'll warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.

D. Pedro. And hath challenged thee?

Claud. Most sincerely.

D. Pedro. What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit!

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and the Watch, with Conrad and Borachio.

Claud. He is then a giant to an ape: but then is an ape a doctor to such a man.

D. Pedro. But, soft you, let be; pluck up, my heart, and be sad! Did he not say, my brother was fled?

Dogb. Come, you, sir; if justice cannot tame you, she shall ne'er weigh more reasons in her balance: nay, an you be a cursing hypocrite once you must be looked to.

D. Pedro. How now, two of my brother's men bound! Borachio, one!

Claud. Hearken after their offence, my lord.

D. Pedro. Officers, what offence have these men done?

Dogb. Marry, sir, they have committed false report: moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondarily, they are slanders; sixth and lastly, they have belied a lady; thirdly, they have verified unjust things: and, to conclude, they are lying knaves.

D. Pedro. First, I ask thee what they have done; thirdly, I ask thee what's their offence; sixth and lastly, why they are committed; and, to conclude, what you lay to their charge?

Claud. Rightly reasoned, and in his own division; and, by my troth, there's one meaning well suited.

D. Pedro. Whom have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned constable is too cunning to be understood: What's your offence?

Bora. Sweet prince, let me go no further to mine answer; do you hear me, and let this count kill me. I have deceived even your very eyes: what your wisdoms could not discover, these shallow fools have brought to light; who, in the night, overheard me confessing to this man, how Don John your brother incensed me to slander the lady Hero; how you were brought into the orchard, and saw me court Margaret in Hero's garments; how you disgraced her, when you should marry her: my villany they have upon record; which I had rather seal with my death, than repeat over to my shame: the lady is dead upon mine and my master's false accusation; and, briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villain.
D. Pedro. Runs not this speech like iron through your blood?
Claud. I have drunk poison, whiles he uttered it.
D. Pedro. But did my brother set thee on to this?
Bora. Yea, and paid me richly for the practice of it.
D. Pedro. He is compos’d and fram’d of treachery:
And fled he is upon this villany.
Claud. Sweet Hero! now thy image doth appear
In the rare semblance that I loved it first.
Dogb. Come, bring away the plaintiffs; by this time our Sexton hath reformed signior Leonato of the matter: And, masters, do not forget to specify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass.
Vefe. Here, here comes master signior Leonato, and the Sexton too.
Re-enter Leonato and Antonio, with the Sexton.
Leon. Which is the villain? Let me see his eyes,
That when I note he is no man like him,
I may avoid him. Which of these is he?
Bora. If you would know your wrong, look on me.
Leon. Art thou the slave, that with thy breath hast kill’d
Mine innocent child!
Bora. Yea, even I alone.
Leon. No, not so, villain; thou bely’st thyself;
Here stand a pair of honourable men,
A third is fled, that had a hand in it:—
I thank you, princes, for my daughter’s death;
Record it with your high and worthy deeds;
’Twas bravely done, if you bethink of you.
Claud. I know not how to pray your patience,
Yet I must speak: Choose your revenge yourself;
Impose me to what penance your invention
Can lay upon my sin: yet sinn’d I not,
But in mistaking.
D. Pedro. By my soul, nor I; And yet, to satisfy this good old man, I would bend under any heavy weight That he’ll enjoin me to.
Leon. I cannot bid you bid my daughter live.
That were impossible; but I pray you both,
Possess the people in Messina here
How innocent she died: and, if your love
Can labour aught in sad invention,
Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb,
And sing it to her bones; sing it to-night:—
To-morrow morning come you to my house;
And since you could not be my son-in-law,
Be yet my nephew: my brother hath a daughter,
Almost the copy of my child that’s dead,
And she alone is heir to both of us;
Give her the right you should have given her cousin,
And so dies my revenge.
Claud. O, noble sir,
Your over kindness doth wring tears from me!
I do embrace your offer; and dispose
For henceforth of poor Claudio.
Leon. To-morrow then I will expect your coming;
To-night I take my leave.—This naughty man
Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,
Who, I believe, was pack’d in all this wrong,
Hir’d to it by your brother.
Bora. No, by my soul, she was not;
Nor knew not what she did, when she spoke to me;
But always hath been just and virtuous,
In any thing that I do know by her.

Dogb. Moreover, sir, (which, indeed, is not under white and black,) this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass: I beseech you, let it be remembered in his punishment: And also, the watch heard them talk of one Deformed: they say, he wears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging by it; and borrows money in God’s name; the which he hath used so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God’s sake: Pray you, examine him upon that point.
Leon. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.
Dogb. Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverend youth; and I praise God for you.
Leon. There’s for thy pains.
Dogb. God save the foundation!
Leon. Go; I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee.
Dogb. I leave an arrant knave with your worship;
which, I beseech your worship, to correct yourself, for the example of others. God keep your worship; I wish your worshipt well; God restore you to health; I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it. —Come, neighbour.

[Exeunt Dogberry, Verges, and Watch.
Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.
Ant. Farewell, my lords; we look for you to.
D. Pedro, We will not fail.
Claud. To-night I’ll mourn with Hero.
[Exeunt Don Pedro and Claudia.
Leon. Bring you these fellows on; we’ll talk with Margaret,
How her acquaintance grew with this lewd fellow.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Leonato’s Garden.
Enter Benedick and Margaret, meeting.
Bene. Pray thee, sweet mistress Margaret, deserve well at my hands, by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.
Marg. Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?
Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most cleanly truth, thou deservest it.
Marg. To have no man come over me? why, shall I always keep below stairs?
Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound’s mouth, it catches.
Marg. And yours as blunt as the fencer’s foils, which hit, but hurt not.
Bene. A most manly wit, Margaret, it will not hurt a woman; and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice: I give thee the bucklers.
Marg. Give us the swords, we have bucklers of our own.
Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maids.
Marg. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who, I think, hath legs.
[Exit Margaret
Bene. And therefore will come.

[Singing
That sits above,
And knows me, and knows me,
How pitiful I deserve.
I mean, in singing; but in loving—Leander the good swimmer, Troilus, the first employer of andors, and a whole book full of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turned over and over as my poor self, in love: Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme; I have tried: I can find out no rhyme to lady but lady, an innocent rhyme; for soorn, horn, a hard rhyme, for school, fool, a babbling rhyme; very ominous endings: No, I was not born under a rhyming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.

Enter Beatrice.

Sweet Beatrice, would'st thou come when I called thee?

Beat. Yea, signior, and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O, stay but till then!

Beat. Then, is spoken; fare you well now:—and yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came for, which is, with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

Bene. Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

Beat. Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkind.

Bene. Thou hast frighted the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit: But, I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge; and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together; which maintained so politic a state of evil, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love; a good epithet! I do suffer love, indeed, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart, I think; alas! poor heart! If you spit it for my sake, I will spit it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

Beat. It appears not in this confession: there's not one wise man among twenty, that will praise himself.

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbours: if a man do not erect in this age his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument, than the bell rings, and the widow weeps.

Beat. And how long is that, think you?

Bene. Question?—Why, an hour in clomour, and a quarter in rheum: Therefore it is most expedit for the wise, (if Don Worm, his conscience, find no impediment to the contrary,) to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself: So much for praising myself, (who, I myself will bear witness, is praise-worthy,) and now tell me, How doth your cousin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Bene. Serve God, love me, and mend; there will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle; your lady's old coil at home: it is proved, my lady Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio mightily abused; and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone; will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go hear this news, signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thine eyes; and, moreover, I will go with thee to thy uncle's.

[Execut.

SCENE III.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Attendants, with music and tapers.

Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Aiten. It is, my lord.

Claud. [Reads from a scroll.]

Done to death by slanderous tongues
Was the Hero that here lies:
Death, in guerdon of her wrongs, gives her fame which never dies:
So the life, that died with shame,
Lives in death with glorious fame.
Hang thou there upon the tomb.
Praising her when I am dumb.—

Now, music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

[Exeunt.

Pardon, Goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go.
Midnight, assist our mourn;
Help us to sigh and groan,
Heavily, heavily;
Grave, yawn, and yield your dead,
Till death be uttered,
Heavily, heavily.

Claud. Now unto thy bones good night!
Yearly will I do this rite.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters; put your torches out:
The wolves have prey'd: and look, the gentle
Before the wheels of Phoebus, round about [day,
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of gray:
Thanks to you all, and leave us; fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters; each his several way.

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other
And then to Leonato's we will go. . . .

Claud. And Hymen now with luckier issue speeds,
Than this, for whom we render'd up this woe! [Execut.

SCENE IV.—A Room in LEONATO'S HOUSE.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice, Ursula, Friar, and Hero.

Friar. Did I not tell you she was innocent?

Leon. So are the prince and Claudio, who ac-
Upon the error that you heard debated: [cas'd her,
But Margaret was in some fault for this;
Although against her will, as it appears
In the true course of all the question.

Ant. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

Bene. And so am I, being else by faith enforc'd to call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leon. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all,
Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves;
And, when I send for you, come hither mask'd: [the prince and Claudio promis'd by this hour
To visit me:—You know your office, brother;
You must be father to your brother's daughter,
And give her to young Claudio. [Execut Ladies.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT V

Ant. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.
Bene. Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think.
Friar. To do what, signior?
Bene. To bind me, or undo me, one of them.—Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior, Your niece regards me with an eye of favour, [true.]
Leon. That eye my daughter lent her; 'Tis most Bene. And I do with an eye of love requite her.
Leon. The sight whereof, I think, you had from me,
From Claudio, and the prince; But what's your Bene. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical: 'Will? But, for my will, my will is, your good will
May stand with ours, this day to be conjoin'd
In the estate of honourable marriage;—In
Which, good friar, I shall desire your help.
Leon. My heart is with your liking.
Friar. And my help.
Here come the prince, and Claudio.
Enter Don Pedro and Claudio, with Attendants.
D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.
Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow, Claudio;
We here attend you; Are you yet determin'd
To-day to marry with my brother's daughter?
Claud. I'll hold my mind, were she an Ethiope.
Leon. Call her forth, brother, here's the friar ready.
[Exit Antonio.
D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick: Why, what's
That you have such a February face, [the matter,
So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness?
Claud. I think, he thinks upon the savage bull:—
Thus, fear not, man, we'll tip thy horns with gold,
And all Europa shall rejoice at thee;
As once Europa did at lusty Jove,
When he would play the noble beast in love.
Bene. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable low;
And some such strange bull leap'd your father's cow,
And got a calf in that same noble feat,
Much like to you, for you have just his bleat.
Re-enter Antonio, with the Ladies masked.
Claud. For this I owe you: here come other
Which is the lady I must seize upon? [reconnaissances.
Ant. This same is she, and I do give you her.
Claud. Why, then, she's mine: Sweet, let me see your face.
Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her
Before this friar, and swear to marry her. [hand
Claud. Give me your hand before this holy friar;
I am your husband, if you like of me.
Hero. And when I lived, I was your other wife:
[Unmasking.
And when you lov'd, you were my other husband.
Claud. Another Hero?—
Hero. Nothing certain:
One Hero died defled; but I do live,
And, surely as I live, I am a maid.
D. Pedro. The former Hero! Hero that is dead!
Leon. She died, my lord, but whilst her slander
Friar. All this amazement, I can I qualify; [lived.
When, after that the holy rites are ended,
I'll tell you largely of fair Hero's death:
Mean time, let wonder seem familiar,
And to the chapel let us presently.
Bene. Soft and fair, friar.—Which is Beatrice?
Beat. I answer to that name; [Unmasking.
What is your will?
Bene. Do not you love me?

Beat. No, no more than reason.
Bene. Why, then your uncle, and the prince, and Claudio, Have been deceived; for they swore you did.
Beat. Do not you love me?
Bene. No, no more than reason.
Beat. Why, then my cousin, Margaret, and Ursula, Are much deceived; for they did swear, you did.
Bene. They swore that you were almost sick for me.
Beat. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me?
Bene. 'Tis no such matter:—Then you do not love me?
Beat. No, truly, but in friendly recompense.
Leon. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman.
Claud. And I'll be sworn upon't that he loves her;
For here's a paper, written in his hand,
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashioned to Beatrice.
Hero. And here's another.
Writ in my cousin's hand, stolen from her pocket,
Containing her affection unto Benedick.
Bene. A miracle!—here's our own hands against our hearts!—Come, I will have thee; but, by this light, I take thee for pity.
Beat. I would not deny you:—but, by this good day, I yield upon great persuasion; and, partly, to save your life, for I was told you were in a consumption.
Bene. Peace, I will stop your mouth.
[Kissing her
D. Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick the married
man?
Bene. I'll tell thee what, prince; a college of wit-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour:
Dost thou think I care for a satire, or an epigram?
No; if a man will be beaten with brains, he shall wear nothing handsome about him: In brief, since,
I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it; for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion.—For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee; but in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised, and love my cousin.
Claud. I had well hoped, thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have cudgelled thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double dealer;
which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin
do not look exceeding narrowly to thee.
Bene. Come, come, we are friends:—let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives' heels.
Leon. We'll have dancing afterwards. [sic.
Bene. First, o' my word; therefore, play, in Prince, thou art sad; get thee a wife, get thee a wife:
there is no staff more reverend than one tip-pod with horn.
[Enter a Messenger.
Mess. My lord, your brother John is ta'en in flight,
And brought with armed men back to Messina.
Bene. Think not on him till to-morrow: I'll devote thee brave punishments for him.—Strike up, pipers.
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Theseus, Duke of Athens.
Egeus, Father to Hermia.
Lysander, in love with Hermia.
Demetrius, in love with Hermia.
Philostrate, Master of the Revels to Theseus.
Quince, the Carpenter.
Snout, the Joiner.
Bottom, the Weaver.
Flute, the Belles-mender.
Snout, the Tailer.

Hippolyta, Queen of the Amazons, betrothed to Theseus.
Hermia, Daughter to Egeus, in love with Lysander.
Helena, in love with Demetrius.

SCENE.—Athens, and a Wood not far from it.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Room in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate and Attendants.
The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace; four happy days bring in Another moon: but, oh, methinks, how slow
This old moon wanes! she lingers my desires,
Like to a step-dame, or a dowager,
Long withering out a young man's revenue.

Hipp. Four days will quickly steep themselves in Four nights will quickly dream away the time;
And then the moon, like to a silver bow
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

The. Go, Philostrate,
Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments;
Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth;
Turn melancholy forth to funerals,
The pale companion is not for our pomp.—

[Exit Philostrate.

Hippolyta, I woo'd thee with a sword,
And won thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with reveling.

Enter Egeus, Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke!
The. Thanks, good Egeus: What's the news with thee?

Ege. Full of vexation come I, with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.—
Stand forth, Demetrius:—My noble lord,
This man hath my consent to marry her:—
Stand forth, Lysander:—and, my gracious duke,
This hath bewitched the bosom of my child:

Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes,
And interchang'd love-tokens with my child:
Thou hast by moon-light at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love;
And stol'n the impression of her fancy
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gawds, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegay's, sweet-meats; messengers
Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth:
With cunning hast thou fille'd my daughter's heart;
Turned her obedience, which is due to me,
To stubborn harshness:—And, my gracious duke,
Be it so she will not here before your grace
Consent to marry with Demetrius,
I beg the ancient privilege of Athens;
As she is mine, I may dispose of her:
Which shall be either to this gentleman,
Or to her death; according to our law,
Immediately provided in that case.

The. What say you, Hermia? be advis'd, fair
To you your father should be as a god; [maid:
One that compos'd your beauties; yea, and one
To whom you are but as a form in wax,
By him imprinted, and within his power
To leave the figure, or disfigure it.
Demetrius is a worthy gentleman.

Her. So is Lysander.

The. In himself he is:
But, in this kind, wanting your father's voice,
The other must be held the worshiper.

Her. I would, my father look'd but with my eyes.

The. Rather your eyes must with his judgment look.

Her. I do entreat your grace to pardon me.
I know not by what power I am made bold;
Nor how it may concern my modesty.
In such a presence here, to plead my thoughts:
But I beseech your grace that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

_The._ Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the society of men.
Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;
Why age to be in shady cloister meéd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.

_trice_ blessed they, that master so their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage:
But earthlier happy is the rose distill'd,
Than that, which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies, in single blessedness.

_Her._ So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up
Unto his lordship, whose unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

_The._ Take time to pause; and, by the next new
(The sealing-day betwixt my love and me, [moon
For everlasting bond of fellowship),
Upon that day either prepare to die,
For disobedience to your father's will
Or else, to wed Demetrius, as he would:
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerity and single life.

_Dem._ Relent, sweet Hermia;—And, Lysander,
Thy crazed title to my certain right.
_Yield_ you have her father's love, Demetrius;
Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

_Ege._ Scornful Lysander! true, he hath my love;
And what is mine my love shall render him;
And she is mine; and all my right of her
I do estate unto Demetrius.

_Lys._ I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well possess'd; my love is more than his;
My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
If not with vantage, as Demetrius's;
And, which is more than all these boasts can be,
I am below'd of beauteous Hermia:
Why should not I then prosecute my right?
Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head,
Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,
And won her soul; and, she sweet, lady, dotes,
Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,
Upon this spotted and inconsistent man.

_The._ I must confess, that I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;
But, being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it.—But, Demetrius, come;
And come, Egeus; you shall go with me,
I have some private schooling for you both.—
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
(Which by no means we may extenuate),
To death, or to a vow of single life.—
Come, my Hippolyta; What cheer, my love?
Demetrius, and Egeus, go along:
I must employ you in some business
Against our nuptial; and confer with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.

_Ege._ With duty, and desire, we follow you.

_[Exeunt Theseus, Hippolyta, Demetrius, and Lysander._

_Lys._ How now, my love? Why is your cheek
So how chance the roses there do fade so fast? [pale?
_Her._ Belike for want of rain; which I could well
Betame them from the tempest of mine eyes.

_Lys._ Ah me! for aught that ever I could read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth:
But, either it was different in blood;—

_Her._ O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to low!

_Lys._ Or else misgrafted, in respect of years;

_Her._ O, spite! too old to be engag'd to young!

_Lys._ Or else it stood upon the choice of friends;

_Her._ O hell! to choose love by father's eye!

_Lys._ Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it;
Making it momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream:
Brief as the lightning in the collid night
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say,—Behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
So quick bright things come to confusion.

_Her._ If then true lovers have been ever cross'd,
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross;
As due to love, as thoughts and dreams, and sighs,
Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers.

_Lys._ A good persuasion; therefore, hear me,
I have a widow aunt, a dowager [Hermia.
Of great revenue, and she hath no child;
From Athens is her house remote seven leagues;
And she respects me as her only son.
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee;
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursue us: if thou lovest me then
Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night;
And in the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do observance to a morn of May,
There will I stay for thee.

_Her._ My good Lysander!
I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow;
By his best arrow with the golden head;
By the simplicity of Venus' doves;
By that which in knotted souls, and prospers loves;
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen,
When the false Trojan under sail was seen;
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke:—
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.

_Lys._ Keep promise, love: Look, here comes Helen.

_Enter Hermia._

_Her._ God speed fair Helena! Whither away?
_Hel._ Call you me fair? that fair again unsay.
Demetrius loves your fair: O happy fair!
Your eyes are lode-stars; and your tongue's sweet
More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear, [air
When wheat is green, when hathorn buds appear Sickness is catching; O, were favour so!
Your's would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go;
My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye,
My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.
Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,
The rest I'll give to be so you translated,
O, teach me how you look; and with what art
You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart.

_Her._ I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.
_Hel._ O, that your frowns would teach my smiles such skill!
_Her._ I give him curses, yet he gives me love.
Hel. O, that my prayers could such affection move!
Her. The more I hate, the more he follows me.
Hel. The more I love, the more he hateth me.
Her. His folly, Helena, is no fault of mine.
Hel. None, but your beauty; 'Would that fault were mine!
Her. Take comfort; he no more shall see my Lysander and myself will fly this place. — [Exit.]

Before the time I did Lysander see,
Seem'd Athens like a paradise to me:
O then, what graces in my love do dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven unto hell!
Lys. Helen, to you our minds we will unfold:
To-morrow night when Phoebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass,
(A time that lovers' flights doth still conceal,) Through Athens' gates have we devis'd to steal.
Her. And in the wood, where often you and I
Upon faint, primrose beds were wont to lie,
Emptying our bosoms of their counsel sweet;
There my Lysander and myself shall meet:
And thence, from Athens, turn away our eyes,
To seek new friends and stranger companies.
Farewell, sweet playfellow; pray thou for us,
And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius! —
Keep word, Lysander: we must starve our sight
From lovers' food, till morrow deep midnight.
[Exit Hel.]

Lys. I will, my Hermia. — Helena adieu:
As you on him, Demetrius dote on you! [Exit Lys. and Hel.]

Hel. How happy some, o'er other some can be!
Through Athens I am thought as fair as she.
But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so;
He will not know what all but he do know.
And as he errs, doting on Hermia's eyes,
So I, admiring of his qualities.
Things base and vile, holding no quantity,
Love can transpose to form and dignity.
Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind.
And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind.
Nor hath love's mind of any judgment taste;
Wings, and no eyes, figure unheesty haste:
And therefore is love said to be a child,
Because in choice he is so oft beguiled.
As waggish boys in game themselves forswear,
So the boy Love is perjur'd every where:
For ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eyne,
He hail'd down oaths, that he was only mine;
And when this hail some heat from Hermia felt,
So he dissolv'd, and showers of oaths did melt.
I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight:
Then to the wood will he, to-morrow night,
Pursue her; and for this intelligence
If I have thanks, it is a dear expense;
But herein mean I to enrich my pain,
To have his sight thither and back again.
[Exit Hel.]}

SCENE II. — The Same. — A Room in a Cottage.

Enter Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, Quince, and Starveling.

Quin. Is all our company here?
Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the script.
Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the duke and duchess, on his wedding-day at night.
Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on; then read the names of the actors; and so grow to a point.
Quin. Marry, our play is — The most lamentable comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby.
Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry. — Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll: Masters, spread yourselves.
Quin. Answer, as I call you. — Nick Bottom, the weaver.
Bot. Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed.
Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.
Bot. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant?
Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallantly for love.
Bot. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: If I do it, let the audience look to their eyes; I will move storms, I will condole in some measure. To the rest: — Yet my chief humour is for a tyrant: I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split.

"The raging rocks,
With shivering shocks,
Shall break the locks
Of prison-gates:
And Phibbus' car
Shall shine from far,
And make and mar
The foolish fates."

This was lofty! — Now name the rest of the players.

This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein; a lover is more condescending.
Quin. Francis Flute, the bellows-mender.
Flute. Here, Peter Quince.
Quin. You must take Thisby on you.
Flute. What is Thisby? a wandering knight?
Quin. It is the lady that Pyramus must love.
Flute. Nay, faith, let me not play a woman; I have a beard coming.
Quin. That's all one; you shall play it in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will.
Bot. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too: I'll speak in a monstrositly voice; — Thise, Thise, Thise, — Ah, Pyramus, my lover dear; thy Thisby dear! and lady dear!
Quin. No, no, you must play Pyramus, and Flute, you Thisby.
Bot. Well, proceed.
Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor.
Star. Here Peter Quince.
Quin. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother. — Tom Snout the tinker.
Snout. Here, Peter Quince.
Quin. You, Pyramus's father; myself, Thisby's father; — Snug, the joiner, you, the lion's part: — and, I hope here is a play fitted.
Snug. Have you the lion's part written? pray you, if it be, give it me, for I am slow of study.
Quin. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring.
Bot. Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar, that I will make the duke say, Let him roar again, Let him roar again.
Quin. An you should do it too terribly, you would fright the duchess and the ladies, that they would shriek; and that were enough to hang us all.

All. That would hang us every mother's son.

Bot. I grant you, friends, if that you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more discretion but to hang us: but I will aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any suckling dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale.

Quin. You can play no part but Pyramus: for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man; a proper man, as one shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely, gentleman-like man; therefore you must needs play Pyramus.

Bot. Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will.

Bot. I will discharge it in either your straw-coloured beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-colour beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play bare-faced.—But, masters; here are your parts: and I am to entreat you, request you, and desire you, to con them by to-morrow night; and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the town, by moon-light; there will we rehearse: for if we meet in the city, we shall be dog'd with company, and our devices known. In the mean time I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you fall me not.

Bot. We will meet; and there we may rehearse more obscenely, and courageously. Take pains; be perfect; adieu.

Quin. At the duke's oak we meet.

Bot. Enough; hold, or cut bow-strings.

[Exeunt.]
And make him with fair Júle break his faith,
With Ariadne, and Antiope?

Tita. These are the forgeries of jealousy:
And never, since the middle summer's spring,
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
By paved fountain, or by rushy brook,
Or on the beached margent of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brows thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain,
As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea
Contagous fogs; which falling in the land,
Have every pelting river made so proud,
That they have overborne their continents:
The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain,
The ploughman lost his sweat; and the green corn
Hath rotted, ere his youth attain'd a beard:
The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murren flock;
The nine men's Morris is fill'd up with mud;
And the quaint mazes in the wanton green,
For lack of tread, are windless, and vanishable:
The human mortals want their winter here;
No night is now with hymn or carol blest:—
Therefore the moon, the governor of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatic diseases do abound;
And thorough this distemperature, we see
The seasons alter: hoary-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose;
And on old Hyem's chin, and icy crown,
An odorous chapel of sweet summer buds
Is, in mockery, set: The spring, the summer,
The autumn, and the winter, do beside
Their wonted liveries; and the mazed world,
By their increase, now knows not which is which:
And this same progeny of evils comes
From our debate, from our dissension;
We are their parents and original.

Obe. Do you amend it then? it lies in you:
Why should Titania cross her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman.

Tita. Set your heart at rest,
The fairy-land buys not the child of men:
His mother was a vot'ress of my order:
And, in the spiced Indian air, by night,
Full often hath she gossip'd by my side;
And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands,
Marking the embarked traders on the flood;
When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive,
And grow big-bellied with the wanton wind:
Which she, with pretty and with swimming gait,
Following (her womb then rich with my young
Would imitate;) and sail upon the land, [squire,)
To fetch her treasure, and return again.
As from a voyage, rich with merchandise,
But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
And, for her sake, I do rear up her boy:
And, for her sake, I will not part with him.

Obe. How long within this wood intend you stay?

Tita. Perchance, till after Theseus' wedding-day.
If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us;
If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts.

Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.

Tita. Not for thy kingdom. Fairies away:
We shall chide down-right, if I longer stay.

[Exeunt Titania and her Train.]
Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit;
For I am sick, when I do look on thee.
Hel. And I am sick, when I look not on you.
Dem. You do impeach your modesty too much,
To leave the city, and commit yourself
Into the hands of one that loves you not;
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity.
Hel. Your virtue is my privilege for that.
It is not night, when I do see your face.
Therefore I think I am not in the night:
Nor doth this wood lack world companies;
For you, in my respect, are all the world;
Then how can it be said, I am alone,
When all the world is here to look on me?
Dem. I'll run from thee, and hide me in the brakes,
And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts.
Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you.
Run when you will, the story shall be changed;
Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase;
The dove pursues the griffin; the mild hind
Makes speed to catch the tiger; Bootless speed!
When cowardice pursues, and valour flies.
Dem. I will not stay thy questions; let me go:
Or, if thou follow me, do not believe
But I shall do thee mischief in the wood.
Hel. Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field,
You do me mischief. Fye, Demetrius!
Your wrongs do set a scandal on my sex:
We cannot fight for love, as men may do:
We should be woo'd, and were not made to woo.
I'll follow thee, and make a heaven of hell,
To die upon the hand I love so well.
[Execute Dem. and Hel.]
Obe. Fare thee well, nymph: ere he do leave this grove,
Thou shalt fly him, and he shall seek thy love.—

Re-enter Puck.

Hast thou the flower there? Welcome wanderer.
Puck. Ay, there it is.
Obe. I pray thee, give it me.
I know a bank whereon the wild thyme blows,
Where ox-lips and the nodding violet grows;
Quite over-canopied with lush woodbine,
With sweet musk-roses, and with eglantine:
There sleeps Titania, some time of the night,
Lulled in these flowers with dances and delight;
And there the snake throws her enamelled skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in:
And with the juice of this I'll streak her eyes,
And make her full of hateful fantasies.
Take thou some of it, and seek through this grove:
A sweet Athenian lady is in love
With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes;
But do it, when the next thing he espies
May be the lady: Thou shalt know the man
By the Athenian garments he hath on.
Effect it with some care; that he may prove
More fond on her, than she upon his love:
And look thou meet me ere the first cock crow.
Puck. Fear not, my lord, your servant shall do so.

SCENE III.—Another part of the Wood.

Enter Titania, with her Train.

This. Come, now a roundel, and a fairy song;
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence;
Some, to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds;
Some, war with rear-mice for their leathern wings.
To make my small dyes coats; and some, keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightlyhoots, and wonders
At our quaint spirits: Sing me now asleep;
Then to your offices, and let me rest.

SONG.

1. First. You spotted snakes, with double tongue,
Thorny hedge-logs, be not seen;
Newts, and blind-worms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen:

Chorus.

Philomel, with melody,
Sing in our sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby; Lulla, lulla, lullaby
Never harm, nor spell, nor charm,
Come our lovely lady nigh;
So, good night, with lullaby.

2. First. Weaving spiders, come not here;
Hence, you long leg'd spinners, hence;
Beetles black, approach not near;
Worm, nor small, do no offence.

Chorus.

Philomel, with melody, &c.

2 First. Hence, away; now all is well:
Oue, aloof, stand centinel.

[Execute Fairies. Titania sleeps.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. What thou seest, when thou dost wake,
[Squeezes the flower on Titania's eyelids
Do it for thy true-love take;
Love and languish for his sake;
Be it ounce, or cat, or bear,
Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear
When thou wak'st, it is thy dear;
Wake, when some vile thing is near.

Enter Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the wood;
And to speak troth, I have forgot our way;
We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.
Herm. Be it so, Lysander, find you out a bed,
For I upon this bank will rest my head.
Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both
One heart, one bed, two bosoms and one troth.
Herm. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear Lie further off yet, do not lie so near.
Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence
Love takes the meaning, in love's conference.
I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit;
So that but one heart we can make of it:
Two bosoms interchanged with an oath;
So then, two bosoms, and a single troth.
Then, by your side no bed-room me deny;
For, lying so, Hermia. I do not lie.
Herm. Lysander riddles very prettily:—
Now much beshrew my manners and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say, Lysander lied.
But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy
Lye further off; in human modesty
Such separation, as, may well be said,
Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid;
So far be distant; and good night, sweet friend,
Thy love ne'er alter, till thy sweet life end!
Lys. Amen, Amen, to that fair prayer, say I; And then end life, when I end loyalty! Here is my bed: Sleep give thee all his rest! Her. With half that wish the wisher's eyes be pressed! [They sleep.

Enter Puck.

Puck. Through the forest have I gone, But Athenian found I none, On whose eyes I might approve — This flower's force in stirring love. Night and silence! who is here? Weeds of Athens he doth wear: This is he, my master said, Despised the Athenian maid; And here the maiden, sleeping sound, On the dank and dirty ground. Pretty soul! she durst not lie Near this lack-love, kill-courtesy. Churl, upon thy eyes I throw All the power this charm doth owe: When thou wak'st, let love forbid Sleep his seat on thy eye-lid, So awake, when I am gone; For I must now to Oberon. [Exit. Enters Demetrius and Helena, running.

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.

Dem. I charge thee, hence, and do not haunt me thus.

Hel. O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.

Dem. Stay, on thy peril; I alone will go. [Exit Demetrius.

Hel. O, I am out of breath in this fond chase! The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace. Happy is Hermia, wheresoe'er she lies; For she hath blessed and attractive eyes. How came her eyes so bright? Not with salt teardrop; If so, my eyes are oftener wash'd than hers. No, no, I am as ugly as a bear; For beasts that meet me, run away for fear: Therefore, no marvel, though Demetrius Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus. What wicked and dissembling glass of mine Made me compare with Hermia's sphere eyne? — But who is here?—Lysander! on the ground! Dead? or asleep? I see no blood, no wound! — Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake. Lys. And run through fire I will, for thy sweet sake. [Waking. Transparent Helena! Nature here shows art, That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart. Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word Is that vile name, to perish on my sword?

Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so: What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though? Yet Hermia still loves you; then be content.

Lys. Content with Hermia? No: I do repent The tedious minutes I with her have spent. Not Hermia, but Helena I love: Who will not change a raven for a dove? The will of man is by his reason swayed: And reason says you are the worthier maid. Things growing are not ripe until their season; So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason; And touching now the point of human skill, Reason becomes the marshal to my will, And leads me to your eyes; where I o'erlook Love's stories, written in love's richest book.

Her. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born? When, at your hands, did I deserve this scorn? I'st not enough, is't not enough, young man, That I did never, no, nor never can, Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye, But you must flout my insufficiency? Good troth, you do me wrong, good sooth, you do, In such disdainful manner me to woo. But fare you well: perform I must confess, I thought you lord of more true gentleness. O, that a lady, of one man refused Should, of another, therefore be abused! [Exit. Lys. She sees not Hermia:—Hermia, sleep thou there; And never may'st thou come Lysander near! For, as a surfeit of the sweetest things The deepest loathing to the stomach brings Or, as the heresies, that men do leave, Are hated most of those they did deceive; So thou, my surfeit, and my heresy, Of all be hated; but the most of me! And all my powers, address your love and might, To honour Helena, and to be her knight! [Exit. Her. [starting.] Help me, Lysander, help me! do thy best, To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast! Ah me, for pity!—what a dream was here? Lysander, look, how I do quake with fear! Methought a serpent eat my heart away, And you, sat smiling at his cruel prey:— Lysander! what, removed? Lysander! lord! What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word? Alack, where are you? speak, an you hear; Speak, of all loves; I swoon almost with fear. No?—then I well perceive you are not nigh: Either death, or you, I'll find immediately. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. The Queen of Fairies lying asleep.

Enter Quine, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal: This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake our tyring-house; and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the duke.

Bot. Peter Quince,—

Quin. What say'st thou, bully Bottom?

Bot. There are things in this comedy of Pyramus and Thisby, that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself; which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?

Snout. By'rakin, a parlous fear.

Star. I believe you must leave the killing out. when all is done.

Bot. Not a whit; I have a device to make all well. Write me a prologue: and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords; and that Pyramus is not killed indeed: and, for the more better assurance, tell them, that I Pyramus am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver: This will put them out of fear.

Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue; and it shall be written in eight and six.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck; and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same effect,—Ladies, or fair ladies! I would wish you, or, I would request you, or, I would entreat you, not to fear, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life: No, I am no such thing: I am a man as other men are: and there, indeed, let him name his name; and tell them plainly, he is Snug the joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there are two hard things; that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber: for you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moon-light.

Snug. Doth the moon shine that night we play our play?

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanack; find out moon-shine, find out moon-shine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why, then you may leave a casement of the great chamber-window, where we play, open; and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lantern, and say, he comes to disfigure, or to present, the person of moonshine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story, did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snug. You never can bring in a wall.—What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present wall; and let him have some plaster, or some loam, or some rough-cast about him, to signify wall; or let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse you parts. Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brace; and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Puck behind.

Puck. What hampen home-spuns have we swaggering here,
So near the cradle of the fairy queen?
What, a play toward? I'll be an auditor;
An actor too, perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speak, Pyramus:—Thisby, stand forth.

Pyr. Thisby, the flowers of odious savours
Quin. Odours, odours. [sweet—

Pyr. — odours savours sweet:
So doth thy breath, my dearest Thisby dear.—
But, hark, a voice! I stay thou but here a while,
And by and by I will to thee appear. [Exit. Puck. A stranger Pyramus than e'er played here! [Aside.—Exit.

This. Must I speak now?
Quin. Ay, marry, must you: for you must understand, he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again.

This. Most radiant Pyramus, most gently white of hue, Of colours, like the red rose on triumphant brier, Most brisky jurvel, and eke most lovely Jew, As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire, I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb.

Quin. Ninus' tomb: man: Why you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus: you speak all your part at once, cues and all.—Pyramus enter; your cue is past; it is, never face.

Re-enter Puck, and Bottom with an ass's head.

This. O. As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire.

Pyr. If I were fair, Thisby, I were only thine:—

Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted.
Pray, masters! fly, masters! help! [Exeunt Clowns.

Puck. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round,
Through bog, through bush, through brake, through brier;
Sometime a horse I'll be, sometime a hound,
A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire;
And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn.

Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them, to make me afeard.

Re-enter Snout.

Snout. O Bottom, thou art changed! what do I see on thee?

Bot. What do you see? you see an ass's head of your own; Do you?

Re-enter Quince.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated. [Exit.

Bot. I see their knavery; this is to make an ass of me; to fright me, if they could. But I will not stir from this place, do what they can: I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid. [Sings.

The osel-cock, so black of hue,
With orange-tawny bill,
The throstle with his note so true,
The wren with little guil;

Tita. What angel wakes me from my flowery bed?

Bot. The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,
The plain-song cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer, nay—:

for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? who would give a bird the lie, though he cry cuckoo, never so?

Tita. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again:
Mine ear is much enamour'd of thy note.
So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape; And thy fair virtue's force perforce doth move me,
On the first view, to say, to swear, I love thee.
SCENE II.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: And yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days: The more the pity, that some honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleek upon occasion.

Tita. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Not so, neither: but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Tita. Out of this wood do not desire to go; Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no. I am a spirit, of no common rate; The summer still doth tend upon my state; And I do love thee: therefore, go with me; I'll give thee fairies to attend on thee; And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep, And sing, while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep: And I will purge thy mortal grossness so, That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.— [seed! Peas-blossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustardseed!]

Enter Four Fairies.

1 Fai. Ready.
2 Fai. And I.
3 Fai. And I.
4 Fai. Where shall we go?
Tita. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman; Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes; Feed him with apricocks, and d bevories; With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries; The honey bags steal from the humble-bees, And, for night-tapers, crop their waxen thighs, And light them at the fiery glow worm's eyes, To have my love to bed, and to arise; And pluck the wings from painted butterflies, To fan the moon-beams from his sleeping eyes: Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

1 Fai. Hai, mortal!
2 Fai. Hai!
3 Fai. Hai!
4 Fai. Hai!

Bot. I cry your worship's mercy, nearly.—I beseech your worship's name.

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good master Cobweb: If I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you.—Your name, honest gentleman?

Peas. Peas-blossom.

Bot. I pray you, commend me to mistress Squash, your mother, and to master Peas-cod, your father. Good master Peas-blossom, I shall desire you of more acquaintance too.—Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Mus. Mustard-seed.

Bot. Good master Mustard-seed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox-beef hath devoured many a gentleman of your house: I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire you more acquaintance, good master Mustard-seed.

Tita. Come, wait upon him; lead him to my bower.

The moon, methinks, looks with a watery eye; And when she weeps, weeps every little flower, Lamenting some enforced chastity.

Tie up my love's tongue, bring him silently. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the Wood.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. I wonder, if Titania be awak'd; Then, what it was that next came in her eye, Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger.—How now, mad spirit? What night-rule now about this hauntéd grove?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love. Near to her close and consecrated bower, While she was in her dull and sleeping hour, A crew of patches, rude mechanicals, That work for bread upon Athenian stalls, Were met together to rehearse a play, Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day. The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort, Who Pyramus presented, in their sport Forsook his scene, and entered in a brake: When I did him at this advantage take, An ass's now! I fixed on his head; Anon, his Thisebe must be answered, And forth my mimicke comes: When they him spy, As wild geese that the creeping Fowler eye, Or rัสset-pated choughs, many in sort, Rising and cawing at the gun's report, Sever themselves, and madly sweep the sky; So at his sight, away his fellows fly: And, at our stamp, here o'er & o'er one falls; He murder cries, and help from Athens calls. Their sense, thus weak, lost with their fears, thus strong. Made senseless things begin to do them wrong: For briers and thorns at their apparel snatch; Some, sleeves; some, hats: from yeilders all things catch. I led them on in this distracted fear, And left sweet Pyramus translated there: When in that moment (so it came to pass,) Titania wak'd, and straitway lov'd an ass. Obe. This fails out better than I could devise. But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do? Puck. I took him sleeping.—that is finish'd too,— And the Athenian woman by his side; That when he wak'd, of force she must be ey'd.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Obe. Stand close; this is the same Athenian. Puck. This is the woman, but not this the man. Dem. O, why rebuke you him that loves you so? Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe. Her. Now I but chide, but I should use thee worse: For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse. If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep, Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep, And kill me too. The sun was not so true unto the day, As he to me: Would he have stol'n away From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon, This whole earth may be bor'd; and that the moon May through the center creep, and so displease Her brother's noon-tide with the Antipodes. It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him; So should a murderer look; so dead, so grim. Dem. So should the murderer's look; and so should I, Pier'd through the heart with your stern cruelty
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear,
As yonder Venus in her glittering sphere.

_Her._ What's this to my Lysander? where is he?

_Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?_

_Dem._ I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.

_Her._ Out, dog! out, cur! thou driv'st me past the bounds

Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him then?
Henceforth he never number'd among men!
Oh! once tell true, tell true, even for my sake;
Durst thou have look'd upon him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?
An adder did it; for with doubled tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

_Dem._ You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood;
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood;
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.

_Her._ I pray thee, tell me then that he is well.

_Dem._ If I could, what should I get therefore?

_Her._ A privilege, never to see me more.—
And from thy hated presence part I so:
See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exit.

_Dem._ There is no following her in this fierce vein:
Here, therefore, for a while I will remain.

So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;
Which now, in some light measure it will pay,
If to his tender here I make some stay.

[ exits down.

_Obe._ What hast thou done? thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid the love-juice on some true-love's sight:
Of thy misprision must perforce ensue
Some true-love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.

_Puck._ Then fate o'er-rules; that, one man holding troth,
A million fail, confounding oath on oath.

_Obe._ About the wood go swifter than the wind,
And Helena of Athens look thou find:
All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer
With sighs of love, that cost the fresh blood dear.
By some illusion see thou bring her here;
I'll charm his eyes, against she do appear.

_Puck._ I go, I go; look, how I go;
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow. [Exit.

_Obe._ Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye!
When his love he doth esp'y
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky;—
When thou wak'lt, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

_Re-enter Puck._

_Puck._ Captain of our fairy band,
Helena is here at hand,
And the youth, mistook by me,
Pleading for a lover's fee;
Shall we their fond pageant see?
Lord, what fools these mortals be!

_Obe._ Stand aside: the noise they make,
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

_Puck._ Then will two at once woo one,
That must needs be sport alone;
And those things do best please me,
That befall preposterously.

.Enter Lysander and Helena.

_Lys._ Why should you think, that I should woo
Scorn and derision never come in tears. [in scorn?
Look, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.

How can these things in me seem scorn to you,
Bearing the badge of faith, to prove them true?

_Hel._ You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth kills truth, O devilish-holy fray!

These vows are Hermia's; Will you give her o'er?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh:
Your vows, to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh: and both as light as tales.

_Lys._ I had no judgment, when to her I swore.

_Hel._ Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er.

_Lys._ Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

_Dem._ [Awaking.] O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine!
To what, my love, shall I compare thine eye?
Crystal is smirch'd. O, how ripe in show
Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure concealed white, high Taurus' snow,
Fann'd with the eastern wind, turns to a crow.
When thou hol'st up thy hand: O let me kiss
This princess of pure white, this seal of bliss!

_Hel._ O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent
To set against me for your merriment.
If you were civil, and knew courtesy,
You would not do me thus much injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do,
But you must join, in souls, to mock me too?
If you were men, as men you are in show,
You would not use a gentle lady so;
To vow, and swear, and superimpose my parts,
When, I am sure, you hate me with your hearts.
You both are rivals, and love Hermia;
And now both rivals, to mock Helena:
A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes,
With your derision! none of noble sort,
Would so offend a virgin; and extort
A poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.

_Lys._ You are unkind, Demetrius; be not so;
For you love Hermia: this, you know. I know:
And here, with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermia's love I yield you up my part;
And yours of Helena to me bequeath,
Whom I do love, and will do to my death.

_Hel._ Never did mockers waste more idle breath.

_Dem._ Lysander, keep thy Hermia; I will none:
If e'er I lov'd her, all that love is gone.
My heart with her but, as guest-wise, sojourn'd;
And now to Helen is it home return'd,
There to remain.

_Lys._ Helen, it is not so.

_Dem._ Disparate not the faith thou dost not know
Lest, to thy peril, thou aby it dear.—

Look, where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.

_Enter Hermia._

_Her._ Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
The ear more quick of apprehension makes;
Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double reconcape:—
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;
In mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unkindly didst thou leave me so?

_Lys._ Why should he stay, whom love doth press to go?
SCENE II.

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Her. What love could press Lysander from my side?

Lys. Lysander's love, that would not let him bide,
Fair Helena; who more engilds the night
Than all you fiery oes and eyes of light.

Why seek'st thou me? could not this make thee know,
The hate I bare, why made me leave thee so?

Her. You speak not as you think; it cannot be.

Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy!

Now I perceive they have conjoin'd, all three,
To fashion this false sport in spite of me.

Injurious Hermia! most ungrateful maid!

Have you conspir'd, have you with these contriv'd
To bait me with this foul derision?

Is all the counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the basty-footed time
For parting us,—O, and is all forgot?

All school-days' friendship, childhood innocence?
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,
Have with our needs created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key;
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
Had been incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted;
But yet a union in partition,
Two lovely berries moulded on one stem:
So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
Two of the first, like coats in heraldry,
Due but to one, and crowned with one crest.
And will you rent our ancient love asunder,
To join with men in scorning your poor friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly:
Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it;
Though I alone do feel the injury.

Her. I am amazed at your passionate words:
I scorn you not; it seems that you scorn me.

Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face?

And made your other love, Demetrius,
(Who even but now did spurn me with his foot,)
To call me goddess, nymph, divine, and rare,
Precious, celestial? Wherefore speaks he this
To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection;
But by your setting on, by your consent?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hang upon love, so fortunate;
But miserable most, to love unlov'd?
This you should pity, rather than despise.

Her. I understand not what you mean by this.

Hel. Ay, do, perséver, counterfeit sad looks.
Make mows upon me when I turn my back;
Wink at each other; hold the sweet jest up:
This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you have any pity, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument.
But, fare ye well: 'tis partly mine own fault;
Which death, or absence, soon shall remedy.

Lys. Stay, gentle Helena; hear my excuse;
My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena!

Hel. O excellent!

Her. Sweet, do not scorn her so.

Dem. If she cannot entreat, I can compel.

Lys. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat;

Thy threats have no more strength, than her weak

Helen, I love thee; by my life I do;
I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false, that says I love thee not.

Dem. I say, I love thee more than he can do.

Lys. If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.

Dem. Quick, come,—

Her. Lysander, whereto tends all this?

Lys. Away, you Ethiop!

Dem. No, no, sir;—he will

Seem to break loose; take on, as you would follow:

But yet come not: You are a tame man, go!

Lys. Hang off, thou cat, thou burr: vile thing
let loose;

Or I will shake thee from me, like a serpent.

Her. Why are you grown so rude? what change
Sweet love?

[Is this,

Lys. Th' thy love? out tawny Tartar, out!
Out, loathed medicine! hated potion, hence!

Her. Do you not jest?

Hel. Yes, 'sooth; and so do you.

Lys. Demetrius, I will keep my word with thee.

Dem. I would, I had your bond; for, I perceive,
A weak bond holds you; I'll not trust your word.

Lys. What, should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead?

Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so.

Her. What, can you do me greater harm, than hate?

Hate me! wherefore? O me! what news, my love?
Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lysander?

I am as fair now, as I was erewhile.
Since night, you loved me; yet, since night you left me:
Why, then you left me,—O, the gods forbid!—
In earnest, shall I say?

Lys. Ay, by my life;
And never did desire to see thee more.

Therefore, be out of hope, of question, doubt,
Be certain, nothing truer; 'tis no jest,
That I do hate thee, and love Helena.

Her. O me! you juggler! you canker-blossom!
You thief of love! what, have you come by night,
And stole' n my love's heart from him!

Hel. Fine, faith!

Have you no modesty, no maiden shame,
No touch of bashfulness? What, will you tear
Impatient answers from my gentle tongue?

Fie, fie! you counterfeit, you puppet you!

Her. Puppet! why so? Ay, that way goes the game.

Now I perceive that she hath made compare
Between our statures, she hath urg'd her height;
And with her personage, her tall personage,
Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail'd with him.
And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish, and so low?

How low am I, thou painted maypole? speak;
How low am I? I am not yet so low,
But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes.

Hel. I pray you, though you mock me, gentle-
Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;

[men,
I have no gift at all in shrewishness;
I am a right maid for my cowardice;

Let her not strike me: You, perhaps may think Because she's something lower than myself,
That I can match her.

Her. Lower! hart, again.

Hel. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me
I evermore did love you, Hermia,
Did ever keep your counsels, never wrong'd you;
Save that, in love unto Demetrius,
I told him of your stealth unto this wood:
He followed you; for love, I followed him.
But he hath chid me hence; and threaten'd me
To strike me, spurn me, nay, to kill me too:
And now, so you will let me quiet go,
To Athens will I bear my folly back,
And follow you no further: Let me go:
You see how simple and how fond I am. [you?]

Her. Why, get you gone: Who's that hinders Hel.
A foolish heart that I have here behind.

Hel. What, with Lysander?

Hel. With Demetrius.

Lys. Be not afraid: she shall not harm thee, Helena.

Dem. No, sir; she shall not, though you take her.

Hel. O, when she's angry, she is keen and shrewd:
She was a vixen, when she went to school;
And, though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. Little again? nothing but low and little?—
Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?
Let me come to her.

Lys. Get you gone, you dwarf;
You minims, of hind'ring knot-grass made;
You bead, you acorn.

Dem. You are too officious,
In her behalf that scorns your services.
Let her alone; speak not of Helena;
Take not her part: for if thou dost intend
Never so little show of love to her,
Thou shalt aby it.

Lys. Now she holds me not;
Now follow, if thou dar'st, to try whose right,
Or thine or mine, is most in Helena.

Dem. Follow? nay, I'll go with thee, check by jole.

Her. You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you:
Nay, go not back.

Hel. I will not trust you, I;
Nor longer stay in your curst company.
Your hands, than mine, are quicker for a fray;
My legs are longer though, to run away. [Exit.

Her. I am amaz'd, and know not what to say.

[Exit, pursuing Helena.

Obe. This is thy negligence: still thou mistak'at,
Or else commit'st thy knavery wilful.

Puck. Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook.
Did not you tell me, I should know the man
By the Athenian garments he had on?
And so far blameless proves my enterprise,
That I have 'nointed an Athenian's eyes:
And so far am I glad it did so sort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Obe. Thou seeest, these lovers seek a place to fight:
Hie therefore, Robin, overcast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon
With dropping fog, as black as Acheron;
And lead these testy rivals so astray,
As one come not within another's way.
Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue,
Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong;
And sometime rail thou like Demetrius;
And from each other look thou lead them thus,
Till o'er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep
With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep:
Then crush this herb into Lysander's eye;
Whose liquor hath this virtuous property,
To take from thence all error, with his might,
And make his eye-balls roll with wonted sight.

When they next wake, all this derision
Shall seem a dream, and fruitless vision;
And back to Athens shall the lovers wend,
With league whose date till death shall never end.
Whiles I in this affair do thee employ,
I'll to my queen, and beg her Indian boy;
And then I will her charmed eye release
From monster's view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My fairy lord, this must be done with haste.

For night's swift dragons cut the clouds full fast,
And yonder shines Aurora's harbinger; [there,
At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and Troop home to church-yards: damned spirits all,
That in cross-ways and floods have burial,
Already to their wrothy beds are gone;
For fear lest day should look their shames upon
They wilfully themselves exile from light,
And must for eye consort with black-brow'd night.

Obe. But we are spirits of another sort:
I with the morning's love have oft made sport;
And, like a foal, the groves may tread,
Eve: till the eastern gate, all fiery-red,
Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beacons,
Turns into yellow gold his salt-green streams.
But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay:
We may effect this business yet to-day. [Exit Oberon

Puck. Up and down, up and down;
I will lead them up and down:
I am fear'd in field and town;
Goblin, lead them up and down.
Here comes one.

Enter Lysander.

Lys. Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak
Thou now.

Puck. Here villain; drawn and ready. Where
Lys. I will be with thee straight. [art thou?
Puck. Follow me then
To plainer ground. [Exit Lys. as following the voice.

Enter Demetrius.

Dem. Lysander! I speak again.
Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled?
Speak. In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?

Puck. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars,
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come? Come, recrassent; come, thou
I'll whip thee with a rod: He is defiled, [child;
That draws a sword on thee.

Dem. Yea; art thou there?
Puck. Follow my voice; we'll try no manhood here.

[Exit.

Re-enter Lysander.

Lys. He goes before me, and still dares me on;
When I come where he calls, then he is gone.
The villain is much lighter heeled than I:
I follow'd fast, but faster he did fly;
That fallen am I in dark uneven way,
And here will rest me. Come, thou gentle day!
[Like down.

For if but once thou show me thy grey light,
I'll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite. [Steps.

Re-enter Puck and Demetrius.

Puck. Ho, ho! ho! ho! Coward, why com'st thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou dar'st; for well I wot,
Thou runnest before me, shifting every place;
And dar'st not now, nor look me in the face.
Where art thou?
SCENE II.

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

I can no further crawl, no further go;
My legs can keep no pace with my desires.
Here will I rest me, till the break of day.
Heaven shield Lysander, if they mean a fray!

[Lies down.

Puck. On the ground
Sleep sound:
I'll apply
To your eye,
Gentle lover, remedy.
[Squeezing the juice on Lysander's eye.
When thou wak'st,
Thou tak'st
True delight
In the sight
Of thy former lady's eye:
And the country proverb known,
That every man should take his own,
In your waking shall be shown:
Jack shall have Jill;
Nought shall go ill;
The man shall have his mare again, and all shall be well.

[Exit Puck.—Dem. Hel. &c. sleep

ACT IV.

Tita. I have a venturous fairy that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee new nuts.
Bot. I had rather have a handful, or two, of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me; I have an exposition of sleep come upon me.

Tita. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.
Fairies, be gone, and be, all ways, away.
So doth the woodbine, the sweet honeysuckle,
Gently entwist,—the female ivy so
Enrings the barky fingers of the elm.
O, how I love thee! how I dote on thee!

[They sleep

OBERON advances. Enter Puck.

Obe. Welcome, good Robin. See'st thou this sweet sight?

Her dotage now I do begin to pity.
For meeting her of late, behind the wood,
Seeking sweet savours for this hateful fool,
I did upbraud her, and fall out with her:
For she his hairy temples then had rounded
With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers;
And that same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flowerets' eyes,
Like tears, that did their own disgrace bewail.
When I had, at my pleasure, taunted her,
And she, in mild terms, begg'd my patience,
I then did ask of her her changeling child;
Which straight she gave me, and her fairy sent
To bear him to my bower in fairy-land.
And now I have the boy, I will undo
This hateful imperfection of her eyes.
And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain;
That he awaking when the other do,
May all to Athens back again repair;
And think no more of this night's accidents
But as the fierce vexation of a dream.
But first I will release the fairy queen.
Be, as thou wast wont to be;

[Touching her eyes with an herb.]

See, as thou wast wont to see:

Dian’s bud o’er Cupid’s flower

Hath such force and blessed power.

Now, my Titania; wake you, my sweet queen.

Tita. My Oberon! what visions have I seen!

Methought, I was enamour’d of an ass.

Obe. There lives your love.

Tita. How came these things to pass?

O, how mine eyes do loath his visage now!

Obe. Silence, a while.—Robin, take off this

Titania, music call; and strike more dead [head.—

Than common sleep, of all these five the sense.

Tita. Music, ho! music; such as charmeth sleep.

Puck. Now, when thou wak’st, with thine own fool’s eyes peep.

Obe. Sound, music. [Still music.] Come, my queen, take hands with me,

And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.

Now thou and I are new in amity;

And will, to-morrow midnight, solemnly,

Dance in duke Theseus’ house triumphantly,

And bless it to all fair posterity;

There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be

Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.

Puck. Fairy king, attend, and mark;

I do hear the morning lark.

Obe. Then, my queen, in silence sad,

Trip we after the night’s shade:

We the globe can compass soon,

Swifter than the wand’ring moon.

Tita. Come, my lord; and in our flight,

Tell me how it came this night,

That I sleeping here was found,

With these mortals on the ground. [Exeunt.]

[Horae sound within.]

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and Train.

The. Go, one of you, find out the forester;—

For now our observation is perform’d;

And since we have the vaward of the day,

My love shall hear the music of my hounds,—

Uncouple in the western valley; go:—

Despatch, I say, and find the forester.—

We will, fair queen, up to the mountain’s top,

And mark the musical confusion

Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

Hip. I was with Hercules, and Cadmus, once,

When in a wood of Crete they bay’d the bear

With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear

Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves,

The skies, the fountains, every region near

Seem’d all one mutual cry: I never heard

So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,

So flew’d, so sanded; and their heads are hung

With ears that sweep away the morning dew;

Crook-knee’d and dew-lap’d like Thessalian bulls;

Slow in pursuit, but match’d in mouth like bells,

Each under each. A cry more tunable

Was never Holla’d to, nor cheer’d with horn,

In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly:

Judge, when you hear. —But, soft; what nymphs are these?

Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;

And this, Lysander; this Demetrius is;

This Helena, old Nedar’s Helena:

I wonder of their being here together.

The. No doubt, they rose up early, to observe

The rite of May; and, hearing our intent,

Came here in grace of our solemnity.—

But, speak, Egeus; is not this the day

That Hermia should give answer of her choice?

Ege. It is, my lord.

The. Go, bid the huntsmen wake them with their horns.

[Horae, and shout within. Demetrius, Lysander, Hermia, and Helena, wake and start up.

The. Good-morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is Begin these wood-birds but to couple now? [past;

Lys. Pardon, my lord.

[He and the rest kneel to Theseus.

The. I pray you all, stand up.

I know, you two are rival enemies;

How comes this gentle concord in the world,

That hatred is so far from jealousy,

To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?

Lys. My lord, I shall reply amazedly.

Half sleep, half waking: But as yet, I swear,

I cannot truly say how I came here:—

But, as I think, (for truly would I speak,—

And now I do bethink me, so it is;)—

I came with Hermia hither: our intent

Was, to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the peril of the Athenian law.

Ege. Enough, enough, my lord; you have enough:

I beg the law, the law upon his head.—

They would have stoln’ away, they would, Demetrius—

Thereby to have defeated you and me: [triumph,

But, of your wife; and me, of my consent;

Of my consent that she should be your wife.

Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,

Of this their purpose hither, to this wood;

And I in fury hither follow’d them;

Fair Helen in fancy following me.

But, my good lord, I wot not by what power,

(But, by some power it is,) my love to Hermia,

Melted as doth the snow, seems to me now

As the remembrance of an idle gawd,

Which in my childhood I did dote upon:

And all the faith, the virtue of my heart,

The object, and the pleasure of mine eye.

Is only Helena. To her, my lord,

Was I betroth’d ere I saw Hermia:

But, like in sickness, did I loath this food.

But, as in health, come to my natural taste;

Now do I wish it, love it, long for it,

And will for evermore be true to it.

The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met:

Of this discourse we more will hear anon.—

Egeus, I will overbear your will;

For in the temple, by and by with us.

These couples shall eternally be knit.

And, for the morning now is something worn,

Our purposed hunting shall be set aside.—

Away, with us, to Athens: Three and three,

We’ll hold a feast in great solemnity.—

Come, Hippolyta. [Exeunt Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and Train.

Dem. These things seem small and undistinguishable,

Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.

Her. Methinks, I see these things with parted eye.

When every thing seems double.

Hel. So, methinks:

And I have found Demetrius like a jewel.

Mine own, and not mine own.
SCENE II.

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Dem.  It seems to me, That yet we sleep, we dream.—Do you not think, The duke was here, and bid us follow him?
Her.  Yes, and my father.
Hel.  And Hippolyta.
Lys.  And he did bid us follow to the temple.
Dem.  Why then, we are awake; let's follow him; And by the way let us recount our dreams.

[Exit.]

As they go out, Bottom awakes.

Bot.  When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer:—my next is, Most fair Pyramis.—Hey, ho!—Peter Quince! Flute, the bellows-mender! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! God's my life! stolen hence, and left me asleep! I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream,—past the wit of man to say what dream it was:—Man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was—there is no man can tell what. Methought I was, and methought I had.—But man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen; man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream; it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom; and I will sing it in the latter end of a play, before the duke: Peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—ATHENS. A Room in Quince's House.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin.  Have you sent to Bottom's house? is he come home yet?
Star.  He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt, he is transported.
Flu.  If he come not then, the play is marred; It goes not forward, doth it?

Quin.  It is not possible: you have not a man in all Athens, able to discharge Pyramus, but he.
Flu.  No; he hath simply the best wit of any handicraft man in Athens.
Quin.  Yea, and the best person too: and he is a very paramour for a sweet voice.
Flu.  You must say, paragon; a paramour is God bless us, a thing of nought.

[Enter Snug.]

Snug.  Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, and there is two or three lords and ladies more married: if our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.
Flu.  O sweet Bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a-day during his life; he could not have 'scapeed sixpence a-day: an the duke had not given him sixpence a-day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged; he would have deserved it: sixpence a-day, in Pyramus, or nothing.

[Enter Bottom.]

Bot.  Where are these lads? where are these hearts?
Quin.  Bottom!—O most courageous day! O most happy hour!
Bot.  Masters, I am to discourse wonders: but ask me not what; for if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will tell you every thing, right as it fell out.
Quin.  Let us hear, sweet Bottom.
Bot.  Not a word of me. All that I will tell you, is, that the duke hath dined: Get your apparel together; good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps; meet presently at the palace; every man look over his part; for, the short and the long is, our play is preferred. In any case, let Thisby have clean linen; and let not him that plays the lion, pare his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most dear actors, eat no onions, nor garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath; and I do not doubt but to hear them say, it is a sweet comedy. No more word; away; go, away.

[Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. An Apartment in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, Lords and Attendants.

Hipp.  'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.
The.  More strange than true. I never may believe
These antique fables, nor these fairy toys. Lovers and madmen have such seething brains, Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend More than cool reason ever comprehends. The lunatick, the lover, and the poet, Are of imagination all compact: One sees more devils than vast hell can hold; That is, the madman: the lover, all as frantick, Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt: The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling, Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to And, as imagination bodies forth [heaven, The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
Where is our usual manager of mirth?
What revels are in hand? Is there no play,
To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

Call Philostrate.

Philostr. Here, mighty Theseus.
The. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?
What mask, what music? How shall we beguile
The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Philostr. There is a brief, how many sports are ripe;
Make choice of which your highness will see first.

[Giving a paper.]

The. [Reads.] The battle with the Centaurs, to
By an Athenian enuch, to the harp. [be sung,
We'll none of that: that I have told my love,
In glory of my kinsman Hercules.
The riot of the tipsy Bacchantes,
Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage.
That is an old device, and it was play'd
When I from Thesbes came last a conqueror.
The thrice-three Muses mourning for the death
Of learning, late deceas'd in beggary.
That is some satire, keen, and critical,
Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.
A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus,
And his love Thisbé; very tragical mirth.
Merry and tragical? Tedium and brief?
That is, hot ice, and wonderous strange snow.
How shall we find the concord of this discord?

Philostr. A play there is my lord, some ten words
Which is as brief as I have known a play; [long;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,
Which makes it tedious: for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitted.
And tragical, my noble lord, it is;
For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.
Which when I saw rehears'd, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
The passion of loud laughter never shed.

The. What are they that do play it?

Philostr. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens here,
Which never labour'd in their minds till now;
And now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories
With this same play, against your nuptial.

The. And we will hear it.

Philostr. No, my noble lord,
It is not for you: I have heard it over,
And it is nothing, nothing in the world;
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
Extremely stretch'd and conn'd with cruel pain,
To do you service.

The. I will hear that play;
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simplicity and duty tender it.
Go, bring them in: and take your places, ladies.

[Exit Philostrate.]

Hip. I love not to see wretchedness o'erriched,
And duty in his service perishing.

The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He says they can do nothing in this kind.

The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.
Our sports shall be, to take what they mistake:
And what poor duty cannot do,
Noble respect takes it in might, not merit.
Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes;

Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome; Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence, yet, I pick'd a welcome;
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much, as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and audacious eloquence.
Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity,
In least, speak most, to my capacity.

[Enter Philostrate.]

Philostr. So please your grace, the prologue is addrest.

The. Let him approach. [Flourish of Trumpets.

Enter Prologue.

Prol. If we offend, it is with our good will.
That you should think, we come not to offend,
But with good will. To show our simple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end.
Consider then, we come but in despite.
We do not come as minding to content you.
Our true intent is. All for your delight,
We are not here. That you should here repent
The actors are at hand: and, by their show, 'you.
You shall know all that you are like to know.

The. This fellow doth not stand upon points.

Lys. He hath rid his prologue like a rough colt;
He knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord;
It is not enough to speak, but to speak true.

Hip. Indeed he hath played on this prologue, like a child on a recorder; a sound, but not in government.

The. His speech was like a tangled chain; nothing impaired, but all disordered. Who is next?

Enter Pyramus and Thisbé, Wall, Moonshine, and Lion, as in dumb show.

Prol. "Gentles, per chance, you wonder at this show;
"But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.
"This man is Pyramus, if you would know;
"This beauteous lady Thisbé is, certain.
"This man, with lime and rough-cast, doth present
"Wall, that vile wall which did these lovers sunder:
"And through wall's chink, poor souls, they are content
"To whisper, at the which let no man wonder.
"This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn,
"Presenteth moon-shine: for, if you will know,
"By moon-shine did these lovers think no scorn
"To meet at Nunu's tomb, there, there to woo.
"This grisly beast, which by name lion hight,
"The trusty Thisby, coming first by night,
"Did scare away, or rather did affright;
"And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall;
"Which lion vyle with bloody mouth did stain:
"Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth, and tall,
"And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain:
"Whereat with blade, with bloody shameful blade,
"He bravely broach'd his boiling bloody breast;
"And Thisby, tarrying in mulberry shade,
"His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,
"Let lion, moon-shine, wall, and lovers twain,
"At large discourse, while here they do remain."

[Exeunt Prolog. Theseus, Lion and Moonshine.

The. I wonder, if the lion be to speak.

Dem. No wonder, my lord: one lion may, when many asse do.
Scene 1.

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Wall. "In this same interlude, it doth befall, 'That I, one Snout by name, present a wall: 'And such a wall as I would have you think, 'That had in it a cranny’d hole, or chink, 'Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby, 'Did whisper often very secretly. 'This loam, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth show 'That I am that same wall; the truth is so: 'And this the cranny is, right and sinister, 'Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper." Thee. Would you desire lime and hair to speak better?

Dem. It is the wittiest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord. Thee. Pyramus draws near the wall: silence!

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. "O grim-look’d night! O night with hue so black! "O night, which ever art, when day is not! "O night, O night, alack, alack, alack, "I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot! — "And thou, O wall, O sweet, O lovely wall, "That stand'st between her father's ground and mine; "Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall, "Shew me thy chink, to blink through with mine eye. [Wall holds up his fingers. "Thanks, courteous wall: Jove shield thee well "But what see I? No Thisby do I see. [for this! "O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss; "Curst be thy stones for thus deceiving me!"

Thee. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.

Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not. Deceiving me, is Thisby’s cue: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will fall pat as I told you: — Yonder she comes.

Enter Thisbe.

This. "O wall, full often hast thou heard my "For parting my fair Pyramus and me: [moans, "My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones: "Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee." Pyr. "I see a voice: now will I to the chink, "To spy an I can hear my Thisby’s face. "Thisby?"

This. "My love! thou art my love, I think." Pyr. "Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover’s "And like Limander am I trusty still." [grace; This. "And I like Helen, till the fates me kill." Pyr. "Not Shafalus to Procrus, was so true." This. "As Shafalus to Procrus, I to you; "O, kiss me through the hole of this vile wall."

This. "I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all." Pyr. "Wilt thou at Ninnys's tomb meet me straightway?"

This. "Tide life, tide death, I come without delay." Wall. "Thus have I, wall, my part discharged "And, being done, thus wall away doth go." [so; Exeunt Wall, Pyramus, and Thisbe.

Thee. Now is the mural down between the two neighbours.

Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so willful to hear without warning.

Hipp. This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard. Thee. The best in this kind are but shadows; and he worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.

Hipp. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.

Thee. If we imagine no worse of them, than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in, a moon and a lion.

Enter Lion and Moonshine.

Lion. "You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fea "The smallest monstrous mouse that creeps on floor, "May now, perchance, both quake and tremble here, "When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar. "Then know, that I, one Snug the joiner, am "A lion fell, nor else no lion’s dam: "For if I should as lion come in strife "Into this place, 'twere pity of my life." Thee. A very gentle beast, and of a good conscience.

Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that e'er I saw.

Lys. This lion is a very fox for his valour.

Thee. True; and for his discretion.

Dem. Not so, my lord; for his valour cannot carry his discretion; and the fox carries the goose.

Thee. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valour; for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present:"

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.

Thee. He is no crescent, and his horns are invisible within the circumference.

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present; "Myself the man i' th' moon do seem to be." Thee. This is the greatest error of all the rest: the man should be put into the lantern: How is it else the man 't the moon?

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle: for, you see, it is already in snuff.

Hipp. I am aweary of this moon: Would, he would change!

Thee. It appears, by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane: but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lys. Proceed, moon.

Moon. "All that I have to say, is, to tell you, that the lantern is the moon; I, the man in the moon; this thorn-bush, my thorn-bush; and this dog, my dog." Dem. Why, all these should be in the lantern; for they are in the moon. But, silence; here comes Thisbe.

Enter Thisbe.

This. "This is old Ninnys's tomb: Where is my love?"

Lion. "Oh!” [The Lion roars.—Thrice runs off. Dem. Well roared, lion.

Hipp. Well shone, moon. — Truly, the moon shines with a good grace.

Thee. Well moused, lion. [The Lion tears Thisbe’s mantle, and exit.

Dem. And so comes Pyramus.

Lys. And then the moon vanishes.
Enter Pyramus.

Pyr.  "Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;
   For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering streams,
   I trust to taste of truest Thisby's sight.
   But stay,—O spite!
"But mark:—Poor knight,
   What dreadful dore is here?
   Eyes, do you see?
   How can it be?
   O dainty duck! O dear!
   Thy mantle good,
   What, stained with blood?
   Approach, ye furies fell!
   O fates! come, come;
   Cut thread and thrum;
   Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!"

The.  This passion, and the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

Hip.  Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.

Pyrr.  "O, wherewithal, nature, didst thou lions frame?
   Since lion vile hath here defour'd my dear:
   Which is—no—which was the fairest dame,
   That liv'd, that lov'd, that lik'd, that look'd with cheer.
   "Come, tears, confound;
   Out, sword, and wound
   The pap of Pyramus:
   Ay, that left pap,
   Where heart doth hop:—
   Thus die I, thus, thus, thus.
   Now am I dead,
   Now am I fled;
   My soul is in the sky:
   Tongue, lose thy light!
   Moon, take thy flight!
   "Now die, die, die, die, die."

[Dies.—Exit Moonshine.

Dem.  No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one.

Lys.  Less than an ace, man; for he is dead; he is nothing.

The.  With the help of a surgeon, he might yet recover, and prove an ass.

Hip.  How chance moonshine is gone, before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover?

The.  She will find him by star-light. — Here she comes; and her passion ends the play.

Enter Thisbe.

Hip.  Methinks, she should not use a long one for such a Pyramus: I hope she will be brief.

Dem.  A motte will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better.

Lys.  She hath spied him already with those sweet eyes.

Dem.  And thus she means, videlicet.—

This.  "Asleep, my love?
"What, dead, my dove?
"O Pyramus, arise,
"Speak, speak.—Quite dumb?
"Dead, dead? A tomb.
"Must cover thy sweet eyes.
"These lily browns,
This cherry nose,
"These yellow cowslip cheeks,
"Are gone, are gone:
"Lovers, make moan!
"His eyes were green as leeks.

"O sisters, three,
"Come, come to me,
"With hands as pale as milk;
"Lay them in gore,
"Since you have shore
"With shears his thread of silk.
"Tongue, not a word:—
"Come, trusty sword:
"Come, blade, my breast imbure:
"And farewell, friends:—
"Thus Thisby ends:
"Adieu, adieu, adieu."

[Dies.

The.  Moonshine and lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem.  Ay, and wall too.

Bot.  No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance, between two of our company.

The.  No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it, had played Pyramus, and himself assumed in Thisbe's garter, it would have been a fine tragedy: and so it is, truly; and very notably discharged. But come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone. [Here a dance of Clowns. The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve:—Lovers, to bed; 'tis almost fairy time. I fear we shall out-sleep the coming morn, As much as we this night have overwatch'd. This palpable-gross play hath well beguil'd The heavy gait of night. —Sweet friends, to bed.—A fortnight hold we this solemnity, In nightly revels, and new jollity. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Enter Puck.

Puck.  Now the hungry lion roars, And the wolf behovels the moon: Whilst the heavy ploughman snores, All with weary task fordone. Now the wasted brands do glow, Whilst the scritch-owl, screeching loud, Puts the wretch, that lies in woe, In remembrance of a shroud. Now it is the time of night, That the graves, all gaping wide, Every one lets forth its sprite, In the church-way paths to glide: And we fairies, that do run By the triple Hecat's team, From the presence of the sun Following darkness like a dream, Now are frolic: not a mouse Shall disturb this hallow'd house: I am sent, with broom, before, To sweep the dust behind the door.

Enter Oberon and Titania, with their Train.

Obe.  Through this house give glistening light, By the dead and drowsy fire: Every elf, and fairy sprite, Hop as light as bird from brier; And this ditty, after me, Sing, and dance it trippingly.

Tit.  First, rehearse this song by rote: To each word a warbling note,
Hand in hand, with fairy grace,
Will we sing, and bless this place.

SONG, AND DANCE.

Obe. Now, until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray.
To the best bride-bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be
And the issue there create,
Ever shall be fortunate.
So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be;
And the blots of Nature's hand
Shall not in their issue stand;
Never mole, hare-lip, nor scar,
Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity,
Shall upon their children be.—
With this field-dew consecrate,
Every fairy take his gait;
And each several chamber bless,
Through this palace, with sweet peace:

E'er shall it in safety rest,
And the owner of it blest.
Trip away:
Make no stay:
Meet me all by break of day.

[Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and Train.

Puck. If we Shadows have offended,
Think but this, (and all is mended,)
That you have but slumber'd here,
While these visions did appear.
And this weak and idle theme,
No more yielding but a dream,
Gentles, do not reprehend;
If you pardon, we will mend.
And, as I'm an honest Puck,
If we have unearned lu'rek
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends, ere long:
Else the Puck a liar call,
So, good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends. [Exit]

ACT I.

SCENE,—Navarre.

SCENE I.—Navarre. A Park, with a Palace in it.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives, Live register'd upon our brazen tombas, And then grace us in the disgrace of death; When, spite of cormorant devouring time, The endeavour of this present breath may buy That honour, which shall bate his scythe's keen And make us heirs of all eternity. [edge, Therefore, brave conquerors!—for so you are, That war against your own affections, And the huge army of the world's desires,— Our late edict shall strongly stand in force: Navarre shall be the wonder of the world; Our court shall be a little Academe, Still and contemplative in living art. You three, Bir6n, Dumain, and Longaville, Have sworn for three years' term to live with me, My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes, That are recorded in this schedule here: Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names; That his own hand may strike his honour down, That violates the smallest branch herein: If you are arm'd to do, as sworn to do, Subscribe to your deep oath, and keep it too.

Long. I am resolv'd; 'tis but a three years' fast; The mind shall banquet, though the body pine: Fat paunches have lean pates; and dainty bits Make rich the ribs, but bank'rout quite the wits.

Dum. My loving lord, Dumain is mortified;
The grosser manner of these world's delights He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves: To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die; With all these living in philosophy.

Biron. I can but say their protestation over, So much, dear liege, I have already sworn, That is, To live and study here three years. But there are other strict observances: As, not to see a woman in that term; Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there:

And, one day in a week to touch no food; And but one meal on every day beside; The which, I hope, is not enrolled there: And then, to sleep but three hours in the night, And not be seen to wink of all the day; (When I was wont to think no harm all night, And make a dark night too of half the day;) Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there: O, these are barren tasks, too hard to keep; Not to see ladies—study—fast—not sleep.

King. Your oath is pass'd to pass away from these.

Biron. Let me say no, my liege, as if you please; I only swore, to study with your grace, And stay here in your court for three years' space.

Long. You swore to that, Bir6n, and to the rest.

Biron. By yea and nay, sir, then I swore in jest,— What is the end of study? let me know.

King. Why, that to know, which else we should not know.

Biron. Things hid and barr'd, you mean, from common sense?

King. Ay, that is study's god-like recompense.

Biron. Come on then, I will swear to study so,

To know the thing I am forbid to know:

As thus,— To study where I well may dine,

When I to feast expressly am forbid;

Or, study where to meet some mistress fine,

When mistresses from common sense are hid:

Or, having sworn too hard-a-keeping oath,

Study to break it, and not break my troth.

If study's gain be thus, and this be so,

Study knows that, which yet it doth not know:

Swear me to this, and I will ne'er say—no.

King. These be the stops that hinder study quite,

And train our intellects to vain delight.

Biron. Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain,

Which, with pain purchases'd, doth inherit pain:

As, painfully to pore upon a book,

To seek the light of truth; while truth the while

Doth falsely blind the eyesight of his look:

Light, seeking light, doth light of light beguile;
SCENE i.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

151

So, ere you find where light in darkness lies,
Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes.
Study me how to please the eye indeed,
By fixing it upon a fairer eye;
Who dazzling so, that eye shall be his heed,
And give him light that it was blinded by.
Study is like the heaven's glorious sun,
That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks;
Small have continual pladders ever won,
Save base authority from others' books.
These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights,
That give a name to every fixed star,
Have no more profit of their shining nights,
Than those that walk, and not what they are.
Too much to know, is, to know nought but fame;
And every godfather can give a name.

King. How well he's read, to reason against reading!

Dum. Proceeded well, to stop all good proceeding!

Long. He weeds the corn, and still lets grow the weeding.

Biron. The spring is near, when green geese are a breeding.

Dum. How follows that?

Biron. Fit in his place and time.

Dum. In reason nothing.

Biron. Something then in rhyme. Long. Birón is like an envious snipping frost,

That bites the first-born infants of the spring.

Biron. Well, say I am; why should proud summer boast,

Before the birds have any cause to sing?

Why should I joy in an abortive birth?

At Christmas I no more desire a rose,

Than wish a snow in May's new-fangled shows;

But like of each thing, that in season grows.
So you, to study now it is too late,

Climb o'er the house to unlock the little gate.

King. Well, sit you out; go home, Birón: adieu!

Biron. No, my good lord; I have sworn to stay with you:

And, though I have for barbarism spoke more,

Than for that angel knowledge you can say,

Yet confidant I'll keep what I have sworn,

And bide the penance of each three years' day.

Give me the paper, let me read the same;

And to the strictest decrees I'll write my name.

King. How well this yielding rescues thee from shame!

Biron. [Reads.] Item, That no woman shall come within a mile of my court.—

And hath this been proclaimed?—

Long. Four days ago.

Biron. Let's see the penalty.

[Reads.]—On pain of losing her tongue.

Who devis'd this?

Long. Marry, that did I.

Biron. Sweet lord, and why?

Long. To fright them hence with that dread pet

Biron. A dangerous law against gentility. [nalty.

[Reads.] Item, If any man be seen to talk with a woman within the term of three years, he shall endure such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise.——

This article, my liege, yourself must break:

For well you know, here comes in embassy

The French King's daughter, with yourself to speak,—

A maid of grace, and complete majesty,—

About surrender-up of Aquitain
To her decrepit, sick, and bed-rid father:

Therefore this article is made in vain,

Or vainly comes the admired princess hither.

King, What say you, lords? why, this was quite Biron. So study evermore is over-shot; I forgot,

While it doth study to have what it would,

It doth forget to do the thing it should:

And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
'Tis won, as towns with fire; so won, so lost.

And he, that breaks them in the least degree,

Stands in attainer of eternal shame:

Suggestions are to others, as to me;

But, I believe, although I seem so loth;

I am the last that will last keep his oath.

But is there no quick recreation granted?

King. Ay, that there is; our court, you know, is

With a refined traveller of Spain; [haunted

A man in all the world's new fashion planted,

That hath a mint of phrases in his brain:

One, whom the music of his own vain tongue

Doth ravish, like enchanting harmony;

A man of complements, whom right and wrong

Have chosen as unpar of their mutiny;

This child of fancy, that Armado bight,

For interim to our studies, shall relate,

In high-born words, the worth of many a knight

From tawny Spain, lost in the world's debate.

How you delight, my lords, I know not, 1;

But, I protest, I love to hear him lie,

And I will use him for my minstrelsy.

Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight,

A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight.

Long. Costard the swain, and he, shall be our And, so to study—three years is but short. [sport;

Enter Dull with a letter, and Costard.

Dull. Which is the duke's own person?

Biron. This, fellow; what would'st?

Dull. I myself reprehend his own person, for I am his grace's tharborough: but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.

Biron. This is he.

Dull. Signior Arme—Arme—commends you.

There's villany abroad; this letter will tell you more.

Cost. Sir, the contempts thereof are as touching me.

King. A letter from the magnificent Armado.

Biron. How low soever the matter, I hope in God for high words.

Long. A high hope for a low heaven: God grant us patience!

Biron. To hear? or forbear hearing?

Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or to forbear both.

Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to climb in the merriness.

Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Biron. In what manner?
Cost. In manner and form following, sir, all those three: I was seen with her in the manor house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner,—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman: for the form,—in some form.
Biron. For the following, sir?
Cost. As it shall follow in my correction; And God defend the right!
King. Will you hear this letter with attention?
Biron. As we would hear an oracle.
Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.
King. [Reads.] Great deputys, the world's vice-gerent, and sole dominator of Navarre, my soul's earth's God, and body's fostering patron.—Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.
King. So it is,—
Cost. It may be so: but if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so, so.
King. Peace.
Cost. —be to me, and every man that dares not fight!
King, No words.
Cost. —of and men's secrets, I beseech you.
King. So it is, besieged with sable-coloured melancholy. I did commend the black-oppressing humour to the most wholesome physic of thy health-giving air; and, as I am a gentleman, be look myself to walk. The time when? About the sixth hour; when beasts most graze, birds best peck, and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper. So much for the time when. Now for the ground which; which, I mean, I walked upon: it is yeilded thy park. Then for the place where; where, I mean, I did encounter that obscure and most preposterous event, that dreweth from my snow-white pen the ibon-coloured ink, which here thou viewest, beholdest, surveysest, or seest: But to the place, where.—It standeth north-north-east and by-east from the west corner of thy curious-knotted garden. There did I see that low-spirited swain, that base minnow of thy mirth,
Cost. Me.
King. —that unlettered small-knowing soul,
Cost. Me.
King. —that shallow vassal,
Cost. Still me.
King. —which as I remember, hight Costard,
Cost. O me!
King. —sorted and consorted, contrary to thy established proclaimed edict and continent canon, with,—with,—O with,—but with this I passion to say wherewith,
Cost. With a wench.
King. —with a child of our grandmother Eve, a female; or, for thy more sweet understanding, a woman. Him I (as my ever esteemed duty pricks me on) have sent to thee, to receive the meed of punishment, by thy sweet grace's officer, Antony Dull; a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, and estimation.
Dull. Me, an't shall please you; I am Antony Dull.
King. For Jaquenetta, (so is the weaker vessel called, which I apprehended with the aforesaid swain,) I keep her as a vessel of thy law's fury; and shall, at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to trials. Thine, in all compliments of devoted and heart-burning heat of duty,
Don Adriano de Armado.
Biron. This is not so well as I looked for, but the best that ever I heard.
King. Ay; the best for the worst. But, sirrah, what say you to this?
Cost. Sir, I confess the wench.
King. Did you hear the proclamation?
Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.
King. It was proclaimed a year's imprisonment, to be taken with a wench.
Cost. I was taken with none, sir; I was taken with a damosel.
King. Well, it was proclaimed damosel.
Cost. This was no damosel neither, sir; she was a virgin.
King. It is so varied too; for it was proclaimed virgin.
Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity; I was taken with a maid.
King. This maid will not serve thy turn, sir.
Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.
King. Sir, I will pronounce your sentence; You shall fast a week with bran and water.
Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.
King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper—
My lord Biron, see him delivered over.—
And go we, lords, to put in practice, that Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.—
[Exeunt King, Longaville, and Dumain.
Biron. I'll lay my head to any good man's bet,
These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.
Sirrah, come on.
Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir: for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta is a true girl; and therefore, Welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again, and till then, Sit thee down, sorrow! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the same. Armado's House.

Enter Armado and Moth.
Arm. Boy, what sign is it, when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?
Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.
Arm. Why, sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear imp.
Moth. No, no; O lord, sir, no.
Arm. How canst thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenal?
Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working my tough senior.
Arm. Why tough senior? why tough senior?
Moth. Why tender juvenal? why tender juvenal?
Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenal, as a congruent epithet, appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.
Moth. And I, tough senior, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name tough.
Arm. Pretty, and apt.
Moth. How mean you, sir; I pretty, and my saying apt? or I apt, and my saying pretty?
Arm. Thou pretty, because little.
Moth. Little pretty, because little: Wherefore apt?
Arm. And therefore apt, because quick.
Moth. Speak you this in my praise, master?
Arm. In thy condign praise.
Moth. I will praise an eel with the same praise.
Arm. What? that an eel is ingenious?
Moth. That an eel is quick.
Arm. I do say, thou art quick in answers:
Thou heatest my blood.
Moth. I am answered, sir.
Arm. I love not to be crossed.
Moth. He speaks the mere contrary, crosses love not him. [Aside.
Arm. I have promised to study three years with the duke.
Moth. You may do it in an hour, sir.
Arm. Impossible.
Moth. How many is one thrice told?
Arm. I am ill at reckoning, it fitteth the spirit of a tapster.
Moth. You are a gentleman, and a gamester, sir.
Arm. I confess both, they are both the varnish of a complete man.
Moth. Then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of deuce-ace amounts to.
Arm. It doth amount to one more than two.
Moth. Which the base vulgar do call, three.
Arm. True.
Moth. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study?
Now here is three studied, ere you'll thrice wink:
and how easy it is to put years to the word three,
and study three years in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.
Arm. A most fine figure!
Moth. To prove you a cipher. [Aside.
Arm. I will hereupon confess, I am in love:
and, as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wenches. If drawing my sword against the humour of affection would deliver me from the reprobate thought of it, I would take desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French courtier for a new devised courtesy. I think scorn to sigh; methinks, I should out-swear Cupid.
Comfort me, boy: What great men have been in love?
Moth. Hercules, master.
Arm. Most sweet Hercules!—Most authority, dear boy, name more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.
Moth. Samson, master; he was a man of good carriage, great carriage; for he carried the town-gates on his back, like a porter: and he was in love.
Arm. O well-knit Samson! strong jointed Samson! I do excel thee in my rapier, as much as thou didst me in carrying gates. I am in love too,—Who was Samson's love, my dear Moth?
Moth. A woman, master.
Arm. Of what complexion?
Moth. Of all the four, or the three, or the two;
or one of the four.
Arm. Tell me precisely of what complexion?
Moth. Of the sea-water green, sir.
Arm. Is that one of the four complexions?
Moth. As I have read, sir: and the best of them too.
Arm. Green, indeed, is the colour of lovers;
but to have a love of that colour, methinks, Samson had small reason for it. He, surely, affected her for her wit.
Moth. It was so, sir; for she had a green wit.
Arm. My love is most immaculate white and red Moth. Most maculate thoughts, master, are masked under such colours.
Arm. Define, define, well-educated infant.
Moth. My father's wit, and my mother's tongue, assist me.
Arm. Sweet invocation of a child; most pretty,
and pathetical!
Moth. If she be made of white and red,
Her faults will ne'er be known;
For blushing cheeks by faults are bred,
And fears by pale-white shown:
Then, if she fear, or be to blame,
By this you shall not know;
For still her cheeks possess the same,
Which native she doth owe.
A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.
Arm. Is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar.
Moth. The world was very guilty of such a ballad some three ages since: but, I think, now
'tis not to be found; or, if it were, it would neither serve for the writing, nor the tune.
Arm. I will have the subject newly writ o'er, that I may example my digression by some mighty precedent. Boy, I do love that country girl, that I took in the park with the rational hind Costard;
she deserves well.
Moth. To be whipped: and yet a better love than my master. [Aside.
Arm. Sing, boy; my spirit grows heavy in love.
Moth. And that's great marvel, loving a light wench.
Arm. I say, sing.
Moth. Forbear till this company be past.
Enter DULL, COSTARD, and JAQUENETTA.
Dull. Sir, the duke's pleasure is, that you keep Costard safe: and you must let him take no delight, nor no penance; but 'a must fast three days a week. For this dandle, I must keep her at the park; she is allowed for the day-woman. Fare you well.
Arm. I do betray myself with blushing.—Maid.
Jac. Man.
Arm. I will visit thee at the lodge.
Jac. That's here by.
Arm. I know where it is situate.
Jac. Lord, how wise you are!
Arm. I will tell thee wonders.
Jac. With that face?
Arm. I love thee.
Jac. So I heard you say.
Arm. And so farewell.
Jac. Fair weather after you!
Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away.
[Execut Dull and Jaquenetta.
Arm. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences ere thou be pardoned.
Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.
Arm. Thou shalt be heavily punished.
Cost. I am more bound to you, than your fellows, for they are but lightly rewarded.
Arm. Take away this villain; shut him up.
Moth. Come, you transgressing slave; away.
Cost. Let me not be pent up, sir; I will fast, being loose.
Moth. No, sir; that were fast and loose: thou shalt to prison.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same. A Pavilion and Tents at a distance.

Enter the Princess of France, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants.

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your dearest spirits;

Consider who the king your father sends;
To whom he sends; and what's his embassy:
Yourself, held precious in the world's esteem;
To parley with the sole inheritor
Of all perfections that a man may owe,
Matchless Navarre; the plea of no less weight
Than Aquitain; a dowry for a queen.
Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making graces dear,
When she did starve the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you. [mean,
Prin. Good lord Boyet, my beauty, though but Nee'da not the painted flourish of your praise;
Beauty is bought by judgment of the eye,
Not utter'd by base sale of chapmen's tongues;
I am less proud to hear you tell my worth,
Than you much willing to be counted wise
In spending your wit in the praise of mine.
But now to task the tasker.—Good Boyet,
You are not ignorant, all-telling fame
Doth noise abroad, Navarre hath made a vow,
Till painful study shall outwear three years,
No woman may approach his silent court:
Therefore to us seemeth it a needful course,
Before we enter his forbidden gates,
To know his pleasure; and in that behalf,
Bold of your worthiness, we single you
As our best-moving fair solicitor:
Tell him, the daughter of the king of France,
On serious business, craving quick despatch,
Importunes personal conference with his grace.
Haste, signify so much; while we attend,
Like humble-visag'd suitors, his high will.
Boyet. Proud of employment, willingly I go.

[Exit.]

Prin. All pride is willing pride, and your's is so.—
Who are the votaries, my loving lords,
That are vow-fellows with this virtuous duke?
1 Lord. Longaville is one.

Prin. Know you the man?

[Re-enter Boyet.]

Prin. Now, what admittance, lord?

Boyet. Navarre had notice of your fair approach;
And he, and his competitors in oath,
Were all address'd to meet you, gentle lady,
Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt.
He rather means to lodge you in the field,
(Like one that comes here to besiege his court,)
Than seek a dispensation for his oath,
To let you enter his unpeopled house.
Here comes Navarre.

[The Ladies mask.
Enter KING, LONGAVILLE, DUMAIN, BIRON, and Attendants.

King. Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre.

Prin. Fair, I give you back again; and, welcome I have not yet: the roof of this court is too high to be yours; and welcome to the wild fields too base to be mine.

King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.
Prin. I will be welcome then; conduct me thither.

King. Hear me, dear lady; I have sworn an oath.
Prin. Our lady help my lord! he'll be forsworn.

King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.
Prin. Why, will shall break it; will, and nothing else.

King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is.
Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise, Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.

I hear, your grace hath sworn-out house-keeping: 'Tis deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord, And sin to break it.

But pardon me, I am too suddenly bold;
To teach a teacher ill beseeemeth me.

Vouchsafe to read the purpose of my coming,
And suddenly resolve me in my suit. [Gives a paper.

King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may.
Prin. You will the sooner, that I was away;
For you'll prove perjur'd, if you make me stay.

Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabantonce?
Ros. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Biron. I know you did.

Ros. How needless was it then
To ask the question!

Biron. You must not be so quick.
Ros. 'Tis long of you that spur me with such questions.
Biron. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast, 'twill tire.
Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mire.
Biron. What time o' day?
Ros. The hour that fools should ask.
Biron. Now fair befall your mask!
Ros. Fair fall the face it covers!
Biron. And send you many lovers!
Ros. Atween, so you be none.
Biron. Nay, then will I be gone.

King. Madam, your father here doth intimate
The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;
Being but the one half of an entire sum,
Disbursed by my father in his wars.

But say, that he, or we, (as neither have,) Receiv'd that sum; yet there remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more; in surety of the which,
One part of Aquitain is bound to us,
Although not valued to the money's worth.
If then the king your father will restore But that one half which is unsatisfied,
We will give up our right in Aquitain,
And hold fair friendship with his majesty.
But that, it seems, he little purposeth,
For here he doth demand to have repaid
An hundred thousand crowns; and not demands,
On payment of a hundred thousand crowns,
To have his title live in Aquitain;
Which we much rather had depart withal,
And have the money by our father lent,
Than Aquitain so gilded as it is.

Dear princess, were it not his requests so far
From reason's yielding, your fair self should make
A yielding, 'gainst some reason, in my breast,
And go well satisfied to France again.

Prin. You do the king my father too much
And wrong the reputation of your name, [wrong,
In so unseeming to confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.
King. I do protest, I never heard of it;
And, if you prove it, I'll repay it back,
Or yield up Aquitain.
Prin. We arrest your word:—
Boyet, you can produce acquaintances,
For such a sum, from special officers
Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so. [come,
Boyet. So please your grace, the packet is not
Where that and other specialties are bound;
To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.
King. It shall suffice me; at which interview,
All liberal reason I will yield unto.
Mean time, receive such welcome at my hand,
As honour, without breach of honour, may
Make tender of to thy true worthiness:
You may not come, fair princess, in my gates;
But here without you shall be so receiv'd,
As you shall deem yourself lodg'd in my heart,
Though so denied fair harbour in my house.

Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell
To-morrow shall we visit you again. [grace!
Prin. Sweet health and fair desires consort your King. Thy own wish wish I thee in every place!
[Exeunt King and his Train.

Biron. Lady, I will commend you to my own heart.
Ros. 'Pray you, do my commendations; I would be glad to see it.
Biron. I would, you heard it groan.
Ros. Is the fool sick?
Biron. Sick at heart.
Ros. Alack, let it blood.
Biron. Would that do it good?
Ros. My physic says, ay.
Biron. Will you prick't with your eye?
Ros. No poynt, with my knife.
Biron. Now, God save thy life!
Ros. And yours from long living!
Biron. I cannot stay thanksgiving. [Retiring.

Dum. Sir, I pray you, a word: What lady is that same?
Boyet. The heir of Alençon, Rosaline her name.
Dum. A gallant lady! Monsieur, fare you well.
[Exit.

Long. I beseech you a word; What is she in the white?
Boyet. A woman sometimes, an you saw her in the light.
Long. Perchance, light in the light: I desire her Boyet. She hath but one for herself; to desire that, were a shame.

Long. Pray you, sir, whose daughter?
Boyet. Her mother's, I have heard.
Long. God's blessing on your beard!
Boyet. Good sir, be not offended:
She is an heir of Falconbridge.

Long. Nay, my cholcr is ended.
She is a most sweet lady.

Boyet. Not unlike, sir; that may be. [Exit Long Biron. What's her name, in the cap?
Boyet. Katherine, by good hap.
Biron. Is she wedded, or no?
Boyet. To her will, sir, or so.
Biron. You are welcome, sir, adieu!
Boyet. Farewell to me, sir, and welcome to you. [Exit Biron.—Ladies unseen.

Mar. That last is Biron, the merry mad-cap lord;
Not a word with him but a jest.

Boyet. And every jest but a word.

Prin. It was well done of you to take him at his word.

Boyet. I was as willing to grapple, as he was to board.

Mar. Two hot sheep's, marry!

Boyet. And wherefore not ships?
No sheep, sweet lamb, unless we feed on your lips.

Mar. You sheep, and I pasture; Shall that finish the jest?

Boyet. So you grant pasture for me.

[Offering to kiss her.

Mar. Not so, gentle beast;
My lips are no common, though several they be.

Boyet. Belonging to whom?

Mar. To my fortunes and me.

Prin. Good wits will be jangling: but, gentle, agree.

The civil war of wits were much better used
On Navarre and his book-men; for here 'tis abused.

Boyet. If my observation, (which very seldom lies,) By the heart's still rhetoric, disclosed with eyes, Deceive me not now, Navarre is infected.

Prin. With what?

Boyet. With that which we lovers entitle, affected.

Prin. Your reason? [retire

Boyet. Why, all his behaviours did make their To the court of his eye, peeping thorough desire:

His heart, like an agate, with your print impressed, Prou'd with his form, in his eye pride expressed:
His tongue, all impatient to speak and not see, Did stumble with haste in his eye-sight to be; All senses to that sense did make their repair, To feel only looking on fairest of fair:
Methought all his senses were locked in his eye, As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who, tend'ring their own worth, from where they were glass'd,
Did point you to buy them, along as you pass'd.
His face's own margin did quote such amazes,
That all eyes saw his eyes enchanted with gazes:
I'll give you Aquitain, and all that is his,
An you give him for my sake but one loving kiss.

Prin. Come, to our pavilion: Boyet is dispos'd—
Boyet. But to speak that in words, which his eye hath disclos'd:
I only have made a mouth of his eye, By adding a tongue which I know will not lie.

Ros. Thou art an old love-monger, and speak'st skilfully.

Mar. He is Cupid's grandfather, and learns news of him.

Ros. Then was Venus like her mother; for her father is but grim Boyet. Do you hear, my mad wenches?

Mar. No.

Boyet. What then; do you see?

Ros. Ay, our way to be gone.

Boyet. You are too hard for me.

[Exeunt.}

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Warble, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.

Moth. Conceivest—— [Singing.

Arm. Sweet air!—Go, tenderness of years! take this key, give enlargement to the swain, bring him festinately hither; I must employ him in a letter to my love.

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a French brawl?

Arm. How mean'st thou? brawling in French?

Moth. No, my complete master: but to jog off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eye-lids; sigh a note, and sing a note; sometime through the throat, as if you swallowed love with singing love; sometime through the nose, as if you snuffed up love by smelling love; with your hat penthouse-like, o'er the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin belly-doublet, like a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting; and keep not too long in one tune, but a snip and away. These are complements, these are humours; these betray nice wench's—that would be betrayed without these; and make them men of note, (do you note, men?) that most are affected to these.

Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?

Moth. By my penny of observation.

Arm. But O—but O—
Moth. —the hobby-horse is forgot.
Moth. You are too swift, sir, to say so:
Is that lead slow which is fired from a gun?
Arm. Sweet smoke of rhetoric! He reproves me a cannon; and the bullet, that's he—:
I shoot thee at the swain.
Moth. Thump then, and I flee. [Exit.
Arm. A most acute juvenile; voluble and free of grace!
By thy favour, sweet welkin, I must sigh in thy face;
Most rude melancholy, valour gives thee place.
My herald is return'd.
Re-enter Moth and Costard.
Moth. A wonder, master; here's a Costard broken in a shin.
Arm. Some enigma, some riddle; come,—thy l'envoy;—begin.
Cost. No enigma, no riddle, no l'envoy—no salve in the mail, sir: O, sir, plantain, a plain plantain;
no l'envoy, no l'envoy, no salve, sir, but a plantain!
Arm. By virtue, thou enforcement laughter; thy silly thought, my spleen; the heaving of my lungs provokes me to ridiculous smiling: O, pardon me, my stars! Doth the inconsiderate take salve for l'envoy, and the word, l'envoy, for a salve?
Moth. Do the wise think them other? is not l'envoy a salve?
Arm. No page: it is an epilogue or discourse, to make plain
Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been sain.
I will exemplify it;
The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.
There's the moral: Now the l'envoy.
Moth. I will add the l'envoy: say the moral again.
Arm. The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three:
Moth. Until the goose came out of door,
And stay'd the odds by adding four.
Now will I begin your moral, and do you follow with my l'envoy.
The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three:
Arm. Until the goose came out of door,
Staying the odds by adding four.
Moth. A good l'envoy, ending in the goose;
Would you desire more?
Cost. The boy hath sold him a bargain, a goose, that's flat;—
Sir, your pennyworth is good, an your goose befat.—
To sell a bargain well, is as cunning as fast and loose:
Let me see a fat l'envoy; say, that's a fat goose.
Arm. Come hither, come hither: How did this argument begin?
Moth. By saying that a Costard was broken in a
Then call'd you for the l'envoy. [Shin.
Cost. True, and I for a plantain: Thus came your argument in;
Then the boy's fat l'envoy, the goose that you bought;
And he ended the market.
Arm. But tell me; how was there a Costard broken in a shin?
Moth. I will tell you sensibly.
Cost. Thou hast no feeling of it, Moth; I will speak that l'envoy:
I, Costard, running out, that was safely within Fell over the threshold, and broke my shin.
Arm. We will talk no more of this matter.
Cost. Till there be more matter in the shin.
Arm. Sirrah Costard, I will enfranchise thee.
Cost. O, marry me to one Frances;—I smell some l'envoy, some goose, in this.
Arm. By my sweet soul, I mean, setting thee at liberty, enfram'ding thy person; thou wert im-muired, restrained, captivated, bound.
Cost. True, true; and now you will be my pur-
Agation, and let me loose.
Arm. I give thee thy liberty, set thee from durance; and, in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this: Bear this significant to the country maid Jaquenetta: there is remuneration; [Giving him money] for the best ward of mine honour, is, rewarding my dependents. Moth, follow. [Exit.
Moth. Like the sequel, I.—Signior Costard, adieu.
Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my incoy
Jew! [Exit Moth.
Now will I look to his remuneration. Remuneration! O, that's the Latin word for three farthings: three farthings—remuneration—What's the price of this inkle? a penny.—No, I'll give you a remuneration: why, it carries it.—Remuneration!—
why, it is a fairer name than French crown. I will never buy and sell out of this word.
Enter Biron.
Biron. O, my good knife Costard! exceedingly well met.
Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?
Biron. What is a remuneration?
Cost. Marry, sir, half-penny farthing.
Biron. O, why then, three-farthings-worth of silk.
Cost. I thank your worship: God be with you!
Biron. O, stay, slave; I must employ thee;
As thou wilt win my favour, good my knife,
Do one thing for me that I shall entreat.
Cost. When would you have it done, sir?
Biron. O, this afternoon.
Cost. Well, I will do it, sir: Fare you well.
Biron. O, thou knowest not what it is.
Cost. I shall know, sir, when I have done it.
Biron. Why, villain, thou must know first.
Cost. I will come to your worship to-morrow morning.
Biron. It must be done this afternoon. Hark, slave, it is but this;—
The princess comes to hunt here in the park,
And in her train there is a gentle lady;
When tongues speak sweetly, then they name her name,
And Rosaline they call her: ask for her;
And to her white hand see thou do commend
This seal'd-up counsel. There's thy guerdon; go.
Cost. Guerdon,—O sweet guerdon! better than remuneration; eleven-pence farthing better; Most sweet guerdon!—I will do it, sir, in print.—
Guerdon—remuneration. [Exit.
Biron. O!—and I, forsooth, in love! I, that have been love's whip;
A very beadle to a humourous sigh
A critic; nay, a night-watch constable;
A domineering pedant o'er the boy,
Than whom no mortal so magnificent!
This wimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy;
This senior-junior, giant-dwarf, Dan Cupid:
Regent of love-rhymes, lord of folded arms.

SCENE I. LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST...
The anointed sovereign of sighs and groans,
Lieu of all loiterers and malcontents,
Dread prince of placets, king of codpieces,
Sole emperor, and great general
Of trotting paritors, O my little heart!—
And I to be a corporal of his field,
And wear his colours like a tumbler's hoop!
What? I! I love! I sue! I seek a wife!
A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing; ever out of frame;
And never going aright, being a watch,
But being watch'd that it may still go right?
Nay, to be perjur'd, which is worst of all;

And, among three, to love the worst of all;
A whitely wanton with a velvet brow
With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes;
Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed,
Though Argus were her eunuch and her guard:
And I to sigh for her! to watch for her!
To pray for her! Go to; it is a plague
That Cupid will impose for my neglect
Of his almighty dreadful little might.
Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan;
Some men must love my lady, and some Joan. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same.

Enter the Princess, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, Attendants, and a Forester.

Prin. Was that the king, that spurr'd his horse so hard
Against the steep uprising of the hill?

Boyet. I know not; but, I think, it was not he.

Prin. Whoe'er he was, he show'd a mounting mind.

Well, lords, to-day we shall have our despatch;
On Saturday we will return to France.—
Then, forester, my friend, where is the bush,
That we must stand and play the murderer in?

For. Here by, upon the edge of yonder coppice;
A stand, where you may make the fairest shoot.

Prin. I thank my beauty, I am fair that shoot,
And thereupon thou speak'st, the fairest shoot.

For. Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.

Prin. What, what? first praise me, and again say,
No?

O short-lev'd pride! Not fair? alack for woe!

For. Yes, madam, fair.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now;
Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.
Here, good my glass, take this for telling true;

[Giving him money.
Fair payment for foul words is more than due.

For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.

Prin. See, see, my beauty will be sav'd by merit.
O heresy in fair, fit for these days!
A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.—
But come, the bow:—Now mercy goes to kill,
And shooting well is then accounted ill.
Thus will I save my credit in the shoot:
Not wounding, pity would not let me do';
If wounding, then it was to show my skill,
That more for praise, than purpose, meant to kill.
And, out of question, so it is sometimes;
Glory grows guilty of detested crimes;
When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,
We bend to that the working of the heart:
As I, for praise alone, now seek to spill
The poor deer's blood, that my heart means no ill.

Boyet. Do not curst wives hold that self-sovereign?

Only for praise' sake, when they strive to be Lords o'er their lords?

Prin. Only for praise: and praise we may afford
To any lady that subdues a lord.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Scene II.

Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar
Gainst thee, thou lamb, that standest as his prey;
Submitive fall his princely feet before,
And he from forage will incline to play:
But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then?
Food for his rage, repasture for his den.

Prin. What plume of feathers is he, that indicted this letter?
What vane? what weather-cock? did you ever hear better?

Boyet. I am much deceived, but I remember the style.

Prin. Else your memory is bad, going o'er it erewhile.

Boyet. This Armado is a Spaniard, that keeps here in court;
A phantasm, a Monarch, and one that makes Sport
To the prince and his book-mates.

Prin. Thou, fellow, a word: Who gave thee this letter?

Cost. I told you, my lord.

Prin. To whom should'st thou give it?

Cost. From my lord to my lady.

Prin. From which lord, to which lady?

Cost. From my lord Biron, a good master of mine;
to a lady of France, that he call'd Rosaline.

Prin. Thou hast mistaken his letter. Come, lords away.

Here, sweet, put up this; 'twill be thine another day.

[Exeunt Princess and Train.

Boyet. Who is the shooter? who is the shooter?

Ros. Shall I teach you to know?

Boyet. Ay, my continent of beauty.

Ros. Why, she that bears the bow.

Finely put off! Boyet. My lady goes to kill horses; but, if thou marry,
Hang me by the neck, if horns that year miscarry.

Finely put on!

Ros. Well then, I am the shooter.

Boyet. And who is your deer?

Ros. If we choose by the horns, yourself: come Finely put on, indeed!—[near.

Mar. You still wrangle with, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.

Boyet. But she herself is hit lower: Have I hit her now?

Ros. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a man when king Pepin of France was a little boy,
as touching the hit it?

Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when Guinever of Britain was a little wench, as touching the hit it.

Ros. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it, [Singing.
Thou canst not hit it, my good man.

Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot,
An I cannot, another can.

[Exeunt Ros. and Kath.

Cost. By my troth, most pleasant! how both did fit it.

Mar. A mark marvellous well shot; for they both did hit it.

Boyet. A mark! O, mark but that mark; A mark, says my lady!

Let the mark have a prick in't, to mete at, if it may be.

Mar. Wide o' the bow-hand! I'faith your hand is out.

Cost. Indeed, 'a must shoot nearer, or he'll ne'er hit the clout.

Boyet. An if my hand be out, then, belike your hand is in.

Cost. Then will she get the upshot by cleaving the pin.

Mar. Come, come, you talk greasily, your lips grow foul.

Cost. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir; challenge her to bowl.

Boyet. I fear too much rubbing; Good night my goodowl.

[Exeunt Bover and Maria.

Cost. By my soul, a swain! a most simple clown!
Lord, lord! how the ladies and I have put him down!
O' my troth, most sweet jests! most incony vulgar wit!

When it comes so smoothly off, so obscully, as it were,
so fit.

Aramath o' the one side—O, a most dainty man!
To see him walk before a lady, and to hear her fan!
To see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly 'a will swear!—

And his page o' t'other side, that handful of wit!
Ah, heavens, it is a most pathetical nit!
Sola, sola!—[Shouting within.

[Exeunt Costard, running.

Scene II.—The same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Nath. Very reverent sport, truly; and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, in sanguis,—blood; ripe as a pomewater, who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of caelo,—the sky, the welkin, the heaven; and anon falleth like a crab, on the face of terra,—the earth, the land, the earth.

Nath. Truly, master Holofernes, the epitaphs are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least: But, sir, I assure ye, it was a buck of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, hau'd credo.

Dull. 'Twas not a hau'd credo; 'twas a pricket.

Hol. Most barbarous intention! yet a kind of insinuation, as it were, in via, in way, of explication; facere, as it were, replication, or, rather, ostendarum, to show, as it were, his inclination,—after his undressed, unpolished, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or rather unlettered, or, ratherest, unconformed fashion,—to insert again my hau'd credo for a deer.

Dull. I said, the deer was not a hau'd credo; 'twas a pricket.

Hol. Twice sod simplicity, his coactus!—O thou monster ignorance, how deformed dost thou look!

Nath. Sir, he hath never fed of theainties that are bred in a book;
He hath not eat paper, as it were; he hath not drunk ink; his intellect is not replenished; he is only an animal, only sensible in the duller parts; and such barren plants are set before us, that we thankful should be.

[Which we of taste and feeling are] for those parts that do frustrate in us more than he.

For as it would ill become me to be vain, indiscreet, or a fool,
So, were there a patch set on learning, to see him in a school:
But, omne bene, say I; being of an old father's mind,

Many can brook the weather, that love not the wind.

Dull. You two are book-men: Can you tell by your wit,
What was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not five weeks old as yet?

Hol. Dictynna, good man Dull; Dictynna, good man Dull.

Dull. What is Dictynna?

Nath. A title to Phæbe, to Luna, to the moon.

Hol. The moon was a month old, when Adam was no more;
And raught not to five weeks, when he came to five-score.
The allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. 'Tis true indeed; the collusion holds in the exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. And I say the pollution holds in the exchange; for the moon is never but a month old:
and I say beside, that 'twas a pricket that the princess kill'd.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extemporal epitaph on the death of the deer? and, to humour the ignorant, I have call'd the deer the princess kill'd, a pricket.

Nath. Perge, good master Holyfoernes, perge;
so it shall please you to abrogate scrupulosity.

Hol. I will something affect the letter; for it argues facility.
The praiseful princess pierc'd and prick'd a pretty pleasing pricket;

Some say, a sore; but not a sore, till you made sore with shooting.
The dogs did yeel; put I to sore, then sorel jumps from thicket;

Or, pricket, sore, or else sorel; the people fall a hooting.

If sore be sore, then L to sore makes fifty sore; O sore L!

Of one sore I an hundred make, by adding but one more L.

Nath. A rare talent!

Dull. If a talent be a claw, look how he claws him with a talent.

Hol. This is a gift that I have, simple, simple;
a foolish extravagant spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions:
these are begot in the ventricle of memory, nourished in the womb of pia mater; and deliver'd upon the mellowing of occasion: But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankful for it.

Nath. Sir, I praise the Lord for you; and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutor'd by you, and their daughters profit very greatly under you: you are a good member of the commonwealth.

Hol. Mercredi, if their sons be ingenuous, they shall want no instruction: if their daughters be capable, I will put it to them: But, vir sapit, qui pauca loquitur: a soul feminine saluteth us.

Enter JAQUENETTA AND COSTARD.

Jaq. God give you good morrow, master person.

Hol. Master person,—quasi pers-on. And if one should be pierced, which is the one?

Cost. Marry, master schoolmaster, he that is likest to a hogshead.

Hol. Of piercing a hogshead! a good lustre of conceit in a turf of earth; fire enough for a flint, pearl enough for a swine; 'twas pretty; it is well.

Jaq. Good master parson, be so good as read me this letter: it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armado: I beseech you, read it.

Hol. Faustile, precor, gelidà quando pecus omne sub umbrâ

Ruminat,—and so forth. Ah, good old Mantuan! I may speak of thee as the traveller doth of Venice:

—Vinegia, Vinegia,

Chi non te vede, ei non te prega.

Old Mantuan! Old Mantuan! Who understandest thee not, loves thee not?—Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa.—Under pardon, sir, what are the contents? or, rather, as Horace says in his—What! my soul, verses?

Nath. Ay, sir, and very learned.

Hol. What, then, may I hear a stanza, a stanza; a verse; a stanza; a verse; a stanza: Lege, domine.

Nath. If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?

Ah, never faith could hold, if not to beauty vowed!

Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll faithful prove;

Those thoughts to me were oaks, to thee like osiers bowed.

Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine

Nath. Perge; Where all those pleasures live, that art would comprehend;

If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;

Well learned is that tongue, that well can thee commend:

All ignorant that soul, that sees thee without wonder;

(Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire:)

Thy eye, love's lightning bears, thy voice his dreadful thunder.

Which, not to anger bent, is musick, and sweet fire.

Celestial, as thou art, oh pardon, love, this wrong,

That sings heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue!

Hol. You find not the apostrophes, and so miss the accent; let me supervise the canzonet. Here are only numbers ratified; but, for the elegancy, facility, and golden cadence of poesy, care! Ovidius Naso was the man: and why, indeed, Naso: but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy, the jerks of invention? Imilari is nothing: so doth the hound his master, the ape his keeper, the tired horse his rider. But damassella virgin, was this directed to you?

Jaq. Ay, sir, from one Monsieur Biron, one of the strange queen's lords.

Hol. I will overglance the superscript. To the snow-white hand of the most beauteous Lady Rosaline. I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person written unto:

Your Ladyship's in all desired employment.

Biron. Sir Nathaniel, this Biron is one of the votaries with the king; and here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which, accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried.—Trip and go, my sweet; deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king; it may concern much: Stay not thy compliment; I forgive thy duty; adieu.

Jaq. Good Costard, go with me.—Sir, God save your life!

Cost. Have with thee, my girl. [Exeunt Cost and Jaq.

Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear of God, very religiously; and, as a certain father saith—

Hol. Sir, tell not me of the father, I do fear co-LOURABLE colours. But, to return to the verses; Did they please you, sir, Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvelous well for the pen.

Hol. I do dine to-day at the father's of a certain pupil of mine: where if, before repast, it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my privilege I have with the parents of the foresaid child or pupil, undertake your ben venuto; where I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither savouring of poetry, wit, nor invention: I beseech your society.

Nath. And thank you too: for society, (saith the text,) is the happiness of life.

Hol. And the text most infallibly concludes it.—Sir, [to DULL.] I do invite you too; you shall not say me, nay: paucia verba. Away; the gentles are at their game, and we will to our recreation. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another part of the same.

Enter Biron, with a paper.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I am coursing myself; they have pitch'd a toil; I am toiling in a pitch; pitch that defiles; defile! a foul word. Well, Set thee down, sorrow! for so they say the fool said, and so say I, and I the fool. Well proved, wit! By the Lord, this love is as mad as Ajax; it kills sheep; it kills me, I a sheep; Well proved again on my side! I will not love: if I do, hang me; i' faith, I will not. O, but her eye,—by this light, but for her eye, I would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my throat. By heaven, I do love; and it hath taught me to rhyme, and to be melancholy; and here is part of my rhyme, and here my melancholy. Well, she hath one o' my sonnets already; the clown bore it, the fool sent it, and the lady hath it: sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest lady! By the world, I would not care a pin if the other three were in: Here comes one with a paper; God give him grace to groan. [Geta up into a tree.

Enter the King, with a paper.

King. Ah me!

Biron. [Aside.] Shot, by heaven!—Proceed, sweet Cupid; thou hast thump'd him with thy bird-boit under the left pap;—I' faith, secrets.—

King. [Reads.] So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not;

To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows:
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As dath thy face through tears of mine give light:
Thou shast in every tear that I do weep;

No drop but as a coach doth carry thee,
So ridest thou triumphing in my woe:
Do but behold the tears that swell in me
And they thy glory through my grief will show:
But do not love thyself; then thou wilt keep
My tears for glasses, and still make me weep.
O queen of queens, how far dost thou excel!
No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell,—
How shall she know my griefs? I'll drop the paper;
Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here? [Steps aside Enter Longaville, with a paper.

What, Longaville; and reading! listen, ear.

Biron. Now, in thy likeness, one more fool, ap

Long. Ah me! I am forsworn.

Biron. Why, he comes in like a perjurer, wearing papers. [Aside.

King. In love, I hope; Sweet fellowship in shane!

Biron. One drunkard loves another of the name.

Long. Am I the first that have been perjur'd so? Biron. [Aside.] I could put thee in comfort; not by two, that I know:

Thou mak'st the triunviri, the corner cap of society.

The shape of Love's Tyburn that hangs up simplicity.

Long. I fear, these stubborn lines lack power to O sweet Maria, empress of my love! [move

These numbers will I tear and write in prose.

Biron. [Aside.] O, rhymes are guards on wanton Cupid's hose;

Disfigure not his slop.

Long. This same shall go—

Did not the heavenly rhetorice of thine eye
('Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,) Persuade my heart to this false perjury?

Votes for thee broke, deserve no punishment.

A woman I foreswear: but, I will prove,

Thou being a goddess, I foreswore not thee:

My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;

Thy grace being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me.

Votes are but breath, and breath a vapour is:

Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost
Exhalest this vapour vowe; in thee it is:

[Shine, If broken then, it is no fault of mine:
If by me broke, what foul is not so wise,
To lose an oath to win a paradise?

Biron. [Aside.] This is the liver vein, which makes flesh a deity:

A green goose, a goddess: pure, pure idolatry.

God amend us, God amend! we are much out o' the way.

Enter Dommain, with a paper.

Long. By whom shall I send this?—Company! stay. [Stepping aside.

Biron. [Aside.] All hid, all hid, an old infant Like a demi-god here sit I in the sky, [play And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.

More sucks to the mill! O heavens, I have my wish; Domain transform'd: four wood-cocks in a dish! [Dum. O most divine Kate! Biron. O most prophane coaxemb! [Aside.

Dum. By heaven, the wonder of a mortal eye! Biron. By earth, she is but corporal: there you lie.

M [Aside
Dum. Her amber hairs for foul have amber-coted.
Biron. An amber-colour'd raven was well noted.
Dum. As upright as the cedar.
Biron. Stoop, I say; [Aside. Her shoulder is with child.
Dum. As fair as day.
Biron. Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine.
Dum. O that I had my wish! [Aside. Long. And I had mine! [Aside. Biron. Amen, so I had mine: Is not that a good word? [Aside. Dum. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood, and will remember'd be.
Biron. A fever in your blood? why, then incision Would let her out in saucers; Sweet misprision! [Aside. Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.
Biron. Once more I'll mark how love can vary wit.
Dum. On a day, (ack the day!) Love, whose mouth is ever May, Spied a blossom, passing fair, Playing in the wonton air: Through the velvet leaves the wind, All unseen, 'gan passage find; That the lover, sick to death, Wish'd himself the heaven's breath. Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow; Air, would I might triumph so! But slack, my hand is sworn, Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn: Yow, ack'd I for youth unmeet; Youth so apt to pluck a sweet. Do not call it sin in me, That I am forsworn for thee: Thou for whom even Jove would swear, Juno but an Ethiop were; And deny himself for Jove, Turning mortal for thy love.—
This will I send; and something else more plain, That shall express my true love's fasting pain.
O, would the King, Biron, and Longaville, Were lovers too! Ill, to example ill, Would from my forehead wipe a perjur'd note; For none offend, where all alike do offend.
Long. Dumain, [advancing.] thy love is far from charity, That in love's grief desir'st society: You may look pale, but I should blush, I know, To be o'heard, and taken napping so.
King. Come, sir, [advancing.] you blush; as his, your case is such; You chide at him, offending twice as much: You do not love Maria; Longaville Did never sonnet for her sake compile; Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart His loving bosom, to keep down his heart. I have been closely shrouded in this bush, And mark'd you both, and for you both did blush. I heard your guilty rhymes, observ'd your fashion; Saw sighs reek from you, noted well your passion: Ah me! says one; O Love! the other cries; One, her hairs were gold, crystal the other's eyes;
You would for paradise break faith and truth;
[To Long. And Jove, for your love, would infringe an oath.
[To Dumain. What will Biron say, when that he shall hear A faith infringing, which such a zeal did swear? How will he scorn! how will he spend his wit! How will he triumph, leap, and laugh at it! For all the wealth that ever I did see, I would not have him know so much by me.
Biron. Now step I forth to whip hypocrisy.— Ah, good my liege, I pray thee pardon me: [Descends from the tree. Good heart, what grace hast thou, thus to reproax These worms for loving, that art most in love? Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears, There is no certain princess that appears: You'll not be perjured, 'tis a hateful thing; Tush, none but minstrels like of sonneting. But are you not ashamed? nay, are you not, All three of you, to be thus much o'ershot? You found his mote; the king your mote did see; But I a bean do find in each of three. O, what a scene of foolery I have seen, Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow, and of teen! O me, with what strict patience have I sat, To see a king transformed to a gait! To see great Hercules whipping a gig; And profound Solomon to tune a jig, And Nestor play at push-pin with the boys, And crift Timon laugh at idle toys! Where lies thy grief, O tell me, good Dumain? And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain? And where my liege's? all about the breast: A caudle, ho!
King. Too bitter is thy jest. Are we betray'd thus to thy over-view?
Biron. Not by me, but I betray'd to you I, that am honest; I, that hold it sin To break the vow I am engaged in; I am betray'd, by keeping company With mean-like men, of strange inconstancy. When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme? Or groan for Joan? or spend a minute's time, In pruning me? When shall you hear that I Will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye, A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist, A leg, a limb?—
King. Soft; Whither away so fast? A true man, or a thief, that gallops so?
Biron. I post from love; good lover, let me go.
Enter Jaquenetta and Costard.
Jaq. God bless the king!
King. What present hast thou there?
Cost. Some certain treason.
King. What makes treason here?
Cost. Nay, it makes nothing, sir.
King. If it mar nothing neither, The treason, and you, go in peace away together. Jaq. I beseech your grace, let this letter be read; Our parson misdoubts it; 'twas treason he said. King. Biron, read it over. [Gives him the letter. Where hadst thou it?
Jaq. Of Costard.
King. Where hadst thou it?
Cost. Of Dun Adramadio, Dun Adramadio.
King. How now! what is in you? why dost thou tear it?
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Biron. A toy, my liege, a toy; your grace needs not fear it.

Long. It did move him to passion, and therefore let's hear it.

Dum. It is Biron's writing, and here is his name. [Picks up the pieces.

Biron. Ah, you whoreson loggerhead, [to Costard.] you were born to do me shame.

King. What?

Biron. That you three fools lack'd me fool to make up the mess;

He, he, and you, my liege, and I,

Are pick-purses in love, and we deserve to die.

O, dismiss this audience, and I shall tell you more.

Dum. Now the number is even.

Biron. True, true; we are four:—

Will these turtles be gone?

King. Hence, sirs; away.

Cost. Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.

[Execute Cost and Jaq.

Biron. Sweet lords, sweet lovers, O let us embrace!

As true we are, as flesh and blood can be;

The sea will ebb and flow, heaven show his face;

Young blood will not obey an old decree:

We cannot guess the cause why we are born;

Therefore, of all hands must we be forsworn.

King. What, did these rent lines show some love of thine?

Biron. Did they, quoth you? Who sees the heavenly Rosaline,

That, like a rude and savage man of Inde,

At the first opening of the gorgeous east,

Bows not his vassal head; and, stricken blind,

Kisses the base ground with obedient breast?

What peremptory eagle-sighted eye

Dares look upon the heaven of her brow,

That is not blinded by her majesty?

King. What zeal, what fury hath inspir'd thee

My love, her mistress, is a gracious moon; [now?

She, an attending star, scarce seen a light.

Biron. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biron:

O, but for my love, day would turn to night!

Of all complexion the cull'd sovereignty

Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek;

Where several worthies make one dignity;

Where nothing wants, that want itself doth seek.

Lend me the flourish of all gentle tongues,—

Fye, painted rhetoric! O, she needs it not:

To things of sale a seller's praise belongs;

She passes praise; then praise too short doth blot.

A with'er'd hermit, five-score winters worn,

Might shake off fifty, looking in her eye:

Beauty doth varnish age, as if new-born,

And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy.

O, 'tis the sun, that maketh all things shine!

King. By heaven, thy love is black as ebony.

Biron. Is ebony like her? O wood divine!

A wife of such wood were felicity.

O, who can give an oath? where is a book?

That I may swear, beauty doth beauty lack,

If that she learn not of her eye to look:

No face is fair, that is not full so black.

King. O paradox! Black is the badge of hell,

The hue of dungeons, and the scowl of night;

And beauty's crest becomes the heavens well.

Biron. Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of light.

O, if in black my lady's brows be deckt,

It mourns, that painting, and usurping hair,

Should ravish doters with a false aspect;

And therefore is she born to make black fair.

Her favour turns the fashion of the days;

For native blood is counted painting now;

And therefore red, that would avoid displeasure,

Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.

Dum. To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black.

Long. And, since her time, are colliers counted bright.

King. And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.

Dum. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light.

Biron. Your mistresses dare never come in rain,

For fear their colours should be wash'd away.

King. 'Twere good yours did; for, sir, to tell you plain,

I'll find a fairer face not wash'd to-day.

Biron. I'll prove her fair, or talk till doomsday here.

King. No devil will fright thee then so much as she.

Dum. I never knew man hold vile stuff so dear.

Long. Look, here's thy love: my foot and her face see [Bowing his shoe.

Biron. O, if the streets were paved with thine eyes,

Her feet were much too dainty for such tread!

Dum. O vile! then as she goes, what upward lies

The street should see as she walk'd over head.

King. But what of this? Are we not all in love?

Biron. O, nothing so sure; and thereby all forsworn.

King. Then leave this chat; and, good Biron, now prove

Our loving lawful, and our faith not torn.

Dum. Ay, marry, there;—some flattery for this evil.

Long. O, some authority how to proceed;

Some tricks, some quillets, how to cheat the devil.

Dum. Some salve for perjury.

Biron. 'Tis more than need!—

Have at you then, affection's men at arms:

Consider, what you first did swear unto;—

To fast,—to study,—and to see no woman:—

Fiat treason 'gainst the kingly state of youth:

Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young:

And abstinence engenders maladies.

And where that you have vow'd to study, lords,

In that each of you hath forsworn his book:

Can you still dream, and pore, and thereon look?

For when would you, my lord, or you, or you,

Have found the ground of study's excellence,

Without the beauty of a woman's face?

From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:

They are the ground, the books, the academies,

From whence doth spring the true Prometheus fire.

Why, universal plodding prisons?

The nimble spirits in the arteries

As motion, and long during action, tires

The sinewy vigour of the traveller.

Now, for not looking on a woman's face,

You have in that forsworn the use of eyes,

And study too, the causer of your vow:

For where is any author in the world,

Teaches such beauty as a woman's eye?

Learning is but an adjunct to ourself,
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same.

Enter Iolofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Hol. Satis quod sufficit.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir: your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious: pleasant without scurrility, witty without affectation, audacious without impudence, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the king's, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adrian de Armado.

Hol. Novi hominem tangam te: His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gait majestical, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thraesonic. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as it were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epithet. [Takes out his table-book.]

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such fanatical fantasms, such insociable and point-devise companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak, doute, fine, when he should say, doubt; det, when he should pronounce debt; d, e, b, t; not d, e, t: he clepeth a calf, cauf; half, hauf; neighbor, vocatur, nebor; neigh, abbreviated, ne:

That show, contain, and nourish all the world; Else, none at all in aught proves excellent:
Then fools you were these women to forswear;
Or, keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools.
For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love;
Or for love's sake, a word that loves all men;
Or for men's sake, the authors of these women;
Or women's sake, by whom we men are men;
Let us once lose our oaths, to find ourselves,
Or else we lose ourselves to keep our oaths:
It is religion to be thus forsworn:
For charity itself fulfils the law;
And who can sever love from charity?

King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field!

Biron. Advance your standards, and, upon them
Pell-mell, down with them! but be first advis'd,
In conflict that you get the sun of them.

Long. Now to plain-dealing; lay these glozies by;
Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France?

King. And win them too: therefore let us devise
Some entertainment for them in their tents.

Biron. First, from the park let us conduct Them thither;
Then, homeward, every man attach the hand
Of his fair mistress: in the afternoon
We will with some strange pastime solace them,
Such as the shortness of the time can shape;
For revels, dances, masks, and merry hours,
Fore-run fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.

King. Away, away! no time shall be omitted,
That will be time, and may by us be fitted.

Biron. Alloses! Alloses!—Sow'd cockle reap'd
no corn;
And justice always whirs in equal measure:
Light wenchers may prove plagues to men forsworn;
If so, our copper buys no better treasure.

[Exeunt.]
Hol. Ba, pueritia, with a horn added.

Moth. Ba, most silly sheep, with a horn:—You hear his learning.

Hol. O, quins, thou consonant?

Moth. The third of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, if I.

Hol. I will repeat them, a, e, i.—

Moth. The sheep; the other two concludes it; o, u.

Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterranean, a sweet touch, a quick venew of wit: snap, snap, quick, and home; it rejoiceth my intellect: true wit.

Moth. Offer'd by a child to an old man; which is what?—

Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?

Moth. Horns.

Hol. Thou disputest like an infant: go, whip thy gig.

Moth. Lend me your horn to make one, and I will whip about your infamy circum circa; a gig of a cuckold's horn!

Cost. An I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread: hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou half, thy purse of wit, thou pigeon-egg of discretion, O, an the heavens were so pleased, that thou wert but my bastard! what a joyful father wouldst thou make me! Go to; thou hast it ad duaghilt, at the fingers' ends, as they say.

Hol. O, I smell false Latin; duaghilt for unguem.

Arm. Arts-man, preambula; we will be singled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the charge-house on the top of the mountain?

Hol. Or, mons, the hill.

Arm. At your sweet pleasure, for the mountain.

Hol. I do, sans question.

Arm. Sir, it is the king's most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the princess at her pavilion, in the posteriors of this day; which the rude multitude call, the afternoon.

Hol. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable for the afternoon: the word is well cul'd, chose; sweet and apt, I do assure you, sir, I do assure.

Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman; and my familiar, I do assure you, very good friend:—For what is inward between us, let it pass:—I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy;—I beseech thee, apparel thy head;—and among other importunate and most serious designs,—and of great import indeed, too;—but let that pass;—for I must tell thee, it will please his grace (by the world) sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder; and with his royal finger, thus, dally with my excrement, with my mustachio: but, sweet heart, let that pass. By the world, I recount no fable; some certain special honours it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world: but let that pass.—The very all of all is,—but, sweet heart, I do implore secrecy,—that the king would have me present the princess, sweet chuck, with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antick, or fire-work. Now, understanding that the curate and your sweet self, are good at such eruptions, and sudden breaking out of mirth, as it were, I have acquainted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.

Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the nine worthies.—Sir Nathaniel, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, he be rendered by our assistance,—the king's command, and this most gallant, illustrate, and learned gentleman,—before the princess; I say, none so fit as to present the nine worthies.

Nath. Where will you find men worthy enough to present them.

Hol. Joshua, yourself; myself, or this gallant gentleman, Judas Maccabæus; this swain, because of his great limb or joint, shall pass Pompey the great; the page, Hercules.

Arm. Pardon, sir, error: he is not quantity enough for that worthy's thumb: he is not so big as the end of his club.

Hol. Shall I have audience? he shall present Hercules in minority: his enter and exit shall be strangling a snake; and I will have an apology for that purpose.

Moth. An excellent device! so, if any of the audience hiss, you may cry: well done, Hercules! now thou crushest the snake! that is the way to make an offence gracious; though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. What the rest of the worthies?—

Hol. I will play three myself.

Moth. Thrice-worthy gentleman! Arm. Shall I tell you a thing?

Hol. We attend.

Arm. We will have, if this fadge not, an antick. I beseech you, follow.

Hol. Via, good man Dull! thou hast spoken no word all this while.

Dull. Nor understood none neither, sir.

Hol. Alons! we will employ thee.

Dull. I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will play on the taber to the worthies, and let them dance the hay.

Hol. Most dull, honest Dull, to our sport, away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the same. Before the Princess's Pavilion.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria.

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart, if fairings come thus plentifully in; A lady wall'd about with diamonds! Look you, what I have from the loving king.

Ros. Madam, came nothing else along with that?

Prin. Nothing, but this? yes, as much love in rhyme,
As would be cram'd up in a sheet of paper,
Writ on both sides the leaf, margent and all;
That he was fain to seal on Cupid's name.

Ros. That was the way to make his god-head wax;
For he hath been five thousand years a boy.

Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.

Ros. You'll ne'er be friends with him; he kill'd your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy;
And so she died: had she been light, like you,
Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit,
She might have been a granadam ere she died:
And so may you; for a light heart lives long.

Ros. What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark. [out.

Ros. We need more light to find your meaning.
Kath. You'll mar the light by taking it in snuff; Therefore, I'll darkly end the argument.
Ros. Look, what you do, you do it still i' the dark.
Kath. So do not you; for you are a light wench.
Ros. Indeed, I weigh not you; and therefore light.
Kath. You weigh me not;—O, that's you care not for me.
Ros. Great reason; for, Past-cure is still past care.
Prin. Well bandied both; a set of wit well But Rosaline, you have a favour too: [play'd, Who sent it? and what is it?
Ros. I would, you knew! An if my face were but as fair as yours, My favour were as great; be witness this. Nay, I have verses too, I thank Birón: The numbers true; and, were the num'ring too, I were the fairest goddess on the ground: I am compar'd to twenty thousand fair. O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter!
Prin. Any thing like?
Ros. Much, in the letters; nothing in the praise.
Prin. Beauteous as ink; a good conclusion.
Ros. 'Ware pencils! How? let me not die your debtor, My rod dominical, my golden letter: O, that your face were not so full of O's!
Kath. A box of that jest! and beshrew all shrubs!
Prin. But what was sent to you from Fair-Duman?
Kath. Madam, this glove.
Prin. Did he not send you twain?
Kath. Yes, madam; and moreover, Some thousand verses of a faithful lover; A huge translation of hypocrisy, Vilely compil'd, profound simplicity.
Mar. This, and these pearls, to me sent Longa-
The letter is too long by half a mile. [vile;
Prin. I think no less: Dost thou not wish in heart, The chain were longer, and the letter short?
Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part.
Prin. We are wise girls, to mock our lovers so.
Ros. They are worse fools to purchase mocking That same Birón I'll torture ere I go. [so.
O, that I knew he were but in by the week! How I would make him fawn, and beg, and seek; And wait the season, and observe the times, And spend his prodigal wits in bootless rhymes; And shape his service wholly to my bhests; And make him proud to make me proud that jests! So portent-like would I o'ersway his state, That he should be my fool, and I his fate.
Prin. None are so surely caught, when they are catch'd,
As wit turn'd fool: folly, in wisdom hatch'd,
Hath wisdom's warrant, and the help of school;
And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.
Ros. The blood of youth burns not with such ex-
As gravity's revolt to wantonness. [cess,
Mar. Folly in fools bears not so strong a note, As foolish in the wise, when wit doth dote; Since all the power thereof it doth apply, To prove, by wit, worth in simplicity.

Enter Boyet.

Prin. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

Boyet. O, I am stabb'd with laughter! Where's her grace?

Prin. Thy news, Boyet?
Boyet. Prepare, madam, prepare!—
Arm, wenches, arm! encounters mounted are Against your peace; Love doth approach disguis'd,
Armed in arguments; you'll be surpris'd:
Muster your wits; stand in your own defence; Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence.
Prin. Saint Dennis to Saint Cupid! What are they?
That charge their breath against us? say, scot, say, Boyet. Under the cool shade of a sycamore, I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour: When, lo! to interrupt my purpos'd rest, Toward that shade I might behold address The king and his companions: warily I stole into a neighbour thicket by, And overheard what you shall overhear; That, by and by, disguis'd they will be here. Their herald is a pretty knavish page, That well by heart hath cond't his embassage: Action, and accent, did they teach him there; Thus must thou speak, and thus thy body bear: And ever and anon they made a doubt, Presence majestical would put him out;
For, quoth the king, an angel shalt thou see;
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously.
The boy reply'd, An angel is not evil;
I should have fear'd her, had she been a devil.
With that all laugh'd, and clapp'd him on the shoulder;
Making the bold wag by their praises holler. One rubb'd his elbow, thus; and fleer'd, and swore, A better speech was never spoke before: Another with his finger and his thumb,
Cry'd, Vita! we will do't, come what will come:
The third he caper'd and cried, All goes well;
The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell. With that, they all did tumble on the ground, With such a zealous laughter, so profound, That in this spleen ridiculous appears,
To check their folly, passion's solemn tears.
Prin. But what, but what, come they to visit us?
Boyet. They do, they do; and are apparel'd Like Muscovites, or Russians: as I guess, [thus, Their purpose is, to parle, to court, and dance;
And every one his love-feat will advance Unto his several mistress; which they'll know By favours several, which they did bestow.
Prin. And will they so? the gallants shall be task'd:—
For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd;
And not a man of them shall have the grace, Despite of suit, to see a lady's face,—
Hold, Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear;
And then the king will court thee for his dear;
Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give me thine;
So shall Birón take me for Rosaline,—
And change your favours too; so shall your loves
Woo contrary, deceiv'd by these removes.
Ros. Come on then; wear the favours most in sight.
Kath. But, in this changing, what is your intent?
Prin. The effect of my intent is, to cross theirs: They do it but in mocking merriment; And mock for mock is only my intent. Their several counsels they unbosom shall To loves mistook; and so be mock'd withal, Upon the next occasion that we meet, With visages display'd, to talk and greet.
Ros. But shall we dance, if they desire us to't?
LOVE'S LABOURS LOST.

SCENE II.

Prin. No; to the death we will not move a foot: Nor to their penn'd speech render we no grace: But while 'tis spoke, each turn away her face.

Boyet. Why, that contempt will kill the speaker's heart, And quite divorce his memory from his part.

Prin. Therefore I do it; and, I make no doubt, The rest will ne'er come in, if he be out. There's no such sport, as sport by sport o'erthrow; To make theirs ours, and ours none but our own: So shall we stay, mocking intended game; And they well mock'd, depart away with shame.

Boyet. The trumpet sounds; be mask'd, the maskers come. [The ladies mask.]

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Domain, in Russian habits and masked; Morin, Musicians, and Attendants.

Moth. All hail the richest beauties on the earth!
Boyet. Beauties no richer than rich taffata.
Moth. A holy parcel of the fairest dames! [The ladies turn their backs to him.]

That ever turn'd their— backs—to mortal views!

Biron. Their eyes, villain, e'er eyes.
Moth. That ever turn'd their eyes to mortal— [views!]

Boyet. True; out, indeed.
Moth. Out of your favours heavenly spirits Not to behold—[vouchsafe
Biron. Once to behold, rogue.
Moth. Once to behold with your sun-beamed eyes, —with your sun-beamed eyes—
Boyet. They will not answer to that epithet;
You were best call it, daughter-beamed eyes.
Moth. They do not mark me, and that brings me out.

Biron. Is this your perfectness? be gone, you rogue.

Ros. What would these strangers? know their minds, Boyet:
If they do speak our language, 'tis our will
That some plain man recount their purposes:
Know what they would.

Boyet. What would you with the princess?
Biron. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.
Ros. What would they, say they?
Boyet. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.
Ros. Why, that they have; and bid them so be gone.

Boyet. She says you have it, and you may be gone.

King. Say to her, we have measur'd many miles,
To tread a measure with her on this grass.

Boyet. They say that they have measur'd many a mile,
To tread a measure with you on this grass.
Ros. It is not so: ask them, how many inches
Is one in one mile: if they have measur'd many, The measure then of one is easily told.

Boyet. If, to come hither you have measur'd miles, And many miles; the princess bids you tell, How many inches do fill up one mile.

Biron. Tell her, we measure them by weary steps.
Boyet. She hears herself.
Ros. How many weary steps,
Of many weary miles you have o'ergone,
Are number'd in the travel of one mile?
Biron. We number nothing that we spend for:
Our duty is so rich, so infinite, [you; That we may do it still without accompl.

Vouchsafe to show the sunshine of your face.

That we, like savages, may worship it.

Ros. My face is but a moon, and clouded too.

King. Blessed are clouds, to do as such clouds do! Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars, to shine

(Those clouds remov'd,) upon our wat'ry eyene.

Ros. O vain petitioner! beg a greater matter; Thou now request'st but moonshine in the water.

King. Then, in our measure do but vouchsafe one change: Thou bid'st me beg; this begging is not strange.

Ros. Play music, then; nay, you must do it soon. [Music plays.

Not yet;—no dance;—thus change I like the moon.

King. Will you not dance? How come you thus estrang'd?

Ros. You took the moon at full; but now she's chang'd.

King. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man. The music plays; vouchsafe some motion to it.

Ros. Our ears vouchsafe it.

King. But your legs should do it.

Ros. Since you are strangers, and come here by chance,
We'll not be nice; take hands;—we will not dance.

King. Why take we hands then?

Ros. Only to part friends;—Court'sy, sweet hearts; and so the measure ends.

King. More measure of this measure; be not nice.

Ros. We can afford no more at such a price.

King. Prize you yourselves; What buys your company?

Ros. Your absence only.

King. That can never be.

Ros. Then cannot we be bought: and so adieu; Twice to your visor, and half once to you!

King. If you deny to dance, let's hold more chat.

Ros. In private then.

King. I am best pleas'd with that.

[They converse apart.]

Biron. White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

Prin. Honey, and milky, and sugar; there is three.

Biron. Nay then, two treasury, (if you grow so nice,) Methergin, wort, and malmsey;—Well, run, dice! There's half a dozen sweets.

Prin. Seventh sweet, adieu! Since you can cog, I'll play no more with you.

Biron. One word in secret.

Prin. Let it not be sweet.
Biron. Thou griev'st my gall.

Prin. Gall? bitter.
Biron. Therefore meet.

[They converse apart.]

Dum. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a name?
Mar. Name it. [word?

Dum. Fair lady,—
Mar. Say you so? Fair lord,—
Take that for your fair lady.

Dum. Please it you, As much in private, and I'll bid adieu.

[They converse apart.]

Kath. What, was your visor made without a tongue?

Long. I know the reason, lady, why you ask.

Kath. O, for your reason! quickly, sir; I long.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

ACT V.

Long. You have a double tongue within your mask;
And would afford my speechless visor half.
Kath. Veal, quoth the Dutchman; — Is not veal
Long. A calf, fair lady? [a calf?
Kath. No, a fair lord calf.
Long. Let's part the word.
Kath. No, I'll not be your half: Take all, and weave it; it may prove an ox.
Long. Look, how you butt yourself in these sharp mocks!
Will you give horns, chaste lady? do not so.
Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.
Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.
Kath. Bleat softly then, the butcher hears you cry.
[They converse apart.

Boyet. The tongues of mocking wenches are as
As that razor's edge invisible; [keen
Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen;
Above the sense of sense; so sensible
See meth their conference; their conceits have wings,
Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter Things.
Ros. Not one word more, my maids; break off;
Biron. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure scoff:
King. Farewell, mad wenches; you have simple Wits.
[Exit King. Lords, Motto, Music, and Attendants.

Prin. Twenty adiems, my frozen Muscovites. —
Are these the breed of wits so wondered at?
Boyet. Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths
Puffed out.
Ros. Well-liking wits they have: gross, gross;
Prin. O poverty in wit, kingly-poor flout!
Will they not, think you, hang themselves to night?
Or ever, but in visors, show their faces?
This pert Biron was out of countenance quite.
Ros. O! they were all in lamentable cases!
The king was weeping-ripe for a good word.
Prin. Biron did swear himself out of all suit.
Mar. Dumnai was at my service, and his sword:
No point, quoth I; my servant straight was mute.
Kath. Lord Longaville said, I came o'er his heart;
And trow you, what he called me?
Prin. Qualm, perhaps.
Kath. Yes, in good faith.
Prin. Go, sickness as thou art!
Ros. Well, better wits have worn plain statute-caps.
But will you hear? the king is my love sworn.
Prin. And quick Biron hath pledged faith to me.
Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.
Mar. Dumnai is mine, as sure as bark on tree.
Boyet. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear:
Immediately they will again be here
In their own shapes; for it can never be,
They will digest this harsh indignity.
Prin. Will they return?
Boyet. They will, they will, God knows,
And leap for joy, though they are lame with blows;
Therefore, change favours; and, when they repair,
Blow like sweet roses in this summer air. [stood.
Prin. How blow? how blow? speak to be under-Boyet. Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in their bud:
Dismask'd, their damask sweet companion shown,
Are angels vailing clouds, or roses blown.
Prin. Avaunt, perplexity! What shall we do,
If they return in their own shapes to woo?
Ros. Good madam, if by me you'll be advis'd,
Let's mock them still, as well known, as disguised:
Let us complain to them what fools were here,
Disguis'd like Muscovites, in shapeless gear;
And wonder, what they were; and to what end
Their shallow shows, and prologue vilely penn'd,
And their rough carriage so ridiculous,
Should be presented at our tent to us.
Boyet. Ladies withdraw; the gallants are at hand.
Prin. Who on our tents, as roses run over land.
[Exit Princess, Res. Kath. and Maria.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumnai, in their proper habits.

King. Fair sir, God save you! Where is the princess?
Boyet. Gone to her tent; Please it your majesty Command me any service to her thither? [word.
King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one Boyet. I will; and so will she, I know, my lord.
[Exit.

Biron. This fellow pecks up wit, as pigeons peas;
And utters it again when God doth please:
He is wit's pedler; and retails his wares
At wakes, and wassels, meetings, markets, fairs;
And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know,
Have not the grace to grace it with such show.
This gallant pins the wench's on his sleeve;
Had he been Adam, he had tempted Eve:
He can carve too, and lisp: Why, this is he,
That kiss'd away his hand in courtesy;
This is the ape of form, monsieur the nice,
That, when he plays at tables, chides the dice
In honourable terms; nay, he can sing
A mean most meanly; and, in ushering,
Mend him who can: the ladies call him sweet;
The stairs, as he treads on them, kiss his feet:
This is the flower that smiles on every one,
To show his teeth as white as whale's bone:
And consciences, that will not die in debt,
Pay him the due of honey-tongued Boyet.

King. A bluster on his sweet tongue, with my
That put Armado's page out of his part! [heart,
Enter the Princess, ushered by Boyet; Rosaline, Maria,
Katharine, and Attendants.

Biron. See where it comes! — Behaviour, what wert thou,
Till this man show'd thee? and what art thou now?
King. All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day!
Prin. Fair, in all hall, is foul, as I conceive.
King. Construe my speeches better, if you may.
Prin. Then wish me better, I will give you leave.
King. We came to visit you; and purpose now
To lead you to our court; vouchsafe it then.
Prin. This field shall hold me; and so hold your Yow:
Nor God, nor I, delight in perjured men.
King. Rebuke me not for that which you provoke;
The virtue of your eye must break my oath.
Prin. You nick-name virtue: vice you should have spoke;
For virtue's office never breaks men's troth.
Now, by my maiden honour; yet as pure
As the unsullied lily, I protest,
A world of troubles thou shalt endure,
I would not yield to be your house's guest:
So much I hate a breaking-cause to be
Of heavenly oaths, vow'd with integrity.
King. O, you have liv'd in desolation here,
Unseen, unvisited, much to our shame.
Prin. Not so, my lord, it is not so, I swear;
We have had pastime here, and pleasant game:
A mess of Russians left us but of late.
Scene II.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

King. How now, madam? Russians?

Prin. Ay, in truth, my lord; Trim gallants, full of courtship, and of state.

Ros. Madam, speak true—It is not so my lord; My lady (to the manner of the days,) In courtesy, gives undeserving praise. We four, indeed, confronted here with four In Russian habit; here they staid an hour, And talk'd apace; and in that hour, my lord, They did not bless us with one happy word. I dare not call them fools; but this I think, When they are thirsty, fools would fain have drink.

Biron. This jest is dry to me.—Fair, gentle sweet, Your wit makes wise things foolish; when we greet With eyes best seeing heaven's fiery eye, By light we lose light: Your capacity Is of that nature, that to your huge store Wise things seem foolish, and rich things but poor.

Ros. This proves you wise and rich, for in my Biron. I am a fool, and full of poverty. [eye,—

Ros. But that you take what doth to you belong, It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue. Biron. O, I am yours, and all that I possess. Ros. All the fool mine?

Biron. I cannot give you less. Ros. Which of the visors it was, that you wore?

Biron. Where? when? what visor? why demand you this?

Ros. There, then, that visor; that superfluous case, That hid the worse, and show'd the better face. King. We are described: they'll mock us now downright.

Dum. Let us confess, and turn it to a jest.

Prin. Amaz'd, my lord? Why looks your highness sad?

Ros. Help, hold his brows! he'll swoon? Why look you pale?

Sea-sick. I think, coming from Muscovy. [jury. Biron. Thus pour the stars down plagues for per-

Can any face of brass hold long out?

Here stand I, lady; dart thy skill at me; Bruise me with scorn, confound me with a flout; Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance; Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit; And I will wish thee never more to dance, Nor never more in Russian habit wait. O! never will I trust to speeches penn'd, Nor to the motion of a school-boy's tongue; Nor never come in visor to my friend; Nor wear in rhyme, like a pedlar's song: Tassata phrases, silken terms precise, Three-pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation, Figures pedantical; these summer-flies Have blown me full of maggot ostentation: I do forswear them: and I here protest, By this white glove, (how white the hand, God knows!) Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd In russet yeas, and honest kersey noes: And, to begin, wench,—so God help me, la!— My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw.

Ros. Sans sans, I pray you.

Biron. Yet I have a trick

Of the old rage:—bear with me, I am sick; I'll leave it by degrees. Soft, let us see;—

Write, Lord have mercy on us, on those three; They are infected, in their hearts it lies; They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes: These lords are visited; you are not free, For the Lord's tokens on you do I see.

Prin. No, they are free, that gave these tokens to us.

Biron. Our states are forfeit, seek not to undo us.

Ros. It is not so; For how can this be true, That you stand forfeit, being those that sue?

Biron. Peace; for I will not have to do with you. Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend. Biron. Speak for yourselves, my wit is at an end. King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression Some fair excuse.

Prin. The fairest is confession. Were you not here, but even now, disguis'd?

King. Madam, I was.

Prin. And were you well advis'd?

King. I was, fair madam.

Prin. When you then were here, What did you whisper in your lady's ear?

King. That more than all the world I did respect her.

Prin. When she shall challenge this, you will

King. Upon mine honour, no. [reject her. Prin. Peace, peace, forbear;

Your oath once broke, you force not to forswear. King. Despise me, when I break this oath of mine.

Prin. I will: and therefore keep it -- Rosaline, What did the Russian whisper in your ear?

Ros. Madam, he swore that he did hold me dear As precious eye-sight: and did value me Above this world: adding thereto, moreover, That he would wed me, or else die my lover.

Prin. God give thee joy of him! the noble lord Most honourably doth uphold his word.

King. What mean you, madam? by my life, I never swore this lady such an oath. [my troth,

Ros. By heaven you did; and to confirm it plain, You gave me this: but take it, sir, again. King. My faith, and this, the princess I did give; I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve.

Prin. Pardon me, sir, this jewel she did wear; And lord Biron, I thank him, is my dear —

What; will you have me, or your pearl again?

Biron. Neither of either; I remit both twain. I see the trick out.—Here was a consent, (Knowing afoot behind of our merriment,) To dash it like a Christmas comedy:

Some carry-tale, some please-man, some slight sny,

[Dick,—

Some mumble-mews, some trencher-knight, some That smiles his check in years; and knows the trick To make my lady laugh, when she's dispos'd,—

Told our intents before: which once disclos'd, The ladies did change favours; and then we, Following the signs, woo'd but the sign of she. Now to our perjury to add more terror, We are again forsworn; in will, and error. Much upon this it is;—And might not you,

[To Bovet

Forestation our sport, to make us thus unequal? Do not you know my lady's foot by the squire, And laugh upon the apple of her eye?

And stand between her back, sir, and the fire, Holding a trencher, jesting merrily? You put our page out: Go, you are allow'd; Die when you will, a smock shall be your shroud. You leer upon me, do you? there's an eye, Wounds like a leaden sword.

Bovet. Full merrily

Hath this brave manage, this career, been run.
Welcome, pure wit! thou partest a fair fray.

Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know,
Whether the three worthies shall come in, or no.
Biron. What, are there but three?
Cost. No, sir; but it is varie faire,
For every one pursents three.
Biron. And three times thrice is nine.
Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir; I hope,
it is not so:
You cannot beg us, sir, I can assure you, sir: we know what we know;
I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir,—
Biron. Is not nine.
Cost. Under correction, sir, we know whereunto it doth amount.

Biron. By Jove, I always took three threes for nine.

Cost. O Lord, sir, it were pity you should get your living by reckoning, sir.
Biron. How much is it?
Cost. O Lord, sir, the parties themselves, the actors, sir, will show whereunto it doth amount;
for my own part, I am, as they say, but to perfect one man,—e'en one poor man; Pompion the great, sir.
Biron. Art thou one of the worthies?
Cost. It pleased them to think me worthy of Pompion the great: for mine own part, I know not the degree of the worthy; but I am to stand for him.
Biron. Go, bid them prepare.
Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir; we will take some care.

King. Biron, they will shame us, let them not approach.
Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord: and 'tis some policy
To have one show worse than the king's and his company.

King. I say, they shall not come.

Prix. Nay, my good lord, let me o'er-rule you
now:
That sport best pleases, that doth least know how;
Where zeal strives to content, and the contents
Die in the zeal of them which it presents,
Their form confounded makes most form in mirth;
When great things labouring perish in their birth.
Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expence of thy royal sweet breath, as will utter a brace of words.

[Armado converses with the King, and delivers him a paper.]

Prix. Doth this man serve God?

Biron. Why ask you?

Prix. He speaks not like a man of God's making.

Arm. That's all one, my fair, sweet, honey monarch: for, I protest, the school-master is exceeding fantastical; too, too vain; too, too vain; But we will put it, as they say, to fortuna della guerra.
I wish you the peace of mind, most royal companion!

[Exit Armado.

King. Here is like to be a good presence of worthies; He presents Hector of Troy; the swain, Pompey the great; the parish curate, Alexander;
Armado's page, Hercules; the pedant, Judas Machabæus.

And if these four worthies in their first show thrive,
These four will change habits, and present the other five.
Biron. There is five in the first show.

King. You are deceit'd, 'tis not so.

Biron. The pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy;—
Abate a throw at novum; and the whole world
again,
Cannot prick out five such, take each one in his vein.

King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes again.

[Scene brought for the KING, PRINCES, &c
Pageant of the Nine Worthies.

Enter Costard armed, for Pompey.

Cost. I Pompey am—

Boyet. You lie, you are not he.

Cost. I Pompey am—

Boyet. With libbard's head on knee.

Biron. Well said, old mocker; I must needs be friends with thee.

Cost. I Pompey am, Pompey surnamed the big,—

Dum. The great.

Cost. It is great sir;—Pompey surnamed the great;

That oft in field, with large and shield, did make my foe to sweat:
And travelling along this coast, I here am come by chance:
And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet lass of France.
If your ladyship would say, Thanks, Pompey, I had done.

Prix. Great thanks, great Pompey.
Cost. 'Tis not so much worth; but, I hope, I was perfect: I made a little fault in, great.
Biron. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best worthy.

Enter Nathaniel, armed for Alexander.

Nath. When in the world I liv'd, I was the world's commander;
By east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering might:
My 'soulful with this declares, that I am Alisander.

Boyet. Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right.

Biron. Your nose smells no, in this, most tender-smelling knight.

Prix. The conqueror is dismay'd: Proceed, good Alexander.

Nath. When in the world I liv'd, I was the world's commander:—

Boyet. Most true, 'tis right; you were so, Ali-sander.

Biron. Pompey the great,—

Cost. Your servant, and Costard.

Biron. Take away the conqueror, take away
Alisander.

Cost. O, sir, [To Nath.] you have overthrown Alisander the conqueror! You will be scraped out of the painted cloth for this: your lion, that holds his poll-ax sitting on a close stool, will be given to A-jax: he will be the ninth worthy. A conqueror and afeard to speak! run away for shame, Ali-sander. [Nath. retires.] There, an't shall please you;
a foolish mad man; an honest man, look you, and soon dash'd! be is a marvellous good neighbour, insooth; and a very good bowler: but for Aislander, alas, you see, how this:—a little o'er-parted:—But there are worthies a coming will speak their mind in some other sort.

Prin. Stand aside, good Pompey.

Enter HOLOFERNES, armed, for Judas; and MOTH, armed, for Hercules.

Hol. Great Hercules is presented by this imp, Whose club kill'd Corbears, that three-headed causus; And, when he was a babe, a child, a shrimplish Thus did he strangle serpents in his manus: Quomiam, he seemed in minority; Ergo, I come with this apology.—
Keep some state in thy exit, and vanish. [Exit Morn. Hol. Judas, I am,—
Dum. A Judas! Hol. Not, Iscariot, sir,—
And now, forward; for we have put thee in countenance.

Hol. You have put me out of countenance. Biron. False: we have given thee faces. Hol. But you have outface'd them all. Biron. An thou wert a lion, we would do so. Boyet. Therefore, as he is, an ass, let him go. And so adieu, sweet Jude! nay, why dost thou stay? Dum. For the latter end of his name. Biron. For the ass to the Jude; give it him:—
Hol. This is not, generous, not gentle; not humble. Boyet. A light for monsieur Judas; it grows dark, he may stumble.
Prin. Alas, poor Machabeus, how hath he been baited!

Enter ARMADO, armed for Hector.

Biron. Hide thy head, Achilles; here comes Hector in arms.
Dum. Though my mocks come home by me, I will now be merry.
King. Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this. Boyet. But is this Hector? Dum. I think, Hector was not so clean-timber'd.
Dum. You may not dey it; Pompey hath made the challenge.
Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.
Biron. What reason have you for't?
Arm. The naked truth of it is, I have no shirt;
I go woolward for penance.
Boyet. True, and it was enjoin'd him in Rome for want of linen; since when, I'll be sworn, ne wore none, but a dish-clout of Jaquenetta's; and that 'a wears next his heart, for a favour.

Enter Mercade.

Mer. God save you, madam!
Pri. Welcome, Mercade;
But that thou interrupt'st our merriment.

Mer. I am sorry, madam; for the news I bring,
Is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—

Pri. Dead, for my life!
Mer. Even so; my tale is told.
Biron. Worthies, away; the scene begins to cloud.

Enter Falstaff, Portia, Cesario, and Clown.

Faf. I have seen the day of wrong through the little holes of discretion, and I will right myself like a soldier.

King. How fares your Majesty?
Pri. Boyet, prepare; I will away to-night.

King. Madam, not so; I do beseech you, stay.

Pri. Prepare, I say,—I thank you, gracious lords,
For all your fair endeavours; and entreat,
Out of a new-sad soul, that you vouchsafe
In your rich wisdom, to excuse, or hide,
The liberal opposition of our spirits;
If over-boldly we have borne ourselves
In the converse of breath, your gentleness
Was guilty of it.—Farewell, worthy lord;
A heavy heart bears not an humble tongue:
Excuse me so, coming so short of thanks
For my great suit so easily obtain'd.

King. The extreme parts of time extremely form
All causes to the purpose of his speed;
And often, at his very loose, decides
That which long process could not arbitrate:
And though the mourning bower of progeny
Forbidden the smiling courtesy of love;
The holy suit which fain it would conceive;
Yet, since love's argument was first on foot,
Let not the cloud of sorrow justle it
From what it purpos'd; since, to wall friends lost,
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found.

Pri. I understand you not; my griefs are double.

Biron. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief;
And by these buggars understand the king.

For your fair sakes have we neglected time,
Play'd foul play with our oaths; your beauty, ladies,
Hath much deform'd us, fashioning our humour
Even to the opposed end of our intents;
And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous,—
As love is full of unsettling strains;
All wanton as a child, skipping, and vain;
Form'd by the eye, and, therefore, like the eye
Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms,
Varying in subiects as the eye doth roll
To every varied object in his glance;
Which party-coated presence of loose love
Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes,
Have misbecom'd our oaths and gravities,
Those heavenly eyes, that look into these faults,
Suggested us to make: Therefore, ladies,
Our love being yours, the error that love makes
Is likewise yours: we to ourselves prove false,
By being once false for ever to be true
To those that make us both,—fair ladies, you:
And even that falsehood, in itself a sin,
Thus purifies itself, and turns to grace.

Pri. We have receiv'd your letters, full of love;
Your favours, the embassadors of love;
And, in our maiden council, rated them
At courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bombast, and as lining to the time:
But more devout than this, in our respects,
Have we not been; and therefore met your loves
In their own fashion, like a merriment.

Dum. Our letters, madam, show'd much more than jest,
Long. So did our looks.

Ros. We did not quote them so.

King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour,
Grant us your loves.

Pri. A time, methinks, too short
To make a world-without-end bargain in;
No, no, my lord, your grace is perjur'd much.
Full of dear guiltiness; and, therefore this,—
If for my love (as there is no such cause)
You will do aught, this shall you do for me:
Your oath I will not trust; but go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage.

Remote from all the pleasures of the world;
There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning:
If this austere incognito life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood;
If frosts, and fasts, hard lodging, and thin weeds,
Nip not the gaudy blossoms of your love,
But that it bear this trial, and last love;
Then, at the expiration of the year,
Come challenge, challenge me by these deserts,
And, by this virgin palm, now kissing thine,
I will be thine; and, till that instant, shut
My woeful self up in a mournful house;
Raining the tears of lamentation,
For the remembrance of my father's death.
If this thou do deny, let our hands part;
Neither intitled in the other's heart.

King. If this, or more than this, I would deny,
To flatter up these powers of mine with rest,
The sudden hand of death close up mine eye!
Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.

Biron. And what to me, my love? and what to me?

Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rank;
You are attaint with faults and perjury;
Therefore, if you my favour mean to get,
A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,
But seek the weary beds of people sick.

Dum. But what to me, my love? but what to me?

Kath. A wife!—A beard, fair health, and honesty;
With three-fold love I wish you all these three.

Dum. O, shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife?

Kath. Not so, my lord;—a twelvemonth and a day
I'll mark no words that smooth-face'd wowers say:
Come when the king doth to your lady come,
Then, if I have much love, I'll give you some.

Dum. I'll serve thee true and faithfully till then.

Kath. Yet swear not, lest you be forsworn again.

Long. What says Maria?

Mar. At the twelvemonth's end.
I'll change my black gown for a faithful friend.
Long. I'll stay with patience; but the time is long.
Mar. The liker you; few taller are so young.
Biron. Studies my lady? mistress look on me,
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye,
What humble suit attends thy answer there?
Impose some service on me for thy love.
Ros. Oft have I heard of you, my lord Biron,
Before I saw you; and the world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
Full of comparisons, and wounding flouts;
Which you on all estates will execute,
That lie within the mercy of your wit:
To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain;
And, therewithal, to win me, if you please,
(Without the which I am not to be won.)
You shall this twelvemonth term from day to day
Visit the speechless sick, and still converse
With groaning wretches; and your task shall be,
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit,
To enforce the pained impotent to smile.
Biron. To move wild laughter in the throat of
It cannot be; it is impossible:
[death?]
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.
Ros. Why, that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is betog of that loose grace,
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools:
A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that bears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly ears,
Deaf'd with the clamours of their own dear groans
Will hear your idle scorns, continue then,
And I will have you, and that fault withal;
But, if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.
Biron. A twelvemonth? well, befal what will
I'll jest a twelvemonth in an hospital. [befal, Prin. Ay, sweet my lord; and so I take my
[To the King.
King. No, madam: we will bring you on your way.
Biron. Our wooing doth not end like an old play;
Jack hath not Jill: these ladies' courtesy
Might well have made our sport a comedy.
King. Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a
And then 'twill end. [day,
Biron. That's too long for a play.
[Enter Armado.
Arm. Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me,—
Prin. Was not that Hector?
Dum. The worthy knight of Troy.
Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave;
I am a votary; I have vowed to Jaquenetta to hold the plough for her sweet love three years. But, most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled, in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? it should have followed in the end of our show.
King. Call them forth quickly, we will do so.
Arm. Holla! approach.

Enter HoLOPERNES, NATHANIEL, MOY, COSTARD, and others.
This side is Hiems, winter; this Ver, the spring;
the one maintain'd by the owl, the other by the cuckoo. Ver, begin.

SONG.

I.

Spring. When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he,
Cuckoo;
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

II.

When shepherds pipe on oat'en straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
When turtles tread, and rooks, and daws,
And maidens bleach their summer smocks,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he,
Cuckoo;
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

III.

Winter. When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipp'd, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
To-who;
To-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

IV.

When all along the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
To-who;
To-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo. You, that way; we this way.
[Exeunt
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE.—Partly at VENICE, and partly at BELMONT, the Seat of PORTIA, on the Continent.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—VENICE. A Street.

Enter ANTONIO, SALARINO, and SALANDO.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad; It wearies me; you say, it wearies you; But how I caught it, found it, or came by it, What stuff 'tis made of, whereof it is born, I am to learn;
And such a want-wit sadness makes of me, That I have much ado to know myself.

Salar. Your mind is tossing on the ocean:
There, where your argosies with portly sail,— Like signiors and rich burghers of the flood, Or, as it were, the pageants of the sea,— Do overpeer the petty traffickers,
That curst'ay to them, do them reverence,
As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Salan. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth,
The better part of my affections would Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind; Peering in maps, for ports, and piers, and roads; And every object, that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt, Would make me sad.

Salar. My wind, cooling my broth, Would blow me to an ague, when I thought What harm a wind too great might do at sea. I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high-top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Should I go to church,
And see the holy edifice of stone,
And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks? Which touching but my gentle vessel's side, Would scatter all her spices on the stream; Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks; And, in a word, but even now worth this, And now worth nothing? Shall I have the thought

To think on this: and shall I lack the thought. That such a thing becometh'd, would make me sad? But tell not me; I know Antonio
Is sad to think upon his merchandize.

Ant. Believe me, no: I thank my fortune for it,
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate
Upon the fortune of this present year:
Therefore, my merchandize makes me not sad.

Ant. Fye, fye!

Sulan. Not in love neither? Then let's say, you are sad,
Because you are not merry: and 'twere as easy For you, to laugh, and leap, and say, you are merry,

Janus, Because you are not sad. Now, by two-headed Nature hath framed strange fellows in her time: Some that will evermore peep through their eyes And laugh, like parrots, at a bag-piper: And other of such vinegar aspect, That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile, Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

Enter BASSANO, LORENZO, and GRATIANO.

Salan. Here comes Bassanio, your most noble kinsman,
Gratiano, and Lorenzo: Fare you well;
We leave you now with better company. [merry,
Salar. I would have staid till I had made you
If worthier friends had not prevented me.

Ant. Your worth is very dear in my regard.
I take it, your own business calls on you,
And you embrace the occasion to depart.

Salar. Good-morrow, my good lords.

Bass. Good signiors both, when shall we laugh?
Say, when?

You grow exceeding strange: Must it be so?

Salar. We'll make our pleasures to attend on yours.

[Exeunt SALANINO and SALANDO.}
Lor. My lord Bassanio, since you have found
Antonio, who, for It and therefore, 175 and therefore you have too much respect upon the world: They lose it, that do buy it with much care. Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd.
Ant. I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano; A stage, where every man must play a part, And mine a sad one.
Gra. Let me play the Fool:
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come;
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes? and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio,—
I love thee, and it is my love that speaks;—
There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle, like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit;
As who should say, I am Sir Oracle,
And, when I sitt my lips, let no dog bark!
O, my Antonio, I do know of these,
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing; who, I am very sure,
If they should speak, would almost damn those ears,
Which, hearing them, would call their brothers,
I'll tell thee more of this another time: [fools.]
But fish not, with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion.—
Come, good Lorenzo:—Fare ye well, a while;
I'll end my exhortation after dinner. [time: Lor. Well, we will leave you then till dinner;
And must be one of these same dumb wise men,
For Gratiano never lets me speak.
Gra. Well, keep me company but two years more,
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.
Ant. Farewell! I'll grow a talker for this gear.
Gra. Thanks, I'faith; for silence is only commendable
In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible. [Exeunt Gratiano and Lorenzo.

Ant. Is that any thing now?
Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, much more than any man in all Venice: His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff;
you shall seek all day ere you find them; and, when you have them, they are not worth the search.
Ant. Well; tell me how, what lady is this same
That to whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of?
Bass. 'Tis not unknown to you, Antonio, How much I have disabled mine estate,
By something showing a more swelling port
Than my faint means would grant continue: Nor do I now make mean to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate; but my chief care Is, to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged: To you, Antonio,
I owe the most, in money, and in love;
And from your love I have a warranty
To unburrthen all my plots, and purposes, tlow to get clear of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it;
And, if it stand, as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour, be assur'd,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions.
Bass. In my school-days, whom had lost one I shot his fellow of the self-same flight [shaft,
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; and by advent'ring both,
I oft found both: I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence.
I owe you much; and, like a wilful youth,
That which I owe is lost: but if you please
To shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt,
As I will watch the aim, or to find both,
Or bring your latter hazard back again,
And thankfully rest debtor for the first.
Ant. You know me well; and herein spend but time,
To wind about my love with circumstance;
And, out of doubt, you do me now more wrong,
In making question of my uttermost,
Than if you had made waste of all I have.
Then do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it: therefore, speak.
Bass. In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wond'rous virtues; sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages:
Her name is Portia; nothing undervalued To Cato's daughter, Brutus' Portia.
Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth;
For the four winds blow in from every coast Renowned suitors: and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece;
Which makes her seat of Belmont, Colchis strand, And many Jasons come in quest of her.
O my Antonio, had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me such thrift,
That I should questionless be fortunate.
Ant. Thou know'st, that all my fortunes are at sea;
Nor have I money, nor commodity
To raise a present sum: therefore go forth,
Try what my credit can in Venice do;
That shall be rack'd, even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
Go, presently inquire, and so will I,
Where money is; and I no question make,
To have it of my trust, or for my sake. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—BELMONT. A Room in Portia's House.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is a weary of this great world.
Ner. You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are: And yet, for aught I see, they are as sick, that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing: It is no mean happiness, therefore, to be seated in the mean; superfluity comes sooner by white hairs, but competency lives longer.

Por. Good sentences, and well pronounced.
Ner. They would be better, if well followed. Por. If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches. and poor men's cottages, princes' palaces. It is a good divide that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching.
The brain may devise laws for the blood; but a hot temper leaps over a cold decree: such a hare is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose me a husband: — O me, the word choose! I may neither choose whom I would, nor reserve whom I dislike; so is the will of a living daughter curb'd by the will of a dead father: — Is it not hard,
Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none?

Ner. Your father was ever virtuous; and holy men, at their death, have good inspirations; therefore, the lottery, that he hath devised in these three chests, of gold, silver, and lead, (whereof who chooses his meaning, chooses you,) will, no doubt, never be chosen by any rightly, but one who you shall rightly loving.

But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

Por. I pray thee, over-name them; and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my affection.

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.
Por. Ay, that's a colt, indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great appropriation to his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself: I am much afraid, my lady his mother played false with a smith.

Ner. Then, is there the county Palatine.
Por. He doth nothing but frown; as who should say, And if you will not have me, choose: he hears merry tales, and smiles not: I fear, he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. I had rather be married to a death's head with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, Monsieur
Le Bel?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocker; But, he! why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan's; a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine: he is every man in no man:
if a throttle sing, he falls straight a capping; he will fence with his own shadow: if I should marry him,
I should marry twenty husbands: If he would despair me, I would forgive him; for if he love me to madness, I shall never requite him.

Ner. What say you then to Faulconbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know, I say nothing to him; for he understands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you will come into the court and swear, that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. He is a proper man's picture;
But, alas! who can converse with a dumb show?
How oddly he is suited! I think, he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behaviour every where.

Ner. What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him;
for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again, when he was able: I think, the Frenchman became his surety, and sealed under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the duke of Saxony's nephew?
Por. Very vilely in the morning, when he is sober; and most vilely in the afternoon, when he is drunk; when he is best, he is a little worse than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast; an the worst fall that ever fell, I hope I shall make shift to go without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him.
Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee set a deep glass of Khenish wine on the contrary casket: for, if the devil be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do any thing, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponge.

Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords: they have acquainted me with their determinations; which is indeed, to return to their hume, and to trouble you with no more suit; unless, you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition, depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibylla, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father's will: I am glad this parcel of wooers are so reasonable; for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Ner. Do you not remember, lady, in your father's time, a Venetian, a scholar, and a soldier, that came hither in company of the Marquis of Montferrat?

Por. Yes, yes, it was Bassanio; as I think, so was he called.

Ner. True, madam; he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well; and I remember him worthy of thy praise.—How now! what news?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave: and there is a fore-runner come from a fifth, the prince of Morocco; who bring-\nword, the prince, his master, will be here to-night.

Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good heart as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach: if he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrieve me than wive me. Corise, Nerissa.—Sirrah, go before.—Whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the doors.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Venice. A public Place.

Enter Bassanio and Shylock.

Shy. Three thousand ducats,—well.

Bass. Ay, sir, for three months.

Shy. For three months,—well.

Bass. For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall be bound.

Shy. Antonio shall become bound,—well.

Bass. May you steal me? Will you pleasure me?
Shall I know your answer?

Shy. Three thousand ducats, for three months, and Antonio bound.

Bass. Your answer to that.

Shy. Antonio is a good man.

Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?
Shy. Ho, no, no;—my meaning, in saying he is a good man, is to have you understand me, that he is sufficient: yet his means are in position; he hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies; I understand moreover upon the Rialto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures he hath, squander'd abroad. But ships are but boards, sailors but men: there be land-rats, and water-rats, water-thieves, and land-thieves; I mean, pirates; and then, there is the peril of waters, winds, and rocks: The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient;—three thousand ducats:—I think, I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assured you may.

Shy. I will be assured, I may; and, that I may be assured, I will bethink me: May I speak with Antonio?

Bass. If it please you to dine with us.

Shy. Yes, to smell pork; to eat of the habitation which your prophet, the Nazarite, conjured the devil into; I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you,—What news on the Rialto?—Who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is signior Antonio.

Shy. [Aside.] How like a fawning publican he hate him for he is a Christian: [looks!] But more, for that, in low simplicity, He lends out money gratis, and brings down The rate of usance here with us in Venice. If I can catch him once upon the hip, I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him. He hates our sacred nation; and he rails, Even there where merchants most do congregate, Old me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift, Which he calls interest: Cursed be my tribe, If I forgive him!

Bass. Shylock, do you hear?

Shy. I am debating of my present store: And, by the near guess of my memory, I cannot instantly raise up the gross Of full three thousand ducats: What of that? Tubal, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe, Will furnish me: But soft; How many months Do you desire?—Rest you fair, good signior: Your worship was the last man in our mouths.

Ant. Shylock, albeit I neither lend nor borrow, By taking, nor by giving of excess, Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend, I'll break a custom:—Is he yet possess'd, How much he would?

Shy. Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

Ant. And for three months.

Shy. I had forgot,—three months, you told me so. Well then, your bond; and, let me see,—But hear you:

Methought, you said, you neither lend, nor borrow, Upon advantage.

Ant. I do never use it.

Shy. When Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep, This Jacob from our holy Abraham was (As his wise mother wrought in his behalf,) The third possessor; ay, he was the third.

Ant. And what of him? did he take interest?

Shy. No, not take interest; not, as you would say, Directly interest: mark what Jacob did.

When Laban and himself were compromis'd, That all the earlings which were streak'd, and pied, Should fall, as Jacob's hire; the ewes, being rank, In the end of autumn turned to the rams: And when the work of generation was Between these woolly breeders in the act, The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands, And, in the doing of the deed of kind, He stuck them up before the fŭsulse ewes; Who, then conceiving, did in eating time Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. This was a way to thrive, and he was blest; And thrift is blessing, if men steal it not.

Ant. This was a venture, sir, that Jacob serv'd A thing not in his power to bring to pass, [for; But sway'd, and, fashion'd, by the hand of heaven. Was this inserted to make interest good? Or is your gold and silver, ewes and rams?

Shy. I cannot tell; I make it breed as fast:— But note me, signior.

Ant. Mark you this, Bassanio, The devil can cite scripture for his purpose. An evil soul, producing holy witness, Is like a villain with a smiling check; A goodly apple rotten at the heart; O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath! Shy. Three thousand ducats,—tis a good round sum.

Three months from twelve, then let me see the rate.

Ant. Well, Shylock, shall we be beholden to you?

Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft, In the Rialto have you rated me About my monies, and my usances: Still have I borne it with a patient shrug; For sufferance is the badge of all our tribe: You call me—believer, cut-throat dog, And spurn upon my Jewish gaberdine, And all for use of that which is mine own. Well then, it now appears, you need my help: Go to then; you come to me, and you say, Shylock, we would have monies; You say so; You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, And foot me, as you spurn a stranger cur Over your threshold; monies is your suit. What should I say to you? Should I not say. Hath a dog money? is it possible, A cur can lend three thousand ducats; or Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key, With bated breath, and whispering humbleness, Say this,—

Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last: You spurn'd me such a day; another time You call'd me—dog; and for these courtesies I'll lend you thus much monies.

Ant. I am as like to call thee so again, To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too. If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not As to thy friends; (for when did friendship take A breed for barren metal of his friend?) But lend it rather to thine enemy; Who, if he break, thou may'st with better face Exact the penalty.

Shy. Why, look you, how you storm! I would be friends with you, and have your love, Forget the shame that you have stain'd me with, Supply your present wants, and take no doit Of usance for my monies, and you'll not hear me: This is kind I offer.

Ant. This were kindness.

Shy. N This kindness will I shew.—
Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond; and, in a merry sport,
If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, such sum, or sums, as are Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body pleaseth me.

Ant. Content, in faith; I'll seal to such a bond,
And say, there is much kindness in the Jew.

Bass. You shall not seal to such a bond for me,
I'll rather dwell in my necessity.

Ant. Why, fear not, man; I will not forfeit it;
Within these two months, that's a month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

Shy. Of father Abraham, what these Christians are;
Whose own hard dealings teaches them suspect
The thoughts of others! Pray you, tell me this;
If he should break his day, what should I gain
By the exactation of the forfeiture?
A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. I say,
To buy his favour, I extend this friendship;
If he will take it, so; if not, adieu!
And, for my love, I pray you, wrong me not.

Ant. Yes, Shylock, I will seal unto this bond.

Shy. Then meet me forthwith at the notary's;
Give him direction for this merry bond,
And I will go and purse the ducats straight;
See to my house, left in the fearful guard
Of an unthriftv knave; and presently
I will be with you.

[Exit Ant.

This Hebrew will turn Christian; he grows kind.

Bass. I like not fair terms, and a villain's mind.

Ant. Come on; in this there can be no dismay,
My ships come home a month before the day.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—BELMONT. A Room in Portia's House.

FLEUR OF CORNETS. Enter the Prince of Morocco, and his Train; Portia, Nerissa, and other Attendants.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow's d'vour of the burnish'd sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred.
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phæbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his, or mine.
I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine
Hath fear'd the valiant; by my love, I swear,
The best-regarded virgins of our climate
Have lov'd it too: I would not change this hue,
Except to seal your thoughts, my gentle queen.

Por. In terms of choice I am not solely led
By nice direction of a maiden's eyes:
Besides, the lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing:
But, if my father had not scanted me,
And hedg'd me by his will, to yield myself
His wife, who wins me by that means I told you,
Yourself, renowned princess, then stood as fair,
As any corer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection.

Mor. Even for that I thank you;
Therefore, I pray you, lead me to the caskets,
To try my fortune. By this simulacr—
That slew the Sophy, and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of Sultan Solyman,—
I would out-stare the sternest eyes that look,
Out-brave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady: But, alas the while!
If Hercules, and Lichas, play at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page;
And so may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain,
And die with grieving.

Por. You must take your chance;
And either not attempt to choose at all,
Or swear, before you choose,—if you choose wrong,
Never to speak to lady afterward.

In way of marriage; therefore be advis'd.

Mor. Nor will not; come, bring me unto my chance.

Por. First, forward to the temple; after dinner
Your hazard shall be made.

Mor. Good fortune then! [CORNETS
To make me bless't, or cursed'at among men.

[Exeunt.

Act II. Venice. A Street.

Enter Launcelot Gobbo.

Lawn. Certainly my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew, my master: The fiend is at mine elbow; and tempts me, saying to me, Gobbo, Launcelot Gobbo, good Launcelot, or good Gobbo, or good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start, run away: My conscience says,—no; take heed, honest Launcelot; take heed, honest Gobbo; or as aforesaid, honest Launcelot Gobbo; do not run, soon running with thy heels: Well, the most courageous fiend bids me pack; via! says the fiend; away! says the fiend, for the heavens; rouse up a brave mind, says the fiend, and run. Well, my conscience, hanging about the neck of my heart, says very wisely to me,—my honest friend, Launcelot, being an honest man's son, or rather an honest woman's son;—for, indeed, my father did something smack, something grow to, he had a kind of taste;—well, my conscience says, Launcelot, budge not; budge, says the fiend; budge not, says my conscience: Conscience, say I, you counsel well; fiend, say I, you counsel well: to be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew, my master, who, (God bless the mark!) is a kind of devil; and, to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend, who, saying your reverence, is the devil himself: Certainly, the Jew is the very devil incarnate: and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience, to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew: The fiend gives the more friendly counsel: I will run, fiend; my heels are at your commandment, I will run.
Enter Old Gobbo, with a basket.

Gob. Master, young man, you, I pray you; which is the way to master Jew's?—

Laun. [Aside.] O heavens, this is my true-begotten father! who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel blind, knows me not:—I will try conclusions with him.

Gob. Master young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. Turn up on your right hand, at the next turning, but, at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand, but turn down indirectly to the Jew's house.

Gob. By God's sorties,' twill be a hard way to it. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him, or no?

Laun. Talk you of young master Launcelot?—Mark me now; [aside] now will I raise the waters:—Talk you of young master Launcelot?—

Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man's son: his talk will be, 'No master, and, Alack and alas!

Laun. See truth that filleth man, that turns, grows backward; I am sure he had more hair on his tail, than I have on my face, when I last saw 'im.

Gob. Lord, how art thou changed! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a present; How 'gree you now?

Laun. Well, well; but, for mine own part, as I have set up my rest to run away, so I will not rest till I have run some ground: my master's a very Jew; Give him a present! give him a halter: I am famish'd in his service; you may tell every finger I have with my ribs. Father, I am glad you are come; give me your present to one master Bassanio, who, indeed, gives rare new liberties; if I serve not him, I will run as far as God has any ground.—O rare fortune! here comes the man:—to him, father; for I am a Jew, if I serve the Jew any longer.

Enter Bassanio with Leonardo, and other Followers.

Bass. You may do so:—but let it be so hasted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock: See these letters deliver'd; put the liberys to making; and desire Gratiano to come anon to my lodging. [Exit a Servant.

Laun. To him, father.

Gob. God bless your worship!

Bass. Gramercy; Would'st thou aught with me?—

Here's my son, sir, a poor boy—

Laun. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man; that would, sir, as my father shall specify—

Gob. He hath a great infection, sir, as one would say, to serve—

Laun. Indeed, the short and the long is, I serve the Jew, and I have a desire, as my father shall specify—

Gob. His master and he, (saving your worship's reverence,) are scarce cater-cousins:—

Laun. To be brief, the very truth is, that the Jew having done me wrong, doth cause me, as my father, being I hope an old man, shall frutify unto you,—

Gob. I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship; and my suit is,—

Laun. In very brief, the suit is imperinent to myself, as your worship shall know by this honest old man; and, though I say it, though old man, yet, poor man, my father.

Bass. One speak for both:—What would you?

Laun. Serve you, sir.

Gob. This is the very defect of the matter, sir.

Bass. I neither thee well, thou hast obtain'd thy suit:

Shylock, thy master, spoke with me this day,

And hath prefer'd thee, if it be preferment,

To leave a rich Jew's service, to become

The follower of so poor a gentleman.

Laun. The old proverb is very well parted between my master Shylock and you, sir; you have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough.

Bass. Thou speakest it well; go, father, with thy son:

Take leave of thy old master, and enquire

My lodging out;—give him a livery,

More guarded than his fellows': See it done.

Laun. Father, in:—I cannot get a service, no:

— I have ne'er a tongue in my head.—Well; [looking on his palm] if any man in Italy have a fairer table, which doth offer to swear upon a book,—I shall have good fortune; Go to, here's a simple line of life! here's a small trifle of wives: Alas, fifteen wives is nothing; eleven widows, and nine maids, is a simple coming in for one man: and then, to 'scape drowning thriceth; and to be in peril of my life with the edge of a feather-bed;—here are simple 'scapes! Well, if fortune be a woman, she's 9
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

ACT II.

good wench for this gear.—Father, come: I'll take my leave of the Jew in the twinkling of an eye.

[Exeunt LAUNCELOT and Old GONZO.

Bass. I pray thee, good Leonardo, think on this: These things being bought, and orderly bestow'd, Return in haste, for I do feast to-night. My best-esteemed acquaintance: be thee, go.

Leon. My best endeavours shall be done herein.

Enter GRATIANO.

Gra. Where is your master?

Leon. Yonder, sir, he walks.

[Exeunt LEONARDO.

Gra. Signior Bassanio,—

Bass. Gratiano!

Gra. I have a suit to you.

Bass. You have obtain'd it.

Gra. You must not deny me; I must go with you to Belmont.

Bass. Why, then you must;—But hear thee, Gratiano; Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice;— Parts, that become thee happily enough, And in such eyes as ours appear not faults; But where thou art not known, why, there they show something too liberal.—Pray thee take pain To alay with some cold drops of modesty Thy skipping spirit; lest, through thy wild beha-

Gra. I have heard the like.

Leon. Nay, I must not deny you.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where is my master?

Leon. He is not here.

Gra. I have a suit to you.

Leon. I will hear thee.

Gra. Nay, but I bar to-night; you shall not gage

Bass. By what I do to-night [me

Bass. No, that were pity;

I would entreat you rather to put on

Your boldest suit of mirth, for we have friends That purpose merriment: But fare you well, I have some business.

Gra. And I must to Lorenzo, and the rest;

But we will visit you at supper-time. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in Shylock's House.

Enter JESSICA and LAUNCELOT.

Jes. I am sorry, thou wilt leave my father so;

Our house is hell, and thou, a merry devil, Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness:

But fare thee well: there is a ducat for thee.

And, Launcelot, soon at supper shalt thou see Lorenzo, who is thy new master's guest:

Give him this letter; do it secretly,

And so farewell; I would not have my father

See me talk with thee.

Laun. Adieu!—tears exhibit my tongue.

Most beautiful Pagan,—most sweet Jew! If a Christian do not play the knave, and get thee, I am much deceived: But, adieu! these foolish drops do somewhat drown my manly spirit; adieu! [Exit.

Jes. Farewell, good Launcelot.

Alack, what heinous sin is it in me,

To be asham'd to be my father's child!

But though I am a daughter to his blood,

I am not to his manners: O Lorenzo,

If you keep promise, I shall end this strife;

Become a Christian, and thy loving wife. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. A Street.

Enter GRATIANO, LORENZO, SALARINO, and SALANIO.

Lor. Nay, we will sink away in supper-time;

Disguise us at my lodging, and return

All in an hour.

Gra. We have not made good preparation.

Salar. We have not spoke us yet of torch-bearers.

Salan. 'Tis vile, unless it may be quasinty or,

And better, in my mind, not undertook. [der'd;

Lor. 'Tis now but four o'clock; we have but two

To furnish us;—

[Exeunt LAUNCELOT, with a letter.

Friend Launcelot, what's the news?

Laur. An it shall please you to break up this, it shall seem to signify.

Lor. I know the hand: in faith, 'tis a fair hand;

And whiter than the paper it writ on,

Is the fair hand that writ.

Gra.

Laur. By your leave, sir.

Lor. Whither, good guest thou?

Laur. Marry, sir, to bid my old master the Jew to sup to-night with my new master the Christian.

Lor. Hold here, take this:—tell gentle Jessica,

I will not fail her;—speak it privately; go,—

Gentlemen, [Exeunt LAUNCELOT.

Will you prepare you for this masque to-night?

I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Salar. Ay, marry, I'll be gone about it straight.

Salan. And so will I.

Lor.

Meet me, and Gratiano,

At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

Salar. 'Tis good we do so.

[Exeunt Salar. and Salan.

Gra. Was not that letter from fair Jessica?

Lor. I must needs tell thee all: She hath directed,

How I shall take her from her father's house;

What gold, and jewels, she is furnish'd with;

What page's suit she hath in readiness.

If e'er the Jew her father come to heaven,

It will be for his gentle daughter's sake.

And never dare misfortune cross her foot,

Unless she do it under this excuse,—

That she is issue to a faithless Jew.

Come, go me with; peruse this, as thou goest:

Fair Jessica shall be my torch-bearer. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The same. Before Shylock's House.

Enter SHYLOCK and LAUNCELOT.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge,

The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio:—

What, Jessica!—thou shalt not gormandize,

As thou hast done with me;—What, Jessica!—

And sleep and snore, and rend apparel out;—

Why, Jessica, I say!

Laur.

Why, Jessica!
Enter JESSICA.

Jes. Call you what is your will?

Shy. I am bid forth to supper, Jessica;

There are my keys:—But wherefore should I go?

I am not bid for love; they flatter me:

But yet I'll go in hate, to feed upon

The prodigal Christian,—Jessica, my girl,

Look to my house;—I am right loath to go;

There is some ill a-brewing towards my rest,

For I did dream of money-bags to-night.

Laun. I beseech you, sir, go; my young master doth expect your reproof.

Shy. So do I his.

Laun. And they have conspired together,—I will not say, you shall see a masque; but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on Black-monday last, at six o'clock; the morrow, falling out that year on Ash-Wednesday was four year in the afternoon.

Shy. What; are there masques? Hear you me, Jessica:

Lock up my doors, and when you hear the drum,

And the vile squeaking of the wry-neck'd fife,

Clamber not you up to the casements then,

Nor thrust your head into the publick street,

To gaze on Christian fools with varnish'd faces:

But stop my house's ears, I mean my casements;

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter

My sober house.—By Jacob's staff, I swear,

I have no mind of feasting forth to-night:

But I will go.—Go you before me, sirrah;

Say, I will come.

Laun. I will go before, sir.

Mistress, look out at window, for all this;

There will come a Christian by,

Will be worth a Jewess' eye.

[Exit.

Shy. What says that fool of Hagar's offspring, ha?

Jes. His words were, Farewell, mistress; nothing else.

Shy. The patch is kind enough; but a huge feeder;

Snail-slow in profit, and he sleeps by day

More than the wild cat: drones have not with me;

Therefore I part with him; and part with him,

To one that I would have him help to waste

His borrower's purse.—Well, Jessica, go in;

Perhaps, I will return immediately;

Do, as I bid you,

Shut doors after you: Fast bind, fast find;

A proverb never stale in thrifty mind.

[Jes. Farewell; and if my fortune be not crost,

I have a father, you a daughter, lost.

[Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter Gratiano and Salario, masked.

Gra. This is the pent-house, under which Lo-Desir'd us to make stand.

[Salario.

His hour is almost past.

Gra. And it is marvel he out-dwells his hour,

For lovers ever run before the clock.

Salario. O, ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly

To see love's bonds new made, than they are wont,

To keep obliged faith unforfeited!

Gra. That ever holds: who riseth from a feast,

With that keen appetite that he sits down?

Where is the horse that doth untread again

His tedious measures with the unbated fire

That he did pace them first? All things that are,

Are with more spirit chased than joy'd.

How like a younger, or a prodigal,

The scarred bark puts from her native bay,

Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind!

How like the prodigal doth she return?

With over-weather'd ribs, and ragged sails,

Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind!

[Enter Lorenzo.

Salar. Here comes Lorenzo;—more of this hereafter.

Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;

Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait:

When you shall please to play the thieves for wives,

I'll watch as long for you then.—Approach;

Here dwells my father Jew:—Ho! who's within?

[Enter JESSICA, above, in boy's clothes.

Jes. Who are you? Tell me, for more certainty,

Albeit I'll swear that I do know your tongue.

Lor. Lorenzo, and thy love.

Jes. Lorenzo, certain; and my love, indeed;

For whom love I so much? and now who knows,

But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours?

Lor. Heaven, and thy thoughts, are witness that thou art.

Jes. Here, catch this basket; 'tis worth the pains.

I am glad 'tis night, you do not look on me,

For I am much asham'd of my exchange:

But love is blind, and lovers cannot see

The pretty follies that themselves commit;

For if they could, Cupid himself would blush

To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer.

Jes. What, must I hold a candle to my shame?

They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.

Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love;

And I should be obscure'd.

Lor. So are you, sweet,

Even in the lovely garnish of a boy.

But come at once;

For the close night doth play the run-away

And we are staid for at Bassanio's fea.

Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself

With some more ducats, and be with you straight.

[Exit, from above.

Gra. Now, by my hood, a Gentile, and no Jew

Lor. Beshrew me, but I love her heartily:

For she is wise, if I can judge of her;

And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true;

And true she is, as she hath prov'd herself;

And therefore, like herself, wise, fair, and true,

Shall she be placed in my constant soul.

[Enter JESSICA, below.

What, art thou come?—On, gentlemen, away;

Our masquing mates by this time for us stay.

[Exit, with JESSICA and SALARIO.

Enter ANTONIO.

Ant. Who's there?

Signor Antonio?

Ant. Fye, fye, Gratiano! where are all the rest?

'Tis nine o'clock: our friends all stay for you:—

No masque to-night; the wind is come about;

Bassanio presently will go aboard:

I have sent twenty out to seek for you.

Gra. I am glad on't; I desire no more delight,

Than to be under-sail, and gone to-night. [Exeunt.

[SCENE VI. MERCHANT OF VENICE.]
SCENE VII.—BELMONT. A Room in Portia's House.

Flourish of Cornets. Enter Portia, with the Prince of Morocco, and both their Trains.

Por. Go, draw aside the curtains, and discover The several caskets to this noble prince;— Now make your choice.

Mor. The first, of gold, who this inscription bears;—
Who choose me, shall gain what men desire. The second, silver, which this promise carries;—
Who choose me, shall get as much as he deserves. This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt;—
Who choose me, must give and hazard all he hath. How shall I know if I do choose the right?

Por. The one of them contains my picture, prince; If you choose that, then I am yours withal.

Mor. Some god direct my judgment! Let me see, I will survey the inscriptions back again:— What says this leaden casket?—
Who choose me, must give and hazard all he hath. Must give—For what? for lead? hazard for lead? This casket threatens; Men, that hazard all, Do it in hope of fair advantages: A golden mind stoops not to shows of dross; I'll then nor give, nor hazard, aught for lead. What says the silver with her virgin hue? Who choose me, shall get as much as he desires, As much as he deserves?—Pause there, Morocco, And weigh thy value with an even hand: If thou'rt steer'd by thy estimation, Thou dost deserve enough; and yet enough May not extend so far as to the lady; And yet to be afraid of my deserving, Were but a weak disabling of myself. As much as I deserve!—Why, that's the lady: I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes, In graces, and in qualities of breeding; But more than these, in love I do deserve. What if I stray'd no further, but chose here?— Let's see once more this saying grav'd in gold. Who choose me, shall gain what many men desire. Why that's the lady: all the world desires her: From the four corners of the earth they come, To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint. The Hymcyan deserts, and the vasty wilds Of wide Arabia, are as through-fares now, For princes to come view fair Portia: The wat'ry kingdom, whose ambitious head Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar To stop the foreign spirits; but they come, As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. One of these three contains her heavenly picture. I st like that lead contains her? 'Twere damnation, To think so base a thought: it were too gross To rib her cerecloth in the obscure grave. Or shall I think, in silver she's immur'd, Being ten times undervalued to try'd gold? O sinful thought! Never so rich a gem Was set in worse than gold. They have in England A coin, that bears the figure of an angel Stamped in gold: but that's insensible on; But here an angel in a golden bed Lies all within.—Deliver me the key; Here do I choose, and thrive I as I may! Por. There, take it, prince, and if my form lies there, Then I am yours. [He unlocks the golden casket.

Mor. O hell! what have we here? A carrion death, within whose empty eye There is a written scroll? I'll read the writing. All that griefers is not gold, Often have you heard that told; Many a man his life hath sold, But my outside to behold: Gilded tombs do worms unfold. Had you been as wise as bold, Young in limbs, in judgment old, Your answer had not been inscriv'd Fare you well; your suit is cold. Cold, indeed; and labour lost: Then, farewell heat; and, welcome, frost.— Portia, adieu! I have too griev'd a heart To take a tedious leave: thus losers part. [Exit Por. A gentle riddance:—Draw the curtains go:— Let all of his complexion choose me so. [Exeunt

SCENE VIII.—VENICE. A Street.
Enter Salario and Solanio.

Salio. Why man, I saw Bassanio under sail; With him is Gratiano gone along; And in their ship, I am sure, Lorenzo is not.

Salo. The villain Jew with outeries rais'd the duke; Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.

Salio. He came too late, the ship was under sail: But there the duke was given to understand, That in a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica; Besides, Antonio certify'd the duke, They were not with Bassanio in his ship.

Salo. I never heard a passion so confused, So strange, outrageous, and so variable, As the dog Jew did utter in the streets: My daughter!—O my ducats!—O my daughter! Flo'd with a Christian?—O my christian ducats!— Justice! the law! my ducats, and my daughter! A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats: Of double ducats, stol'n from me by my daughter! And jewels; two stones, two rich and precious stones, Stol'n by my daughter!—Justice! find the girl! She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats! Salio. Why, all the boys in Venice follow him, Crying,— his stones, his daughter, and his ducats. Salo. Let good Antonio look he keep his day, Or he shall pay for this.

Salo. Marry, well remember'd I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday; Who told me,—in the narrow seas, that part The French and English, there miscarried A vessel of our country, richly fraught: I thought upon Antonio, when he told me; And wish'd in silence, that it were not his. Salo. You were best to tell Antonio what you hear; Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him. Salio. A kinder gentleman treads not the earth, I saw Bassanio and Antonio part: Bassanio told him, he would make some speed Of his return; he answer'd—Do not so, Slubber not business for my sake, Bassanio, But stay the very riping of the time; And for the Jew's bond, which he hath of me, Let it not enter in your mind of love: Be merry; and employ your chiefest thoughts To courtship, and such fair ostens of love.
SCENE IX.

MERCHANT OF VENICE.

As shall conveniently become you there: And even there, his eye being big with tears, Turning his face, he put his hand behind him, And with affection wondrous sensible He wrung Bassanio's hand, and so they parted.

Salan. I think, he only loves the world for him. I pray thee, let us go, and find him out, And quicken his embraced heaviness With some delight or other.

Salan. Do we so. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—BELMONT. A Room in Portia's House.

Enter Nerissa, with a Servant.

Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee, draw the curtain straight; The prince of Arragon hath ta'en his oath, And comes to his election presently.

Flourish of Cornets. Enter the Prince of Arragon, Portia, and their Trains.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble prince; If you choose that wherein I contain'd, Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemniz'd; But if you fail, without more speech, my lord, You must be gone from hence immediately.

Por. I am enjoin'd by oath to observe three things: First, never to unfold to any one Which casket 'twas I chose; next, if I fail Of the right casket, never in my life To woo a maid in way of marriage; lastly, If I do fail in fortune of my choice, Immediately to leave you and be gone.

Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear, That comes to hazard for my worthless self.

Por. And so have I address'd me: Fortune now To my heart's hope—Gold, silver, and base lead. Who chooseth me, must give and hazard all he hath: You shall look fairer, ere I give, or hazard.

What says the golden chest? ha! let me see:— Who chooseth me, shall gain what many men desire. What many men desire.—That many may be meant By the foil multitude, that choose by show, Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach; Which pries not to the interior, but, like the martlet, Builds in the weather on the outward wall, Even in the force and road of casualty. I will not choose what many men desire, Because I will not jump with common spirits, And rank me with the barbarous multitudes. Why, then to thee, thou silver treasure-house; Tell me once more what title thou dost bear:

Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves.

And well said too; For who shall go about To cozen fortune, and be honourable Without the stamp of merit! Let none presume To wear an undeserved dignity.

O, that estates, degrees, and offices, Were not deriv'd corruptly! and that clear honour Were purchas'd by the merit of the wearer!

How many then should cover, that stand bare?

How many be commanded, that command!

How much low peasantry would then be glean'd From the true seed of honour! and how much honour Pick'd from the chaff and ruin of the times, To be new varnish'd! Well, but to my choice

Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves: I will assume desert;—Give me a key for this, And instantly unlock my fortunes here. [there.

Por. Too long a pause for that which you find

Por. What's here? the portrait of a blushing idiot, Presenting me a schedule? I will read it. How much unlike art thou to Portia! How much unlike my hopes, and my deservings!

Who chooseth me, shall have as much as he deserves. Did I deserve no more than a fool's head? Is that my prize? are my deserts no better?

Por. To offend, and judge, are distinct offices And of opposed natures.

Por. What is here?

The fire seven times tried this; Seven times tried that judgment is, That did never choose amiss: Some there be, that shadows kiss: Such have but a shadow's bliss: There be fools alive, I wis, Silver'd o'er; and so was this. Take what wife you will to bed, I will ever be your head: So begon, sir, you are sped. Still more fool I shall appear By the time I linger here: With one fool's head I came to woo, But I go away with two.—

Sweet, adieu! I'll keep my oath, Patience to bear my wrotch. [Exeunt Arragon, and Train.

Por. Thus hath the candle sing'd the moth. Oh, these deliberate fools! when they do choose, They have the wisdom by their wit to lose.

Por. The ancient saying is no heresy;—

Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.

Por. Come, draw the curtain, Nerissa.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Where is my lady?

Por. Here; what would my lord

Serv. Madam, there is allighted at your gate

A young Venetian, one that comes before
To signify the approaching of his lord: From whom he bringeth sensible regresses;

To wit, besides commendings, and courteous breath

Gifts of rich value; yet I have not seen

So likely an ambassador of love:

A day in April never came so sweet,

To show how costly summer was at hand,

As this fore-spurrier comes before his lord.

Por. No more, I pray thee; I am half afeard

Thou wilt say anon, he is some kin to thee,

Thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising him.

Come, come, Nerissa; for I long to see

Quick Cupid's post, that comes so mannerly.

Por. Bassanio, lord love, if thy will it be!

[Exeunt.}
SCENE I.—VENICE. A Street.

Enter Salano and Salanio.

Salan. Now, what news on the Rialto?

Salar. Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Antonio hath a ship of rich laden wrec'd on the narrow seas; the Goodwins, I think they call the place; a very dangerous flat, and fatal, where the carcases of many a tall ship lie buried, as they say, if my gossip report be an honest woman of her word.

Salan. I would she were as lying a gossip in that, as ever knapp'd ginger, or made her neighbours believe she wept for the death of a third husband: But it is true,—without any slips of prolixity, or crossing the plain high-way of talk,—that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio,—O that I had a title good enough to keep his name company!—

Salar. Come, the full stop.

Salan. Ha,—what say'st thou?—Why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Salar. I would it might prove the end of his losses!

Salan. Let me say amen betimes, lest the devil cross my prayer; for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew.—

Enter Shylock.

How now, Shylock? what news among the merchants?

Shy. You knew, none so well, none so well as you, of my daughter's flight.

Salar. That's certain; I, for my part, knew the tailor that made the wings she flew withal.

Salan. And Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was fledg'd; and then it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damn'd for it.

Salar. That's certain, if the devil may be her judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel!—

Salan. Out upon it, old carrion! rebels it at these years?

Shy. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Salar. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory; more between your bloods, than there is between red wine and renish:—But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio have had any loss at sea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto;—a beggar, that used to come so snug upon the mart;—let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer;—let him look to his bond! he was wont to lend money for a Christian courtesy;—let him look to his bond.

Salar. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh: What's that good for?

Shy. To bait fish withal: if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me of half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorned my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enmies; and what's the reason? I am a Jew: Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? if you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? if we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrongs a Christian, what is his humility? revenge; If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by Christian example? why, revenge. The villain, you teach me, I will execute; and it shall go hard, but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house, and desires to speak with you both.

Salar. We have been up and down to seek him.

Enter Tubal.

Salan. Here comes another of the tribe; a third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew. [Exeunt Salano, Salar, and Servant.]

Shy. How now, Tubal, what news from Genoa? hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

Shy. Why there, there, there! a diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort! The curse never fell upon our nation till now; I never felt it till now:—two thousand ducats in that; and other precious, precious jewels.—I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! 'would she were hears'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin! No news of them?—Why, so:—and I know not what's spent in the search: Why, thou loss upon loss! the thief gone with so much, and so much to find the thief; and no satisfaction, no revenge: nor no ill luck stirring, but what lights o' my shoulders; no sighs, but o' my breathing; no tears, but o' my shedding.

Tub. Yes, other men have ill luck too; Antonio as I heard in Genoa,—

Shy. What, what, what? ill luck, ill luck?

Tub. —hath an argosy cast away, coming from Tripoli.

Shy. I thank God, I thank God:—Is it true? is it true?

Tub. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

Shy. I thank thee, good Tubal;—Good news, good news: ha! ha!—Where? in Genoa?

Tub. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, one night, fourscore ducats.

Shy. Thou stiek'st a dagger in me:—I shall never see my gold again: Fourscore ducats at a sitting! Fourscore ducats!

Tub. There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it: I'll plague him; I'll torture him; I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them showed me a ring, that he had of your daughter for a monkey.

Shy. Out upon her! Thou tormentest me, Tubal. it was my turquoise; I had it of Leah, when I was a bachelor: I would not have given it for a wilder ness of monkeys.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay, that's true, that's very true: Go,
Tubal, fee me an officer, bespeak him a fortnight before: I will have the heart of him, if he forfeit; for were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandise I will: Go, go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue; go, good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—BELMONT. A Room in Portia’s House.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, Nerissa, and Attendants. The baskets are set out.

Por. I pray you, tarry; pause a day or two, Before you hazard; for, in choosing wrong, I lose your company; therefore, forbear a while: There’s something tells me, (but it is not love,) I would not lose you; and you know yourself, Hate counsels not in such a quality: But lest you should not understand me well, (And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought,) I would detain me. Go, and come some other day. Bass. Let me choose; For, as I am, I live upon the rack.

Por. Upon the rack, Bassanio? then confess What treason there is mingled with your love. Bass. None, but that ugly treason of mistrust, Which makes me fear the enjoying of my love: There may as well be amity and life, As snow and fire, as treason and my love.

Por. Ay, but I fear, you speak upon the rack, Where men enforced do speak any thing. Bass. Promise me life, and I’ll confess the truth. Por. Well then, confess, and live. Bass. Confess, and love, Had been the very sum of my confession: O happy torment, when my torturer Doth teach me answers for deliverance! But let me to my fortune and the caskets.

Por. Away then: I am lock’d in one of them; If you do love me, you will find me out.— Nerissa, and the rest, stand all aloof.— Let music sound, while he doth make his choice; Then, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end, Fading in music: that the comparison May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream, And wat’ry death-bed for him: He may win; And what is music then? then music is Even as the flourish when true subjects bow To a new-crowned monarch: such it is, As are those dulcet sounds in break of day, That creep into the dreaming bridgroom’s ear, And summon him to marriage. Now he goes, With no less presence, but with much more love, Than young Alcides, when he did redeem The virgin tribute paid by howling Troy

To the sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice, The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives, With blear’d visages, come forth to view The issue of the exploit. Go, Hericules! Live thou, I live:—With much, much more dismay I view the fight, than thou that mak’st the fray.

Music, whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself.

SONG.

1. Tell me where is fancy bred, Or in the heart, or in the head? How begot, how nourished?

Reply.

2. It is engender’d in the eyes, With gazings fed; and fancy dies In the cradle where it lies: Let us all ring fancy’s knell; I’ll begin it, —Ding, dong, bell.

All. Ding, dong, dong, bell.

Bass.—So near the outward shows be least themselves; The world is still deceiv’d with ornament. In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt, But, being season’d with a gracious voice, Obscures the show of evil? In religion, What damned error, but some sober brow Will bless it, and approve it with a text, Hiding the grossness with fair ornament? There is no vice so simple, but assumes Some mark of virtue on his outward parts. How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins The beads of Herocles, and crowning Mars; Who, inward search’d, have livers white as milk! And these assume but valour’s excrement, To render them redoubled. Look on beauty, And you shall see ‘tis purchas’d by the weight Which therein works a miracle in nature, Making them lightest that wear most of it: So are those crisp’d snaky golden locks, Which make such wanton gambols with the wind, Upon supposed fairness, often known To be the dowry of a second head,— The soul that bred them, in the sepulchre. Thus ornament is but the guiled shore To a most dangerous sea; the beauteous scarf Veiling an Indian beauty; in a word, The seeming truth which cunning times put on To entrap the wisest. Therefore, thou gaudy gold, Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee: Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drudge ’Twen man and man: but thou, thou meagre, Which rather threat’nest, than dost promise aught,— Thy plainness moves me not more than eloquence, And here choose I; Joy be the consequence!

Por. How all the other passions fleet to air, As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embrac’d despair And should’ring fear, and green-eyed jealousy! O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstasy, In measure rain thy joy, scant this excess; I feel too much thy blessing, make it less, For fear I surfeit!

Bass. What find I here?

Fair Portia’s counterfeit? What demi-god Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes: Or whether, riding on the balls of mine, Seem they in motion? Here are sever’d lips, Parted with sugar breath; so sweet a bar
To cry, good joy; Good joy, my lord and lady!

Gra. My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish;
For I am sure, you can wish none from me:
And, when your honours mean to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you,
Even at that time I may be married too.

Bass. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Gra. I thank your lordship; you have got meone.
My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours:
You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid;
You lov'd, I lov'd; for intermission:
No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon the caskets there;
And so did mine too, as the matter falls:
For wooling here, until I sweat again;
And swearing, till my very roof was dry
With oaths of love; at last,—if promise last,—
I got a promise of this fair one here,
To have her love, provided that your fortune
Achiv'd her mistress.

Por. Is this true, Nerissa?

Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleas'd withal.

Bass. And you, Gratiano, mean good faith?

Gra. Yes, faith, my lord.

Bass. Our feast shall be much honour'd in your marriage.

Gra. We'll play with them, the first boy for a thousand ducats.

Ner. What, and stake down?

Gra. No: we shall ne'er win at that sport, and stake down,—
But who comes here? Lorenzo, and his infidel
What, and my old Venetian friend, Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio.

Bass. Lorenzo, and Salerio, welcome hither;
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have power to bid you welcome,—By your leave,
I bid my very friends and countrymen,
Sweet Portia, welcome.

Por. So do I, my lord;
They are entirely welcome.

Lor. I thank your honour.—For my part, my
My purpose was not to have seen you here: [lord,
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did entreat me, past all saying nay,
To come with him along.

Sale. I did, my lord,
And I have reason for it
Signior Antonio
Commends him to you. [Gives Bassanio a letter.

Bass. Ere I ope his letter,
I pray you tell me how my good friend doth.

Sale. Not sick, my lord, unless it be in mind;
Nor well, unless in mind: his letter there
Will show you his estate.

Gra. Nerissa, cheer yond stranger; bid her welcome.

Your hand, Salerio; What's the news from Venice?
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio?
I know, he will be glad of our success;
We are the Jasons, we have won the fleece.

Sale. 'Would you had won the fleece that he hath lost!

Por. There are some shrewd contents in yond
Express'd, but not express'd. But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence;
O, then be bold to say, Bassanio's dead.

Ner. My lord and lady, it is now our time,
That have stood by, and seen our wishes prosper,
With leave, Bassanio; I am half yourself, And I must freely have the half of any thing That this same paper brings you.

Bass. [Reads.] O sweet Portia, How few of the unpleasant'at words, That ever blotted paper! Gentle lady, When I did first impart my love to you, I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman; And then I told you true: and yet, dear lady, Rating myself at nothing, you shall see How much I was a braggart: When I told you My state was nothing, I should then have told you That I was worse than nothing; for, indeed, I have engag’d myself to a dear friend, Engag’d my friend to his mere enemy, To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady; The paper as the body of my friend, And every word in it a gaping wound, Issuing life-blood. But is it true, Saliero? Have all his ventures fail’d? What, not one hit? From Tripolis, from Mexico, and England, From Lisbon, Barbary, and India? And not one vessel ‘scape the dreadful touch Of merchant-warring rocks?

Sale. Not one, my lord. Besides, it should appear, that if he had The present money to discharge the Jew, He would not take it: Never did I know A creature, that did bear the shape of man, So keen and greedy to confound a man: He plies the duke at morning, and at night; And doth impeach the freedom of the state, If they deny him justice: twenty merchants, The duke himself, and the magnificoes Of greatest port, have all persuaded with him; But none can drive him from the envious plea Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond. Jes. When I was with him, I have heard him swear, To Tubal, and to Chus, his countrymen, That he would rather have Antonio’s flesh, Than twenty times the value of the sum That he did owe him; and I know, my lord, If law, authority, and power deny not, It will go hard with poor Antonio. Por. Is it your dear friend, that is thus in trouble? Bass. The dearest friend to me, the kindest man, The best condition’d and unwearied spirit In doing courtesies; and one in whom The ancient Roman honour more appears, Than any that draws breath in Italy. Por. What sum owes he the Jew? Bass. For me, three thousand ducats. Por. What, no more? Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond; Double six thousand, and then treble that, Before a friend of this description Shall lose a hair through Bassanio’s fault. First, go with me to church, and call me wife: And then away to Venice to your friend; For never shall you lie by Portia’s side With an unseen soul. You shall have gold To pay the petty debt twenty times over; When it is paid, bring your true friend along: My maid Nerissa, and myself, mean time, Will live as maids and widows. Come, away; For you shall hence upon your wedding-day: Bid your friends welcome, show a merry cheer; Since you are dear bought, I will love you dear. But let me hear the letter of your friend.

Bass. [Reads.] Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeit; and since, in paying it, it is impossible I should live, all debts are cleared between you and I, if I might but see you at my death: notwithstanding, use your pleasure: if your love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter.

Por. O love, despatch all business, and be gone. Bass. Since I have your good leave to go away, I will make haste: but, till I come again, No bed shall e’er be guilty of my stay, No rest be interposer ‘twixt us twain. [Exeunt]

SCENE III.—VENICE. A Street. Enter Shylock, Salanio, Antonio, and Gaoler.

Shy. Gaoler, look to him; Tell not me of mercy:— This is the fool that lent out money gratis;— Gaoler, look to him.

Ant. Hear me yet, good Shylock. Shy. I’ll have my bond; Speak not against my bond; I have sworn an oath, that I will have my bond: Thou call’dst me dog, before thou had’st a cause: But, since I am a dog, beware my fangs: The duke shall grant me justice.—I do wonder, Thou naughty gaoler, that thou art so fond To come abroad with him at his request.

Ant. I pray thee, hear me speak.

Shy. I’ll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak:

I’ll have my bond; and therefore speak no more. I’ll not be made a soft and dull-ey’d fool, To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield To Christian intercessors. Follow not; I’ll have no speaking; I will have my bond. [Exit Shylock.

Salan. It is the most impenetrable cur, That ever kept with men.

Ant. Let him alone; I’ll follow him no more with bootless prayers. He seeks my life; his reason well I know; I oft deliver’d from his forfeitures Many that have at times made moan to me; Therefore he hates me.

Salan. I am sure, the duke Will never grant this forfeit to hold. Ant. The duke cannot deny the course of law; For the commodity that strangers have With us in Venice, if it be denied, Will much impeach the justice of the state; Since that the trade and profit of the city Consisteth of all nations. Therefore, go: These griefs and losses have so ’bated me, That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh To-morrow to my bloody creditor.—— Well, gaoler, on:—Pray God, Bassanio come To see me pay his debt, and then I care not! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—BELMONT. A Room in Portia’s House.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and Baltazar.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your pre- You have a noble and a true conceit [sense Of god-like amity; which appears most strongly In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But, if you knew to whom you show this honour,
How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover of my lord your husband,
I know, you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love.
There must be needs be a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit;
Which makes me think, that this Antonio,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord: If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestowed,
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish cruelty!
This comes too near the praising of myself;
Therefore, no more of it: hear other things.—
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house,
Until my lord’s return: for mine own part,
I have toward heaven breath’d a secret vow,
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here,
Until her husband and my lord’s return:
There is a monastery two miles off,
And there we will abide. I do desire you,
Not to deny this imposition;
The which my love, and some necessity,
Now lays upon you.

Lor. Madam, with all my heart,
I shall obey you in all fair commands.

Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of lord Bassanio and myself.
So fare you well, till we shall meet again.

Lor. Fair thoughts, and happy hours, attend on you!

Jes. I wish your ladyship all heart’s content.

Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well pleas’d
To wish it back on you: fare you well, Jessica.—

[Exeunt Jessica and Lorenzo.]

Now, Balthazar,
As I have ever found thee honest, true,
So let me find thee still: Take this same letter,
And use thou all the endeavours of a man,
In speed to Padua; see thou render this
Into my cousin’s hand, doctor Bellario;
And, look, what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin’d speed
Unto the transect, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice:—waste no time in words,
And get thee gone, I shall be there before thee.

Balth. Madam, I go with all convenient speed.

[Exit.]

Por. Come on, Nerissa; I have work in hand,
That you yet know not of: we’ll see our husbands,
Before they think of us.

Ner. Shall they see us?

Por. They shall, Nerissa; but in such a habit,
That they shall think we are accomplished
With what we lack. I’ll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accouter’d like young men,
I’ll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace;
And speak, between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth: and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying, they fell sick and died;
I could not do withal: then I’ll repent,
And wish, for all that, that I had not kill’d them:
And twenty of these puny lies I’ll tell,
That men should swear, I have discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth:—I have within my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise.

Ner. How shall we turn to men?

Por. Fye! what a question’s that,
If thou wert near a lewd interpreter?
But come, I’ll tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my coach, which stays for us
At the park-gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. A Garden.

Enter Launcelot and Jessica.

Laun. Yes, truly;—for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children; therefore,
I promise you, I fear you. I was always plain with you, and so now I speak my agitation of the matter: Therefore, be of good cheer; for, truly, I think, you are damn’d. There is but one hope in it that can do you any good; and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Laun. Marry, you may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew’s daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed;
so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Laun. Truly then I fear you are damned both by father and mother: thus when I shun Scylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother; well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Laun. Truly, the more to blame he: we were Christians enough before; e’en as many as could well live, one by another: This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Enter Lorenzo.

Jes. I’ll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say; here he comes.

Lor. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Laun-celot, if you thus get my wife into corners.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear us, Lorenzo;
Launcelot and I are out: he tells me flatly, there is no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew’s daughter: and he says, you are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork.

Lor. I shall answer that better to the commonwealth, than you can the getting up of the negro’s belly; the Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

Laun. It is much, that the Moor should be more than reason: but if she be less than an honest woman, she is, indeed, more than I took her for.

Lor. How every fool can play upon the word! I think, the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence; and discourse grow commendable in none only but parrots.—Go in sirrah; bid them prepare for dinner.

Laun. That is done, sir; they have all stomachs.

Lor. Godly lord, what a wit-snapper are you! then bid them prepare dinner.

Laun. That is done, too, sir: only, cover is the word.

Lor. Will you cover then, sir?

Laun. Not a bit, sir, neither; I know my duty.

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occasion! Wilt thou show the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant? I pray thee, understand a plain man in his plain meaning; go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Laun. For the table, sir, it shall be served in; for the meat, sir, it shall be covered; for your coming in to dinner, sir, why, let it be as humours and conceits shall govern.

[Exit Launcelot.

Lor. O dear discretion! how his words are suited! The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; And I do know
A many fools, that stand in better place,
Garnish’d like him, that for a tricksey word

Defy the matter. How cheer’st thou, Jessica? And now, good sweet, say thy opinion,
How dost thou like the lord Bassanio’s wife?

Jes. Past all expressing: it is very meet,
The lord Bassanio live an upright life;
For, having such a blessing in his lady,
He finds the joys of heaven here on earth;
And, if on earth he do not mean it, it
Is reason he should never come to heaven.
Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match,
And on the wager lay two earthly women,
And Portia one, there must be something else
Pawn’d with the other; for the poor rude world
Hath not her fellow.

Lor. Even such a husband Hast thou of me, as she is for a wife.

Jes. Nay, but ask my opinion too of that.

Lor. I will anon; first, let us go to dinner.

Jes. Nay, let me praise you, while I have a stomach.

Lor. No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk:
Then, howsoe’er thou speakest, ’mong other things
I shall digest it.

Jes. Well, I’ll set you forth. [Exeunt.

SCENE I.—VENICE. A Court of Justice.

Enter the Duke, the Magnificos; Antonio, Bassanio, Gratiano, Salanio, Salano, and others.

Duke. What, is Antonio here?

Ant. Ready, so please your grace.

Duke. I am sorry for thee; thou art come to
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch [answer
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy.

Ant. I have heard,
Your grace hath ta’en great pains to qualify
His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy’s reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury; and am arm’d
To suffer, with a quietness of spirit,
The very tyranny and rage of his.

Duke. Go one, and call the Jew into the court.

Sala. He’s ready at the door: he comes, my lord.

Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our face.
Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too,
That thou hast hid this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then, ’tis thought,
Thou’lt show thy mercy and remorse, more strange
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty:
And where thou now exact’st the penalty,
(Which is a pound of this poor merchant’s flesh,) Thou wilt not only lose the forfeiture,
But touch’d with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a moiety of the principal;
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so boggled on his back;
Enough to press a royal merchant down,
And pluck commiseration of his state
From brassy bosoms, and rough hearts of flint,
From stubborn—Turks, and Tartars, never train’d
To offices of tender courtesy.
We all expect a gentle answer, Jew.

ACT IV.

Shy. I have possess’d your grace of what I pur-
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn, [pose;
To have the due and forfeit of my bond.
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city’s freedom.
You’ll ask me, why I rather choose to have
A weight of carrion flesh, than to receive
Three thousand ducats: I’ll not answer that:
But, say, it is my humour; Is it answer’d?
What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleas’d to give ten thousand ducats
To have it baned? What, are you answer’d yet?
Some men there are, love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bagpipe sings i’ the nose,
Cannot contain their urine; for affection,
Mistress of passion, sways it to the mood
Of what it likes, or loathes: Now, for your answer,
As there is no firm reason to be render’d,
Why he cannot abide a gaping pig?
Why he, a harmless necessary cat;
Why he, a swollen bagpipe; but of force
Must yield to such inevitable shame,
As to offend, himself being offended;
So can I give no reason, nor I will not
More than a lodg’d hate, and a certain loathing,
I bear Antonio, that I follow thus
A losing suit against him. Are you answer’d?

Bass. This is no answer, thou unfeeling man,
To excuse the current of thy cruelty.

Shy. I am not bound to please thee with my answer.

Bass. Do all men kill the things they do not love?

Shy. Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

Bass. Every offence is not a hate at first.

Shy. What, would’st thou have a serpent sting thee twice?

Ant. I pray you, think you question with the Jew,
You may as well go stand upon the beach,
And bid the main-flood bathe his usual height.
You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb;
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make no noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven;
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seek to soften that (than which what's harder?)
His Jewish heart:—Therefore, I do beseech you,
Make no more offers, use no further means,
But, with all brief and plain convenience,
Let me have judgment, and the Jew his will.

_Bass._ For thy three thousand ducats here is six.

Shy. If every ducat in six thousand ducats,
Were in six parts, and every part a ducat,
I would not draw them, I would have my bond.

_Duke._ How shalt thou hope for mercy, rend'ring none?

Shy. What judgment shall I dread, doing no wrong?
You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish parts,
Because you bought them:—Shall I say you,
Let them be free, marry them to your heirs?
Why scatter you among burdens? let their beds
Be made as soft as yours, and let their palates
Be seasoned with such viands? You will answer,
The slaves are ours:—So do I answer you;
The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought, is mine, and I will have it:
If you deny me, fye upon your law!
There is no force in the decrees of Venice:
I stand for judgment: answer: shall I have it?

_Duke._ Upon my power, I may dismiss this court,
Unless Bellario, a learned doctor,
Whom I have sent for to determine this,
Come here to-day.

_Salar._ My lord, here stays without
A messenger with letters from the doctor,
New come from Padua.

_Duke._ Bring us the letters; Call the messenger.

_Bass._ Good cheer, Antonio! What, man? cou rage yet!
The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones, and all,
Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood.

_Ant._ I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Mostest loathed; death! the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me:
You cannot better be employ'd, Bassanio,
Than to live still, and write mine epitaph.

_Enter Nerissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk._

_Duke._ Came you from Padua, from Bellario?

_Ner._ From both, my lord: Bellario greets your grace.

[Prepresents a letter.

_Bass._ Why dost thou whet thy knife so earnestly?

Shy. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrupt there.

_Jew,_ Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh
Then mak'st thy knife keen: but no metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Can no prayers pierce thee?

_Shy._ No, none that thou hast wit enough to make.

_Gra._ O, be thou damn'd, inexorable dog!
And for thy life let justice be accus'd!
Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men: thy curish spirit
'Sourn'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Even from the gallows did his fell soul fleet,
And, whilst thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam,
Infus'd itself in thee; for thy desires
Are woful, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous.

_Shy._ Till thou can'st rai! the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud:
Repair thy wit, good youth; or it will fall
To curseless ruin.—I stand here for law.

_Duke._ This letter from Bellario doth commend
A young and learned doctor to our court:—
Where is he?

_Ner._ He attendeth here hard by,
To know your answer, whether you'll admit him.

_Duke._ With all my heart:—some three or four of you,
Go give him courteous conduct to this place.—
Meantime, the court shall hear Bellario's letter.

[Clerk reads.] Your grace shall understand, that, at the receipt of your letter, I am very sick: but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome, his name is Balthasar: Inquaetted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio the merchant; we turned over many books together: he is furnish'd with my opinion; which, better'd with his own learning, (the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend,) comes with him, at my importunity to fill up your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you let his letter of places be no impediment to let him lack a reverend estimation; for I never knew so young a body with so old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial shall better publish his commendation.

_Duke._ You hear the learned Bellario, what he writes:

And here, I take it, is the doctor come.—

_Enter Portia, dressed like a doctor of law._

Give me your hand: Came you from old Bellario.

_Por._ I did, my lord.

_Duke._ You are welcome: take your place.
Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?

_Por._ I am informed throughly of the cause.
Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew?

_Duke._ Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth.

_Por._ Is your name Shylock?

_Shy._ Shylock is my name.

_Por._ Of a strange nature is the suit you follow:
Yet in such a rule, that the Venetian law
Cannot impugn you, as you do proceed.—
You stand within his danger, do you not?

[To Antonio.]
That in the course of justice, none of us
Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy;
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy. I have spoke thus much,
To mitigate the justice of thy plea;
Which if thou follow, this strict court of Venice
Must needs give sentence 'gainst the merchant there.

Shy. My deeds upon my head! I crave the law,
The penalty and forfeit of my bond.

Por. Is he not able to discharge the money?

Bass. Yes, here I tender it for him in the court;
Yea, twice the sum: if that will not suffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times o'er,
On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart:
If this will not suffice, it must appear
That malice bears down truth. And I beseech you,
Wrest once the law to your authority:
To do a great right do a little wrong;
And curb this cruel devil of his will.

Por. It must not be; there is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree established:
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state: it cannot be. [Daniel!
Shy. A Daniel come to judgment! yea, a
O wise young judge, how do I honour thee!

Por. I pray you, let me look upon the bond.

Shy. Here it is most reverend doctor, here it is.

Por. Shylock, there's thrice thy money offer'd thee.

Shy. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven:
Shall I lay perjury upon my soul?
No, not for Venice.

Por. Why, this bond is forfeit;
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off
Nearest the merchant's heart:—Be merciful!
Take thrice thy money; bid me tear the bond.

Shy. When it is paid according to the tenour.—
It doth appear, you are a worthy judge;
You know the law, your exposition
Hath been most sound: I charge you by the law,
Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar,
Proceed to judgment: by my soul I swear,
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me: I stay here on my bond.

Ant. Most heartily I do beseech the court
To give the judgment.

Por. Why then, thus it is.
You must prepare your bosom for his knife:

Shy. O noble judge! O excellent young man
Por. For the intent and purpose of the law
Hath full relation to the penalty,
Which here appeareth due upon the bond.

Shy. 'Tis very true: O wise and upright judge:
How much more elder art thou than thy looks!

Por. Therefore, lay bare your bosom.

Shy. Ay, his breast:
So says the bond:—Doth it not, noble judge?—
Nearest his heart, those are the very words.

Por. It is so. Are there balance here, to weigh
The flesh?

Shy. I have them ready

Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge,
To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.

Shy. Is it so nominated in the bond?

Por. It is not so express'd; But what of that?
'Twere good you do so much for charity.

Shy. I cannot find it; 'tis not in the bond.

Por. Come, merchant, have you any thing to say?

Ant. But little; I am arm'd, and well prepar'd.—
Give me your hand, Bassanio; fare you well!
Grieve not that I am fallen to this for you;
For herein fortune shows herself more kind
Than is her custom: it is still her use,
To let the wretched man out-live his wealth,
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow,
An age of poverty; from which lingering penance
Of such a misery doth she cut me off.
Commend me to your honourable wife:
Tell her the process of Antonio's end,
Say, how I lov'd you, speak me fair in death;
And, when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether Bassanio had not once a love.
Repent not you that you shall lose your friend,
And he repents not that he pays your debt;
For, if the Jew do cut but deep enough,
I'll pay it instantly with all my heart.

Bass. Antonio, I am married to a wife,
Which is as dear to me as life itself;
But life itself, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me esteem'd above thy life;
I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all
Here to this devil, to deliver you.

Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for
If she were by, to hear you make the offer. [that,
Gra. I have a wife, whom, I protest I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some power to change this cur'ous Jew.

Ner. 'Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make else an unquiet house.

Shy. These be the Christian husbands: I have a daughter:
'Would, any of the stock of Barrabas
Had been her husband, rather than a Christian! [Aside

We trifle time; I pray thee, pursue sentence.

Por. A pound of that same merchant's flesh is time;
The court awards it, and the law doth give it.

Shy. Most rightful judge!

Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast;
The law allows it, and the court awards it.

Shy. Most learned judge!—A sentence; come, prepare.

Por. Tarry a little;—there is something else.—
This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are a pound of flesh:
Take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh;
But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate
Unto the state of Venice.

Gra. O upright judge!—Mark, Jew;—O learned
Shy. Is that the law? [judge!

Por. Thyself shall see the act:
For, as thou urgest justice, be assur'd,
Thou shalt have justice, more than thou desir'st.

Gra. O learned judge!—Mark, Jew;—a learned judge!

Shy. I take this offer then,—pay the bond thrice,
And let the Christian go.

Bass. Here is the money.

Por. Soft:
The Jew shall have all justice;—soft;—no haste:—
He shall have nothing but the penalty.

Gra. O Jew! an upright judge, a learned judge

Por. Therefore, prepare thee to cut off the flesh
Shed thou no blood; nor cut thou less, nor more, But just a pound of flesh: if thou tak'st more, Or less, than a just pound,—be it but so much As makes it light, or heavy, in the substance, Or the division of the twentieth part Of one poor scruple: say, if the scale do turn But in the estimation of a hair,— Thou diest, and all thy goods are confiscate.

Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew! Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip.

Por. Why doth the Jew pause? take thy forfeiture. Shy. Give me my principal, and let me go. Bass. I have it ready for thee; here it is.

Por. He hath refus'd it in the open court; He shall have merely justice, and his bond.

Gra. A Daniel, still say I; a second Daniel!— I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word. Shy. Shall I not barely have my principal? Por. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture, To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.

Shy. Why then the devil give him good of it! I'll stay no longer question.

Por. Tarry, Jew; The law hath yet another hold on you. It is enacted in the laws of Venice,— If it be prov'd against an alien, That by direct, or indirect attempts, He seek the life of any citizen, The party, 'gainst which he doth contrive, Shall seize one half his goods; the other half Cometh to the privy coffer of the state: And the offender's life lies in the mercy Of the duke only; 'gainst all other voice. In which predicament, I say, thou stand'st For it appears by manifest proceeding, That, indirectly, and directly too, Thou hast contriv'd against the very life Of the defendant; and thou hast incurred The danger formerly by me rehearsed.

Down, therefore, and beg mercy of the duke.

Gra. Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state, Thou hast not left the value of a cord; Therefore, thou must be hang'd at the state's charge.

Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it: For half thy wealth, it is Antonio's; The other half comes to the general state, Which humbleness may drive unto a fine.

Por. Ay, for the state; not for Antonio.

Shy. Nay, take my life and all, pardon not that: You take my house, when you do take the prop That doth sustain my house; you take my life, When you do take the means whereby I live.

Por. What mercy can you render him, Antonio?

Gra. A halter gratis; nothing else; for God's sake. [Exeunt court and Nieansa.

Ant. So please my lord the duke, and all the
To quit the fine for one half of his goods; I am content, so he will let me have The other half in use,—to render it, Upon his death, unto the gentleman That lately stole his daughter: Two things provided more,—That for this favour, He presently become a Christian; The other, that he do record a gift, Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd, Unto his son Lorenzo, and his daughter.

Duke. He shall do this; or else I do recant The pardon, that I late pronounced here.

Por. Art thou contented, Jew, what dost thou
Shy. I am content. [say?

Por. Clerk, draw a deed of gift.

Shy. I pray you give me leave to go from hence: I am not well; send the deed after me, And I will sign it.

Duke. Get thee gone, but do it.

Gra. In christening, thou shalt have two godfathers;
Had I been judge, thou shoul'dst have had ten more, To bring thee to the gallows, not the font.

[Exit Shylock.

Duke. Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.

Por. I humbly do desire your grace of pardon; I must away this night toward Padua. And it is meet, I presently set forth.

Duke. I am sorry, that thy leisure serves you Antionio, gratify this gentleman;

Por. For, in my mind, you are much bound to him. [Exit Duke, Magnificoes, and Train.

Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend, Have by your wisdom been this day acquitt'd Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof, Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew, We freely cope your courteous pains withal.

Ant. And stand indebted, over and above, In love and service to you evermore.

Por. He is well paid that is well satisfied, And I, delivering you, am satisfied, And therein do account myself well paid; My mind was never yet more mercenary.

I pray you, know me, when we meet again; I wish you well, and so I take my leave.

Bass. Dear sir, of force I must attempt you further;
Take some remembrance of us, as a tribute, Not as a fee: grant me two things, I pray you, Not to deny me, and to pardon me.

Por. You press me far, and therefore I will yield. Give me your gloves, I'll wear them for your sake; And, for your love, I'll take this ring from you:— Do not draw back your hand; I'll take no more; And you in love shall not deny me this.

Bass. This ring, good sir,—alas, it is a trifle; I will not shame myself to give you this.

Por. I will have nothing else but only this; And now, methinks, I have a mind to it.

Bass. There's more depends on this than on the value. The dearest ring in Venice will I give you And find it out by proclamation; Only for this, I pray you, pardon me.

Por. I see, sir, you are liberal in offers: You taught me first to beg; and now, methinks, You teach me how a beggar should be answer'd.

Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my And, when she put it on, she made me vow, [wife; That I should neither sell, nor give, nor lose it.

Por. That 'scuse serves many men to save their An if your wife be not a mad woman, [gifts. And know how well I have deserv'd this ring; She would not hold out enemy for ever, For giving it to me. Well, peace be with you!

[Exit Portia and Nerissa.

Ant. My lord Bassanio, let him have the ring; Let his deservings, and my love withal, Be valued 'gainst your wife's commandment.

Bass. Go, Gratiano, run and overtake him,
SCENE I.——BELMONT. Avenue to Portia's House.

Enter Lorenzo and Jessica.

Lor. The moon shines bright:——In such a night as this,
    When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
    And they did make no noise; in such a night,
    Troilus, methinks, mounted the Trojan walls,
    And sigh'd his soul toward the Grecian tents,
    Where Cressid lay that night.

Jes. In such a night,
    Did Theseus fearfully o'ertrip the dew;
    And saw the lion's shadow ere himself,
    And ran dismay'd away.

Lor. In such a night,
    Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
    Upon the wild sea-banks, and wav'd her love
    To come again to Carthage.

Jes. In such a night,
    Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
    That did renew old Aeson.

Lor. In such a night,
    Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew:
    And with an unthrift love did run from Venice,
    As far as Belmont.

Jes. And in such a night,
    Did young Lorenzo swear he lov'd her well;
    Stealing her soul with many vows of faith,
    And ne'er a true one.

Lor. And in such a night,
    Did pretty Jessica, like a little shrew,
    Slander her love, and he forgave it her.

Jes. I would out-night you, did no body come:
    But, hark, I hear the footing of a man.

Enter Stephano.

Lor. Who comes so fast in silence of the night?

Steph. A friend.

Lor. A friend? what friend? your name, I pray you, friend?

Steph. Stephano is my name; and I bring word,
    My mistress will before the break of day
    Be here at Belmont; she doth stratay about
    By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
    For happy wedlock hours.

Lor. Who comes with her?

Hath sent you here this ring; and doth entreat
Your company at dinner.

Por. That cannot be:
    This ring I do accept most thankfully.
    And so, I pray you, tell him; Furthermore,
    I pray you, show my youth old Shylock's house.

Gra. That will I do.

Ner. Sir, I would speak with you:——
    I'll see if I can get my husband's ring, [To Portia.
    Which I did make him swear to keep for ever.

Por. Thou may'st, I warrant; We shall have Old swearing,
    That they did give the rings away to men;
    But we'll outface them, and outwear them too.
    Away, make haste; thou know'st where I will tarry.

Ner. Come, good sir, will you show me to this house? [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.——BELMONT. Avenue to Portia's House.

Por. Inquire the Jew's house out, give him this
    And let him sign it; we'll away to-night, [deed,
    And be a day before our husbands home.
    This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Fair sir, you are well overtaken:
    My lord Bassanio, upon more advice,
Which is the hot condition of their blood;
If they but hear perchance a trumpet sound,
Or any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of music: Therefore, the poet Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature:
The man that hath no music in himself,
No is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus:
Let no such man be trusted.—Mark the music.

Enter PORTIA and NERISSA, at a distance.

Por. That light we see, is burning in my hall:
How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Ner. When the moon shone, we did not see the candle.

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less:
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Music! hark!

Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.

Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect;
Methinks, it sounds much sweeter than by day.

Ner. Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam.

Por. The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.

How many things by season season'd are
To their right praise, and true perfection!—
Peace, hoa! the moon sleeps with Endymion,
And would not be awaked! [Music ceases.

Por. That is the voice,
Or I am much deceiv'd, of Portia.

Por. He knows me, as the blind man knows the cuckoo,
By the bad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home.

Por. We have been praying for our husbands' welfare,
Which speed, we hope, the better for our words.
Are they return'd?

Lor. Madam, they are not yet;
But there is come a messenger before,
To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa,
Give order to my servants, that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence;—
Nor you, Lorenzo;—Jessica, nor you.
[Aucket sounds.

Lor. Your husband is at hand, I hear his trumpet:
And never be Bassanio so for me;
But God sort all!—you are welcome home, my lord.

Bass. I thank you, madam: give welcome to my
This is the man, this is Antonio, [friend.—
To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should in all sense be much bound to
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you. [him,
Ant. No more than I am well acquainted of.

Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore, I scant this breathing courtesy.

[GRATIANO and NERISSA seem to talk apart.

Gra. By yonder moon, I swear, you do me
In faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk: [wrong,
Would be he gelt that had it, for my part,
Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already? what's the matter?

Gra. About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring
That she did give me; whose poesy was
For all the world, like cutler's poetry
Upon a knife, Love me, and leave me not.

Ner. What talk you of the poesy, or the value?
You swore to me, when I did give it you,
That you would wear it till your hour of death;
And that it should lie with you in your grave:
Though not fit for me, yet for your charitable uses,
You should have been respective, and have kept it.
Gave it a judge's clerk!—but well I know,
The clerk will never wear hair on his face that had
Gen. He will, an if he live to be a man. [fit.

Ner. Ay, if a woman live to be a man.

Gra. Now, by this hand, I gave it to a youth.—
A kind of boy; a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself, the judge's clerk;
A prating boy, that begged it as a fee;
I could not for my heart deny it him.

Por. You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift;
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And riveted so with faith unto thy flesh.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here he stands;
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,
Nor pluck it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world masters. Now, in faith, Gratiano,
You give your wife too unkind a cause of grief;
An 'twere to me, I should be mad at it.

Bass. Why, I were best to cut my left hand off,
And swear I never had the ring defending it. [Aside.

Gra. My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begged it, and, indeed,
Deserv'd it too; and then the boy, his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begged mine:
And neither man, nor master, would take aught
But the two rings.

Por. What ring gave you, my lord
Not that, I hope, which you receiv'd of me.

Bass. If I could add a lie unto a fault,
I would deny it; but you see, my finger
Hath not the ring upon it, if it is gone.

Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth
By heaven, I will ne'er come in your bed
Until I see the ring.

Ner. Nor I in yours,
Till I again see mine.

Bass. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
When naught would be accepted but the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Por. If you had known the virtue of the ring,
Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,
Or your own honour to contain the ring,
You would not then have parted with the ring.
What man is there so much unreasonable,
If you had pleas'd to have defended it
With any terms of zeal, wanted the modesty
To urge the thing held as a ceremony?
Nerissa teaches me what to believe;
I'll die for't, but some woman had the ring.

Bass. No, by mine honour, madam, by my soul,
No woman had it, but a civil doctor,
Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begged the ring; the which I did deny him,
And suffer'd him to go displeas'd away;
Even he that had held up the very life
Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady?
I was enforc'd to send it after him;
I was beset with shame and courtesy:
My honour would not let ingratitude
So much besmirch it: Pardon me good lady;
For by these blessed candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think, you would have begged
The ring of me to give the worthy doctor.

Por. Let not that doctor e'er come near my house:
Since he hath got the jewel that I lov'd,
And that which you did swear to keep for me,
I will become as liberal as you;
I'll not deny him any thing I have,
No, not my body, nor my husband's bed:
Know him I shall, I am well sure of it:
Lie not a night from home; watch me, like Argus:
If you do not, if I be left alone,
Now, by mine honour, which is yet my own,
I'll have that doctor for my bedfellow.

Ner. And I his clerk; therefore be well advis'd,
How you do leave to mine own protection.

Gra. Well do you so: let not me take him then;
For, if I do, I'll mar the young clerk's pen.

Ant. I am the unhappy subject of these quarrels.

Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome notwithstanding.

Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;
And, in the hearing of these many friends,
I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes,
Wherein I see myself,—

Por. Mark you but that!
In both my eyes he doubly sees himself;
In each eye one:—swear by your double self,
And there's an oath of credit.

Bass. Nay, but hear me:
Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear,
It never more will break an oath with thee.

Ant. I once did lend my body for his wealth;
Which, but for him that had your husband's ring,

To Portia.

Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound again,

My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord
Will never more break faith advisedly.

Por. Then you shall be his surety: Give him this;
And bid him keep it better than the other.

Ant. Here, lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring.

Bass. By heaven, it is the same I gave the doctor!

Por. I had it of him: pardon me, Bassanio;
For by this ring the doctor lay with me.

Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano;
For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor's clerk,
In lieu of this, last night did lie with me.

Gra. Why, this is like the mending of high-ways
In summer, where the ways are fair enough;
What! are we cuckold? ere we have desert'd it?

Por. Speak not so grossly. — You are all amaz'd:
Here is a letter, read it at your leisure;
It comes from Padua, from Bellario:
There you shall find, that Portia was the doctor;
Nerissa there, her clerk: Lorenzo here
Shall witness, I set forth as soon as you,
And but even now return'd; I have not yet
Enter'd my house. — Antonio, you are welcome;
And I have better news in store for you,
Than you expect: unseal this letter soon;
There you shall find, three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly:
You shall not know by what strange accident
I chanced on this letter.

Ant. I am dumb.

Bass. Were you the doctor, and I knew you not?

Gra. Were you the clerk, that is to make me cuckold?

Ner. Ay; but the clerk that never means to do it,
Unless he live until he be a man.

Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow;
When I am absent, then lie with my wife.

Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life, and
For here I read for certain, that my ships [living: are safely come to road.

Por. How now, Lorenzo?

My clerk hath some good comforts too for you.

Ner. Ay, and I'll give them him without a fee.—
There do I give to you, and Jessica,
From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift,
After his death, of all he dies possess'd of.

Lor. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way
Of starved people.

Por. It is almost morning,
And yet, I am sure, you are not satisfied
Of these events at full: Let us go in;
And charge us there upon inter'gatories,
And we will answer all things faithfully.

Gra. Let it be so; The first inter'gatory,
That my Nerissa shall be sworn on, is,
Whether till the next night she had rather stay;
Or go to bed now, being two hours to-day:
But were the day come, I should wish it dark,
That I were couching with the doctor's clerk.
Well, while I live, I'll fear no other thing
So sore, as keeping safe Nerissa's ring. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An Orchard, near Oliver's House.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me: By will, but a poor thousand crowns: and, as thou say'st, charged my brother, on his blessing, to breed me well: and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept: For call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly hired: but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me, his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude: I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Enter Oliver.

Adam. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Go apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.

Orl. Now, sir! what make you here?

Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.

Orl. What mar you then, sir?

Orl. Marry, sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.
Oli. And what wilt thou do? beg, when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in: I will not long be troubled with you: you shall have some part of your will: I pray you, leave me.

Ori. I will no further offend you than becomes me for my good.

Oli. Get you with him, you old dog.

Adam. Is old dog my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service.—God be with my old master! he would not have spoke such a word.

Oli. Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me? I will physic your rankness, and yet give no thousand crowns neither. Holla, Dennis!

Enter Dennis.

Den. Calls your worship?

Oli. Was not Charles, the Duke’s wrestler, here to speak with me?

Den. So please you, he is here at the door, and importunes access to you.

Oli. Call him in. [Exit Dennis.—] Twill be a good way; and to-morrow the wrestling is.

Enter Charles.

Cha. Good morrow to your worship.

Oli. Good monsieur Charles!—what’s the new news at the new court?

Cha. There’s no news at the court, sir, but the old news; that is, the old duke is banished by his younger brother the new duke; and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Oli. Can you tell, if Rosalind, the duke’s daughter, be banished with her father?

Cha. O, no: for the duke’s daughter, her cousin, so loves her,—being ever from their cradles bred together,—that she would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the court, and no less beloved of her uncle than his own daughter; and never two ladies loved as they do.

Oli. Where will the old duke live?

Cha. They say, he is already in the forest of Arden; and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England: they say many young gentlemen flock to him every day; and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Oli. What, you wrestle to-morrow before the new duke?

Cha. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand, that your younger brother, Orlando, hath a disposition to come in disguis’d against me to try a fall: To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit; and he that escapes me without some broken limb, shall acquire him well. Your brother is but young and tender; and, for your love, I would be loath to foil him, as I must, for my own honour, if he come in: therefore, out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal; that either you might stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search, and altogether against my will.

Oli. Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which thou shalt find I will most kindly requite. I had myself notice of my brother’s purpose herein, and have by underhand means laboured to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute. I’ll tell thee, Charles,—it is the stubbornest young fellow of France; full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man’s good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me his natural brother; therefore use thy discretion; I had as lief thou didst break his neck as his finger: And thou wert best look to’t; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he do not mightily grace himself on thee, he will practise against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treachrous device, and never leave thee till he hath ta’en thy life by some indirect means or other: for, I assure thee, and almost with tears I speak it, there is not one so young and so villainous this day living. I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anatomise him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou must look pale and wonder.

Cha. I am heartily glad I came hither to you: If he come to-morrow, I’ll give him his payment: If ever he go alone again, I’ll never wrestle for prize more: And so, God keep your worship! [Exit.]

Oli. Farewell, good Charles.—Now will I stir this gamester: I hope, I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he. Yet he’s gentle; never school’d, and yet learned; full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved; and, indeed, so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised: but it shall not be so long; this wrestler shall clear all: nothing remains, but that I kindle the boy thither, which now I’ll go about. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Lawn before the Duke’s Palace.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry.

Rosa. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of; and would you yet I were merrier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Herein, I see, thou lovest me not with the full weight that I love thee; if my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine; so would’st thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously temper’d as mine is to thee.

Rosa. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoice in yours.

Cel. You know, my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have; and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir: for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee again in affection: by mine honour, I will; and when I break that oath, let me turn monster; therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rose, be merry.

Rosa. From henceforth, I will, coz, and devise sports: let me see; What think you of falling in love?

Cel. Marry, I pr’ythee, do, to make sport withal: but love no man in good earnest; nor no further in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may’st in honour come off again.

Rosa. What shall be our sport then?

Cel. Let us sit and mock the good housewife,
Fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

Ros. I would, we could do so; for her benefits are mightily misplaced: and the bountiful blind woman doth not mistake in her gifts to women.

Cel. 'Tis true: for those that she makes fair, she scarce makes honest; and those, that she makes honest, she makes very ill-favouredly.

Ros. Nay, now thou goest from fortune's office to nature's: Fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of nature.

Enter Touchstone.

Cel. No? When nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by fortune fall into the fire?—Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed, there is fortune too hard for nature; when fortune makes nature's natural the cutter off of nature's wit.

Cel. Peradventure, this is not fortune's work neither, but nature's: who, perceiving our natural wits too dull to reason of such goddesses, hath sent this natural for our whetstone: for always the dulness of the fool is the whetstone of his wits.—How now, wit? whither wander you?

Touch. Mistress, you must come away to your father.

Cel. Were you made the messenger? Touch. No, by mine honour; but I was bid to come for you.

Ros. Where learned you that oath, fool?

Touch. Of a certain knight, that swore by his honour they were good pancakes, and swore by his honour the mustard was naught: now, I'll stand to it, the pancakes were naught, and the mustard was good: and yet was not the knight forsworn.

Cel. How prove you that, in the great heap of your knowledge?

Ros. Ay, marry; now unmane your wisdom.

Touch. Stand you both forth now: stroke your chins, and swear by your beards that I am a knave.

Cel. By our beards, if we had them, thou art.

Touch. By my knavery, if I had it, then I were: but if you swear by that which is not, you are not forsworn. Ros. More was this knight, swearing by his honour, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworn it away, before ever he saw those pancakes or that mustard.

Cel. Pr'ythee, who is't that thou mean'st?

Touch. One that old Frederick, your father, loves.

Cel. My father's love is enough to honour him. Enough! speak no more of him: you'll be whip'd for taxation, one of these days.

Touch. The more pity that fools may not speak wisely, what wise men do foolishly.

Cel. By my troth, thou say'st true: for since the little wit, that fools have, was silenced, the little foolery, that wise men have, makes a great show.

Here comes Monsieur Le Beau.

Enter Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news.

Cel. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their young.

Ros. Then shall we be news-cramm'd.

Cel. All the better; we shall be the more marketable. Bon jour, Monsieur Le Beau: What's the news?
AS YOU LIKE IT

Scene II.

Call] Call him hither, good Monsieur Le Beau.
Duke F. Do so; I'll not be by.

Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princes do for you.
Orl. I attend them, with all respect and duty.
Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?
Orl. No, fair princess; he is the general challenger: I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of my youth.

Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years: You have seen cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself with your eyes, or knew yourself with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety, and give over this attempt.

Do, young sir; your reputation shall not therefore be misprized: we will make it our suit to the duke, that the wrestling might not go forward.

I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts: wherein I confess me much guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies any thing. But let your fair eyes, and gentle wishes, go with me to my trial: wherein if I be foiled, there is but one shamed that was never gracious; if killed, but one dead that is willing to be so: I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me: the world no injury, for in it I have nothing; only in the world I fill up a place, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty.

The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

And mine, to eke out hers.

Fare you well. Pray heaven, I be deceived in you!

Your heart's desires be with you.

Come, where is this young gallant, that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

Ready, sir; but his will hath in it a more modest working.

You shall try but one fall.

No, I warrant your grace; you shall not entreat him to a second, that have so mightily persuaded him from a first.

You mean to mock me after; you should not have mocked me before: but come your ways.

Now, Hercules be thy speed, young man! I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the leg.

O excellent young man!

If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down.

Duke F. No more, no more.

Yes, I beseech your grace; I am not yet well breathed.

How dost thou, Charles?

Le Beau. He cannot speak, my lord.

Duke F. Bear him away.

What is thy name, young man?

Orlando, my liege; the youngest son of sir Rowland de Bois.

I would, thou hadst been son to some man else.

The world esteem'd thy father honourable, But I did find him still mine enemy:

But fare thee well; thou art a gallant youth; I would, thou hadst told me of another father.

[Exeunt Duke Frederick, Train, and Le Beau.

Le Beau. What, is my father, coz, would I do this?

Orl. I am more proud to be sir Rowland's son, His youngest son;—and would not change that To be adopted heir to Frederick.

[Calling,

Ros. My father lov'd sir Rowland as his soul, And all the world was of my father's mind: Had I before known this young man his son, I should have given him tears unto entreaties, Ere he should thus have ventur'd.

Gentle cousin, Let us go thank him, and encourage him:

My father's rough and envious disposition Sticks me at heart.

If you do keep your promises in love, But justly, as you have exceeded promise, Your mistress shall be happy.

Gentleman,

[Lifting up his chain from her neck.

Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune; That could give more, but that her hand lacks Shall we go, coz?

Ay: Fare you well, fair gentleman.

Can I not say, I thank you?

More parts Are all thrown down; and that which here stands up, Is but a quittance, a mere lifeless block.

He calls us back: My pride fell with my fortunes:

I'll ask him what he would:—Did you call, sir?—

Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown More than your enemies.

Will you go, coz?

Have with you:—Fare you well.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue?

I cannot speak to her, yet she urg'd conference.

O poor Orlando! thou art overthrown:

Or Charles, or something weaker, masters thee.

Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you To leave this place: Albeit you have deserv'd High commendation, true applause, and love; Yet such is now the duke's condition, That he misconstrues all that you have done. The duke is humourous; what he is, indeed, More suits you to conceive, than me to speak of.

I thank you, sir: and pray you, tell me this;

Which of the two was daughter of the duke That here was at the wrestling?

Neither his daughter, if we judge by

But yet, indeed, the shorter is his daughter: The other is daughter to the banish'd duke, And here detain'd by her usurping uncle, To keep his daughter company; whose loves Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters.

But I can tell you, that of late this duke Hath ta'en displeasure 'gainst his gentle niece; Grounded upon no other argument, But that the people praise her for her virtues, And pity her for her good father's sake:—

And, on my life, his malice 'gainst the lady Will suddenly break forth.

Hereafter, in a better world than this, I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.

I rest much bounden to you: fare you well.

[Exit Le Beau.
Thus must I from the smoke into the smother;
From tyrant duke, unto a tyrant brother:—
But heavenly Rosalind! [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter CELIA and ROSALIND.

Cel. Why, cousin; why Rosalind;—Cupid have mercy!—Not a word?
Ros. Not one to throw at a dog.
Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon eaves, throw some of them at me; come, name me with reasons.
Ros. Then there were two cousins laid up; when the one should be lamed with reasons, and the other mad without any.

Cel. But is all this for your father?
Ros. No, some of it for my child's father: O, how full of briers is this working-day world!

Cel. They are but burs, cousin, thrown upon thee in holiday foolery; if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.
Ros. I could shake them off my cost; these burs are in my heart.

Cel. Hem them away.
Ros. I would try; if I could cry hem, and have him.

Cel. Come, come, wrestle with thy affections.
Ros. O, they take the part of a better wrestler than myself.

Cel. O, a good wish upon you! you will try in time, in despite of a fall,—but, turning these jests out of service, let us talk in good earnest: Is it possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into so strong a liking with old sir Rowland's youngest son?

Ros. The duke my father lov'd his father dearly.
Cel. Doth it therefore ensue, that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of chase, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.

Ros. No faith, hate him not, for my sake.
Cel. Why should I not? doth he not deserve well?
Ros. Let me love him for that; and do you love him, because I do:—Look, here comes the duke.

Cel. With his eyes full of anger.

Enter DUKE FREDERICK, with Lords.

Duke F. Mistress, despatch you with your safest
And get you from our court. [haste, Ros.

Duke. You, cousin:
Within these ten days if that thou be'st found
So near our public court as twenty miles,
Thou diest for it.

Ros. I do beseech your grace,
Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me:
If with myself I hold intelligence,
Or have acquaintance with mine own desires;
If that I do not dream, or be not frantic,(As I do trust I am not,) then, dear uncle,
Never so much as in a thought unborn,
Did I offend your highness.

Duke. Thus do all traitors;
If their purgation did consist in words,
They are as innocent as grace itself:—
Let it suffice thee, that I trust thee not.
Ros. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor:
Tell me, whereon the likehood depend.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, and other Lords, in the dress of Foresters.

Duke S. Now, my co-mates, and brothers in exile!

Hath not old custom made this life more sweet Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods More free from peril than the envious court? Here feel we but the penalty of Adam, The seasons’ difference: as, the icy fang, And curulish chiding of the winter’s wind; Which when it bites and blows upon my body, Even till I shrink with cold, I smile, and say,—This is no flattery: these are counsellors That feelingly persuade me what I am. Sweet are the uses of adversity; Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous, Wears yet a precious jewel in his head; And this our exile, exempt from public haunt, Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in everything. Ami. I would not change it: Happy is your grace, That can translate the stubbornness of fortune Into so quiet and so sweet a style.

Duke S. Come, shall we go and kill us venison? And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fawns,— Being native burghers of this desert city,— Should, in their own confines, with forked heads Have their round haunches gor’d. Indeed, my lord, The melancholy Jaques grieves at that; And, in that kind, swears you do more usurp Than doth your brother that hath banish’d you. To-day, my lord of Amiens, and myself, Did steal behind him, as he lay along Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood: To the which place a poor sequester’d stag, That from the hunters’ aim had ta’en a hurt, Did come to languish; and, indeed, my lord, The wretched animal he’rd forth such groans, That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat Almost to bursting; and the big round tears Cour’d one another down his innocent nose In piteous chase: and thus the hairy fool, Much marked of the melancholy Jaques, Stood on the extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears.

Duke S. But what said Jaques? Did he not moralize this spectacle?

Duke. O, yes, into a thousand similies.

First, for his weeping in the needless stream; Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak’st a testament, As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more To that which had too much: Then, being alone. Left and abandon’d of his velvet friends; 'Tis right, quoth he; this misery doth part The flux of company: Anon, a careless herd, Full of the pasture, jumps along by him, And never stays to greet him; Ay, quoth Jaques, Sweep on, you fat and greasy citizens; 'Tis just the fashion: Wherefore do you look Upon that poor and broken bankrupt there? Thus most invectively he pierceth through The body of the country, city, court, Yea, and of this our life: swearing, that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what’s worse, To fright the animals, and to kill them up, In their assign’d and native dwelling place.

Duke S. And did you leave him in this contemplation?

2 Lord. We did, my lord, weeping, and comp. Upon the sobbing deer. [Mentling Duke S.] Show me the place; I love to cope him in these sullen fits, For then he’s full of matter.

2 Lord. I’ll bring you to him straight. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke F. Can it be possible, that no man saw them? It cannot be: some villains of my court Are of consent and sufferance in this.

1 Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her. The ladies, her attendants of her chamber, Saw her a-bed; and, in the morning early, They found the bed untreasur’d of their mistress.

2 Lord. My lord, the roynish clown, at whom so oft Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing. Hesperia, the princess’ gentlewoman, Confesses, that she secretly o’erheard Your daughter and her cousin much commend The parts and graces of the wrestler That did but lately foil the sinewy Charles; And she believes, wherever they are gone, That youth is surely in their company.

Duke F. Send to his brother; fetch that gallant If he be absent, bring his brother to me, [hither: I’ll make him find him: do this suddenly: And let not search and inquisition quail To bring again these foolish runaways. [Exeunt.
SCENE III.—Before Oliver’s House.

Enter Orlando and Adam, meeting.

Orl. Who’s there?
Adam. What! my young master?—O, my gentle master,
O, my sweet master, O you memory
Of old sir Rowland! why, what make you here?
Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you?
And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?
Why would you be so fond to overcome
The bony priser of the humours' duke?
Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.
Know you not, master, to some kind of men
Their graces serve them but as enemies?
No more do yours; your virtues, gentle master,
Are sanctified and holy traitors to you.
O, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it!

Orl. Why, what’s the matter?

Adam. O unhappy youth, come not within these doors; within this roof
The enemy of all your graces lives:
Your brother—(no, no brother; yet the son—
Yet not the son;—I will not call him son—
Of him I was about to call his father,)—
Have heard your praises; and this night he means
To burn the lodging where you use to lie,
And you within it: if I fail of that,
He will have other means to cut you off;
I overheard him, and his practices,
This no place, this house is but a butchery;
Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it.

Orl. Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me go?

Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here.

Orl. What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food?
Or, with a base and boisterous sword, enforce
A thievish living on the common road?
This I must do, or know not what to do:
Yet this I will not do, do how I can;
I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted blood, and bloody brother.

Adam. But do not so: I have five hundred
The thrifty hire I say’d under your father, [crowns, Which I did store, to be my foster-nurse, When service should in my old limbs lie lame, And unregarded age in corners thrown; Take that; and He that doth the ravens feed, Yea, providently caters for the sparrow, Be comfort to my age! Here is the gold; All this I give you: Let me be your servant; Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty: For in my youth I never did apply. Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood; Nor did not with unblushful forehead woo The means of weakness and debility; Therefore my age is as a lusty winter, Frosty, but kindly: let me go with you; I’ll do the service of a younger man In all your business and necessities

Orl. O good old man; how well in thee appears The constant service of the antique world, When service sweat for duty, not for need! Thou art not for the fashion of these times, Where none will sweat, but for promotion; And having that, do choke their service up Even with the having: it is not so with thee. But, poor old man, thou prun’st a rotten tree, That cannot so much as a blossom yield, In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry: But come thy ways, we’ll go along together; And ere we have thy youthful wages spent, We’ll light upon some settled low content.

Adam. Master, go on; and I will follow thee.

To the last gasp, with truth and loyalty:—
From seventeen years till now almost fourscore
Here lived I, but now live here no more.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore, it is too late a week:
Yet fortune cannot recompense me better,
Than to die well, and not my master’s debtor.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind in boy’s clothes, Celia dressed like a Shepherdess, and Touchstone.

Ros. O Jupiter! how weary are my spirits!
Touch. I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.
Ros. I could find in my heart to disgrace my man’s apparel, and to cry like a woman: but I must comfort the weaker vessel, as doublet and hose ought to show itself courageous to petticoat: therefore, courage, good Aliena.
Cel. I pray you, bear with me; I can go no further.

Touch. For my part, I had rather bear with you, than bear you: yet I should bear no cross, if I did bear you; for, I think, you have no money in your purse.

Ros. Well this is the forest of Arden.
Touch. Ay, now am I in Arden: the more fool I; when I was at home, I was in a better place; but travellers must be content.

Ros. Ay, be so, good Touchstone:—Look you, who comes here; a young man, and an old, in solemn talk.

Enter Corin and Silvius.

Cor. That is the way to make her scorn you still.
Sil. O Corin, that thou know’st how I do love her!
Cor. I partly guess; for I have lov’d ere now.
Sil. No, Corin, being old, thou canst not guess; Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover As ever sigh’d upon a midnight pillow: But if thy love were ever like to mine, (As sure I think did never man love so,) How many actions most ridiculous Hast thou been drawn to by thy fantasy? Cov. Into a thousand that I have forgotten.
Sil. O, thou didst then never love so heartily: If thou remember’st not the slightest folly That ever love did make thee run into, Thou hast not lov’d: Or if thou hast not sat as I do now, Wearying thy hearer in thy mistress’ praise, Thou hast not lov’d: Or if thou hast not broke from company, Abruptly, as my passion now makes me, Thou hast not lov’d: O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe!

[Exit Silvius.

Ros. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound, I have by hard adventure found mine own.

Touch. And I mine: I remember, when I was in love, I broke my sword upon a stone, and bid him take that for coming a knight to Jane Smile: and I remember the kissing of her batlet, and the cow’s dogs th’ other pretty chapp’d hands had milk’d; and I remember the woeing of a peasock instead of her; from whom I took two cods, and, giving her them again, said with weeping tears, Wear these for my sake. We, that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

Ros. Thou speak’st wiser, than thou art’ ware of.

Touch. Nay, I shall ne’er be ware of mine own wit, till I break my shins against it.

Ros. Jove! Jove! this shepherd’s passion Is much upon my fashion.

Touch. And mine; but it grows something stale with me.

Cel. I pray, one of you question yond man, If he for gold will give us any food; I faint almost to death.

Touch. Holla: you, clown!

Ros. Peace, fool; he’s not thy kinsman.

Cor. Who calls?

Touch. Your betters, sir.

Ros. Else are they very wretched.

Peace, I say:—

Good even to you, friend.

Cor. And to you, gentle sir, and to you all.

Ros. I pr’ythee, shepherd, if that love, or gold, Can in this desert place buy entertainment, Bring us where we may rest ourselves, and feed: Here’s a young maid with travel much oppress’d, And faints for succour.

Ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture?

Cor. That young swain that you saw here but That little cares for buying any thing. [erewhile.

Ros. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty, Buy thou the cottage, pasture, and the flock, And thou shalt have to pay for it of us.

Cel. And we will mend thy wages: I like this And willingly could waste my time in it. [place.

Cor. Assuredly, the thing is to be sold:
Go with me; if you like, upon report, The soil, the profit, and this kind of life, I will your very faithful feeder be, And buy it with your gold right suddenly.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter AMIEN, JAQUES, and others.

SONG.

Ami. Under the greenwood tree,
Who loves to lie with me, And tune his merry note Unto the sweet bird’s throat, Come hither, come hither, come hither; Here shall he see No enemy, But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. More, more; I pr’ythee, more.

Ami. It will make you melancholy, monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. I thank it. More, I pr’ythee, more. I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weazal sucks eggs; More, I pr’ythee, more.

Ami. My voice is ragged; I know, I cannot please you.

Jaq. I do not desire you to please me, I do desire you to sing: Come, more; another stanza; Call you them stanzas?

Ami. What you will, monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing: Will you sing?

Ami. More at your request, than to pleaze myself.

Jaq. Well then, if ever I thank any man, I’ll thank you: but that they call compliment, is like the encounter of two dog-apes; and when a man thanks me heartily, methinks, I have given him a penny, and he renders me the beggarly thanks. Come, sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.

Ami. Well, I’ll end the song.—Sirs, cover the while; the duke will drink under this tree,—he hath been all this day to look for you.

Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him. He is too disputable for my company: I think of as many matters as he; but I give heaven thanks, and make no boast of them. Come, warble, come.

SONG.

Who doth ambition shun, [All together here. And loves to live in the sun, Seeking the food he eats, And pleas’d with what he gets, Come hither, come hither, come hither; Here shall he see No enemy, But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. I’ll give you a verse to this note, that I made yesterday in despite of my invention.

Ami. And I’ll sing it.

Jaq. Thus it goes:

If it do come to pass,
That any man turn ass, Leaving his wealth and ease, A stubborn will to please,
Duc’dame,duc’dame,duc’dame; Here shall he see Gross fools as he, An if he will come to Ami.

Ami. What’s that duc’dame?

Jaq. ’Tis a Greek invocation, to call fools into a circle. I’ll go sleep, if I can; if I cannot, I’ll rail against all the first-born of Egypt.

Ami. And I’ll go seek the duke; his banquet is prepared.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter ORLANDO and ADAM.

Adam. Dear master, I can go no further; Oh, I die for food! Here lie I down, and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

Orl. Why, how now, Adam! no greater heart in thee? Live a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little: If this uncouth forest yield any thing savage, I will either be food for it, or bring it for food to thee. Thy conceit is nearer death than thy powers. For my sake, be comfortable; hold death awhile at the arm's end: I will here be with thee presently; and if I bring thee not something to eat, I'll give thee leave to die: but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour. Well said! thou look'st cheerily: and I'll be with thee quickly.
AS YOU LIKE IT.

ACT II.

—Yethouliestinthebaleair:Come,Iwillbear thee to some shelter; and thou shalt not die for lack of a dinner, if there live any thing in this desert. Cheery, good Adam! [Exeunt.]
Scene II.

As You Like It.

If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church; If ever sat at any good man's feast; If ever from your eye-lids wip'd a tear, And know what 'tis to pity, and be pitied; Let gentleness my strong enforcement be: In the which hope, I blush, and hide my sword.

Duke S. True it is that we have seen better days; And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church; And sat at good men's feast; and wip'd our eyes Of drops that sacred pity hath engender'd: And therefore sit you down in gentleness, And take upon command what help we have, That to your wanting may be ministr'd.

Ori. Then, but forbear your food a little while, Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn, And give it food. There is an old poor man, Who after me hath many a weary step Limp'd in pure love; till he be first suffic'd,— Oppress'd with two weak evils, age, and hunger,— I will not touch a bit.

Duke S. Go find him out, And we will nothing waste till you return.

Ori. I thank ye; and be bless'd for your good comfort! [Exit.

Duke S. Thou seest, we are not all alone unhappy; This wide and universal theatre Presents more woeful pageants than the scene Wherein we play in.

Jaq. All the world's a stage, And all the men and women merely players; They have their exits, and their entrances; And one man in his time plays many parts, His acts being seven ages. At first, the infant, Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms; And then, the whining school-boy, with his satchel, And shining morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school: And then the lover; Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad Made to his mistress' eye-brow: Then a soldier; Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard, Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel, Seeking the bubble reputation Even in the cannon's mouth: And then, the just In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd, [lice; With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut, Full of wise saws and modern instances, And so he plays his part: The sixth age shifts Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon; With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side; His youthful hose well sav'd, a world too wide For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice. Turning again toward childish treble, pipes And whistles in his sound: Last scene of all, That ends this strange eventful history, Is second childishness, and mere oblivion; Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing

Re-enter Orlando, with Adam.

Duke S. Welcome: Set down your venerable burden, and let him feed. [Burden, and Orl. I thank you most for him.

Adam. So had you need: I scarce can speak to thank you for myself. Duke S. Welcome, fall to; I will not trouble you As yet, to question you about your fortunes:— Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.

Amiens sings.

Song.

1. Blow, blow, thou winter wind, Thou art not so unkind As man's ingratitude; Thy tooth is not so keen Because thou art not seen, Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh, ho! sing, heigh, ho! unto the green holy: Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly: Then, heigh, ho, the holy! This life is most jolly.

2. Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky, That dost not bite so nigh As benefits forgot, Though thou the waters warp, Thy sting is not so sharp As friend remember'd not.

Heigh, ho! sing, heigh, ho! &c.

Duke S. If that you were the good sir Rowland's son,— As you have whisper'd faithfully, you were: And as mine eye doth his effigies witness Most truly lin'd, and living in your face,— Be truly welcome hither: I am the duke, That lov'd your father: The residue of your fortune, Go to my cave and tell me.—Good old man, Thou art right welcome as thy master is; Support him by the arm.—Give me your hand, And let me all your fortunes understand. [Exit.

Act III.

Scene I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Oliver, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke F. Not see him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be: But were I not the better part made mercy, I should not seek an absent argument Of my revenge, thou present: but look to it; Find out thy brother, where'soe'er he is: Seek him with candle; bring him dead or living, Within this twelvemonth, or turn thou no more To seek a living in our territory. Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine, Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands; Till thou canst quit thee by thy brother's mouth, Of what we think against thee.

Scene II.—The Forest.

Enter Orlando, with a paper.

Orl. Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love: And, thou, thrice-crowned queen of night, survey With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above, Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character;
That every eye, which in this forest looks,
Shall see thy virtue witness'd every where.
Run, run, Orlando; carve on every tree,
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she. [Exit.

Enter Corin and Touchstone.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life, master Touchstone?

Touch. Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is taught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now in respect it is in the fields, it pleases me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life, look you, it fits my humour well; but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much against my stomach. Hast any philosophy in thee, shepherd?

Cor. No more, but that I know, the more one sickens, the worse at ease he is; and that he that wants money, means, and content, is without three good friends:—That the property of rain is to wet, and fire to burn: That good pasture makes fat sheep; and that a great cause of the night, is lack of the sun: That he, that hath learned no wit by nature nor art, may complain of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred.

Touch. Such a one is a natural philosopher. Wait ever in court, shepherd?

Cor. No, truly.

Touch. Then thou art damn'd.

Cor. Nay, I hope—

Touch. Truly, thou art damn'd; like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at court? Your reason.

Touch. Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never saw'st good manners; if thou never saw'st good manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation: Thou art in a parlous state, shepherd.

Cor. Not a whit, Touchstone: those that are good manners at the court, are as ridiculous in the country as the behaviour of the country is most mockable at the court. You told me, you salute not at the court, but you kiss your hands; that courtesy would be uncleanly, if courtiers were shepherds.

Touch. Instance, briefly; come, instance.

Cor. Why, we are still handling our ewes; and their fells, you know, are greasy.

Touch. Why, do not your courtier's hands sweat? and is not the grease of a mutton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow: a better instance, I say; come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard.

Touch. Your lips will feel them the sooner. Shallow, again: a more sounder instance, come.

Cor. And they are often tarr'd over with the surgery of our sheep; And would you have us kiss tars? The courtier's hands are perfumed with civet.

Touch. Most shallow man! Thou worm's-meat, in respect of a good piece of flesh: Indeed!—Learn of the wise, and perpend: Civet is of a baser than tars; the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Mend the instance, shepherd.

Cor. You have too courtely a wit for me; I'll rest.

Cor. Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat, get that I wear; owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness; glad of other men's good, content with my harm: and the greatest of my pride is, to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck.

Touch. That is another simple sin in you; to bring the ewes and the rams together, and to offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle: to be bawd to a bell-wether; and to betray a she-lamb of a twelvemonth, to a crooked-pated, old cuckoldly ram, out of all reasonable match. If thou best not damn'd for this, the devil himself will have no shepherds; I cannot see else how thou shouldst scape.

Cor. Here comes young master Ganymede, my new mistress's brother.

Enter Rosalind, reading a paper

Rosalind. From the east to western Ind,
No jewel is like Rosalind.
Her worth, being mounted on the wind,
Through all the world bears Rosalind.
All the pictures, fairest lind,
Are but black to Rosalind.
Let no face be kept in mind,
But the fair of Rosalind.

Touch. I'll rhyme you so eight years together;
Dinners, and suppers, and sleeping hours excepted;
It is the right butcher woman's rank to market.

Rosalind. Out, fool!

Touch. For a taste:—
If a hart do lack a hind,
Let him seek our Rosalind.
If the cat will after kind,
So, be sure, will Rosalind.
Winter-garments must be lind'd,
So must slender Rosalind.
They that reap, must sheaf and bind,
Then to cart with Rosalind.
Sweetest nut hath sourest rind,
Such a nut is Rosalind.
He that sweetest Rose will find,
Must find love's prick, and Rosalind.

This is the very false gallop of verses; Why do you infect yourself with them?

Rosalind. Peace, you dull fool; I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly, the tree yields bad fruit.

Rosalind. I'll graff it with you, and then I shall graff it with a medlar: then it will be the earliest fruit in the country: for you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter Celia, reading a paper

Rosalind. Peace!
Here comes my sister, reading; stand aside.

Celi. Why should this desert silent be?
For it is unpeopled? No;
Tongues I'll hang on every tree,
That shall civil sayings show;
Some, how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age.
Some, of violated vows
'Twixt the souls of friend and friend;
But upon the fairest boughs,
Or at every sentence end,
Scene II.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

WILL I ROsalinda write,
Teaching all that read, to know
The quintessence of every sprite,
Heaven would in little show.

Therefore heaven nature charg’d
That one body should be fill’d
With all graces wide enlarg’d:—
Nature presently distil’d.

Helen’s cheek, but not her heart;
Cleopatra’s majesty;
Atalanta’s better part;
Sad Lucretia’s modesty.

Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heavenly synod was devis’d,
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
To have the touches dearest prize’d.

Heaven would that she these gifts should have,
And I to live and die her slave.

ROs. O most gentle Jupiter!—what tedious homiely of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cry’d, Have patience, good people!

Cel. How now! back, friends;—Shepherd, go off a little:—Go with him, sirrah.

Touch. Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.

[Exeunt Corin and Touchstone.

Cel. Didst thou hear these verses?

Ros. O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.

Cel. That’s no matter; the feet might bear the verses.

Ros. Ay, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

Cel. But didst thou hear, without wondering how thy name should be hang’d and carved upon these trees?

Ros. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder, before you came; for look here what I found in a palm-tree: I was never so be-rhymed since Pythagoras’ time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Trow you, who hath done this?

Ros. Is it a man?

Cel. And a chain that you once wore, about his neck: Change you colour?

Ros. I pr’ythee, who?

Cel. O lord, lord! it is a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be removed with earthquakes, and so encounter.

Ros. Nay, but who is it?

Cel. Is it possible?

Ros. Nay, I pray thee now, with most petitionary vechemence, tell me who it is.

Cel. O wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful wonderful, and yet again wonderful, and after that out of all whooping!

Ros. Good my complexion! dost thou think, though I am caparison’d like a man, I have a doubt and hose in my disposition? One inch of delay more is a South-sea-off discovery. I pr’ythee, tell me, who is it? quickly, and speak apace: I won’t that your burden, that thou might’st pour this concealed man out of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narrow-mouth’d bottle; either too much at once, or none at all. I pr’ythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings.

Cel. So you may put a man in your belly.

Ros. Is he of God’s making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat, or his chin worth a beard?

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard.

Ros. Why, God will send more, if the man will be thankful: let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is young Orlando; that tripp’d up the wrestler’s heels, and your heart, both in an instant.

Ros. Nay, but the devil take mocking; speak sad brow, and true maid.

Cel. I’faith, coz, ’tis he.

Ros. Orlando?

Cel. Orlando.

Ros. Alas the day! what shall I do with my doubt and hose?—What did he when thou saw’st him? What said he? How look’d he? Wherein went he? What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee? and when shalt thou see him again? Answer me in one word.

Cel. You must borrow me Garagantua’s mouth first; ’tis a word too great for any mouth of this age’s size: To say, ay, and no, to these particulars, is more than to answer in a catechism.

Ros. But doth he know that I am in this forest, and in man’s apparel? Looks he as freshy as he did the day he wrestled?

Cel. It is as easy to count atomies, as to resolve the propositions of a lover:—but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with a good observance. I found him under a tree, like a dropp’d acorn.

Ros. It may well be call’d Jove’s tree, when it drops forth such fruit.

Cel. Give me audience, good madam.

Ros. Proceed.

Cel. There lay he, stretch’d along like a wounded knight.

Ros. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.

Cel. Cry, rolls! to thy tongue, I pr’ythee; it couples very unseasonably. He was furnish’d like a hunter.

Ros. O onious! he comes to kill my heart.

Cel. I would sing my song without a burden: thou bring’st me out of tune.

Ros. Do you not know I am a woman? when I think, I must speak. Sweet! say on.

[Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Cel. You bring me out:—Soft! comes he not Ros. ’Tis he? sink by, and note him. [Here? [Celia and Rosalind retire.

Jaq. I thank you for your company; but, good faith, I had as lief have been myself alone.

Orl. And so had I; but yet, for fashion sake, I thank you too for your society.

Jaq. God be with you; let’s meet as little as we can.

Orl. I do desire we may be better strangers.

Jaq. I pray you, mar no more trees with writing love-songs in their barks.

Orl. I pray you, mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favouredly.

Jaq. Rosalind is your love’s name?

Orl. Yes, just.

Jaq. I do not like her name.

Orl. There was no thought of pleasing you, when she was christened.

Jaq. What stature is she of?

Orl. Just as high as my heart.

Jaq. You are full of pretty answers; Have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths' wives, and conn'd them out of rings?

Orl. Not so; but I answer you right painted cloth, from whence you have studied your questions.

Jac. You have a nimble wit; I think it was made of Atalanta's heels. Will you sit down with me? and we two will rail against our mistress the world, and all our misery.

Orl. I will chide no breather in the world, but myself; against whom I know most faults.

Jac. The worst fault you have, is to be in love.

Orl. 'Tis a fault I will not change for your best virtue. I am weary of you.

Jac. By my troth, I was seeking for a fool, when I found you.

Orl. He is drown'd in the brook; look but in, and you shall see him.

Jac. There shall I see mine own figure.

Orl. Which I take to be either a fool, or a cypher.

Jac. I'll tarry no longer with you; farewell, good signior Love.

Orl. I am glad of your departure; adieu, good monsieur Melancholy.

[Exit Jaques.—Celia and Rosalind come forward.]

Ros. I will speak to him like a saucy lacquey, and under that habit play the knave with him.—Do you hear, forester?

Orl. What would you?

Ros. I pray you, what is a clock?

Orl. You should ask me, what time o'clock; there's no clock in the forest.

Ros. Then there's no true lover in the forest; else sighing every minute, and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time, as well as a clock.

Orl. And why not the swift foot of time; had not that been as proper?

Ros. By no means, sir: Time travels in divers paces with divers persons; I will tell you who time ambles with, who time trots withal, who time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.

Orl. I pr'ythee, who doth he trot withal?

Ros. Marry, he trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized; if the interim be but a sem'night, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years.

Orl. Who ambles time withal?

Ros. With a priest that lacks Latin, and a rich man that hath not the gout: for the one sleeps easily, because he cannot study; and the other lives merrily, because he feels no pain: the one lacking the burden of lean and wasteful learning; the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury: These time ambles withal.

Orl. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ros. With a thief to the gallows: for though he go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon there.

Orl. Who stays it still withal?

Ros. With lawyers in the vacation: for they sleep between term and term, and then they perceive not how time moves.

Orl. Where dwell you, pretty youth?

Ros. With this shepherdess, my sister; here in the skirts of the forest, like fringe upon a Petticoat.

Orl. Are you native of this place?

Ros. As the coney, that you see dwell where she is kindled.

Orl. Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Ros. I have been told so of many: but, indeed, an old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an in-law man; one that knew courtship too well, for there he fell in love. I have heard him read many lectures against it; and I thank God I was not a woman, to be touch'd with so many giddy offices as he hath generally tax'd their whole sex withal.

Orl. Can you remember any of the principal evils that he laid to the charge of women.

Ros. There were none principal; they were all like one another, as half-pence are: every one fault seeming monstrous, till his fellow fault came to match it.

Orl. I pr'ythee recount some of them.

Ros. No; I will not cast away my physic, but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their bars; hangs odes upon haw-thorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, defying the name of Rosalind: if I could meet that fancy-monger, I would give him some good counsel, for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Orl. I am he that is so love-shaked; I pray you, tell me your remedy.

Ros. There is none of my uncle's marks upon you: he taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure you are not prisoner.

Orl. What were his marks?

Ros. A lean cheek; which you have not: a blue eye, and sunken; which you have not: an unquestionable spirit; which you have not: a beard neglected; which you have not: but I pardon you for that; for, simply, your having in beard is a younger brother's revenue.—Then your hose should be un-garter'd, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeve unboutoned, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation. But you are no such man; you are rather point-device in your accoutrements; as loving yourself, than seeming the lover of any other.

Orl. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe I love.

Ros. Me believe it? you may as soon make her that you love believe it; which, I warrant, she is apter to do, than to confess she does; that is one of the points in which the women still give the lie to their consciences. But, in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Orl. I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?

Orl. Neither rhyme nor reason can express how much.

Ros. Love is merely a madness; and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house and a whip, as madmen do: and the reason why they are not so punished and cured, is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too: Yet I profess curing it by counsel.

Orl. Did you ever cure any so?

Ros. Yes, one; and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress; and I set him every day to woo me: At which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking; proud, fantastical,
SCENE III.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

apish, shallow, inconstant, full of tears, full of smiles; for every passion something, and for no passion truly anything, as boys and women are for the most part cattle of this colour: would now like him, now loath him; then entertain him, then fore- swear him; now weep for him, then spit at him; that I drave my suitor from his mad humour of love, to a living humour of madness; which was, to fore-swear the full stream of the world, and to live in a nook merely monastic: And thus I cured him; and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver as clean as a sound sheep's heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in't.

Orl. I would not be cured, youth.

Ros. I would cure you, if you would but call me Rosalind, and come every day to my cote, and woo me.

Orl. Now, by the faith of my love, I will; tell me where it is.

Ros. Go with me to it, and I'll show it you: and, by the way, you shall tell me where in the forest you live: Will you go?

Orl. With all my heart, good youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind:—Come, sister, will you go?

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey. Jaques at a distance, observing them.

Touch. Come apace, good Audrey: I will fetch up your goats, Audrey: And how, Audrey? am I the man yet? Doth my simple feature content you?

Aud. Your features! Lord warrant us! what features?

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capricious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.

Touch. When a man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the forward child, understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room:—Truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical.

Aud. I do not know what poetical is: Is it honest in deed and word? Is it a true thing?

Touch. No, truly; for the truest poetry is the most feigning; and lovers are given to poetry; and what they swear in poetry, may be said, as lovers, they do feign.

Aud. Do you wish then, that the gods had made me poetical?

Touch. I do, truly, for thou swear'st to me, thou art honest; now, if thou wert a poet, I might have some hope thou didst feign.

Aud. Would you not have me honest?

Touch. No, truly, unless thou wert hard-favour'd: for honesty coupled to beauty, is to have honey a sauce to sugar.

Jaq. A material fool! [Aside.

Aud. Well, I am not fair; and therefore I pray the gods make me honest!

Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foul slut, were to put good meat into an unclean dish.

Aud. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am foul.

Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy foul-ness! sluttishness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee, and to that end, I have been with Sir Oliver Mar-text, the vicar of the next village; who hath promised to meet me in this place of the forest, and to couple us.

Jaq. I'ld wish to see this meeting. [Aside.

Aud. Well, the gods give us joy!

Touch. Amen. A man may, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but horn-beasts. But what though? Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said—Many a man knows no end of his goods: right: many a man has good horns, and knows no end of them. Well, this is the dowry of his wife; 'tis none of his own getting. Horns? Even so:—Poor men alone?—No, no; the noblest deer hath them as huge as the rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? No: as a wall'd town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor: and by how much defence is better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious than to want.

Enter Sir Olivier Mar-text.

Here comes sir Olivier: Sir Oliver Mar-text, you are well met: Will you despate us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Sir Oli. Is there none here to give the woman?

Touch. I will not take her on gift of any man.

Sir Oli. Truly, she must be given; or the marriage is not lawful.

Jaq. [Discovering himself.] Proceed, proceed I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good master What ye call'?

How do you, sir? You are very well met: God'ld you for your last company: I am very glad to see you:—Even a toy in hand here, sir:—Nay; pray, be cover'd.

Jaq. Will you be married, motley?

Touch. As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb, and the faulen her bells, so man hath his desires; and as pigeons bill, so wedlock would be nibbling.

Jaq. And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush, like a beggar? Get you to church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but join you together as they join wainscot; then one of you will prove a shrunk pannel, and, like green timber, warp, warp.

Touch. I am not in the mind but I were better to be married of him than of another: for he is not like to marry me well: and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife. [Aside.

Jaq. Go thou with me, and let me counsel thee.

Touch. Come, sweet Audrey: We must be married, or we must live in bawdry. Farewell, good master Oliver!

Not—O sweet Oliver, O brave Oliver, Leave me not be'li thee; But—Wind away, Begone I say, I will not to wedding wi' thee. [Exeunt Jaques, Touchstone, and Audrey.

Sir Oli. 'Tis no matter; ne'er a fantastical knife of them all shall flout me out of my calling. [Exit.
SCENE IV.—The same. Before a cottage.

Enter ROSALIND and CELIA.

Ros. Never talk to me, I will weep.
Cel. Do, I pr'ythee; but yet have the grace to consider, that tears do not make a man.
Ros. But have I not cause to weep?
Cel. As good cause as one would desire; therefore weep.
Ros. His very hair is of the dissembling colour.
Cel. Something browner than Judas's; marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.
Ros. I 'faith, his hair is of a good colour.
Cel. An excellent colour; your chestnut was ever the only colour.
Ros. And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy bread.
Cel. He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana; a nun of winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of chastity is in them.
Ros. But why did he swear he would come this morning, and comes not?
Cel. Nay, certainly, there is no truth in him.
Ros. Do you think so?
Cel. Yes: I think he is not a pick-purse, nor a horse-stealer; but for his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a cover'd gobbet, or a worm-eaten nut.
Ros. Not true in love?
Cel. Yes, when he is in; but, I think he is not in.
Ros. You have heard him swear downright, he was.
Cel. Was it not is: besides the oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the confessors of false reckonings: He attends here in the forest on the duke your father.
Ros. I met the duke yesterday, and had much question with him: He asked me, of what parentage I was; I told him, of as good as he; so he laugh'd and let me go. But what talk we of fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?
Cel. O, that's a brave man! he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, athwart the heart of his lover; as a puny tilt, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose: but all's brave, that youth mounts, and fully guides:—Who comes here?

Enter CORIN.

Cor. Mistress, and master, you have oft enquired After the shepherd that complain'd of love; Who you saw sitting by me on the turf, Praising the proud disdainful shepherd That was his mistress.
Cel. Well, and what of him?
Cor. If you will see a pageant truly play'd, Between the pale complexion of true love, And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain, Go hence a little, and I shall conduct you, If you will mark it.
Ros. O, come let us remove: The sight of lovers feedeth those in love:— Bring us unto this sight, and you shall say I'll prove a busy actor in their play. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter ELYVIUS and PHEBE.

Sith. Sweet Phebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phebe: Say, that you love me not; but say not so

In bitterness: The common executioner, Whose heart the accustom'd sight of death makes Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck, [hard, But first begs pardon; Will you sterner be, Than he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

Enter ROSALIND, CELIA, and CORIN, at a distance.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner; I fly thee, for I would not injure thee. Thou tell'st me, there is murder in mine eye: 'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable, That eyes,—that are the frail'st and softest things, Who shut their coward gates on atoms,— Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers! Now I do frown on thee with all my heart; And, if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee!

Now counterfeit to swoon; why, now fall down; Or, if thou can't not, O, for shame, for shame, Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers. Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee: Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains Some scar of it; lean but upon a rush, The cicatrice and capable impressure Thy palm some moment keeps: but now mine eyes, Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not; Nor, I am sure, there is no force in eyes That can do hurt.

Sith. O dear Phebe, If ever, (as that ever may be near,) You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy, Then shall you know the wounds invisible That love's keen arrows make.

Phe. But, till that time, Come not thou near me: and, when that time comes, Afflict me with thy mocks, pity me not; As till that time, I shall not pity thee.

Ros. And why, I pray you? [Advancing.] Who might be your mother, That you insult, exult, and all at once, Over the wretched? What though you have mote (As, by my faith, I see no more in you [beauty, Than without candle may go dark to bed,) Must you be therefore proud and pitiless? Why, what means this? Why do you look on me? I see no more in you, than in the ordinary Of nature's sale-work:—Od's my little life! I think, she means to tangle my eyes too:— No, 'faith, proud mistress, hope not after it; 'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair, Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream, That can ename my spirits to your worship. You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her, Like foggy south, puffing with wind and rain? You are a thousand times a properer man, Than she a woman: 'Tis such fools as you, That make the world full of ill-favour'd children: 'Tis not her glass, but you, that flatters her; And out of you she sees herself more proper, Than any of her lineaments can show her:— But, mistress, know yourself; down on your knees, And thank heaven, fasting, for a good man's love: For I must tell you friendly in your ear,— Sell when you can; you are not for all markets: Cry the man mercy; love him; take his offer: Fool is most foul, being foul to be a scoffer. So, take her to thee, shepherd:—fare you well.

Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you chide a year to gether; I had rather hear you chide, than this man wo.
Ros. He's fallen in love with her foulness, and Give'll fall in love with my anger: If it be so, as fast as she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll Sauce her with bitter words.—Why look you so upon me?
Ph. For no ill will I bear you.
Ros. I pray you, do not fall in love with me,
For I am failer than vows made in wine:
Besides, I like you not: If you will know my house,
'Tis at the tuft of olives, here hard by:—
Will you go, sister?—Shepherd, ply her hard:—
Come, sister.—Shepherdess, look on him better,
And be not proud; though all the world could see,
None could be so abus'd in sight as he.
Come to our flock.
[Exeunt Rosalind, Celia, and Corin.
Ph. Dead shepherd! now I find thy saw of might;
Who ever lov'd, that lov'd not at first sight?
Sil. Sweet Phebe,—
Ph. Ha! what say'st thou, Silvius?
Sil. Sweet Phebe, pity me.
Ph. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius.
Sil. Wherever sorrow is, relief would be;
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extern'd.
Ph. Thou hast my love; is not that neighbourly?
Sil. I would have you.
Ph. Why, that were covetousness.
Silvius, the time was, that I hated thee;
And yet it is not, that I bear thee love:
But since that thou canst talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure; and I'll employ thee too:
But do not look for further recompense,
Than thine own gladness that thou art employ'd.
Sil. So holy and so perfect is my love,
And I in such a poverty of grace,
That I shall think it a most plenteous crop
To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest reaps: loose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.
Ph. Know'st thou the youth that spoke to me upon the roe?
Sil. Not very well, but I have met him oft;
And he hath bought the cottage, and the bounds,
That the old carlot once was master of. [him,
Ph. Think not I love him, though I ask for
'Tis but a peevish boy:—yet he talks well;—
But what care I for words? yet words do well,
When he that speaks them pleases those that hear
It is a pretty youth:—not very pretty:—[him
But sure he's proud; and yet his pride becomes He'll make a proper man: The best thing in him
Is his complexion; and faster than his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heal it up.
He is not tall; yet for his years he's tall:
His leg is but so-so; and yet 'tis well:
There was a pretty redness in his lip;
A little riper and more lusty rod
[ference
Than that mix'd in his cheek; 'twas just the dif-
Betwixt the constant red, and mingled damask.
There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd
In parcels as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him: but, for my part,
I love him not, nor hate him not; and yet
I have more cause to hate him than to love him:
For what had he to do to chide at me?
He said, mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And, now I am remember'd, scorn'd at me;
I marvel, why I answer'd not again:
But that's all one; omission is not quittance.
I'll write to him a very taunting letter,
And thou shalt bear it; Wilt thou, Silvius?
Sil. Phebe, with all my heart.
Ph. I'll write it straight;
The matter's in my head, and in my heart:
I will be bitter with him, and passing short:
Go with me, Silvius.
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.
Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.
Jaq. I pr'ythee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.
Ros. They say you are a melancholy fellow.
Jaq. I am so; I do love it better than laughing.
Ros. Those, that are in extremity of either, are abominable fellows; and betray themselves to every modern censure, worse than drunkards.
Jaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.
Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a post.
Jaq. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice;
or the lover's, which is all these: but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simplers, extracted from many objects: and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me, is a most humorous sadness.
Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad: I fear, you have sold your own lands, to see other men's; then, to have seen much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor
hands.
Jaq. Yes, I have gained my experience.
Enter Orlando.
Ros. And your experience makes you sad: I had rather have a fool to make me merry, than experience to make me sad; and to travel for it too.
Orl. Good day, and happiness, dear Rosalind!
Jaq. Nay then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse.
[Exit.
Ros. Farewell, monsieur traveller: Look you lisp, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country: be out of love with your nativity, and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are: or I will scarce think you have swum in a gondola.—Why, how now, Orlando! where have you been all this while? You a lover?
—And you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.
Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.
Ros. Break an hour's promise in love? He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of the thousandth part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapp'd him o' the shoulder, but I warrant him heartwhole.

Oro. Pardon me, dear Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight; I had as lief be woo'd of a snail.

Oro. Of a snail?

Ros. Ay, of a snail; for though he comes slowly, he carries his house on his head; a better jointure, I think, than you can make a woman: Besides, he brings his destiny with him.

Oro. What's that?

Ros. Why, horns; which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for: but he comes armed in his fortune, and prevents the slander of his wife.

Oro. Virtue is no horn-maker; and my Rosalind is virtuous.

Ros. And I am your Rosalind.

Cel. It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Ros. Come, woo me, woo me; for now I am in a holiday humour, and like enough to consent:—What would you say to me now, an I were your very Rosalind?

Oro. I would kiss before I spoke.

Ros. Nay, you were better speak first; and when you were gravelled for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out, they will spit; and for lovers, lacking (God warn us!) matter, the cleanliest shift is to kiss.

Oro. How is the kiss to be dened?

Ros. Then she puts you to entreaty, and there begins new matter.

Oro. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress, or I should think my honesty ranker than my wit.

Oro. What, of my suit?

Ros. Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your suit. Am not I your Rosalind?

Oro. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well, in her person, I say—I will not have you.

Oro. Then, in mine own person, I die.

Ros. No, faith, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, videfact, in a love-cause. Troilus had his brains dashed out with a Grecian club; yet he did what he could to die before; and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander, he would have lived many a fair year, though Hero had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer-night; for, good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and, being taken with the cramp, was drowned; and the foolish chroniclers of that age found it was—Hero of Sestos. But these are all lies; men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Oro. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mine; for, I protest, her frown might kill me.

Ros. By this hand, it will not kill a fly: But come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on disposition; and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Oro. Then love me, Rosalind.

Ros. Yes, faith will I, Fridays, and Saturdays, and all.

Oro. And wilt thou have me?

Ros. Ay, and twenty such.

Oro. What say'st thou?

Ros. Are you not good?

Oro. I hope so.

Ros. Why then, can one desire too much of a good thing?—Come, sister, you shall be the priest, and marry us.—Give me your hand, Orlando:—What do you say, sister?

Oro. Pray thee, marry us.

Cel. I cannot say the words.

Ros. You must begin,—Will you, Orlando,—Cel. Go to:—Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

Oro. I will.

Ros. Ay, but when?

Oro. Why now; as fast as she can marry us.

Ros. Then you must say,—I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Oro. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Ros. I might ask you for your commission: but,—I do take thee, Orlando, for my husband: There a girl goes before the priest; and, certainly, a woman's thought runs before her actions.

Oro. So do all thoughts; they are winged.

Ros. Now tell me, how long you would have her, after you have possessed her.

Oro. For ever, and a day.

Ros. Say a day, without the ever: No, no, Orlando; men are April when they woo, December when they wed; maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigeon over his hen; more clamorous than a parrot against rain; more new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey: I will weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain, and I will do that when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, and that when thou art inclined to sleep.

Oro. But will my Rosalind do so?

Ros. By my life, she will do as I do.

Oro. O, but she is wise.

Ros. O, she could not have the wit to do this: the wiser, the waywarder: Make the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the case ment; shut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole; stop that, 'twill fly with the smoke out at the chimney.

Oro. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say,—Wit, whither wilt?

Ros. Nay, you might keep that check for it, till you met your wife's wit going to your neighbour's bed.

Oro. And what wit could wit have to excuse that?

Ros. Marry, to say,—she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. O, that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool.

Oro. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee.

Ros. Alas, dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours. Oro. I must attend the duke at dinner; by two o'clock I will be with thee again.
Ros. Ay, go your ways, go your ways;—I knew what you would prove; my friends told me as much, and I thought no less:—that flattering thought of yours won me:—'tis but one cast away, and so,—come, death. —Two o'clock is your hour?
Orl. Ay, sweet Rosalind.
Ros. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise, or come one minute behind your hour, I will think you the most pathetical break-promise, and the most hollow lover, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful: therefore beware my censure, and keep your promise.
Orl. With no less religion, than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind: So, adieu!
Ros. Well, time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let time try:—Adieu!
[Exit Orlando.

Cel. You have simply misused our sex in your love-prate: we must have your doublet and hose plucked over your head, and show the world what the bird hath done to her own nest.
Ros. O, you, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, that thou didst know how many fathom deep I am in love! But it cannot be sounded; my affection hath an unknown bottom, like the bay of Portugal.
Cel. Or, rather, bottomless; that as fast as you pourt affection in, it runs out.
Ros. No, that same wicked bastard of Venus, that was begot of thought, conceived of spleen, and born of madness: that blind rascally boy, that abuses every one's eyes because his own are out; let him be judged, how deep I am in love! —I'll tell thee, Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando: I'll go find a shadow, and sigh till he come.
Cel. And I'll go sleep. —[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter Jaques and Lords, in the habit of Foresters.

Jaq. Which is he that killed the deer?
1 Lord. Sir, it was I.

Jaq. Let's present him to the duke, like a Roman conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horns upon his head, for a branch of victory;
—Have you no sconce, forester, for this purpose?
2 Lord. Yes, sir.

Jaq. Sing it; 'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

SONG.
1. What shall he have, that kill'd the deer?
2. His leather skin, and horns to war.
1. Then sing him home;
Take thou no scorn, to wear the horn;
It was a crease ere thou wast born.
2. Thy father's father wore it;
And thy father bore it;
All. The horn, the horn, the lusty horn,
Is not a thing to laugh to scorn. —[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Forest.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. How say you now? Is it not past two o'clock? And here much Orlando!
Cel. I warrant you, with pure love, and troubled brain, he hath ta'en his bow and arrows, and is gone forth—to sleep:—Look, who comes here.

Enter Silvia.

Sil. My errand is to you, fair youth:—
My gentle Phebe bid me give you this:
[Giving a letter.
I know not the contents; but, as I guess,
By the stern brow, and waspish action
Which she did use as she was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenor: pardon me,
I am but as a guiltless messenger.
Ros. Patience herself would startle at this letter,
And play the swaggerer; bear this, bear all:
She says, I am not fair; that I lack manners;
She calls me proud; and, that she could not love
Were man as rare as Phoenix; Od's my will! [me
Her love is not the hate that I do hunt:
Why writes she so to me?—Well, shepherd, well,
This is a letter of your own device.
Sil. No, I protest, I know not the contents;
Phebe did write it.

Ros. Come, come, you are a fool,
And turn'd into the extremity of love.
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand,
A freestone-colour'd hand; I verily did think
That her old gloves were on, but 'twas her hands;
She has a huswife's hand: but that's no matter:
I say, she never did invent this letter:
This is a man's invention, and his hand.
Sil. Sure, it is hers.
Ros. Why, 'tis a boisterous and a cruel style,
A style for challengers; why, she defies me,
Like Turk to Christian: woman's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant-rude invention,
Such Ethiop words, blacker in their effect Than in their countenance:—Will you hear the letter?
Sil. So please you, for I never heard it yet;
Yet heard too much of Phebe's cruelty.
Ros. She Phebe's me: Mark how the tyrant writes.
Art thou god to shepherd turn'd,
[Reads.
That a maiden's heart hath burn'd?
Can a woman rail thus?
Sil. Call you this railing?
Ros. Why, thy godhead laid apart,
Warr'st thou with a woman's heart?
Did you ever hear such railing?—
Whilest the eye of man did woo me,
That could do no vengeance to me.—
Meaning me a beast.—
If the scorn of your bright eyene
Have power to raise such love in mine,
Alack, In me what strange effect
Would they work in milder aspect?
Whilest you chid me, I did love;
How then might your prayers move?
He, that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me:
And by him seal up thy mind:
Whether that thy youth and kind
Will the faithful offer take
Of me, and all that I can make;
Or else by him my love deny,
And then I'll study how to die.
Sil. Call you this chiding?
Cel. Alas, poor shepherd!
Ros. Do you pity him? no, he deserves no pity.—
Wilt thou love such a woman?—What, to make
Oli. Good-morrow, fair ones: Pray you, if you know
Where, in the purlieus of this forest, stands
A sheepe-cote, fenc'd about with olive-trees?
Cel. West of this place, down in the neighbour bottom,
The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place:
But at this hour the house doth keep itself,
There's none within.
Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then I should know you by description;
Such garments, and such years: The boy is fair,
Of female favour, and bestows himself
Like a ripe sister: but the woman love,
And browner than her brother. Are you not
The owner of the house I did inquire for?
Cel. It is no boaste, being ask'd, to say, we are.
Oli. Orlando doth commend him to you both;
And to that youth, he calls his Rosalind,
He sends this bloody napkin: Are you he?
Ros. I am: what must we understand by this?
Oli. Some of my shame; if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkerchief was stain'd.
Cel. I pray you, tell it.
Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from you,
He left a purpose to return again
Within an hour; and, pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy,
Lo, what befell! he threw his eye aside,
And, mark, what object did present itself!
Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity,
A wretched ragged man, o'ergrown with hair,
Lay sleeping on his back: about his neck
A green and glided snake had wrapp'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly
Seeing Orlando, it unlik'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush: under which bush's shade
A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching, head on ground, with cat-like watch,
When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis
The royal disposition of that beast,
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead:
This seen, Orlando did approach the man,
And found it was his brother, his elder brother.
Cel. O, I have heard him speak of that same brother;
And he did render him the most unnatural
That liv'd 'mongst men.

Oli. And well he might do so,
For well I know he was unnatural.
Ros. But, to Orlando.—Did he leave him there,
Food to the cuckold and hungry lioness?
Oli. Twice did he turn his back, and purpos'd so:
But kindness, nobler ever than revenge,
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the lioness,
Who quickly fell before him; in which hurting
From miserable slumber I awak'd.
Cel. Are you his brother?
Ros. Was it you he rescued?
Cel. Was't you that did so oft contrive to kill him?
Oli. 'Twas I; but 'tis not I: I do not shame
To tell you what I was, since my conversion
So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am.
Ros. But, for the bloody napkin?
Oli. By and by.
When from the first to last, betwixt us two,
Tears our recountments had most kindly bath'd,
As, how I came into that desert place;
In brief, he led me to the gentle duke,
Who gave me fresh array, and entertainment,
Committing me unto my brother's love;
Who led me instantly unto his cave,
There stripp'd himself; and here upon his arm
The lioness had torn some flesh away,
Which all this while had bleed; and now he fainted,
And cry'd, in fainting, upon Rosalind.
Brief, I recover'd him; bound up his wound;
And, after some small space, being strong at heart,
He sent me hither, stranger as I am,
To tell this story, that you might excuse
His broken promise, and to give this napkin,
Dy'd in this blood, unto the shepherd-youth
That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.
Cel. Why, how, now, Ganymede?—sweet Ganymede?
Ros. Many will swoon when they do look on blood.
Cel. There is more in it:—Cousin—Ganymede!
Oli. Look, he recovers.
Ros. I would, I were at home.
Cel. We'll lead you thither:—
I pray you, will you take him by the arm?
Oli. Be of good cheer, youth:—You a man?—
You lack a man's heart.
Ros. I do so, I confess it. Ah, sir, a body would think this was well counterfeited: I pray you, tell your brother how well I counterfeited.—Heigh ho!—
Oli. This was not counterfeit; there is too great testimony in your complexion, that it was a passion of earnest.
Ros. Counterfeit, I assure you.
Oli. Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man.
Ros. So do I: but 'tis faith I should have been a woman by right.
Cel. Come, you look pale and paler; pray you, draw homewards—Good sir, go with us.
Oli. That will I, for I must bear answer back
How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.
Ros. I shall devise something: But, I pray you, commend my counterfeiting to him.—Will you go?
SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey; patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. 'Faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman's saying.

Touch. A most wicked sir Oliver, Audrey, a most vile Mar-text. But, Audrey, there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

Aud. Ay, I know who 'tis; he hath no interest in me in the world: here comes the man you mean.

Enter William.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown; By my troth, we that have good wits, have much to answer for; we shall be flouting; we cannot hold.

Will. Good even, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good even, William.

Will. And good even to you, sir.

Touch. Good even, gentle friend: Cover thy head, cover thy head; nay, pr'ythee, be covered. How old are you, sir?

Will. Five-and-twenty, sir.

Touch. A ripe age: Is thy name William?

Will. William, sir.

Touch. A fair name: West born i' the forest here?

Will. Ay, sir, I thank God.

Touch. Thank God;—a good answer; Art rich?

Will. 'Faith, sir, so-so.

Touch. So-so, is good, very good, very excellent good:—and yet it is not; it is but so-so. Art thou wise?

Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.

Touch. Why, thou sayst well. I do now remember a saying; The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool. The heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth; meaning thereby, that grapes were made to eat, and lips to open. You do love this maid?

Will. I do, sir.

Touch. Give me your hand: Art thou learned?

Will. No, sir.

Touch. Then learn this of me; To have, is to have: For it is a figure in rhetoric, that drink, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one doth empty the other: For all your writers do consent, that ipse is he; now you are not ipse, for I am he.

Will. Which he, sir?

Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman: Therefore, you clown, abandon,—which is in the vulgar, leave,—the society,—which in the boorish is, company,—of this female,—which in the common old is, woman,—which together is, abandon the society of this female; or clown, thou perfisest; or, to thy better understanding, diest; to wit, I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage: I will deal in poison with thee, or in bastinado, or in steel; I will bandy with thee in faction; I will o'er-run thee with policy; I will kill thee a hundred and fifty ways; therefore tremble, and depart.

Aud. Do, good William.

Will. God rest you merry, sir. [Exit.
bear a good opinion of my knowledge, insomuch, I say, I know you are; neither do I labour for a greater esteem than may in some little measure draw a belief from you, to do yourself good, and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things: I have, since I was three years old, conversed with a magician, most profound in this art, and not yet damnable. If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture cries it out, when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marry her—I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is not impossible to me, if it appear not inconveniente to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow, human as she is, and without any danger.

Oro. Speakest thou in sober meanings?

Ros. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician: Therefore, put you in your best array, bid your friends; for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall; and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Look, here comes a lover of mine, and a lover of hers.

Phoe. Youth, you have done me much ungentle-

To show the letter that I writ to you. [n.ess.

Ros. I care not, if I have: it is my study,
To seem despiteful and ungentle to you:

You are there follow'd by a faithful shepherd;

Look upon him, love him; he worships you.

Phoe. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

Sil. It is to be all made of sighs and tears;

And so am I for Phoebe.

Phoe. And I for Ganymede.

Oro. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of faith and service;

And so am I for Phoebe.

Phoe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Oro. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ros. And so am I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasy,

All made of passion, and all made of wishes;

All adoration, duty, and observance,

All humbleness, all patience, and impatience,

All purity, all trial, all observance;—

And so am I for Phoebe.

Phoe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Oro. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ros. And so am I for no woman.

Phoe. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

[To Rosalind.

Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

[To Phoebe.

Oro. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Ros. Who do you speak to, why blame you me to love you?

Oro. To her that is not here, nor doth not hear.

Ros. Pray you, no more of this; 'tis like the bowing of Irish wolves against the moon—I will help you, [to Silvius.] if I can:—I would love you [to Phoebe.] if I could.—To-morrow meet me all together.—I will marry you, [to Phoebe.] if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married to-morrow:—

I will satisfy you, [to Orlando.] if ever I satisfied man, and you shall be married to-morrow. I will content you, [to Silvius.] if whatpleases you contents you, and you shall be married to-morrow.

As you [to Orlando.] love Rosalind, meet;—as you [to Silvius.] love Phoebe, meet; and as I love no woman, I'll meet.—So, fare you well; I have left you commands.

SIL. I'll not fail, if I live.

Phoe. Nor I. Oro. Nor I. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audrey; to-morrow will we be married.

Aud. I do desire it with all my heart: and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world. Here come two of the banished duke's pages.

Enter two Pages.

1 Page. Well met, honest gentleman.

Touch. By my troth, well met: Come, sit, sit, and a song.

2 Page. We are for you: sit i' the middle.

1 Page. Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse; which are the only prologues to a good voice?

2 Page. I'faith, i'faith; and both in a tune, like two gypsies on a horse.

SONG.

I.

It was a lover and his lass,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonno,

That o'er the green corn-fields did pass

In the spring time, the only pretty rank time,

When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding:

Sweet lovers love the spring.

II.

Between the acres of the rye,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonno,

These pretty country folks would lie,

In spring time, &c.

III.

This carol they began that hour,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonno,

How that a life was but a flower

In spring time, &c.

And therefore take the present time,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonno

For love is crowned with the prime

In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no greater matter in the ditty, yet the note was very unturnable.

1 Page. You are deceived, sir; we kept time, we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be with you;

And God mend your voices! Come, Audrey. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy Can do all this that he hath promised?

Oro. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not;

As those that fear they hope, and know they fear.
Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phebe.

Ros. Patience once more, whiles our compact is urg'd. —
You say, if I bring in your Rosalind.

You will bestow her on Orlando here?

Duke S. That would I, had I kingdoms to give with her.

Ros. And you say you will have her, when I bring her?

Orl. That would I, were I of all kingdoms king.

Ros. You say, you'll marry me, if I be willing?

Phe. That will I, should I die the hour after.

Ros. But, if you do refuse to marry me, You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?

Phe. So is the bargain.

Ros. You say, that you'll have Phebe, if she will?

Sil. Though to have her and death were both one thing.

Ros. I have promis'd to make all this matter even.

Keep your word, O duke, to give your daughter—
You yours, Orlando, to receive his daughter—
Keep your word, Phebe, that you'll marry me;
Or else, refusing me, to wed this shepherd—
Keep your word, Silvius, that you'll marry her, If she refuse me—and from hence I go,
To make these doubts all even.

[Exit Rosalind and Celia.

Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd-boy
Some lively touches of my daughter's favour.

Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him,
Met thought he was a brother to your daughter: But, my good lord, this boy is forest-born;
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of many desperate studies by his uncle,
Whom he reports to be a great magician,
Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Jaq. There is, sure, another flood toward, and these couples are coming to the ark! Here comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.

Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all!

Jaq. Good my lord, bid him welcome; This is the motley-minded gentleman, that I have so often met in the forest: he hath been a courtier he swears.

Touch. If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flatter'd a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jaq. And how was that t'en up?

Touch. 'Faith, we met, and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Jaq. How seventh cause? Good my lord, like this fellow.

Duke S. I like him very well.

Touch. God'dil you, sir; I desire you of the like. I press in here, sir, amongst the rest of the country copulatives, to swear, and to forswear: according as marriage binds, and blood breaks:—

A poor virgin, sir, an ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own; a poor humour of mine, sir, to take that that no man else will: Rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor-house; as your pearl, in your foul oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sententious.

Touch. According to the fool's bolt, sir, and such dulcet diseases.

Jaq. But for the seventh cause; how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touch. Upon a lie seven times removed;—Bear your body more seeming, Audrey:—as thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard; he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: This is called the Retort courteous. If I sent him word again it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: This is called the Quip modest. If again, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment: This is called the Reply churlish. If again it was not well cut, he would answer, I spake not true: This is called the Reproof valiant. If again, it was not well cut, he would say, I lie: This is called the Countercheck quarrelsome: and so, to the Lie circumstantial, and the Lie direct.

Jaq. And how oft did you say, his beard was not well cut.

Touch. I durst go no further than the Lie circumstantial, nor he durst not give me the Lie direct: and so we measured swords and parted.

Jaq. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie?

Touch. O, sir, we quarrel in print, by the book: as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the Retort courteous; the second the Quip modest; the third, the Reply churlish; the fourth, the Reproof valiant; the fifth, the Countercheck quarrelsome: the sixth, the Lie with circumstance; the seventh, the Lie direct. All these you may avoid, but the lie direct: and you may avoid that too, with an If. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel; but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an If, as, If you said so, then I said so; And they shook hands, and swore brothers. Your If is the only peace-maker:—much virtue in If.

Jaq. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? he's as good at any thing, and yet a fool.

Duke S. He uses his folly like a stalking-horse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, leading Rosalind in woman's clothes; and Celia.

Still Music.

Hym. Then there is mirth in heaven,
When earthly things made even Atonement. Good duke, receive thy daughter,
Hymen from heaven brought her,
Yea, brought her hither;
That thou might'st join her hand with his,
Whose heart within her bosom lies.

Ros. To you I give myself, for I am yours.

To you I give myself, for I am yours.

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Orl. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.
Phe. If sight and shape be true, [Rosalind.

Why then,—my love adieu!

Ros. I'll have no father, if you be not he:—

[To Duke S.}
I’ll have no husband, if you be not he. —
[To Orlando.]

No: I’ve wed woman, if you be not she.
[To Phoebe.]

I. Hymn. Peace, ho! I bar confusion:
’Tis I must make conclusion
Of these most strange events:
Here’s eight that must take hands,
To join in Hymen’s bands,
If truth holds true contents.
You and you no cross shall part:
[To Orlando and Rosalind.]

You and you are heart in heart:
[To Oliver and Celia.]

You [to Phoebe.] to his love must accord,
Or have a woman to your lord:—
You and you are sure together,
[To Touchstone and Audrey.]

As the winter to foul weather.
Whiles a wedlock-hymn we sing;
Feed yourselves with questioning;
That reason wonder may diminish,
How thus we met, and these things finish,
[Song.]

Wedding is great Juno’s crown;
O blessed bond of board and bed!
’Tis Hymen peoples every town;
High wedlock then be honoured;
Honour, high honour and renown,
To Hymen, god of every town!

Duke S. O my dear niece, welcome thou art to Even daughter, welcome in no less degree. [me;]
Ph. I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;
Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine.
[To Silvius.]

Enter Jaques de Bois.

Jaq. de B. Let me have audience for a word or
I am the second son of old Sir Rowland, [two;
That bring these tidings to this fair assembly:—
Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day
Men of great worth resorted to this forest,
Address’d a mighty power; which were on foot,
In his own conduct purposely to take
His brother here, and put him to the sword:
And to the skirts of this wild wood he came;
There, meeting with an old religious man,

After some question with him, was converted
Both from his enterprise, and from the world:
His crown bequeathing to his banish’d brother,
And all their lands restor’d to them again
That were with him exil’d: This to be true,
I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man;
Thou offer’st fairly to thy brothers’ wedding:
To one, his lands with-held: and to the other,
A land itself at large, a potent dukedom.
First, in this forest, let us do those ends
That here were well begun, and well begot:
And after, every of this happy number,
That have endur’d shrewd days and nights with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune,
According to the measure of their states.
Meantime, forget this new-fall’n dignity,
And fall into our rustic revelry:—
Play, music—and you bridess and bridegrooms all,
With measure heap’d in joy, to the measures fall.

Jaq. Sir, by your patience; if I heard you rightly,
The duke hath put on a religious life,
And thrown into the pompous court?

Jaq. de B. He hath.

Jaq. To him will I; out of these conquests
There is much matter to be heard and learn’d.—
You to your former honour I bequeath;
[To Duke S.]

Your patience and your virtue well deserves it:—
You [to Orlando] to a love, that your true faith
Is doth merit:—
You [to Oliver.] to your land, and love, and great allies:—

You [to Sylvius.] to a long and well deserved bed:—
And you [to Touchstone.] to wrangling; for thy loving voyage
Is but for two months victorious:—So to your pleas-sures;
I am for other than for dancing measures.

Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay.

Jaq. To see no pastime, I: what would you have I’ll stay to know at your abandon’d cave.
[Exit.

Duke S. Proceed, proceed: we will begin these rites,
And we do trust they’ll end, in true delights.
[A dance.

EPLOGUE.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the epilogue: but it is no more unhandsome, than to see the lord the prologue. If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, ’tis true, that a good play needs no epilogue: Yet to good wine they do use good bushes; and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in then, that am neither a good epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play! I am not furnished like a beggar, therefore to beg will not become me: my way is, to conjure you; and I’ll begin with the women. I charge you, O women, for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as please them: and so I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, (as I perceive by your simpering, none of you hate them,) that between you and the women, the play may please. If I were a woman, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, complexions that liked me, and breaths that I defied not; and, I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breaths, will, for my kind offer, when I make curts’ y, bid me farewell. [Exeunt]
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—ROUSILLON. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Bertram, the Countess of Rousillon, Helena, and Lafku, in mourning.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I, in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew: but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam;—you, sir, a father: He that so generally is at all times good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you; whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope; and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father, (O, that had! how sad a passage 'tis!) whose skill was almost as great as his honesty; had it stretched so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. 'Would, for the king's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king's disease.

Laf. How called you the man, you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent, indeed, madam; the king very lately spoke of him, admiringly, and mourningly: he was skilful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.
He cannot want the best
That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him!—Farewell, Bertram.

[Exit Countess.

Ber. The best wishes, that can be forged in your thoughts, [to Helena.] be servants to you! Be comfortable to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Hel. Farewell, pretty lady: You must hold the credit of your father.

Hel. O, were that all!—I think not on my father;

And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like?
I have forgot him: my imagination
Carries no favour in it, but Bertram's.

I am undone; there is no living, none,
If Bertram be away. It were all one,
That I should love a bright particular star,
And think to wed it, he is so above me;
In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.

The ambition in my love thus plagues itself:
The hind, that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. 'Twas pretty, though a plague,
To see him every hour; to sit and draw
His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In our heart's table; heart, too capable
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour:
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy
Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here?

Enter Parolles.

One that goes with him: I love him for his sake;
And yet I know him a notorious liar,
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these fix'd evils sit so fit in him,
That they take place, when virtue's steely bones
Look bleak in the cold wind: withal, full oft we see Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

Par. Save you, fair queen.

Hel. And you, monarch.

Par. No.

Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity?

Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you;
let me ask you a question : Man is enemy to virginy;
how may we barricado it against him?

Par. Keep him out.

Hel. But he assails; and our virginity, though valiant in the defence, yet is weak: unfold to us some warlike resistance.

Par. There is none: man, sitting down before you, will undermine you, and blow you up.

Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers, and blowers up!—Is there no military policy, how virgins might blow up men?

Par. Virginity being blown down, man will quicklier be blown up: marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made, you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature, to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational increase; and there was never virgin got, till virginity was first lost. That, you were made of, is metal to make virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found; and being ever kept, it is ever lost: 'tis too cold a companion; away with it.

Hel. I will stand for 't a little, though therefore I die a virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in't; 'tis against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity, is to accuse your mothers; which is most insurmountable disobedience. He, that hangs himself, is a virgin; virginity murders itself; and should be buried in highways, out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offendress against nature. Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is the most inhibited sin in the canon. Keep it not; you cannot choose but lose by't: Out with't: within ten years it will make itself ten, which is a goodly increase; and the principal itself not much the worse: Away with't.

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Par. Let me see: Marry, ill, to like him that ne'er it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth: off with't, while 'tis vendible: answer the time of request. Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion: richly suited, but unsuitable: just like the brooch and tooth-pick, which wear not now; Your date is better in your pie and your porridge, than in your cheek: And your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French whereder pears; it looks ill, it eats drily; marry, 'tis a withered pear; it was formerly better; marry, yet, 'tis a withered pear: Will you any thing with it?

Hel. Not my virginity yet.

There shall your master have a thousand loves,
A mother, and a mistress, and a friend,
A phoenix, captain, and an enemy,
A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign,
A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear;
His humble ambition, proud humility,
His jarring concord, and his discord dulcet,
His faith, his sweet disaster: with a world
Of pretty, fond, adoptive christendoms,
That bleeding Cupid gossips. Now shall he—
I know not what he shall!—-God send him well!—
The court's a fading-place;—and he is one—

Par. What one, 'tis a—

Hel. That I wish well.—'Tis pity—

Par. What's pity?

Hel. That wishing well had not a body in't,
Which might be felt: that we, the poorer born,
Whose baser stars do shut us up in wishes,
Might with effects of them follow our friends,
And show what we alone must think; which never Returns us thanks.

Enter a Page.

Page. Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you.

[Exit Page.

Par. Little Helen, farewell: if I can remember thee, I will think of thee at court.

Hel. Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.

Par. Under Mars, I.

Hel. I especially think, under Mars.

Par. Why under Mars?

Hel. The wars have so kept you under, that you must needs be born under Mars.

Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde, I think, rather

Par. Why think you so?

Hel. You go so much backward, when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.
First try'd our soldership! He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Discipl'd of the bravest: he last'd long;
But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act. It much repairs me to talk of your good father: In his youth
He had the wit, which I can well observe
To-day in your young lords; but they may jest,
Till their own scorn return to them unnoticed,
Ere they can hide their Levity in honour.
So like a courser, contemned, unarm'd
Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were,
His equal had awak'd them; and his honour,
Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and, at this time,
His tongue obey'd his hand: who were below him
He us'd as creatures of another place;
And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks,
Making them proud of his humility,
In their past praise he humb'd: Such a man
Might be a oracle to these younger times:
Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them now,
But goers backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir,
Lies richer in your thoughts, than on his tomb;
So in approv'd lives not his epitaph,
As in your royal speech.

King. 'Would, I were with him! He would always say, (Methinks, I hear him now: his plausive words
He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them,
To grow there, and to bear.)—Let me not live,—
Thus his good melancholy oft began,
On the catastrophes and heel of pastime,
When it was out,—let me not live, quoth he,
After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff
Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses
All but new things disdain; whose judgments are More fathers of their garments; whose constancies
Expiate before their fashions:—This he wish'd I,
After him, do after him wish too,
Since I nor wax, nor honey, can bring home,
I quickly were dissolved from my hive,
To give some labourers room.

2 Lord. You are lov'd, sir
They, that least lend it you, shall lack you first.

King. I fill a place, I know't.—How long is't,
Since the physician at your father's died? [count,
He was much fam'd.

Ber. Some six months since, my lord.

King. If he were living, I would try him yet.—
Lend me an arm;—the rest have worn me out
With several applications:—nature and sickness
Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count;
My son's do noerar.

Ber. Thank your majesty.

[Exeunt. Flourish.

SCENE III.—ROUSILLON. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear: what say you of this gentlewoman?

Slew. Madam, the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours: for then we wound our modesty, and make foul the clearness of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them.

Count. What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah: The complaints, I have heard of you, I do not all believe; 'tis my sloveness, that I do not: for, I know, you lack not fully to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knaverys yours.

Clo. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

Count. Well, sir.

Clo. No, madam, 'tis not so well that I am poor; though many of the rich are damned: But, if I may have your ladyship's good will to go to the wo'd, Ibesl the woman and I will do as we may.

Count. Will thou needs be a beggar?

Clo. I do beg your good-will in this case.

Count. In what case?

Clo. In Ibesl's case, and mine own. Service is no heritage: and, I think, I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have issue of my body; for, they say bearness are blessings.

Count. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven on by the flesh; and he must needs go, that the devil drives.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Count. May the world know them?

Clo. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry, that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo. I am out of friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Clo. You are shallow, madam: e'en great friends: for the knaves come to do that for me, which I am e'-weary of. He, that cars my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop: If I be his cuckold, he's my drudge: He, that comforts my wife, is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he, that cherishes my flesh and blood, loves my flesh and blood; he, that loves my flesh and blood, is my friend; ergo, he that kisses my wife, is my friend. If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage: for young Charbon the puritan, and old Poyssam the papist, howsoever their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both on that may joll horns together, like any deer 't the herd.

Count. Wilt thou ever be a soul-mouthed and calumnious knave?

Clo. A prophet, I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

For I the ballad will repeat,
Which men full true shall find;
Your marriage comes by destiny,
Your cuckoo sings by kind.

Count. Get you gone, sir; I'll talk with you more anon.

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you; of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman, I would speak with her; Helen I mean.

Clo. Was this face face the cause quoit she,
Why the Grecians sacked Troy?
Fond done, done fond,
Was this king Prism a joy?
With that she sighed as she stood,
With that she sighed as she stood,
And gave this sentence then:
Among nine bad if one be good,
Among nine bad if one be good,
There's yet one good in ten.

Count. What, one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam, which is a purifying o' the song: 'Would God would serve the world so all the year! we'd find no fault with the tythe-woman, if I were the parson: One in ten, quoth a! an we might have a good woman born but every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the lottery well; a man may draw his heart out, ere he pluck one.

Count. You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you!

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done!—Though honesty be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart.—I am going, forsooth; the business is for Helen to come hither.

[Exit Town

Count. Well, now.

Stew. Madam, Helen, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do: her father bequesth her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owing her, than is paid; and more shall be paid her, than she'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than, I think, she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself, her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son: Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates; Love, no god, that would not extend his might, only where qualities were level: Diana, no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight to be surprised, without rescue, in the first assault, or ransome afterward: This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow, that e'er I heard virgin exclaim in: which I held my duty, speedily to acquaint you withal; sithence, in the loss that may happen, it concerns you something to know it.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar?

Clo. Have discharged this honestly; keep it to yourself: many likelihoods informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe, nor misdoubt: Pray you, leave me: still this in your bosom, and I thank you for your honest care: I will speak with you further anon.

[Exit Steward.

Enter Helena.

Count. Even so it was with me, when I was young: If we are nature's, these are ours; this thorn Doth to our rose of youth rightly belong: Our blood to us, this to our blood is born; It is the show and seal of nature's truth. Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth: By our remembrances of days foregone, Such were our faults:—or then we thought them Her eye is sick on't;—I observe her now. [none.

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam?

Count. You know, Helen, I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother Why not a mother? When I said, a mother,
Methought you saw a serpent: What's in mother, That you start at it? I say, I am your mother; And put you in the catalogue of those That were envovned mine. 'Tis often seen, Adoption strives with nature; and choice breeds A native slip to us from foreign seeds: You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan, Yet I express to you a mother's care:—

God's mercy, maiden! does it curd thy blood,
To say, I am thy mother? What's the matter,
That this distemper'd messenger of

The many-colour'd Iris, rounds thine eye?
Why? ——that you are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.

Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. Pardon, madam; The count Roussillon cannot be my brother: I am from humble, he from honour'd name; No note upon my parents, his ah noble; My master, my dear lord he is: and I His servant live, and will his vassal die: He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor your mother?

Hel. You are my mother, madam; 'Would you were (So that my lord, your son, were not my brother.) Indeed, my mother! or were you both our mo-
I care no more for, than I do for heaven, [thers
So I were not his sister: Can't no other,
But, I your daughter,he must be my brother?

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-law;

God shield, you mean it not: daughter, and mother, So strive upon your pulse: What, pale again?
My fear hath catch'd your fondness: Now I see
The mystery of your loneliness, and find
Your salt tears' head. Now to all sense 'tis gross,
You love my son; invention is asham'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say, thou dost not: therefore tell me true;
But tell me then, 'tis so — for, look, thy checks
Confess it, one to the other; and thine eyes
See it so grossly shown in thy behaviours.
That in their kind they speak it: only simul
And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue,
That truth should be suspected: Speak, is't so?
If it be so, you have wound a goodly clue;
If it be not, forswear't: how'er, Icharge thee,
As heaven shall work in me for thine avail,
To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me!

Count. Do you love my son?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress!

Count. Love you my son?

Hel. Do not you love him, madam?

Count. Go not about; my love hath in't a bond,
Whereof the world takes note: come, come, disclose
The state of your affection; for your passions
Have to the full app'c'd.

Hel. Then, I confess

Here on my knee, before high heaven and you, That before you, and next unto high heaven, I love your son:—

My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love: Be not offended; for it hurts not him,
That he is ov'd of me: I follow him not

By any token of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him;
Yet never know how that desert should be.
I know I love in vain, strive against hope;
Yet, in this captious and intemible sieve,
I still pour in the waters of my love,
And luck not to lose still: thus, Indian-like,
Religious in mine error, I adore
The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,
But knows of him no more. My dearest madam,
Let not your hate encounter with my love,
For loving where you do: but, if yourself,
Whose aged honour cites a virtuous youth,
Did ever, in so true a flame of liking,
With chastely, and love dearly, that your

Dian
Was both herself and love; O then, give pity
To her, whose state is such, that cannot choose
But lend and give, where she is sure to lose;
That seeks not to find that her search implies,
But, riddle-like, lives sweetly where she dies.

Count. Had you not lately an intent, speak truly

To go to Paris?

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true.

Hel. I will tell truth; by grace itself, I swear.
You know, my father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects, such as his reading,
And manifest experience, had collected
For general sovereignty: and that he will'd me
In headfulest reservation to bestow them,
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note: amongst the rest,
There is a remedy, approv'd, set down,
To cure the desperate languishes, whereof
The king is render'd lost.

Count. That was your motive

For Paris, was it? speak.

Hel. My lord your son made me to think of this Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king,
Had, from the conversation of my thoughts,
Haply, been absent then.

Count. But think you, Helen,

If you should tender your supposed aid,
He would receive it? He and his physicians
Are of a mind; he, that they cannot help him,
They, that they cannot help: How shall they credit
A poor unlearned virgin, when the schools,
Embowell'd of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself?

Hel. There's something hints,

More than my father's skill, which was the greatest
Of his profession, that his good receipt
Shall for my legacy, be sanctified

[honour
By the luckiest stars in heaven: and, would you
But give me leave to try success, I'd venture
The well-loss life of mine on his grace's cure,
By such a day, and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe't?

Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly.

Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave,

And love,
Means, and attendants, and my loving greetings
To those of mine in court; I'll stay at home,
And pray God's blessing into thy attempt:
Be gone to-morrow; and be sure of this,
What I can help thee to, thou shalt not miss.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—PARIS.  A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish.  Enter King, with young Lords, taking leave For the Florentine war; BERTRAM, PAROLLES, and Attendants.

King.  Farewell, young lord, these warlike principles [well:—
Do not throw from you:—and you, my lord, fare-
Share the advice betwixt you: if both gain all,
The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis received,
And is enough for both.

1 Lord.  It is our hope, sir,
After well enter'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.

King.  No, no, it cannot be: and yet my heart
Will not confess he owes the malady
That doth my life besiege.  Farewell, young lords;
Whether I live or die, be you the sons
Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy
(Those 'bated, that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy,) see, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when
The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud: I say, farewell.

2 Lord.  Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!

King.  Those girls of Italy, take heed of them;
They say, our French lack language to deny,
If they demand; beware of being captives,
Before you serve.

Both.  Our hearts receive your warnings.
King.  Farewell. —Come hither to me.

[The King retires to a couch.

1 Lord.  O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind us!

Par.  'Tis not his fault; the spark—

2 Lord.  O, 'tis brave wars!

Par.  Most admirable: I have seen those wars.

Ber.  I am commanded here, and kept a coil with,
Too young, and the next year, and 'tis too early.

Par.  An thy mind stand to it, boy, steal away bravely.

Ber.  I shall stay here the forehorse to a smock,
Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry,
I'll honour be bought up, and no sword worn,
But one to dance with! By heaven, I'll steal away.

1 Lord.  There's honour in the theft.

Par.  Commit it, count.

2 Lord.  I am your accessory; and so farewell.

Ber.  I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.

1 Lord.  Farewell, captain.

2 Lord.  Sweet Monsieur Parolles!

Par.  Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin.
Good sparks and lustrious, a word, good metals:—
You shall find in the regiment of the Spini; one captain Spario, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek: it was this very sword entrenched it: say to him, I live; and observe his reports for me.

2 Lord.  We shall, noble captain.

Par.  Mars dote on you for his novices!  [Exit Lords.]  What will you do?

Ber.  Stay; the king—

[Seeing him rise.

Par.  Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you have restrained yourself within the list of too cold an adieu; be more expressive to them: for they wear themselves in the cap of the time, there, do mister true gait, eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed;
after them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Ber.  And I will do so.

Par.  Worthy fellows; and like to prove most sinewy sword-men.

[Exeunt BERTRAM and PAROLLES.

Enter LAFEU.

Laf.  Pardon, my lord, [kneeling.] for me and my tiding.

King.  I'll fee thee to stand up.

Laf.  Then here's a man
Stands, that has brought his pardon.  I would, you Had kneel'd, my lord, to ask me mercy; and
That, at my bidding, you could so stand up.

King.  I would I had; so I had broke thy pate,
And ask'd thee mercy for't.

Laf.  Goodfaith, across;
But, my good lord, 'tis thus; Will you be cured
Of your infirmity?

King.  No.

Laf.  O, will you eat
No grapes, my royal fox? yes, but you will,
My noble grapes, an if my royal fox
Could reach them: I have seen a medicine,
That's able to breathe life into a stone;
Quicken a rock, and make you dance canary,
With spritely fire and motion; whose simple touch
Is powerful to arise king Pepin, nay,
To give Great Charlemain a pen in his hand
And write to her a love-line.

King.  What her is this?

Laf.  Why, doctor she; My lord, there's one arriv'd,
If you will see her,—now, by my faith, and honour.
If seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one, that, in her sex, her years, profession,
Wisdom, and constancy, hath amaz'd me more Than I dare blame my weakness: Will you see her
(For that is her demand) and know her business?
That done, laugh well at me.

King.  Now, good Lafeu,
Bring in the admission, that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off thine,
By wondering how thou took'st it.

Laf.  Nay, I'll fit you,
And not be all day neither.  [Exit LAFEU.

King.  Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter LAFEU, with ILENIA.

Laf.  Nay, come your ways.

King.  This haste hath wings indeed.

Laf.  Nay, come your ways;

This is his majesty, say your mind to him:
A traitor you do look like; but such traitors
His majesty seldom fears: I am Cressid's uncle,
That dare leave two together: fare you well.  [Exit.

King.  Now, fair one.  does your business follow us?

I Helen.  Ay, my good lord.  Gerard de Narbon was
My father; in what he did profess, well found.

King.  I knew him.
SCENE II.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

225

Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass;
What is inform from your sound parts shall fly,
Health shall live free, and sickness freely die.

King. Upon thy certainty and confidence,
What dar'st thou venture?

Hel. Tax of impudence,
A strumpet's boldness, a divulged shame,—
Traduc'd by odious ballads; my maiden's name
Sear'd otherwise; no worse of worst extended,
With vilenst torture let my life be ended.

King. Methinks, in thee some blessed spirit doth speak;
His powerful sound, within an organ weak;
And what impossibility would say
In common sense, sense saves another way.
Thy life is dear; for all, that life can rate
Worth name of life, in thee hath estimate;
Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, virtue, all
That happiness and prime can happy call:
Thou this to hazard, needs must intimate
Skill infinite, or monstrous desperate.
Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try:
That ministers thine own death, if I die.

Hel. If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die;
And well devis'd. Not helping, death's my fee:
But, if I help, what do you promise me?

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even?

King. Ay, by my sceptre, and my hopes of heaven.

Hel. Then shalt thou give me, with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command:
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royal blood of France;
My low and humble name to propagate
With any branch or image of thy state:
But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know
Is free for me to ask, thee to bestow.

King. Here is my hand; the premises observ'd
Thy will by my performance shall be serv'd;
So make the choice of thy own time, for I,
Thy resolv'd patient, on thee still rely.
More should I question thee, and more I must;
Though, more to know, could not be more to trust;
From whence thou cam'st, how thou tendest.—But rest
Unquestion'd welcome, and undoubted blest—
Give me some help here, ho!—If thou proceed
As high as word, my deéd shall match thy deed.

(Flourish. Exeunt.)

SCENE II.—ROUSILLON. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clo. I will show myself highly fed, and lowly taught: I know my business is but to the court.

Count. To the court! why, what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt? But to the court!

Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court: he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and, indeed, such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court; but, for me, I have an answer will serve all men.
Count. Marry, that's a bountiful answer, that fits all questions.

Clo. It is like a barber's chair; that fits all but-tocks; the pin-butlock, the quatch-butlock, the barron-butlock, any butlock.

Count. Will your answer serve to fit all questions?

Clo. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taffata punk, as Tib's rush for Tom's fore-finger, as a pancake for Shrove-Tuesday, a morris for May-day, as the nail to his hole, the cuckold to his horn, as a scolding queen to a wrangling knife, as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth; nay, as the puddling to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Clo. From below your duke, to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size, that must fill all questions.

Clo. But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it: here it is, and all that belongs to't: Ask me, if I am a courtier: it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could: I will be thereto in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?

Clo. O Lord, sir,—There's a simple putting off:—more, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord, sir,—Thick, thick, spare not me.

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this home meat.

Clo. O Lord, sir,—Nay, put me to't, I warrant you.

Count. You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.

Clo. O Lord, sir,—spare not me.

Count. Do you cry, O Lord, sir, at your whipping, and spare not me? Indeed, your O Lord, sir, is very sequest to your whipping; you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to't.

Clo. I ne'er had worse luck in my life, in my—

O Lord, sir: I see, things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time, to entertain it so mercifully with a fool.

Clo. O Lord, sir,—Why, there's serves well again.

Count. An end, sir, to your business: Give Helen And urge her to a present answer back: [this, Commend me to my kinsmen, and my son; This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

Count. Not much employment for you: You understand me?

Clo. Most fruitfully; I am there before my legs.

Count. Haste you again. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter Bertram, Lafu, and Parolles.

Laf. They say, miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons, to make modern and familiar things, supernatural and causeless. Hence is it, that we make trifes of terrors; ensconcing ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear.

Par. Why, 'tis the rarest argument of wonder, that hath shot out in our latter times.

Ber. And so 'tis.

Laf. To be relinquish'd of the artists,—

Par. So I say; both of Galen and Paracelsus.

Laf. Of all the learned and authentic fellows,—

Par. Right, so I say.

Laf. That gave him out incurable.—

Par. Why, there 'tis; so say I too.

Laf. Not to be helped,—

Par. Right: as 'twere a man assured of an—

Laf. Uncertain life, and sure death.

Par. Just, you say well; so would I have said.

Laf. I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.

Par. It is, indeed: if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in,—What do you call there?—

Laf. A showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.

Par. That's it I would have said; the very same.

Laf. Why, your dolphin is not lustier: 'fore me I speak in respect—

Par. Nay, 'tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he is of a most ficinorous spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the

Laf. Very hand of heaven.

Par. Ay, so I say.

Laf. In a most weak—

Par. And debile minister, great power, great transcension: which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made, than alone the recovery of the king, as to be—

Laf. Generally thankful.

Enter King, Helena, and Attendants.

Par. I would have said it; you say well. Here comes the king.

Laf. Lustick, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head Why, he's able to lead her a coranto.

Par. Mort du Vinagre! Is not this Helen?

Laf. 'Fore God, I think so.

King. Go, call before me all the lords in court.—

[Exit an Attendant.

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side; And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense Thou hast repeale, a second time receive The confirmation of my promis'd gift, Which but attends thy naming.

Enter several Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine eye: this youthful parcel Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing, O'er whom both sovereign power and father's voice I have to use: thy frank election make; Thou hast power to choose, and they none to forsake.

Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress Fall, when love please—marry to each, but one! Laf. I'd give bay Curtal, and his furniture, My mouth no more were broken than these boys', And wrig as little beard.

King. Persue them well.

Not one of those, but had a noble father.

Hel. Gentlemen, Heaven hath, through me, restor'd the king to health. All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.

Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest, That, I protest, I simply am a maid:—

Please it your majesty, I have done already:
The blushes in my cheeks, thus whisper me,
We blush, that thou should'st choose: but be refus'd.
Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever;
We'll ne'er come there again.

King. Make choice; and, see, who shuns thy love, shuns all his love in me.

Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly;
And to imperial Love, that god most high,
Do my sighs stream.—Sir, will you hear my suit?

1 Lord. And grant it.

Hel. The honour, sir, that frames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threateningly replies;
Love make your fortunes twenty times above
Her that so wishes, and her humble love!

2 Lord. No better, if you please.

Hel. My wish receive,
Which great love grant! and so I take my leave.

Laf. Do all they deny her? an they were sons of mine, I'd have them whipped; or I would send them to the Turk, to make enuncs of.

Hel. Be not afraid [to a Lord.] that your hand should take;
I'll never do you wrong for your own sake:
Blessing upon your vows! and in your bed
Find fairer fortune, if you ever wed!

Laf. These boys are boys of ice, they'll none have her: sure, they are bastards to the English; the French ne'er got them.

Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,
To make yourself a son out of my blood.

4 Lord. Fair one, I think not so.

Laf. There's one grape yet,—I am sure thy father drank wine. But if thou be'st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen; I have known thee already.

Hel. I dare not say, I take you; [to Bertram.] but I give Me and my service, ever whilst I live,
Into your guiding power.—This is the man.

King. Why then, young Bertram, take her, she's thy wife.

Ber. My wife, my liege? I shall beseech your highness,
In such a business give me leave to use
The help of mine own eyes.

King. Know'st thou not, Bertram, what she has done for me?

Ber. Yes, my good lord; but never hope to know why I should marry her.

King. Thou know'st she has rais'd me from my sickly bed.

Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down
Must answer for your raising? I know her well;
She had her breeding at my father's charge:
A poor physician's daughter my wife!—Disdain
Rather corrupt me ever!

King. 'Tis only title thou disdain'st in her, the which
I can build up. Strange is it, that our bloods,
Of colour, weight, and heat, pour'd all together,
Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off
In differences so mighty: if she be
All that is virtuous, (save what thou dislik'st,
A poor physician's daughter,) thou dislik'st
Of virtue for the name: but do not so:
From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
The place is dignified by the doer's deed:
Where great additions swell, and virtue none,
Par. To any count; to all counts; to what is man.
Laf. To what is count's man; count's master is of another style.
Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are too old.
Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to which title age cannot bring thee.
Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.
Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinances, to be a pretty wise fellow; thou didst make tolerable vent of thy travel; it might pass: yet the scurfs, and the hamnerets, about thee, did manifoldly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden. I have now found thee; when I lose thee again, I care not: yet art thou good for nothing but taking up; and thou art scarce worth.
Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee,——
Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial;——which if——Lord have mercy on thee for a half hour; my good window of lattice fare thee well; thy casement I need not open, for I look through thee. Give me thy hand.
Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.
Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy of it.
Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.
Laf. Yes, good faith, every dram of it: and I will not bate thee a scruple.
Par. Well, I shall be wiser.
Laf. E'en as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a snatch o' the contrary. If ever thou be'st bound to thy scarf, and beaten, thou shalt find what is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge; that I may say, in the default, he is a man I know.
Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.
Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal: for doing I am past; as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave.
Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me; scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord!——Well, I must be patient; there is no fettering of authority. I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, an he were double and double a lord. I'll have no more pity of his age, than I would have of——I'll beat him, an if I could but meet him again.

Re-enter Luc. Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married, there's news for you; you have a new mistress. Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: He is my good lord; whom I serve above, is my master.
Laf. Who? God?
Par. Ay, sir.
Laf. The devil it is, that's thy master. Why dost thou garter up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves; do other servants so? Thouwert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honour, if I were but two hours younger, I'd beat thee: methinks, thou art a general offence, and every man should beat thee. I think, thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.
Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.
Laf. Go to, sir; you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate; you are a vagabond, and no true traveller: you are more saucy with lords, and honourable personages, than the heraldry of your birth and virtue gives you commission. You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you. [Exit.

Enter Bertram.
Par. Good, very good; it is so then.—Good, very good; let it be concealed a while.
Ber. Undone, and forgetting to care for ever!
Par. What is the matter, sweet heart?
Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have I will not bed her.
[sworn]
Par. What? what, sweet heart?
Ber. O my Paroles, they have married me——
I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.
Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits The tread of a man's foot: to the wars!
Ber. There's letters from my mother; what the I know not yet."
[import is,
Par. Ay, that would be known: To the wars, my boy, to the wars!
Ber. It shall be so; I'll send her to my house, Acquaint my mother with my hate to her, And wherefore I am fled; write to the king That which I durst not speak: His present gift Shall furnish me to those Italian fields, Where noble fellows strike: War is no strife To the dark house, and the detested wife.
Par. Will this capriccio hold in thee, art sure?
Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me. I'll send her straight away: To-morrow I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow.
Par. Why, these balls bound; there's noise in it.
' Tis hard; A young man, married, is a man that's marr'd: Therefore, away, and leave her bravely: go: The king has done you wrong! but, hush! 'tis so.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter Helena and Clown.
Hel. My mother greets me kindly: Is she well?
Clo. She is not well; but yet she has her health: she's very merry; but yet she is not well: but thanks be given, she's very well, and wants nothing 'tis the world; but yet she is not well.
Hel. If she be very well, what does she all, that she's not very well?
Clo. Truly, she's very well, indeed, but for two things.
Hel. What two things?
Clo. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly! the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter Parolles.
Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!
Hel. I hope sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.
Par. You had my prayers to lead them on: and to keep them on, have them still.—O, my knave! How does my old lady?

_Clo._ So that you had her wrinkles, and I her money, I would she did as you say.

_Par._ Why, I say nothing.

_Clo._ Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing: To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title, which is within a very little of nothing.

_Par._ Away, thou'rt a knave.

_Clo._ You should have said, sir, before a knave thou art a knave; that is, before me thou art a knave: this had been truth, sir.

_Par._ Go to, thou art a witty fool, I have found thee.

_Clo._ Did you find me in yourself, sir? or were you taught to find me? The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure, and the increase of laughter.

_Par._ A good knave, 'faith, and well fed.—Madam, my lord will go away to-night: A very serious business calls on him.
The great prerogative and rite of love, Which, as your due, time claims, he does acknowledge; But puts it off by a compell'd restraint;
Whose want and whose delay, is strewed with sweets,
Which they distil now in the curbed time,
To make the coming hour o'erflow with joy,
And pleasure drown the brim.

_Hel._ What's his will else?

_Par._ That you will take your instant leave o' the king,
And make this haste as your own good proceeding,
Strengthen'd with what apology you think
May make it probable need.

_Hel._ What more commands he?

_Par._ That, having this obtain'd, you presently Attend his further pleasure.

_Hel._ In every thing I wait upon his will.

_Par._ I shall report it so.

_Hel._ I pray you.—Come, sirrah.

[Exit.]

SCENE V.—Another Room in the same.

_Enter Lafue and Bertram._

_Laf._ But, I hope, your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

_Ber._ Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approof.

_Laf._ You have it from his own deliverance.

_Ber._ And by other warranted testimony.

_Laf._ Then my dial goes not true; I took this lark for a bunting.

_Ber._ I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

_Laf._ I have then sinned against his experience, and transgressed against his valour; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here he comes; I pray you, make us friends, I will pursue the amity.

[Exeunt Parolles.]

_Par._ These things shall be done, sir.

[To Bertram.]

_Laf._ Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?

_Par._ Sir?

_Laf._ O, I know him well: Ay, sir; he, sir, is a good workman, a very good tailor.

_Ber._ Is she gone to the king?

[Aside to Parolles.]

_Par._ She is.

_Ber._ Will she away to-night?

_Par._ As you'll have her.

_Ber._ I have writ my letters, casketed my treasure,
Given order for our horses; and to-night,
When I should take possession of the bride,—
And, ere I do begin,—

_Laf._ A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that lies three-hours, and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothings with, should be once heard, and thrice beaten.—God save you, captain.

_Ber._ Is there any unkindness between my lord
And you, monsieur?

_Par._ I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure.

_Laf._ You have made shift to run into't, boots and spurs all, like him that leaped into the custard; and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer question for your residence.

_Ber._ It may be, you have mistaken him, my lord.

_Laf._ And shall do so ever, though I took him at his prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes: trust him not in matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them tame, and know their natures.—Farewell, monsieur: I have spoken better of you, than you have or will deserve at my hand; but we must do good against evil.

[Exeunt Parolles.]

_Par._ An idle lord, I swear.

_Ber._ I think so.

_Par._ Why, do you not know him?

_Ber._ Yes, I do know him well; and common speech
Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my clog.

_Enter Helen._

_Hel._ I have, sir, as I was commanded from you
Spoke with the king, and have procur'd his leave
For present parting; only, he desires
Some private speech with you.

_Ber._ I shall obey his will.

_You must not marvel, Helen, at my course,
Which holds not colour with the time, nor does
The ministration and required office
On my particular: prepar'd I was not
For such a business; therefore am I found
So much unsettled. This drives me to entreat you,
That presently you take your way for home;
And rather muse, than ask, why I entreat you:
For my respects are better than they seem;
And my appointments have in them a need,
Greater than shows itself, at the first view,
To you that know them not. This to my mother
[Giving a letter]
'Twill be two days ere I shall see you; so
I leave you to your wisdom.

_Hel._

_Sir, I can nothing say
But that I am your most obedient servant.

_Ber._ Come, come, no more of that.

_Hel._

_And ever shall
With true observance seek to eke out that,
Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail'd
To equal my great fortune.

_Ber._

_Let that go:
My haste is very great: Farewell; hie home.

_Hel._ Pray, sir, your pardon.
Ber. Well, what would you say?
Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe;
Nor dare I say, 'tis mine; and yet it is;
But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal
What law does vouch mine own.
Ber. What would you have?
Hel. Something; and scarce so much—nothing, indeed.
I would not tell you what I would: my lord—
'tfaith, yes;—
Strangers, and foes, do sunder, and not kiss.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence attended; two French Lords, and others.

Duke. So that, from point to point, now have you heard
The fundamental reasons of this war;
Whose great decision hath much blood let forth,
And more thirsts after.

1 Lord. Holy seems the quarrel
Upon your grace's part; black and fearful
On the opposer.

Duke. Therefore we marvel much, our cousin
France
Would, in so just a business, shut his bosom
Against our borrowing prayers.

2 Lord. Good my lord,
The reasons of our state I cannot yield,
But like a common and an outward man,
That the great figure of a council frames
By self-unable motion: therefore dare not Say what I think of it; since I have found Myself in my uncertain grounds to fail
As often as I guess'd.

Duke. Be it his pleasure,
2 Lord. But I am sure, the younger of our nay
That surfeit on their ease, will, day by day, more,
Come here for physic.

Duke. Welcome shall they be;
And all the honours, that can fly from us,
Shall on them settle. You know y'ur places well;
When better fall, for your avails they fell:
To-morrow to the field.

Flourish. Exit.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save, that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you?

Clo. Why, he will look upon his boot, and sing;
mend the stuff, and sing; ask questions, and sing;
pick his teeth, and sing: I know a man that had this trick of melancholy, sold a goodly marion for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come.
[Opening a letter.

Clo. I have no mind to Isbel, since I was at court:
our old ling and our Isbela o'the country are nothing like your old ling and your Isbels o'the court; the brains of my Cupid's knocked out; and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here?

Clo. E'en that you have there.
[Exit.

Count. [Reads.] I have sent you a daughter-in-law
she hath recovered the king, and undone me.
I have wedded her, not bedded her; and sworn to make the not eternal. You shall hear,
I am run away: I know it, before the report come.
If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.

Your unfortunate son,

Bertram.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king;
To pluck his indignation on thy head,
By the misprizing of a maid too virtuous
For the contempt of empire.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder is heavy news within, between two soldiers and my young lady.

Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort; your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be killed?

Clo. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does: the danger is in standing to't; that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children.
Here they come, will tell you more: for my part, I only hear, your son was run away.

[Exit Clown.

Enter Helena and two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Save you, good madam.

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone.

2 Gent. Do not say so.

Count. Think upon patience.—'Pray you, gentlemen,—

I have felt so many quirks of joy, and grief,
That the first face of neither, on the start,
Can woman me unto:—Where is my son, I pray
you?

2 Gent. Madam, he's gone to serve the duke of Florence.

We met him thitherward; from thence we came,
And, after some despatch in hand at court,
Thither we bend again.

Hel. Look on his letter, madam; here's my assort.

[Reads.] When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body, that I am father to.
SCENE IV.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

I met the ravin lion when he roar'd
With sharp constraint of hunger; better 'twere
That all the miseries, which nature owes,
Were mine at once: No, come thou home, Rousillon,
Whence honour but of danger wins a scar,
As off it loses all; I will be gone:
My being here it is, that holds thee hence Shall I stay here to do't? no; no; although
The air of paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic'd all: I will be gone;
That pitiful rumour may report my flight,
To consolate thine ear. Come, night; end, day!
For, with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—FLORENCE. Before the Duke's Palace.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Bertram, Lords, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and we,
Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence,
Upon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir, it is
A charge too heavy for my strength: but yet
We'll strive to bear it for thy worthy sake,
To the extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth;
And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm,
As thy auspicious mistress!

Ber. This very day,
Great Mars, I put myself into thy file;
Make me but like my thoughts; and I shall prove
A lover of thy drum, hater of love.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—ROUSILLON. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Steward.

Count. Alas! and would you take the letter of her?
Might you not know, she would do as she has done.
By sending me a letter? Read it again.

Stew. I am St. Jaques' pilgrim, thinest gone:
Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon.
With sainted vow my faults to have amended.
Write, write, that from the bloody course of war,
My dearest master, your dearest son may see;
Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far,
His name with jealous fervour sanctify:
His taken labours bid him me forgive;
I, his despoilful Juno, sent him forth.
From courtly friends, with camping woes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth;
He is too good and fair for death and me;
Whom I myself embrace, to set him free.

Count. Ah, what sharp stings are in her mildest words?
Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much,
As letting her pass so; had I spoke with her,
I could have well diverted her intents,
Which thus she hath prevented.

Stew. Pardon me, madam
If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'er-ta'en; and yet she writes,
Pursuit would be but vain.

Count. What angel shall...
Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive,
Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear,
And loves to grant, reprove him from the wrath
Of greatest justice.—Write, write, Rinaldo,
To this unworthy husband of his wife:
Let every word weigh heavy of her worth,
That he do weigh too light: my greatest grief,
Though little he do feel it, set down sharply.
Despatch the most convenient messenger:—
When, haply, he shall hear that she is gone,
He will return; and hope I may, that she,
Hearing so much, will speed her foot again.
Led hither by pure love: which of them both
Is dearest to me, I have no skill in sense
To make distinction:—Provide this messenger:
My heart is heavy, and mine age is weak;
Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Without the Walls of Florence.

A bucket afar off. Enter an old Widow of Florence,
DIANA, VIOLENTA, MARIANA, and other Citizens.

Wid. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city,
we shall lose all the sight.

DIA. They say, the French count has done most honourable service.

Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander; and that with his own hand he slew the duke's brother. We have lost our labour: they are gone a contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets.

MAR. Come, let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French Earl: the honour of a maid is her name; and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour, how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion.

MAR. I know that knave; hang him! one Parolles:
a filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young earl.—Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under:
many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them. I hope I need not to advise you further; but, I hope, your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known, but the modesty which is so lost.

DIA. You shall not need to fear me.

[Enter PILGRIM in the dress of a pilgrim.

Wid. I hope so. —Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house: thither they send one another; I'll question her. —
God save you, pilgrim! Whither are you bound?

HEL. To Saint Jaques-le-Grand.

Where do the palmers lodge, I do beseech you?

WID. At the Saint Francis here, beside the port.

HEL. Is this the way?

WID. Ay, marry, is it. —Hark you! [A march afar off.

They come this way:—If you will tarry, holy
But till the troops come by; [pilgrim,
I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd;]
The rather, for, I think, I know your hostess
As ample as myself.

HEL. Is it yourself?

WID. If you shall please so, pilgrim.

HEL. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

WID. You came, I think, from France?

HEL. I did so.

WID. Here you shall see a countryman of yours
That has done worthy service.

HEL. His name, I pray you.

DIA. The count Rousillon; Know you such a one?

HEL. But by the ear, that hears most nobly of His face I know not. [him:

DIA. Whatso'er he is,
He's bravely taken here. He stole from France,
As 'tis reported, for the king had married him
Against his liking; Think you it is so?

HEL. Ay, surely, mere the truth; I know his lady.

DIA. There is a gentleman, that serves the count
Reports but coarsely of her.

HEL. What's his name?

DIA. Monsieur Parolles.

HEL. O, I believe with him,
In argument of praise, or to the worth
Of the great count himself, she is too mean.
To have her name repeated; all her deserving
Is a reserved honesty, and that
I have not heard examin'd.

DIA. Alas, poor lady!
'Tis a hard bondage, to become the wife
Of a detesting lord.

WID. A right good creature: whereso'er she is,
Her heart weighs sadly: this young maid might do
A shrewd turn, if she pleas'd. [her

HEL. How do you mean?

May be, the amorous count solicits her
In the unlawful purpose.

WID. He does, indeed;
And breaks with all that can in such a suit
Corrupt the tender honour of a maid;
But she is arm'd for him, and keeps her guard
In honestest defence.

ENTER, with drum and colours, a party of the Florentine army, BERTRAM, and PAROLLES.

MAR. The gods forbid such

WID. So, now they come:—
That is Antonio, the duke's eldest son;
That, Escalus.

HEL. Which is the Frenchman?

DIA. He;
That with the plume: 'tis a most gallant fellow;
I would, he lov'd his wife: if he were honester,
He were much goodlier:—Is't not a handsome
HEL. I like him well. [gentleman?

DIA. 'Tis pity he is not honest: Yond's that same knave,
That leads him to these places; were I his lady,
I'd poison that vile rascal.

HEL. Which is he?

DIA. The jack-an-apes with scars: Why is he melancholy?

HEL. Perchance he's hurt i'the battle.

PAR. Lose our drum! well.

MAR. He's shrewdly vexed at something: Look,
he has spied us.

WID. Marry, hang you!

MAR. And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier!

[Exeunt BERTRAM, PAROLLES, Officers, and Soldiers.

WID. The troop is past: Come pilgrim, I will bring you

Where you shall host: of enjoin'd penitents
SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter BERTRAM, and the two French Lords.

1 Lord. Nay, good my lord, put him to’t; let him have his way.

2 Lord. If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.

1 Lord. On my life, my lord, a bubble.

Ber. Do you think, I am so far deceived in him?

1 Lord. Believe it, my lord, in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as any kinsman, he’s a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality worthy your lordship’s entertainment.

2 Lord. It were fit you knew him: lest, reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might, at some great and trusty business, in a main danger, fail you.

Ber. I would, I knew in what particular action to try him.

2 Lord. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

1 Lord. I, with a troop of Florentine, will suddenly surprise him; such I will have, whom I am sure, he knows not from the enemy: we will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our tents: Be but your lordship present at his examination: if he do not, for the promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing.

2 Lord. O, for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drum; he says, he has a stratagem for’t: when your lordship sees the bottom of his success in’t, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum’s entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter PAROLLES.

1 Lord. O, for the love of laughter, hinder not the humour of his design: let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

Ber. How now, monsieur? this drum sticks sorely in your disposition.

2 Lord. A pox on’t, let it go; ’tis but a drum.

Par. But a drum! Is’t but a drum? A drum so lost!—There was an excellent command! to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers.

2 Lord. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service; it was a disaster of war that Caesar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.

Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success: some dishonour we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might, but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered: but that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or hic jacet.

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach to’t, monsieur, if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this instrument of honour again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise, and go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit; if you speed well in it, the duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. I’ll about it this evening: and I will presently pen down my dilemmas, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation, and, by midnight, look to hear further from me.

Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace, you are gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord, but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know, thou art valiant; and to the possibility of thy soldiership, will subscribe for thee. Farewell.

Par. I love not many words.

[Exit.]

1 Lord. No more than a fish loves water.—Is not this a strange fellow, my lord? that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done; damns himself to do, and dares better be damned than to do’t.

2 Lord. You do not know him, my lord, as we do: certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man’s favour, and, for a week, escape a great deal of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why, do you think, he will make no deed at all of this, that so seriously he does address himself unto?

1 Lord. None in the world; but return with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lies: but we have almost embossed him, you shall see his fall to-night: for, indeed, he is not for your lordship’s respect.

2 Lord. We’ll make you some sport with the fox, ere we case him. He was first smoked by the old lord Lafeu: when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sprat you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.

1 Lord. I must go look my twigs; he shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother, he shall go along with me.

1 Lord. As’t please your lordship: I’ll leave you. [Exit.]

Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show the lass I spoke of.

[You]

2 Lord. But, you say, she’s honest.

Ber. That’s all the fault: I spoke with her but once, and found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her, by this same coxcomb that we have ’t the wind, tokens and letters which she did re-send; and this is all I have done: she’s a fair creature; will you go see her?

2 Lord. With all my heart, my lord. [Exit.]
SCENE VII.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Helena and Widow.

Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not she, I know not how I shall assure you further, But I shall lose the grounds I work upon.

Wid. Though my estate be fallen, I was well Nothing acquainted with these businesses; [born, And would not put my reputation now In any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you. First, give me trust, the count he is my husband; And, what to your sworn counsel I have spoken, Is so, from word to word; and then you cannot, By the good aid that I of you shall borrow, Err in bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you; For you have show'd me that, which will approve You are great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of gold, And let me buy your friendly help thus far, Which I will over-pay, and pay again, [daughter, When have I found it. The count he woe's your Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty, Resolves to carry her; let her, in fine, consent, As we'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it, Now his important blood will nought deny That she'll demand: A ring the county wears, That downward hath succeeded in his house, From son to son, some few or six descents Since the first father were it: this ring he holds In most rich choice; yet, in his idle fire, To buy his will, it would not seem too dear Howe'er repented after.

Wid. Now I see The bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawful then: It is no more, But that your daughter, ere she seems as won, Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter; In fine, delivers me to fill the time. Herself most chastely absent; after this, To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns To what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded: Instruct my daughter how she shall persue, That time and place, with this deceit so lawful, May prove coherent. Every night he comes With musics of all sorts, and songs compos'd To her unworthiness: It nothing steads us, To chide him from our eaves: for he persists, As if his life lay on't.

Hel. Why then, to-night. Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed, Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed, And lawful meaning in a lawful act; Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact: But let's about it. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Florentine Camp.

Enter first Lord, with five or six Soldiers in ambush.

1 Lord. He can come no other way but by this hedge' corner: When you sally upon him, speak what terrible language you will; though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him; unless some one among us, whom we must produce for an interpreter:

1 Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.

1 Lord. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?

1 Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.

1 Lord. But what linsy-wolsy hast thou to speak to us again?

1 Sold. Even such as you speak to me.

1 Lord. He must think us some band of strangers l'the adversary's entertainment. Now he hath a smack of all neighbouring languages; therefore we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak to one another; so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabbage enough, and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic. But couch, ho! here he comes; to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Ten o'clock; within these three hours 'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible invention that carries it: They begin to smoke me; and disgraces have of late knocked too often at my door. I find, my tongue is too fool-hardy; but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

1 Lord. This is the first truth that c'er thine own tongue was guilty of. [Aside.

Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum; being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say, I got them in exploit: Yet slight ones will not carry it: They will say, Came you off with so little? and great ones I dare not give. Wherefore? what's the instance? Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth, and buy another of Bajazet's mule, if you prattle me into these perils.

1 Lord. Is it possible, he should know what he is, and be that he is? [Aside.

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn; or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

1 Lord. We cannot afford you so. [Aside.

Par. Or the barring of my beard; and to say, it was in stratagem.

1 Lord. 'Twould not do. [Aside.

Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say, I was stripped.

1 Lord. Hardly serve. [Aside.

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel—

Par. Thirty fathom.

1 Lord. Three great oaths would scarce make that he believed. [Aside

Par. I would, I had any drum of the enemy's: I would swear, I recovered it.

1 Lord. You shall hear one anon. [Aside

Par. A drum now of the enemy's! [Alarum within SCENE II.—FLORENCE. A Room in the Widow’s House.

Enter Bertram and Diana.

Ber. They told me, that your name was Pontibell.

Dia. No, my good lord, Diana.

Ber. Titled goddess; and worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, in your fine frame hath love no quality? If the quick fire of youth light not your mind, you are no maiden, but a monument: When you are dead, you should be such a one As you are now, for you are cold and stern; and now you should be as your mother was, When your sweet self was got.

Dia. She then was honest.

Ber. So should you be.

Dia. No:

My mother did but duty; such, my lord, As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more of that! I pr’ythee, do not strive against my vows: I was compelled to her: but I love thee By love’s own sweet constraint, and will for ever Do thee all rights of service.

Dia. Ay, so you serve us,

Till we serve you: but when you have our roses, You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves, And mock us with our bareness.

Ber. How have I sworn ’Tis not the many oaths that make the truth; But the plain single vow, that is vow’d true. What is not holy, that we swear not by, But take the Highest to witness: Then, pray you, tell me, If I should swear by Jove’s great attributes, I lov’d you dearly, would you believe my oaths, When I did love you ill? this has no holding, To swear by him whom I protest to love, That I will work against him: Therefore, your oaths Are words, and poor conditions; but unseal’d; At least, in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it; Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy; And my integrity ne’er knew the crafts, That you do charge men with: Stand no more off, But give thyself unto my sick desires, Who then recover: say, thou art mine, and ever My love, as it begins, shall so persévere.

Dia. I see, that men make hopes, in such affairs, That we’ll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring. Ber. I’ll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power To give it from me.

Dia. Will you not, my lord?

Ber. It is an honour longing to our house, Bequeathed down from many ancestors: Which were the greatest obloquy ’tis the world In me to lose.

Dia. Mine honour’s such a ring: My chastity’s the jewel of our house, Bequeathed down from many ancestors; Which were the greatest obloquy ’tis the world In me to lose: Thus your own proper wisdom Brings in her champion honour on my part, Against your vain assault.

Ber. Here, take my ring:

My house, mine honour, yes, my life be thine, And I’ll be bid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber window; I’ll order that my mother shall not hear. Now will I charge you in the band of truth, When you have conquer’d my yet maiden-bed, Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me: My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them, When back again this ring shall be deliver’d: And on your finger, in the night, I’ll put Another ring; that, what in time proceeds, May taken to the future our past deeds. Adieu, till then; then, fall not: You have won A wife of me, though there my hope be done. Ber. A heaven on earth I have won, by wooing thee.

Dia. For which live long to thank both heaven and me!

You may so in the end.—

My mother told me just how he would woo, As, if she sat in his heart; she says, all men Have the like oaths: he had sworn to marry me, When his wife’s dead; therefore I’ll lie with him, When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braw, Marry that will, I’ll live and die a maid: Only, in this disguise, I think’t no sin To cozen him, that would unjustly win. [Exit.
SCENE III.—The Florentine Camp.

Enter the two French Lords, and two or three Soldiers.

1 Lord. You have not given him his mother's letter?

2 Lord. I have deliver'd it an hour since: there is something in't that stings his nature; for, on the reading it, he changed almost into another man.

1 Lord. He has much worthy blame laid upon him, for shaking off so good a wife, and so sweet a lady.

2 Lord. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even turned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

1 Lord. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

2 Lord. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown; and this night he stairs his will in the spoil of her honour: he hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

1 Lord. Now, God delay our rebellion: as we are ourselves, what things are we!

2 Lord. Merely our own traitors. And as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends; so he, that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream o'erflows himself.

1 Lord. Is it not meant damnable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to-night?

2 Lord. Not till after midnight; for he is dieted to his hour.

1 Lord. That approaches aspace: I would gladly have him see his company anatomised; that he might take a measure of his own judgments, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit.

2 Lord. We will not meddle with him till he come; for his presence must be the whip of the other.

1 Lord. In the mean time, what hear you of these wars?

2 Lord. I hear, there is an overture of peace.

1 Lord. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

2 Lord. What will count Roussillon do then? will he travel higher, or return again into France?

1 Lord. I perceive, by this demand, you are not altogether of his council.

2 Lord. Let it be forbid, sir! so should I be a great deal of his act.

1 Lord. Sir, his wife, some two months since, fled from his house: her pretence is a pilgrimage to Saint Jaques-le-Grand; which holy undertaking, with most austere sanctimony, she accomplished: and, there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

2 Lord. How is this justified?

1 Lord. The stronger part of it by her own letters; which makes her story true, even to the point of her death: her death itself, which could not be her office to say, is come, was faithfully confirmed by the rector of the place.

2 Lord. Hath the count all this intelligence?

1 Lord. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

2 Lord. I am heartily sorry, that no'll be glad of this.

1 Lord. How mightily, sometimes, we make us comforts of our losses!

2 Lord. And how mightily, some other times, we drown our gain in tears! The great dignity, that his valour hath here acquired for him, shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.

1 Lord. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would be prond, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherish'd by our virtues.—

Enter a Servant.

How now? where's your master?

Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave; his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.

2 Lord. They shall be no more than needful there, if they were more than they can commend.

Enter Bertram.

1 Lord. They cannot be too sweet for the king's tartness. Here's his lordship now. How now, my lord, is't not after midnight?

Ber. I have to-night dispatched sixteen businesses, a month's length a-piece, by an abstract of success: I have conge'd with the duke, done my adieu with his nearest; buried a wife, mourned for her; writ to my lady-mother, I am returning; entertained my convoy; and, between these main parcels of despatch, effected many nicer deeds; the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

2 Lord. If the business be of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.

Ber. I mean, the business is not ended, as fearing to hear of it hereafter: But shall we have this dialogue between the fool and the soldier?—Come, bring forth this counterfeit module; he has deceived me, like a double-meaning prosypher.

2 Lord. Bring him forth: [Exeunt Soldiers.] he has sat in the stocks all night, poor gallant knave.

Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry himself?

1 Lord. I have told your lordship already; the stocks carry him. But to answer you as you would be understood; he weeps like a wench that had shed her milk: he hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance, to this very instant disaster of his setting i'the stocks: And what think you he hath confessed?

Ber. Nothing of me, has he?

2 Lord. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Re-enter Soldiers with Parolles.

Ber. A plague upon him! muffled! he can say nothing of me; hush! hush!

1 Lord. Hoodman comes! Porto tartarossa.

2 Lord. He calls for the tortures: What will you say without 'em?

Par. I will confess what I know without constraint; if ye pinch me like a pasty, I can say no more.

1 Sold. Bosko chimurco.

2 Lord. Boblibindo chicurrrce.
1 Sold. You are a merciful general:—Our general bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.
1 Sold. First demand of him how many horse the duke is strong. What say you to that?

Par. Five or six thousand; but very weak and unserviceable: the troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.

1 Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?
Par. Do; I'll take the sacrament on't, how and which way you will.
Ber. All's one to him. What a past-saving slave is this!
1 Lord. You are deceived, my lord; this is monsieur Iaroles, the gallant militarist (that was his own phrase,) that had the whole theoretick of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the shape of his dagger.
2 Lord. I will not trust a man again, for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have everything in him, by wearing his apparel neatly.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. Five or six thousand horse, I said,—I will say true,—or thereabouts, set down,—for I'll speak truth.
1 Lord. He's very near the truth in this.
Ber. But I con him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it.
Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. I humbly thank you, sir: a truth's a truth, the rogues are marvellous poor.
1 Sold. Demand of him of what strength they are a-foot. What say you to that?
Par. By your troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio a hundred and fifty, Sebastian so many, Corambus so many, Jacques so many; Guillian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratti, two hundred and fifty each; mine own company, Chitopher, Vaumond, Bentii, two hundred and fifty each: so that the muster-file, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll; half of which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.
Ber. What shall be done to him?
1 Lord. Nothing, but let him have thanks. Demand of him my conditions, and what credit I have with the duke.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down. You shall demand of him, whether one Captain Dumain be the camp, a Frenchman; what his reputation is with the duke, what his valour, honesty, expertise in wars; or whether he thinks, it were not possible, with well-weighing sums of gold, to corrupt him to a revolt. What say you to this? what do you know of it?
Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the interjectors: Demand them singly.
1 Sold. Do you know this Captain Dumain?
Par. I know him: he was a botcher's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the sheriff's fool with child; a dumb innocent, that could not say him, nay.

[DUMAIN Lifts up his hand in anger]
Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though I know, his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls.
1 Sold. Well, is this captain in the duke of Florence's camp?

Par. Upon my knowledge, he is, and lousy.
1 Lord. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.
1 Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?
Par. The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine; and writ to me this other day, to turn him out of the band: I think, I have his letter in my pocket.
1 Sold. Marry, we'll search.
Par. In good sadness, I do not know; either it is there, or it is upon a file, with the duke's other letters, in my tent.
1 Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper. Shall I read it to you?
Par. I do not know, if it be it, or no.
Ber. Our interpreter does it well.
1 Lord. Excellently.
1 Sold. Dian. The Count's a fool, and full of gold,—

Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir; that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurement of one count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but, for all that, very ruttish: I pray you, sir, put it up again.
1 Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.
Par. My meaning in't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid: for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy: who is a whale to virginty, and devours up all the fry it finds.

Ber. Damnable, both sides rogue!
1 Sold. When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it;
After he scores, he never pays the score:
Half won, is match well made; match, and well make it;
He never pays after debts, take it before;
And say, a soldier, Dian, told thee this;
Men are to melt with, boys are not to kiss;
For count of this, the count's a fool, I know it,
Who pays before, but not when he does owe it.
Thine, as he vow'd to thee in thine ear.

PAROLES.

Ber. He shall be whipped through the army, with this rhyme in his forehead.
2 Lord. This is your devoted friend, sir, the manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier.
Ber. I could endure any thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.
1 Sold. I perceive, sir, by the general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you.
Par. My life, sir, in any case: not that I am afraid to die; but that, my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature: let me live, sir, in a dungeon, 'tis the stocks, or any where, so I may live.
1 Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely; therefore, once more to this captain Dumain: You have answered to his reputation with the duke, and to his valour: What is his honesty?
Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister; for rapes and ravishments he parallels Nessus. He professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking them, he is stronger than Hercules. He will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a fool: drunkenness is his best virtue; for he will be owne-drunk; and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions, and law him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, j his honesty; he has every thing that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.
1 Lord. I begin to love him for this.
Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A pox upon him for me, he is more and more a cat.
1 Sold. What say you to his expertness in war?
Par. Faith, sir, he has led the drum before the English tragedians,—to belle him, I will not,— and more of his soldiership I know not; except, in that country, he had the honour to be the officer at a place there call'd Mile-end; to instruct for the doubling of files: I would do the man what honour
I can, but of this I am not certain.
1 Lord. He hath out-villainied villainy so far, that the rarity redeems him.
Ber. A pox on him! he's a cat still.
1 Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not ask you, if gold will corrupt him to revolt.
Par. Sir, for a quart d'eau he will sell the fee-simple of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.
1 Sold. What's his brother, the other captain Dumain?
2 Lord. Why does he ask him of me?
1 Sold. What's he?
Par. E'en a crow of the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in gooddes, but greater a great deal in evil. He exceeds his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is: In a retreat he out-runs any laccny: marry, in coming on he has the cramp.
1 Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?
Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, count
Rousillon.
1 Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.
Par. I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger: Yet, who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken?
[Aside.
1 Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die: the general says, you, that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must die. Come, headsmen, off with his head.
Par. O Lord, sir; let me live, or let me see my death!
1 Sold. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends. [Unmuffling him.
So, look about you; Know you any here?
Ber. Good morrow, noble captain.
2 Lord. God bless you, captain Parolles.
1 Lord. God save you, noble captain.
2 Lord. Captain, what greeting will you to my lord Lafeu? I am for France.
1 Lord. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the song? you wrote to Dorothea? Behalf of the count Rousillon? an I were not a very coward, I'd compel it of you; but fare you well.
[Exeunt. Frenchmen, Lords, &c.
1 Sold. You are undone, captain: all but your scarf, that has a knot on't yet.
Par. Who cannot be crushed with a plot?
1 Sold. If you could find out a country where but women were that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent nation. Fare you well, sir; I am for France too; we shall speak of you there. [Exit.
Par. Yet am I thankful: if my heart were great,
'Twoud burst at this: Captain, I'll be no more;
But I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall, simply the thing I say.
Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggt
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggt shall be found an ass.
Rust, sword! cool, blushes! and, Parolles, live
Safest in shame! being fool'd by foolery thrive!
There's place, and means, for every man alive.
I'll after them. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter HELENA, Widow, and DIANA.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you.
One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my surety; for whose throne, 'tis needful,
Ere I can perfect mine intents, to knel:
Time was, I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life; which gratitude
Through flinty Tartar's bosom would peep forth.
And answer, thanks: I duly am inform'd
His grace is at Marsailles; to which place
We have convenient convey. You must know,
I am supposed dead: the army breaking,
My husband lies him home; where, heaven
Aiding,
And by the leave of my good lord the king,
We'll be, before our welcome.

Wide. Gentle madam,
You never had a servant, to whose trust
Your business was more welcome.

Hel. Nor you, mistress,
Ever a friend, whose thoughts more truly labour
To recompense your love; doubt not, but heaven
Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower,
As it hath fated her to be my motive
And helper to a husband. But O strange men!
That can such sweet use make of what they hate,
When saucy trusting of the cozen'd thoughts
Defiles the pitchy night! so lust doth play
With what it loathes, for that which is away:
But more of this hereafter:—You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions yet must suffer
Something in my behalf.

Dia. Let death and honesty
Go with your impositions, I am yours
Upon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet, I pray you,—
But with the word, the time will bring on summer,
When briars shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp. We must away;
Our waggon is prepar'd, and time revives us:
All's well that ends well: still the fine's the crown;
Whate'er the course, the end is the renown.
[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Rousillon. A Room in the Coun-tess's Palace.

Enter Countess, LAFEU, and Clown.

Laf. No, no, no, your son was misled with a snipe-taffata fellow there; whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughly youth of a nation in his colour: your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour; and your son here at home more advanced by the king, than by that red-tailed humble-bee I speak of.

Count. I would, I had not known him! it was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman, that ever nature had praise for creating: if she had partaken of my flesh, and cost me the dearest groans of a mother, I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

Laf. 'Twas a good lady, 'twas a good lady: we may pick a thousand salades, ere we light on such another herb.

Clo. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet marjoram of the salad, or, rather the herb of grace.

Laf. They are not salad-herbs, you knave, they are nose-herbs.

Clo. I am no great Nebuchadnezzar, sir, I have not much skill in grass.

Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself; a knave or a fool?

Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knave at a man's.

Laf. Your distinction?

Clo. I would cozen the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knave at his service, indeed.

Clo. And I would give his wife my bauble, sir, to do her service.

Laf. I will subscribe for thee: thou art both knave and fool.

Clo. At your service.

Laf. No, no, no.

Clo. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Laf. Who's that? a Frenchman?

Clo. Faith, sir, he has an English name; but his phisnomy is more hotter in France, than there.

Laf. What prince is that?

Clo. The black prince, sir, alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.

Laf. Hold thee, there's my purse: I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkest of; serve him still.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire; and the master I speak of, ever keeps a good fire. But, sure, he is the prince of the world, let his nobility remain in his court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some, that humble themselves, may; but the many will be too chill and tender; and they'll be for the flowery way, that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

Laf. Go thy ways, I begin to be a-weary of the; and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways; let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.

Clo. If I put any tricks upon 'em, sir, they shall be jades' tricks; which are their own right by the law of nature.

Exit.

Laf. A shrewd knave, and an unhappy.

Count. So he is. My lord, that's gone, made himself much sport out of him; by his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness; and, indeed, he has no pace, but runs where he will.

Laf. I like him well; 'tis not amiss: and I was about to tell you. Since I heard of the good lady's death, and that my lord your son was upon his return home, I moved the king my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which, in the minority of them both, his majesty, out of a self-gracious remembrance, did first propose: his highness hath promised me to do it: and, to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against your son, there is no fitter matter. How does your ladyship like it?

Count. With very much content, my lord, and I wish it happily effected.

Laf. His highness comes post from Marseilles, of as able body as when he numbered thirty; he will be here to-morrow, or I am deceived by him that in such intelligence hath seldom failed.

Count. It rejoices me, that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters, that my son will be here to-night: I shall beseech your lordship, to remain with me till they meet together.

Laf. Madam, I was thinking, with what manners I might safely be admitted.

Count. You need but plead your honourable privilege.

Laf. Lady, of that I have made a bold charter; but, I thank my God, it holds yet.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder's my lord your son with a patch of velvet on his face; whether there be a scar under it, or no, the velvet knows; but 'tis a goodly patch of velvet: his left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

Laf. A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good livery of honour; so, belike, is that.

Clo. But it is your carbonadoed face.

Laf. Let us go see your son, I pray you; I long to talk with the young noble soldier.

Clo. 'Faith, there's a dozen of 'em, with delicate fine hats, and most courteous feathers, which bow the head, and nod at every man.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—MARSEILLES. A Street.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding excellent, day and night, Must wear your spirits low: we cannot help it; But since you have made the days and nights as To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs, [one, Be bold, you do so grow in my requital, As nothing can unroot you. In happy time; Enter a gentle Astringer.

This man may help me to his majesty's ear,
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Par. I beseech your honour, to hear me one single word.
Laf. You beg a single penny more: come, you shall ha' ; save your word.
Par. My name, my good lord, is Parolles.
Laf. You beg more than one word then. — Cox! my passion! give me your hand: How does your drum?
Par. O my good lord, you were the first that found me.
Laf. Was I, in sooth? and I was the first that lost thee.
Par. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out.
Laf. Out upon thee, knave! dost thou put upon me at once both the office of God and the devil? one brings thee in grace, and the other brings thee out. [Trumpets sound.] The king's coming, I know by his trumpets. — Sirrah, inquire further after me; I had talk of you last night: though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat; go, to, follow. Par. I praise God for you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Flourish. Enter King, Countess, Lafcilo, Lords, Gentlemen, Guards, &c.

King. We lost a jewel of her; and our esteem Was made much poorer by it: but your son, As mad in folly, lack'd the sense to know Her estimation home.

Count. 'Tis past, my liege: And I beseech your majesty to make it Natural rebellion, done i'the blaze of youth; When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force, O'erbear's it, and burns on.

King. My honour'd lady, I have forgiven and forgotten all; Though my revenge was high bent upon him, And watch'd the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say, — But first I beg my pardon. — The young lord Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady, Offence of mighty note; but to himself The greatest wrong of all: he lost a wife, Whose beauty did astonish the survey Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive Whose dear perfection, hearts that scorn'd to serve, Humbly call'd mistress.

King. Praising what is lost, Makes the remembrance dear. — Well, call him hither; —

We are reconcil'd, and the first view shall kill All repetition: — Let him not ask our pardon; The nature of his great offence is dead And deeper than oblivion do we bury The incensing relics of it; let him approach, A stranger, no offender; and inform him, So 'tis our will he should. Gent. [Exit Gentleman.

King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoke?
Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me, That set him high in fame.
Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well o' nights.

King. I am not a day of season,
For the way'st is staid, sun-shine and a hail
In me at once: But I have brightest beams
Distracted clouds give way; so stand thou forth,
The time is fair again.

Ber. My high-repentent blame,
Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is whole;
Not one word more of the consumed time.
Let's take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
The inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals ere we can effect them: You remember
The daughter of this lord?

Ber. Admiringly, my liege: at first
I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue:
Where the impression of mine eye infixed,
Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me,
Which warp'd the line of every other favour;
Scorn'd a fair colour, or express'd it stol'n:
Extended or contracted all proportions,
To a most hideous object: Thence it came,
That she, whom all men prais'd, and whom myself,
Since I have lost, have lov'd, was in mine eye
The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excuse'd:
That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away
From the great comp't: But love, that comes too
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried, [late,
To the great sender turns a sour offence,
Crying, That's good that's gone: our rash faults
Make trivial price of serious things we have,
Not knowing them, until we know their grave:
Oft our displeasures, to ourselves unjust,
Destroy our friends, and after weep their dust:
Our own love waking cries to see what's done,
While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.
Be this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her.
Send forth your amorous token for fair Maudlin:
The main consents are had; and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage-day.

Count. Which better than the first, O dear heaven, bless!
Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cease!

Laf. Come on, my son, in whom my horse's Must be digested, give a favour from you, [name
To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter,
That she may quickly come.—By my old beard,
And every hair that's o't, Helen that's dead,
Was a sweet creature; such a ring as this,
The last that e'er I took her leave at court,
I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Her's it was not.

King. Now, pray let me see it; for mine,
While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to it.—
This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen,
I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood
Neccessitated to help, that by this token
I would relieve her: Had you that craft, to reave her
Of what should steal her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign,
Hower' it pleases you to take it so,
The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life,
I have seen her wear it; and she reckon'd it
At her life's rate.

Laf. I'm sure, I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceive'd, my lord, she never saw it:
In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,
Wrapp'd in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it: noble she was, and thought
I stood ingag'd; but when I had subscribe'd
To mine own fortune, and inform'd her fully,
I could not answer in that course of honour
As she had made the overture, she ceas'd,
In heavy satisfaction, and would never Receive the ring again.

King. Plutus himself,
That knows the tinct and multiplying medicine,
Hath not in nature's mystery more science,
Then I have in this ring: 'twas mine, 'twas Helen's,
Whoever gave it you: Then, if you know
That you are well acquainted with yourself,
Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her: she call'd the saints to surety,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself in bed,
(Where you have never come,) or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it.

King. Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mir
honour;
And mak'st conjectural fears to come into me,
Which I would fain shut out: If it should prove
That thou art so inhuman,—'twill not prove so:—
And yet I know not:—thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead; which nothing, but to close
Her eyes myself, could win me to believe,
More than to see this ring.—Take him away.—

[Guards seize BERTRAM]

My fore-past proofs, howe'er the matter full,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little.—Away with him:—
We'll sift this matter further.

Ber. If you shall prove
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was.

[Exit BERTRAM guarded.]

Enter a Gentleman.

King. I am wrapp'd in dismal thoughts.

Gent. Gracious sovereign,
Whether I have been to blame or no, I know not
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath, for four or five removes, come short
To tender it herself. I undertook it,
Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant, who by this, I know,
Is here attending: her business looks in her
With an importing visage; and she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

King. [Reads.] Upon his many protestations to marry me, when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the count Rousillon a widower; his vows are forfeited to me, and my honour's paid to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice: Grant it me, O king; in you it best lies; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.

DIANA CAPILET.

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and tell him: for this, I'll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee,

Lafeu,
To bring forth this discovery.—Seek these suitors:—
Go, speedily, and bring again the count.

[Exeunt Gentleman, and some Attendants.

I am afeard, the life of Helen, lady,
Was foully snatch'd.

Count. Now, justice on the doers!

Enter BERTRAM guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, since wives are monsters to you,
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,
Yet you desire to marry,—What woman's that?

Enter Gentleman, with Widow, and DIANA.

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine,
Derived from the ancient Caulelet;
My suit, as I do understand, you know,
And therefore know how far I may be pitied.

Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer under this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease, without your remedy.

King. Come hither, count; Do you know these women?

Ber. My lord, I neither can, nor will deny
But that I know them: Do they charge me further?

Dia. Why do you look so strange upon your wife?

Ber. She's none of mine, my lord.

Dia. If you shall marry,
You e'er away this hand, and that is mine;
You give away heaven's vows, and those are mine;
You give away myself, which is known mine;
For I by vow am so embroiled yours,
That she, which marries you, must marry me,
Either both or none.

Dia. Your reputation [to BERTRAM.] comes too short for my daughter, you are no husband for her.

Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desperate creature,
Whom sometimes I have laugh'd with: let your highness
Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour,
Than for to think that I would sink it here.

King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend,
Till your deeds gain them: Fairer prove your honour,
Than in my thought it lies?

Dia. Good my lord,
Ask him upon his oath, if he does think
He had not my virginity.

King. What say'st thou to her?

Ber. She's impudent, my lord;
And was a common gamester to the camp.

Dia. He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so,
He might have bought me at a common price:
Do not believe him: O, behold this ring,
Whose high respect, and rich validity,
Did e'er with a parallel; yet, for all that,
He gave it to a commoner o' the camp,
If I be one.

Count. He blushes, and 'tis it:
Of six preceding ancestors, that gem
Conferr'd by testament to the sequent issue,
Hath it been ow'd and worn. This is his wife;
That ring's a thousand proofs.

King. Methought, you said,
You saw one here in court could witness it.

Dia. I did, my lord, but loath am to produce
So bad an instrument; his name's LAFOLIES.

Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man he be.

King. Find him, and bring him hither.

Ber. What of him?

He's quoted for a most perfidious slave,
With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debosh'd:
Whose nature sickens, but to speak a truth:
Am I or that, or this, for what he'll utter,
That will speak any thing?

King. She hath that ring of yours.

Ber. I think, she has: certain it is, I like'd her,
And boarded her i' the wanton way of youth;
She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint,
As all impediments in fancy's course
Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine,
Her inquisit coming with her modern grace,
Subdued me to her rate: she got the ring;
And I had that which any inferior might
At market-price have bought.

Dia. I must be patient;
You, that turn'd off a first so noble wife,
May justly diet me. I pray you yet,
(Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband,) Send for your ring, I will return it home,
And give me mine again.

Ber. I have it not.

King. What! ring was yours, I pray you?

Dia. Sir, much like
The same upon your finger.

King. Know you this ring? this ring was his
Of late.

Dia. And this was it I gave him, being a-bed.

King. The story then goes false, you threw it him
Out of the casement.

Dia. I have spoke the truth.

Enter PAROLLES.

Ber. My lord, I do confess, the ring was hers.

King. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts you.

Is this the man you speak of?

Dia. Ay, my lord.

King. Tell me, sirrah, but, tell me true, I charge you,
Not fearing the displeasure of your master,
(Which, on your just proceeding, I'll keep off,) By him, and by this woman here, what know you?

Par. So please your majesty, my master hath been an honourable gentleman; tricks he hath had in him, which gentlemen have.

King. Come, come, to the purpose: Did he love this woman?

Par. 'Faith, sir, he did love her; But how?

King. How, I pray you?

Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman.

King. How is that?

Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not.

King. As thou art a knave, and no knave:—
What an equivocal companion is this!

Par. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command.

Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty orator.

Dia. Do you know, he promised me marriage?

Par. 'Faith, I know more than I'll speak.

King. But wilt thou not speak all thou know'st?

Par. Yes, so please your majesty; I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her,—for, indeed, he was mad for her, and talked of Satan, and of limbo, and of furies, and I know not what: yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knew of their going to bed; and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things that would derive me ill will to speak of, therefore I will not speak what I know.

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst say they are married: But thou art too fine in thy evidence; therefore stand aside.—

This ring you say was yours?

Dia. Ay, my good lord.

King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?

Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.

King. Who lent it you?

Dia. I found it not.

King. If it were yours by none of all these ways, How could you give it him?

Dia. I never gave it him.

Laf. This woman's an easy glove, my lord; she goes off and on at pleasure.

King. This ring was mine, I gave it his first wife.

Dia. It might be yours, or here, for aught I know.

King. Take her away, I do not like her now; To prison with her: and away with him.—

Unless thou tell'st me where thou hadst this ring, Thou diest within this hour.

Dia. Take her away.

King. I'll never tell you.

Dia. I think thee now some common customer.

Dia. By Jove, if ever I knew man, 'twas you.

King. Wherefore hast thou accus'd him all this while?

Dia. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty: He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear to't: I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.

Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life; I am either maid, or else this old man's wife.

[Pointing to PAROLLES.]

King. She does abuse our ears; to prison with her.

Dia. Good mother, fetch my bair.—Stay, royal sir; [Exit Widow.

The jeweller, that owes the ring, is sent for, And he shall surety me. But for this lord, Who hath abus'd me, as he knows himself, Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him: He knows himself my bed he hath defil'd; And at that time he got his wife with child.

Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick; So there's my riddle, One, that's dead, is quick; And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow, with HELENA.

King. Is there no exorcist Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?

Is't real, that I see?

Hel. No, my good lord; 'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see, The name, and not the thing.

Ber. Both, both; O, pardon! Good Tom Drum, [to PAROLLES.] lend me a handkerchief: So, I thank thee; wait on me home, I'll make sport with thee: Let thy courtesies alone, they are scurvy ones.

King. Let us from point to point this story know, To make the even truth in pleasure flow —

If thou be'st yet a fresh uncropped flower, [To DIA.]

Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower; For I can guess, that, by thy honest aid, Thou keepest a wife herself, thyself a maid —

Of that and all the progress, more and less, Resolvedly more leisure shall express:

All yet seems well; and, if it end so meet, The biter past, more welcome is the sweet.

[Flourish.

(Advancing.)

The king's a beggar, now the play is done:

All is well ended, if this suit be won,

That you express content; which we will pay,

With strife to please you, day exceeding day:

Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts;

Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.

[Exit Widow.

INDUCTION.

SCENE I.—Before an Alehouse on a Heath.

Enter Hostess and Sly.

Sly. I'll phew thee, you faith.
Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue!
Sly. Y'are a baggage; the Slies are no rogues: Look in the chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueror. Therefore, paucas pallabras; let the world slide: Sessa!
Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?
Sly. No, not a denier: Go by, says Jeronimy;—
Go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.
Host. I know my remedy, I must go fetch the thirdborough.
[Exeunt.
Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I'll answer him by law: I'll; budge an inch, boy; let him come, and kindly.
[Lies down on the ground and falls asleep.

Wind-horns. Enter a Lord from hunting, with Huntsmen and Servants.

Lord. Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds:
Brach Merriman,—the poor cur is emboss'd,
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd brach.
Saw'st thou not, boy, how Silver made it good
At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault?
I would not lose the dog for twenty pound.
1 Hun. Why, Belman is as good as he, my lord;
He cried upon it at the mostest loss,
And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent:
Trust me, I take him for the better dog.
Lord. Thou art a fool, if Echo were as fleet,
I would esteem him worth a dozen such.
But sup them well, and look unto them all;
To-morrow I intend to hunt again.
1 Hun. I will, my lord.
Lord. What's here? one dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe?

2 Hun. He breathes, my lord: Were lie not warm'd with ale,
This were a bed but cold to sleep so soundly.
Lord. O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies!
Grim death, how foul and loathsome is thine image!
Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.—
What think you, if he were convey'd to bed,
Wrapped in sweet clothes, rings put upon his fingers,
A most delicious banquet by his bed,
And brave attendants near him when he wakes,
Would not the beggar then forget himself?
1 Hun. Believe me, lord, I think he cannot choose.
2 Hun. It would seem strange unto him when he wak'd.
Lord. Even as a flattering dream, or worthless fancy.

Then take him up, and manage well the jest:—
Carry him gently to my fairest chamber,
And hang it round with all my wanton pictures:
Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet-wood to make the lodging sweet:
Procure me music ready when he wakes,
To make a dulcet and a heavenly sound;
And if he chance to speak, be ready straight,
And, with a low submissive reverence,
Say,—What is it your honour will command?
Let one attend him with a silver bason,
Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, the third a diaper,
And say,—Will't please your lordship cool your hands?
Some one be ready with a costly suit,
And ask him what apparel he will wear;
Another tell him of his hounds and horse,
And that his lady mourns at his disease:
Persuade him that he hath been lunatick;
And, when he says he is,—say, that he dreams,
For he is nothing but a mighty lord.
This do, and do it kindly, gentle sirs;
It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty.

1 Hun. My lord, I warrant you, we'll play our
As he shall think, by our true diligence, [part,
He is no less than what we say he is.

Lord. Take him up genteely, and to bed with him;
And each one to his office, when he wakes. —
[Some bear out Sly. A trumpet sounds.
Sirrah, go see what trumpet 'tis that sounds:—
[Exit Servant.
Belike, some noble gentleman: that means,
Travelling some journey, to repose him here.—
[Enter a Servant.

How now? who is it?
Sir. An it please your honour,
Players that offer service to your lordship.

Lord. Bid them come near:
Enter Players.
Now, fellows, you are welcome.
1 Play. We thank your honour.

Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to-night?
2 Play. So please your lordship to accept our Lord. With all my heart.—This fellow I remember,

Since once he play'd a farmer's eldest son; —
'Twas where you wou'd the gentlewoman so well:
I have forgot your name; but, sure, that part
Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd.
1 Play. I think, 'twas Sot' that your honour

Lord. 'Tis very true;—thou didst it excellent. —
Well, you are come to me in happy time;
The rather for I have some sport in hand,
Wherein your cunning can assist me much.
There is a lord who will hear you play to night:
But I am doubtful of your modesties;
Lest, over-eying of his odd behaviour,
(For yet his honour never heard a play,)
And break into some merry passion;
And so offend him; for I tell you, sirs,
If you should smile, he grows impatient.
1 Play. Fear not, my lord; we can contain ourselves,
Were he the veriest antick in the world,
Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery.
And give them friendly welcome every one:
Let them want nothing that my house afford.—
[Exit Servant and Players.
Sirrah, go you to Bartholomew my page,
[T' a Servant.
And see him dress'd in all suits like a lady:
That done, conduct him to the drunkard's chamber,
And call him—madam, do him obeisance.
Tell him from me, (as he will win my love,)
He bear himself with honourable action,
Such as he hath observ'd in noble ladies
Unto their lords, by them accomplished:
Such duty to the drunkard let him do,
With soft low tongue, and lowly courtesy;
And say,—What is't your honour will command,
Wherein your lady, and your humble wife,
May show her duty, and make known her love?
And then — with kind embracements, tempting
kisses,
And with declining head into his bosom,—
Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy'd
'o see her noble lord restor'd to health,

Who, for twice seven years, hath esteemed him
No better than a poor and lostsome beggar:
And if the boy hath not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift;
Which in a nupkin being close convey'd,
Shall in despite enforce a watery eye.
See this despatch'd with all the haste thou canst;
Anon I'll give thee more instructions. —
[Exit Servant.
I know, the boy will well usurp the grace,
Voice, gait, and action of a gentlewoman:
I long to hear him call the drunkard, husband;
And how my men will stay themselves from laughter,
When they do homage to this simple peasant.
'I'll in to counsel them: haply, my presence
May well abate their over-merry spleen,
Which otherwise would grow into extremes. —
[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Bedchamber in the Lord's House.
Sly is discovered in a rich night-gown, with Attendants:
some with apparel, others with bason, euer, and other appurtenances. Enter Lord, dressed like a servant.

Sly. For God's sake, a pot of small ale.
1 Serv. Will't please your lordship drink a cup of sack?
2 Serv. Will't please your honour taste of these conserves?
3 Serv. What raiment will your honour wear today?

Sly. I am Christopher Sly; call not me—honour, nor lordship: I never drank sack in my life; and if you give me any conserves, give me conserves of beef: Ne'er ask me what raiment I'll wear:
for I have no more doublets than backs, no more stockings than legs, nor no more shoes than feet; nay, sometimes, more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my toes look through the overleather.

Lord. Heaven cease this idle humour in your O, that a mighty man of such descent [honour,
Of such possessions, and so high esteem,
Should be induced with so foul a spirit!

Sly. What, would you make me mad? Am not
I Christopher Sly, old Sly's son of Burton-heath; by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bear-herd, and now by present profession a tinker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat ale-wife of Wincoat, if she know me not: i she say I am not fourteen-pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the lyning knave in Christendom. What, I am not bestrau't: Here's—

1 Serv. O, this it is that makes your lady mourn.
2 Serv. O, this it is that makes your servants droop.

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shun your house,
As beaten hence by your strange lunacy.
O, noble lord, bethink thee of thy birth;
Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment,
And banish hence these abject lowly dreams;
look how thy servants do attend on thee,
Each in his office ready at thy beck.
Wilt thou have music? hark! Apollo plays.
[Music. And twenty caged nightingales do sing:
Or wilt thou sleep? we'll have thee to a couch,
Softer and sweeter than the lustful bed
On purpose trimm'd up for Semiramis.
Say, thou wilt walk: we will bestrew the ground:
Or wilt thou ride? thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.
Dost thou love hawking? thou hast hawks will soar
Above the morning lark: or wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

1 Serv. Say, thou wilt course; thy greyhounds are as swift
As breathed stags, ay, fleeter than the roe.

2 Serv. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee straight Adonis, painted by a running broid.
And Cythera all in sedges hid;
Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with wind.

Lord. We'll show thee Io, as she was a maid;
And how she was beguil'd and surpriz'd,
As lively painted as the deed was done.

2 Serv. Or Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood;
Scratching her legs that one shall swear she bleeds:
And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord:
Thou hast a lady far more beautiful
Than any woman in this waning age.

1 Serv. And, till the tears that she hath shed for thee,
Like envy's floods o'er-ran her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world;
And yet she is inferior to none.

Sly. Am I a lord? and have I such a lady?
Or do I dream, or have I dream'd till now?
I do not sleep: I see, I hear, I speak;
I smell sweet savours, and I feel soft things:
Upon my life, I am a lord, indeed;
And not a tinker, nor Christopbero Sly.
Well, bring our lady hither to our sight;
And once again, a pot o' the smallest ale.

2 Serv. Will't please your mightiness to wash your hands?

[Servants present an ever, bason, and napkin.
O, how we joy to see your wit restor'd!
O, that once more you knew but what you are!
These fifteen years you have been in a dream;
Or, when you wak'd, so wak'd as if you slept.

Sly. These fifteen years! by my fay, a goodly nap.
But did I never speak of all that time?

1 Serv. O yes, my lord; but very idle words:
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,
Yet would you say, ye were beaten out of door;
And rail upon the hostess of the house;
And say, you would present her at the feet,
Because she brought stone jugs and no seal'd quart's;
Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.

Sly. Ay, the woman's maid of the house.

3 Serv. Why, sir, you know no house, nor no such maid;
Nor no such men, as you have reckon'd up,—
As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece.

And Peter Turf, and Henry Pimpernell;
And twenty more such names and men as these,
Which never were, nor no man ever saw.

Sly. Now, Lord be thanked for my good amends!
All. Amen.

Sly. I thank thee; thou shalt not lose by it.

Enter the Page, as a lady, with Attendants.

Page. How fares my noble lord?

Sly. Marry, I fare well; for here is cheer enough.

Where is my wife?

Page. Here, noble lord; what is thy will with her?

Sly. Are you my wife, and will not call me—husband?

My men should call me—lord; I am your Goodman.

Page. My husband and my lord, my lord and husband;
I am your wife in all obedience.

Sly. I know it well:—What must I call her?

Lord. Madam.

Sly. Alce madam, or Joan madam?

Lord. Madam, and nothing else; so lords call ladies.

Sly. Madam wife, they say that I have dream'd and slept
Above some fifteen year and more.

Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me;
Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.

Sly. 'Tis much;—Servants, leave me and her alone.

Madam, undress you, and come now to bed.

Page. Thrice noble lord, let me entreat of you,
To pardon me yet for a night or two;
Or, if not so, until the sun be set:
For your physicians have expressly charg'd,
In peril to incur your former malady,
That I should yet absent me from your bed:
I hope, this reason stands for my excuse.

Sly. Ay, it stands so, that I may hardly tarry so long.
But I would be loath to fall into my dreams again; I will therefore tarry, in despite of the flesh and the blood.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Your honour's players, hearing your amend.
Are come to play a pleasant comedy, [ment,
For so your doctora hold it very meet;
Seeing too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood,
And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy,
Therefore, they thought it good you hear a play,
And frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life.

Sly. Marry, I will; let them play it: Is not a commony a Christmas gambol, or a tumbling-trick?

Page. No, my good lord: it is more pleasing stuff.

Sly. What, household stuff?

Page. It is a kind of history.

Sly. Well, we'll see't: Come, madam wife, sit by my side, and let the world slip; we shall ne'er be younger.

[They sit down.
SCENE I.—PADUA. A public Place.

Enter Lucentio and Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, since—for the great desire I had To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,— I am arriv'd for fruitful Lombardy, The pleasant garden of great Italy; And, by my father's love and leave, am arm'd With his good will, and thy good company. Most trusty servant, well approv'd in all; Here let us breathe, and happily institute A course of learning, and ingenious studies. Liss, renowned for grave citizens, Gave me my being, and my father first, A merchant of great traffic through the world, Vincentio, come of the Bentivolio. Vincentio his son, brought up in Florence, It shall become, to serve all hopes conceiv'd, To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds: And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study, Virtue, and that part of philosophy Will I apply, that treats of happiness By virtue specially to be achiev'd. Tell me thy mind: for I have Pisa left, And am to Padua come; as he that leaves A shallow splash, to plunge him in the deep, And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Tra. Mi perdonne, gentle master mine, I am in all affected as yourself; Glad that you thus continue your resolve, To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy. Only, good master, while we do admire This virtue, and this moral discipline, Let's be no stoicks, nor no stocks, I pray; Or so devote to Aristotle's checks, As Ovid be an outcast quite abjurd: Talk logic with acquaintance that you have, And practise rhetoric in your common talk: Music and poesy use to quicken you; The mathematics, and the metaphysics, Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you: No profit grows, where is no pleasure t'aven:— In brief, sir, study what you most affect.

Luc. Graemecies, Tranio, well dost thou advise. If, Biondello, thou wert come ashore, We could at once put us in readiness; And take a lodging, fit to entertain Such friends, as time in Padua shall beget. But stay awhile: What company is this?

Tra. Master, some show, to welcome us to town.

Enter Baptista, Katharina, Bianca, Gremio, and Hortensio. Lucentio and Tranio stand aside. Baptista, gentlemen, importune me no further, For how I firmly am resolv'd you know; That is,—not to bestow my youngest daughter, Before I have a husband for the elder: If either of you both love Katharina, Because I know you well, and love you well, Leave shall you have to court her at your pleasure.

Gremio. To cart her rather: She's too rough for me:

There, there Hortensio, will you any wife?

Kath. I pray you, sir, [to Gremio.] Is it your will To make subject of me amongst these mates? Hortensio. Mates, maid! how mean you that? no mates for you, Unless you were of gentle, milder mould.

Kath. Faith, sir, you shall never need to fear; I wis, it is not half way to her heart: But, if it were, doubt not her care should be To comb your nookle with a three-legg'd stool, And paint your face, and use you like a fool.

Hortensio. From all such devils, good Lord, deliver us! Gremio. And me too, good Lord!

Tra. Hush. master! I see is some good pastime toward; That wench is stark mad, or wonderful froward. Luc. But in the other's silence I do see Maid's mild behaviour and sobriety. Peace, Tranio.

Tra. Well said, master; mum! and gaze your fill. Baptista, gentlemen, that I may soon make good What I have said,—Bianca, get you in: And let it not displease thee, good Bianca For I will love thee never for the fault of my girl.

Bianca. Sister, content you in my discontent.— Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe: My books, and instruments, shall be my company; On them to look, and practise by myself.

Luc. Hark, Tranio! thou may'st hear Minerva speak. [Aside. Hortensio. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange? Sorry am I, that our good will effects Bianca's grief.

Gremio. Why, wilt thou mew her up, Signior Baptista, for this fiend of hell, And make her bear the penance of her tongue? Baptista. Gentlemen, content ye; I am resolv'd:— Go in, Bianca. [Exit Bianca.

And for I know she taketh most delight In music, instruments, and poetry, Schoolmasters will I keep within my house, To instruct her youth.—If you, Hortensio, Or signior Gremio, you,—know any such, Prefer them hither; for to cunning men I will be very kind, and liberal To nine or ten children in good bringing-up; And so farewell. Katharina you may stay; For I have more to commune with Bianca. [Exit. Kath. Why, and I trust I may go too; May I not?

What, shall I be appointed hours; as though, belike I knew not what to take, and what to leave! Ha! [Exit. Gremio. You may go to the devil's dam; your gifts are so good, here is none will hold you. Their love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairly out; our cake's dough on both sides. Farewell,—Yet, for the love I bear my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man, to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish him to her father.

Hortensio. So will I, signior Gremio: But a word, I pray. Though the nature of our quarrel yet never brook'd parle, know now, upon advice, it toucheth us both,—that we may yet again have access to our fair mistresse, and be happy rivals in Bianca's love,—to labour and effect one thing specially.

Gremio. What's that, I pray?

Hortensio. Marry, sir, to get a husband for her sister.

Gremio. A husband! a devil.

Hortensio. I say, a husband.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Gre. I say, a devil: Think'st thou, Hortensio, though her father be very rich, any man is so very a fool to be married to hell?

Hor. Tush, Gremio, though it pass your patience and mine, to endure her loud alarums, why, man, there be good fellows in the world, an a rain could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enough.

Gre. I cannot tell; but I had as lief take her dowry with this condition,—to be whipped at the high-cross every morning.

Hor. 'Faith, as you say, there's small choice in rotten apples. But, come; since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained,—till by helping Baptista's eldest daughter to a husband, we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have to't afresh.—Sweet Bianca!—Happy man be his dote! He that runs fastest, gets the ring. How say you, signior Gremio?

Gre. I am agreed: and 'would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing, that would thoroughly woo her, wed her, and bed her, and rid 'he house of her. Come on.

[Exeunt Gremio and Hortensio.

Tra. [Advancing.] I pray, sir, tell me,—Is it possible That love should of a sudden take such hold?

Luc. O Tranio, till I found it to be true, I never thought it possible, or likely; But see! while idly I stood looking on, I found the effect of love in idleness:

And now in plainness do confess to thee,—
That art to me as secret, and as dear, As Anna to the queen of Carthage was,—

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio, If I achieve not this young modest girl: Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst;

Assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

Tra. Master, it is no time to chide you now; Affection is not rated from the heart, If love have touch'd you, thought remains but so,—

Redine te captum quam quesas minimo.

Gre. Gramercies, lad; go forward: this contents;
The rest will comfort, for thy counsel's sound.

Tra. Master, you look' o'er so longly on the maid, Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.

Luc. O yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face, Such as the daughter of Agenor had, That made great Jove to humble him to her hand, When with his knees he kiss'd the Cretan strand,

Tra. Saw you no more? mark'd you not, how her sister

Began to scold; and raise up such a storm, That mortal ears might hardly endure the din?

Luc. Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move, And with her breath she did perfume the air; Sacred, and sweet, was all I saw in her.

Tra. Nay, then, 'tis time to stir him from his I pray, awake, sir; If you love the maid, [trance. Bend thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it stands:—

Her eldest sister is so curst and shrewd, That, till the father rid his hands of her, Master, your love must live a maid at home; And therefore has he closely mew'd her up, Because she shall not be annoy'd with suitors.

Luc. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father's he! But art thou not advis'd, he took some care To get her cunning schoolmasters to instruct her?

Tra. Ay, marry, am I, sir; and now 'tis plotted

Luc. I have it, Tranio.

Tra. Master, for my hand,

Both our inventions meet and jump in one.

Luc. Tell me thine first.

Tra. You will be schoolmaster,

And undertake the teaching of the maid:

That's your device.

Luc. It is: May it be done?

Tra. Not possible; For who shall bear your part,

And be in Padua here Vincentio's son?

Keep house, and ply his book; welcome his friends;

Visit his countrymen, and banquet them?

Luc. Basta; content thee; for I have it full.

We have not yet been seen in any house;

Nor can we be distinguished by our faces,

For man, or master: then it follows thus:— Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead,

Keep house, and port, and servants, as I should: I will some other be; some Florentine,

Some Neapolitan, or mean man of Pisa.

'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so:—Tranio, at once

Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak:

When Biondello comes, he waits on thee; But I will charm him first to keep his tongue.

Tra. So had you need. [They exchange habits.

In brief then, sir, sith it your pleasure is,

And I am tied to be obedient;

For so your father charg'd me at our parting;

Be serviceable to my son, youth be,

(Altho'ugh, I think, 'twas in another sense,) I am content to be Lucentio,

Because so well I love Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, be so, because Lucentio loves:

And let me be a slave, to achieve that maid

Whose sudden sight hath tir'd all my wounded eye,

[Enter Biondello.

Here comes the rogue.—Sirrah, where have you been?

Bion. Where have I been? Nay, how now, where are you?

Master, has my fellow Tranio stol'n your clothes Or you stol'n his? or both? pray, what's the news?

Luc. Sirrah, come hither; 'tis no time to jest, And therefore frame your manners to the time

Your fellow Tranio here, to save my life,

Puts my apparel and my countenance on,

And I for my escape have put on his;

For in a quarrel, since I came ashore, I kill'd a man, and fear I was desir'd.

Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes,

While I make way from hence to save my life: You understand me?

Bion. I, sir? ne'er a whit.

Luc. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth;

Tranio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Bion. The better for him; 'Would I were so too! Tra. So would I, faith, boy, to have the next wish after,—

That Lucentio indeed had Baptista's youngest daughter.

But, sirrah—look not for my sake, but your master's,— I advise You use your manners discreetly in all kind of companies:

When I am alone, why, then I am Tranio; But in all places else, your master Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, let's go:—

One thing more rests, that thyself execute;
To make one among these wooers: If thou ask me
why,—
Sufficeth, my reasons are both good and weighty.

[Exeunt.]

1 Serv. My lord, you nod; you do not mind the play.

Sly. Yes, by saint Anne, do I. A good matter, surely; Comes there any more of it?

Page. My lord, 'tis but begun.

Sly. 'Tis a very excellent piece of work, madam lady; Would 'twere done!

SCENE II.—The same. Before Hortensio's
House.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

Petr. Verona, for a while I take my leave,
To see my friends in Padua; but, of all,
My best beloved and approved friend.

Hortensio; and, I trow, this is his house:—
Here, sirrah Grumio; knock, I say.

Grum. Knock, sir! whom should I knock? is there any man has rebused your worship?

Petr. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly

Grum. Knock you here, sir? why, sir, what a I, sir, that I should knock you here, sir?

Petr. Villain, I say, knock me at this gate,
And rap me well, or I'll knock your [unsoundly.

Grum. My master is grown quarrelsome: I should knock you first,

And then I know after who comes by the worst.

Petr. Will it not be?
'Faith, sirrah, an you'll not knock, I'll wring it;
I'll try how you can sol, fa, and sing it.

[His wrings Grumio by the ears.

Grum. Help, masters, help! my master is mad.

Petr. Now, knock when I bid you: sirrah! villain!

Enter Hortensio.

Hor. How now? what's the matter?—My old friend Grumio! and my good friend Petruchio!—

How do you all at Verona?

Petr. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?

Con tutto il core bene trovato, may I say.

Hor. Alla nostra casa bene venuto,
Molto onorevol signor mio Petruchio.

Rise, Grumio, rise; we will compound this quarrel.

Grum. Nay, 'tis no matter, what he 'leges in Latin.—If this be not a lawful cause for me to leave his service.—Look you, sir,—he bid me knock him, and rap him soundly, sir: Well, was it fit for a servant to use his master so; being, perhaps, (for aught I see,) two and thirty,—a pip out?

Whom, 'would to God, I had well knock'd at first,
Then had not Grumio come by the worst.

Petr. A senseless villain!—Good Hortensio,
I hate the rascal knock upon your gate,
And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Grum. Knock at the gate?—O heavens!
Spake you not these words plain,—Sirrah, knock me here,

Rap me here, knock me well, and knock me soundly;
And come you now with—knocking at the gate?

Petr. Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise you.

Hor. Petruchio, patience; I am Grumio's pledge:

Why, this a heavy charge 'twixt him and you;
Your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio.

And tell me now, sweet friend,—what happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?

Petr. Such wind as scatters young men through the world,
To seek their fortunes further than at home,
Where small experience grows. But, in a few,
Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me:—

Antonio, my father, is deceas'd;
And I have thrust myself into this maze,
Haply to wive, and thrive, as best I may;
Crowns in my purse I have, and goods at home,
And so am come abroad to see the world.

Hor. Petruchio, shall I then come roundly to thee,
And wish thee to a shrew'd ill-favour'd wife?

Thourd'nt thank me but a little for my counsel:
And yet I'll promise thee she shall be rich,
And very rich:—but thou'rt too much my friend,
And I'll not wish thee to her.

Petr. Signior Hortensio, 'twixt such friends as we,
Few words suffice: and, therefore, if thou know
One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife,
(As wealth is burden of my wooing dance,)
Be she as foul as was Florentins' love,
As old as Sybil, and as curst and shrewd
As Socrates' Xantippe, or a worse,
She moves me not, or not removes, at least.
Affection's edge in me; were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatic seas:
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua;
If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Grum. Nay, look you, sir, he tells you flatly what his mind is: Why, give him gold enough and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet-baby; or an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head, though she have as many diseases as two and fifty horses: why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal.

Hor. Petruchio, since we have stepped thus farin,
I will continue that I broach'd in jest.
I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous;
Brought up, as best becomes a gentlewoman:
Her only fault (and that is faults enough,) Is,—that she is intolerably curst,
And shrewd, and froward: so beyond all measure,
That, were my state far worser than it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of gold.

Petr. Hortensio, peace; thou know'st not gold's effect:—

Tell me her father's name, and 'tis enough;
For I will board her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack.

Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola,
An affable and courteous gentleman:
Her name is Katharina Minola,
Renown'd in Padua for her scolding tongue.

Petr. I know her father, though I know not her;
And he knew my deceased father well:
I will not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her;
And therefore let me be thus bold with you,
To give you over at this first encounter,
Unless you will accompany me thither.

Grum. I pray you, sir, let him go while the humour lasts. O' my word, an she knew him as well as I do, she would think scolding would do little good upon him: She may, perhaps, call him half a score knaves, or so: why, that's nothing; an he begin once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir,—an she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure her with it, that she shall have no more eyes to see withal than a cat: You know him not, sir.

Hor. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee; For in Baptista’s keep my treasure is: He hath the jewel of my life in hold, His youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca; And her withholds from me, and other more Suitors to her, and rivals in my love: Supposing it a thing impossible, For those defects I have before rehearsed, That ever Katharina will be woo’d, Therefore this order hath Baptista ta’en; That none shall have access unto Bianca, Till Katharine the crust have got a husband.

Gru. Katharine the crust! A title for a maid, of all titles the worst.

Hor. Now shall my friend Petruchio do me And offer me, disguis’d in sober robes, a grace; To old Baptista as a schoolmaster Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca: That so I may by this device, at least, Have leave and leisure to make love to her, And, unsuspected, court her by herself.

Enter Gremio; with him Luciento disguis’d, with books under his arm.

Gru. Here’s no knavery! See; to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Master, master, look about you: Who goes there? ha!

Hor. Peace, Grumio; ’tis the rival of my love:—Petruchio, stand by a while.

Gru. A proper stripping, and an amorous! [They retire.

Gre. O, very well: I have perus’d the note. Hark you, sir; I’ll have them very fairly bound: All books of love, see that at any hand; And see you read no other lectures to her; You understand me:—Over and beside Signior Baptista’s liberality, I’ll mend it with a largess:—Take your papers too, And let me have them very well perfum’d; For she is sweeter than perfume itself, To who the perfume? What will you read to her?

Luc. What’er I read to her, I’ll plead for you, As for my patron, (stand you so assur’d,) As firmly as yourself were still in place: Yes, and (perhaps) with more successful words Than you, unless you were a scholar, sir,

Gre. O this learning! what a thing it is!

Gre. O this woodcock! what an ass it is!

Hor. Grumio, mum!—God save you, signior Gremio!

Gre. And you’re well met, signior Hortensio.

Trow you, Whither I am going?—To Baptista Minola. I promis’d to enquire carefully About a schoolmaster for fair Bianca: And, by good fortune, I have lighted well On this young man; for learning, and behaviour, Fit for her turn; well read in poetry And other books,—good ones, I warrant you.

Hor. ’Tis well; and I have met a gentleman. Hath promis’d me to help me to another, A fine musician to instruct our mistress; So shall I no whit be behind in duty To fair Bianca, so belov’d of me.

Gre. Belov’d of me,—and that my deeds shall prove:

Gru. And that his bags shall prove. [Aside.

Hor. Gremio, ’tis now no time to vent our love Listen to me, and if you speak me fair, I’ll tell you news indifferent good for either. Here is a gentleman, whom by chance I met, Upon agreement from us to his liking, Will undertake to woo curst Katharine; Yea, and to marry her, if her dowry please.

Gre. So said, so done, is well—Hortensio, have you told him all her faults?

Pet. I know, she is an irksome brawling scold; If that be all, masters, I hear no harm. [man?

Gre. No, say’st me so, friend? What country

Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio’s son: My father dead, my fortune lives for me; And I do hope good days, and long, to see.

Gre. O, sir, such a life, with such a wife, were strange: But if you have a stomach, to’rt o’God’s name; You shall have me assisting you in all. But, will you woo this wild-cat?

Pet. Will I live?

Gre. Will he woo her? ay, or I’ll hang her. [Aside.

Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent? Think you, a little din can daunt mine ears; Have I not in my time heard lions roar? Have I not heard the sea, puff’d up with winds, Rage like an angry boar, chafed with sweat? Have I not heard great ordnance in the field, And heaven’s artillery thunder in the skies? Have I not in a pitched battle heard Loud’rarms, neighing steeds, and trumpets’ clang And do you tell me of a woman’s tongue; That gives not half so great a blow to the ear, As will a cussflut in a farmer’s fire? Tush! tush! fear boys with bugs.

Gru. For he fears none [Aside.

Gre. Hortensio, hark! This gentleman is happily arriv’d, My mind presumes, for his own good, and yours. Hor. If promis’d, we would be contributors, And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoever.

Gre. And so we will; provided, that he win her.

Gre. I would, I were as sure of a good dinner. [Aside.

Enter Tranio, bravely apparel’d; and Biondello.

Tra. Gentlemen, God save you! If I may be bold, Tell me, I beseech you, which is the readiest way To the house of Signior Baptista Minola?

Gre. He that has the two fair daughters:—is’t [Aside to Tranio.] he you mean?

Tra. Even he. Biondello!

Gre. Hark you, sir; You mean not her to——

Tra. Perhaps, him and her, sir; What have you to do?

Pet. Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray.

Tra. I love no chiders, sir;—Biondello, let’s away.

Luc. Well begun, Tranio. [Aside

Hor. Sir, a word ere you go;— Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yea, or no?

Tra. An if I be, sir, is it any offence?

Gre. No; if, without more words, you will get you hence.

Tra. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free For me, as for you?

Gre. But so is not she.

Tra. For what reason, I beseech you?
Scene I.—The same. A Room in Baptista’s House.

Enter Katharina and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself.
To make a bondmaid and a slave of me:
That I disdain; but for these other gawds,
Unbind my hands. I’ll pull them off myself,
Yea, all my raiment, to my petticoat;
Or, what you will command me, will I do,
So well I know my duty to my elders.

Kath. Of all thy suitors, here I charge thee, tell Whom thou lov’st best: see thou dispose not,
Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive,
I never yet beheld that special face
Which I could fancy more than any other.

Kath. Minion, thou liest; Is’t not Hortensio?
Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear,
I’ll plead for you myself, but you shall have him.

Kath. O then, belike, you fancy riches more;
You will have Gremio to keep you fair.

Bian. Is it for him you envy me so?
Nay, then you jest: and now I well perceive,
You have but jested with me all this while:
I pr’ythee, sister Kate, untie my hands.

Kath. If that be jest, then all the rest was so.

Enter Baptista.

Bap. What! in my sight?—Bianca, get thee in.

[Exit Bianca.

Kath. Will you not suffer me? Nay, now I see
She is your treasure, she must have a husband;
I must dance bare-foot on her wedding-day,
And, for your love to her, lead apes in hell.
Talk not to me; I will go sit and weep,
Till I can find occasion of revenge.

[Exit Katharina.

Bap. Was ever gentleman thus griev’d as I?
But who comes here?

Enter Gremio, with Lucentio, in the habit of a mean man; Petruchio, with Hortensio, as a musician and Tranio, with Biondello bearing a lute and books.

Gre. Good-morrow, neighbour Baptista.

Bap. Good-morrow, neighbour Gremio: God save you, gentle

Pet. And you, good sir! Pray, have you not a daughter

Call’d Katharina, fair, and virtuous?

Bap. I have a daughter, sir, call’d Katharina.

Gre. You are too blunt, go to it orderly.

Pet. You wrong me, signior Gremio: give me
I am a gentleman of Verona, sir, [leave—
That,—hearing of her beauty, and her wit,
Her affability, and bashful modesty,
Her wondrous qualities, and mild behaviour,—
Am bold to show myself a forward guest
Within your house, to make mine eye the witness
Of that report which I so oft have heard.
And, for an entrance to my entertainment,
I do present you with a man of mine.

[Presenting Hortensio.

Cunning in music, and the mathematics,
To instruct her fully in those sciences,
Whereof, I know, she is not ignorant:
Accept of him, or else you do me wrong:
His name is Licio, born in Mantua.
then, he, and his dowry, freely as he's been for his sake.

Gre. Saving your tale, Petruchio, I pray, Let us, that are poor petitioners, speak too : Baccare! you are marvellous forward.

Pet. O, pardon me, signior Gremio; I would fain be doing.

Gre. I doubt it not, sir ; but you will curse your wooing.—

Neighbour, this is a gift very grateful, I am sure of it. To express the like kindness myself, I have been more kindly beholding to you than any, I freely give unto you this young scholar, [presenting Lucentio] that hath been long studying at Rheims ; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and other languages, as the other in music and mathematics: his name is Cambio; pray, accept his service.

Bap. A thousand thanks, signior Gremio: welcome, good Cambio.—But, gentle sir, [to Tranio] methinks, you walk like a stranger; May I be so bold to know the cause of your coming?

Tra. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine own; That, being a stranger in this city here, Do make myself a suitor to your daughter, U nto Bianca, fair and virtuous. Nor is your firm resolve unknown to me, In the preferment of the eldest sister: This liberty is all that I request,— That upon knowledge of my parentage, I may have welcome 'mongst the rest that woo, And free access and favour as the rest. And, toward the education of your daughters, I here bestow a simple instrument, And this small packet of Greek and Latin books: If you accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucentio is your name? of whence, I pray?

Tra. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio.

Bap. A mighty man of Pisa: by report I know him well: you are very welcome, sir.— Take you [to Hor.] the lute, and you [to Luc.] the set of books, You shall go see your pupils presently. Holla, within!

Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, lead these gentlemen to my daughters; and tell them both, these are their tutors; bid them use them well.

[Exit Servant, with Hortensio, Lucentio, and Biondello.

We will go walk a little in the orchard, And then to dinner: You are passing welcome, And so I pray you all to think yourselves.

Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste, And every day I cannot come to woo. You knew my father well: and in him, me, Left solely heir to all his lands and goods, Which I have better'd rather that decrease'd; Then tell me,—If I get your daughter's love, What dowry shall I have with her to wife?

Bap. After my death, the one-half of my lands And, in possession, twenty thousand crowns. Pet. And, for that dowry, I'll ensure her of Her widowhood,—be it that she survive me,— In all my lands and leases whatsoever: Let specialties be therefore drawn between us, That covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtain'd, This is,—her love; for that is all in all.

Pet. Why, that is nothing; for I tell you, father, I am an honest maid as she proud-minded; And where two raging fires meet together, They do consume the thing that feeds their fury: Though little fire grows great with little wind, Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all: So I to her, and so she yields to me; For I am rough, and woo not like a babe.

Bap. Well may'st thou woo, and happy be thy speed! But be thou arm'd for some unhappy words.

Pet. Ay, to the proof; as mountains are for winds, That shake not, though they blow perpetually.

Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broken.

Bap. How now, my friend? why dost thou look so pale?

Hor. For fear, I promise you, if I look pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician?

Hor. I think, she'll sooner prove a soldier; Iron may hold with her, but never lutes.

Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her to Do my lute?

Hor. Why, no; for she hath broke the lute to me. I did but tell her, she mistook her frets, And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering; When, with a most impatient devilish spirit, Frets, call you these! quoth she: I'll fume with them: And, with that word, she struck me on the head, And through the instrument my pate made way, And there I stood amazed for a while, As on a pillory, looking through the lute; While she did call me,—rascal fiddler, And—twangling Jack; with twenty such vile terms, As she had studied to misuse me so.

Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench; I love her ten times more than e'er I did: O, how I long to have some chat with her! Bap. Well, go with me, and be not so discomfited: Proceed in practice with my younger daughter; She's apt to learn, and thankful for good turns.— Signior Petruchio, will you go with us; Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you?

Pet. I pray you do; I will attend her here,— [Exeunt Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, and Hortensio. And woo her with some spirit when she comes. Say, that she ral; Why, then I'll tell her plain, She sings as sweetly as a nightingale: Say, that she frown; I'll say, she looks as clear As morning roses newly wash'd with dew: Say, she be mute, and will not speak a word; Then I'll commend her volubility, And say—she uttereth piercing eloquence: If she do bid me pack; I'll give her thanks, As though she bid me stay by her a week: If she deny to wed; I'll crave the day.
When I shall ask the banns, and when be married:—
But here she comes! and now, Petruchio, speak.

Enter Katharina.

Good-morrow, Kate; for that's your name, I hear.
Kath. Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing:
They call me—Katharine, that do talk of me.
Pet. You lie, in faith; for you are call'd plain Kate,
And bonny Kate, and sometimes Kate the curst;
But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom,
Kate of Kate-Hall, my super-dainty Kate,
For dainties are all cases; and therefore, Kate,
Take this of me, Kate of my consolation:—
Hearing thy mildness prais'd in every town,
Thy virtues spoke of, and thy beauty sounded,
(Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs),
Myself am mov'd to woo thee for my wife.
Kath. Mov'd! in good time: let him that mov'd you hither,
Remove you hence: I knew you at the first,
You were a moveable.

Pet. Why, what's a moveable?

Kath. A joint-stool.

Pet. Thou hast hit it: come sit on me.
Kath. Asses are made to bear, and so are you.
Pet. Women are made to bear, and so are you.
Kath. No such jade, sir, as you, if you me mean.
Pet. Alas, good Kate! I will not burden thee:
For, knowing thee to be but young and light,—
Kath. Too light for such a swain as you to catch;
And yet as heavy as my weight should be.
Pet. Should be? should buzz.

Kath. Well ta'en, and like a buzzard.
Pet. O, slow-wing'd turtle! shall a buzzard take thee?
Kath. Ay, for a turtle; as he takes a buzzard.
Pet. Come, come, you wisp! 't faith, you are too angry.
Kath. If I be waspish, best beware my sting.
Pet. My remedy is then, to pluck it out.
Kath. Ay, if the fool could find it where it lies.
Pet. Who knows not where a wasp doth wear
In his tail. [his sting?]

Kath. In his tongue.

Pet. Whose tongue?

Kath. Yours, if you talk of tails; and so farewell.
Pet. What, w'd I mean for your tail? na, come again,
Good Kate; I am a gentleman.

Kath. That I'll try. [Striking him.

Pet. I swear I'll cuff you, if you strike again.

Kath. So may you lose your arms;
If you strike me, you are no gentleman:
And if no gentleman, why, then no arms.

Kath. What is your crest? a cockcomb?
Pet. A combless cock, so Kate will be my hen.
Kath. No cock of mine, you crow too like a craven.
Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look so sour.

Kath. It is my fashion, when I see a crab.
Pet. Why, here's no crab; and therefore look not sour.
Kath. There is, there is.
Pet. Then show it me.
Kath. Had I a glass, I would.

Pet. What, what mean you my face?
Kath. Well aim'd of such a young one.
Pet. Nay, by Saint George, I am too young for Kath. Yet you are wither'd. [you.
Pet. 'Tis with cares.
Kath. I care not.
Pet. Nay, hear you, Kate: in sooth, you scape not so.
Kath. I chafe you, if I tarry; let me go.
Pet. No, not a whit; I find you passing gentle.
'Twas told me, you were rough, and coy, and sullen,
And now I find report a very liar;
For thou art pleasant, gamesome, passing courteous;
But slow in speech, yet sweet as spring-time flowers:
Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance,
Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will;
Nor lust thou pleasure to be cross in talk;
But thou with mildness entertain'st thy wooers,
With gentle conference, soft and affable.
Why does the world report, that Kate doth limp?
O slenderous world! Kate, like the hazle-twig,
Is straight, and slender; and as brown in hue,
As hazle-nuts, and sweeter than the kernels.
O, let me see thee walk; thou dost not halt.
Kath. Go, fool, and whom thou keep'st command.

Pet. Did ever Dian so become a grove,
As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?
O, be thou Dian, and let her be Kate;
And then let Kate be chaste, and Dian sportful!

Kath. Where did you study all this goodly speech?

Pet. It is extempore, from my mother-wit.
Kath. A witty mother! wisdest else her son.
Pet. Am I not wise?

Kath. Yes; keep you warm.

Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy
And therefore, setting all this chat aside, [bed:
Thus in plain terms:—Your father hath consented
That you shall be my wife; your dowry 'greed on;
And, will you,—nill you, I will marry you.
Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn;
For, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,
(Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well,) Thou must be married to no man but me;
For I am he, am born to tame you Kate;
And bring a frond from a wild-catt to a Kate
Conformable, as other household Kate.
Here comes your father; never make denial,
I must and will have Katharine to my wife.

Re-enter Baptista, Gremio, and Tranio.

Bap. Now,
Signior Petruchio: How speed you with
My daughter?

Pet. How but well, sir? how but well?
It were impossible, I should speed amiss.

Bap. Why, how now, daughter Katharine? in your dumps?
Kath. Call you me, daughter? now I promise you,
You have show'd a tender fatherly regard,
To wish me wed to one half-lunatic;
A mad-cap ruffian, and a swearing Jack,
That thinks with oaths to face the matter out.

Pet. Father, thus,—yourself and all the world
That talk'd of her, have talk'd amiss of her;
If she be curst, it is for policy.
For she's not forward, but modest as the dove
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn;
For patience she will prove a second Grissel:
And Roman Lucrece for her chastity:
And to conclude,—we have 'greed so well together,
That upon Sunday is the wedding-day.
Kath. I'll see thee hang'd on Sunday first.
Gre. Hark, Petruchio! she says, she'll see thee hang'd first.
Tra. Is this your speeding? nay, then, good night our part!
Pet. Be patient, gentlemen; I choose her for myself:
If she and I be pleas'd, what's that to you?
'Tis bargain'd! twixt us twain, being alone,
That she shall still be curst in company.
I tell you, 'tis incredible to believe
How much she loves me: O, the kindest Kate!—
She hung about my neck; and kiss on kiss
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink she won me to her love.
O, you are novices! 'tis a world to see,
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacoek wretch can make the curstest shrew.—
Give me thy hand, Kate; I will unto Venice,
To buy apparel 'gainst the wedding-day:—
Provide the feast, father, and bid the guests;
I will be sure, my Katharine shall be fine.
Bap. I know not what to say: but give me your hands;
God send you joy, Petruchio! 'tis a match.
Gre. Tra. Amen, say we; we will be witnesses.
Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen, adieu;
I will to Venice, Sunday comes apace:——
We will have rings, and things, and fine array;
And kiss me, Kate, we will be married O Sunday.
[Exeunt Petruchio and Katharina, severally.
Gre. Was ever match clapp'd up so suddenly?
Bap. Faith, gentlemen, now I play a merchant's
And venture madly on a desperate mart. [part,
Tra. 'Twas a commodity laid fretting by you;
'Twill bring you gain, or perish on the seas.
Bap. The gain I seek is—quiet in the match.
Gre. No doubt, but he hath got a quiet catch.
But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter:—
Now is the day we long have looked for;
I am your neighbour, and was sutor first.
Tra. And I am one, that love Bianca more Than words can witness, or your thoughts can guess.
Gre. Youngling! thou canst not love so dear as I.
Tra. Grey-beard! thy love doth freeze.
Gre. But thine doth fry.
Skipper, stand back; 'tis age, that nourisheth.
Tra. But youth, in ladies' eyes, that flourisheth.
Bap. Content you, gentlemen; I'll compound
this strife:
'Tis deeds must win the prize; and he, of both,
That can assure my daughter greatest dower,
Shall have Bianca's love.—
Say, signior Gremio, what can you assure her?
Gre. First, as you know, my house within the city
Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
Basons, and ewers, to lave her dainty hands;
My hangings all of Tyrian tapestry:
In ivory coiffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras, counterpoints
Costly apparel, tents and canopies.
Fine linen, Turkey cushions boss'd with pearl,
Valance of Venice gold in needle-work,
Pewter and brass, and all things that belong
To house, or housekeeping: then, at my farm,
I have a hundred milch-kine to the pail,
Six-score fat oxen standing in my stalls,
And all things answerable to this portion.
Myself am struck in years, I must confess;
And, if I die to-morrow, this is hers:
If, whilst I live, she will be only mine.
Tra. That, only, came well in—Sir, list to me,
I am my father's heir, and only son:
If I may have your daughter to my wife,
I'll leave her houses three or four as good,
Within rich Pisa's walls, as any one
Old signior Gremio has in Padua;
Besides two thousand ducats by the year,
Of fruitful land, all which shall be her jointure.—
What, have I pinch'd you, signior Gremio?
Gre. Two thousand ducats by the year, of land!
My laud amounts not to so much in all;
That she shall have; besides an argosy,
That now is lying in Marseilles' road:——
What, have I chok'd you with an argosy?
Tra. Gremio, 'tis known, my father hath no less Than three great argosies; besides two galliasses,
And twelve tight galleys: these I will assure her,
And twice as much, what'er thou offer'st next.
Gre. Nay, I have offer'd all, I have no more;
And she can have no more than all I have;—
If you like me, she shall have me and mine.
Tra. Why, then the maid is mine from all the world.
By your firm promise; Gremio is out-vied.
Bap. I must confess, your offer is the best;
And, let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own; else, you must pardon me:
If you should die before him, where's her dowry?
Tra. That's but a cavil; he is old, I young.
Gre. And may not young men die, as well as old?
Bap. Well, gentlemen,
I am thus resolv'd:—On Sunday next you know,
My daughter Katharine is to be married:
Now, on the Sunday following, shall Bianca
Be bride to you, if you make this assurance;
If not, to signior Gremio:
And so I take my leave, and thank you both.

Gre. Adieu, good neighbour.—Now I fear thee not;
Sirrah, young gamester, your father were a fool
To give thee all, and, in his waning age,
Set foot under thy table: Tut! a toy!
An old Italian fox is not so kind, my boy. [Exit

Tra. A vengeance on your crafty widdershins!
Yet I have fared it with a card of ten.
'Tis in my head to do my master good:—
I see no reason, but suppos'd Lucentio
Must get a father, call'd—suppos'd Vincentio;
And that's a wonder: fathers, commonly,
Do get their children; but, in this case of wooing,
A child shall get a sire, if I fail not of my cunning. [Exit

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in Baptista's House.

Enter LUCCENTIO, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Luc. Fiddler, forbear; you grow too forward.

Have you so soon forgot the entertainment [sir: her sister Katharine welcom'd you withal?]

Hor. But, wrangling pedant, this is the patroness of heavenly harmony:
Then give me leave to have prerogative;
And when in music we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much.

Luc. Preposterous ass! that never read so far
To know the cause why music was ordain'd!
Was it not, to refresh the mind of man,
After his studies, or his usual pain?
Then give me leave to read philosophy,
And, while I pause, serve in your harmony.

Hor. Sirrah, I will not bear these threats of thine.

Bian. Why, gentlemen, you do me double wrong,
To strive for that which resteth in my choice:
I am no breaching scholar in the schools;
I'll not be tied to hours, nor 'pointed times,
But learn my lessons as I please myself.
And, to cut off all strife, here sit we down:
Take you your instrument, play you the whiles;
His lecture will be done, ere you have tun'd.

Hor. You'll leave his lecture when I am in tune?

[To Bianca.—Hortensio retires.

Luc. That will be never;—tune your instrument.

Bian. Where left we last?

Luc. Here, madam:

Hic ibat Simio; hic est Sigeia tellus;
Hic steterat Priami regia celsa senis.
Bian. Construe them.

Luc. Hic ibat, as I told you before,—Simio, I am Lucentio,—hie est, son unto Vincentio of Pisa,—Sigeia tellus, disguised thus to get your love;—
Hic steterat, and that Lucentio that comes a wooing,—Priami, is my man Tranio,—regia, bearing my port,—celsa senis, that we might beguile the old pantaloons.

Horn. Madam, my instrument's in tune.

[Returning.

Bian. Let's hear;—

[Hortensio plays.

O fye! the treble jars.

Luc. Split in the hole, man, and tune again.

Bian. Now let me see if I can construe it: Hac ibat Simio, I know you not; hic est Sigeia tellus, I trust you not;—Hic steterat Priami, take heed he hears us not;—regia, presume not;—celsa senis, despair not.

Hor. Madam, 'tis now in tune.

Luc. All but the bass.

Hor. The bass is right; 'tis the base knave that how fiery and forward our pedant is!

[Jars.

Now, for my life, the knave doth court my love:

Pedagoule, I'll watch you better yet.

Bian. In time I may believe, yet I mistrust.

Luc. Mistrust it not; for, sure, Æacides was Ajax,—call'd so from his grandfather.

Bian. I must believe my master; else, I promise you,
I should be arguing still upon that doubt:
But let it rest.—Now, Licio, to you:—

Good masters, take it not unkindly, pray,
That I have been thus pleasant with you both.

Hor. You may go walk, [to Lucentio.] and give Me leave awhile;
My lessons make no music in three parts.

Luc. Are you so formal, sir? well, I must wait,
And watch withal; for, but I be deceived,
Our fine musician growth amorous.

[Aside

Hor. Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art;
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort,
More pleasant, pithy, and effectual,
Than hath been taught by any of my trade:
And there it is in writing, fairly drawn.

Bian. Why, I am past my gamut long ago.

Hor. Yet read the gamut of Hortensio.

Bian. [Reads.] Gamut I am the ground of all accord,
A re, to plead Hortensio's passion;
B mi, Bianca, take him for thy lord,
C faut, that loves with all affection;
D sol re, one cliff, two notes have I;
E la mi, show pity, or I die.

Call you this—gamut? tut! I like it not:
Old fashions please me best; I am not so nice,
To change true rules for odd inventions.

[Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, your father prays you leave your books,
And help to dress your sister's chamber up;
You know, to-morrow is the wedding-day.

Bian. Farewell, sweet masters, both; I must be gone.

[Exit Bianca and Servant.

Luc. 'Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay.

[Exit.

Hor. But I have cause to pry into this pedant;
Methinks, he looks as though he were in love:
Yet if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble,
To cast thy wand'ring eyes on every state,
Seize thee, that list: If once I find thee ranging,
Hortensio will be quit with thee by changing.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. Before Baptista's House.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, Katharine, Bianca, Lucentio, and Attendants.

Bap. Signior Lucentio, [to Tranio.] this is the pointed day
That Katharine and Petruchio should be married,
And yet we hear not of our son-in-law:
What will be said? what mockery will it be,
To want the bridegroom, when the priest attends
To speak the ceremonial rites of marriage?
What says Lucentio to this shame of ours?

Kath. No shame but mine: I must, forsooth, be forc'd
To give my hand, oppos'd against my heart,
Unto a mad-brain rudesby, full of spleen:
Who woo'd in haste, and means to wed at leisure
I told you, I, he was a frantic fool,
Hiding his bitter jests in blunt behaviour:
And, to be noted for a merry man,
He'll woo a thousand, 'point the day of marriage,
Make friends, invite, yes, and proclaim the banns
Yet never means to wed where he hath woo'd.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT III.

A horse and a man is more than one, and yet not many.

Enter Petruchio and Gremio.

Pet. Come, where be these gallants? who is at home?

Bap. You are welcome, sir.

Pet. And yet I come not well.

Bap. And yet you halt not.

Tra. Not so well apparell'd

As I wish you were.

Pet. Were it better I should rush in thus.

But where is Kate? where is my lovely bride?

How does my father?—Gentles, methinks you frown:

And wherefore gaze this goodly company;

As if they saw some wondrous monument,

Some comet, or unusual prodigy?

Bap. Why, sir, you know, this is your wedding-day:

First were we sad, fearing you would not come;

Now sodder, that you come so unprovided.

Fye! doff this habit, shame to your estate,

An eye-sore to our solemn festival.

Tra. And tell us, what occasion of import

Hath all so long detain'd you from your wife,

And sent you hither so unlike yourself?

Pet. Tedium it was to tell, and harsh to hear:

Sufficeth, I am come to keep my word,

Though in some part enforced to digress;

Which, at more leisure, I will so excuse

As you shall well be satisfied withal.

But, where is Kate? I stay too long from her;

The morning wears, 'tis time we were at church.

Tra. See not your bride in these unrepentent robes;

Go to your chamber, put on clothes of mine.

Pet. Not I, believe me; thus I'll visit her.

Bap. But thus, I trust, you will not marry her.

Pet. Good sooth, even thus; therefore have done with words;

To me she's married, not unto my clothes:

Could I repair what she will wear in me,

As I can change these poor accoutrements,

'Twere well for Kate, and better for myself.

But what a fool am I, to chat with you,

When I should bid good-morrow to my bride,

And seal the title with a lovely kiss?

[Exeunt Petruchio, Gremio, and Biondello]

Tra. He hath some meaning in his mad attire:

We will persuade him, be it possible,

To put on better ere he go to church.

Bap. I'll after him, and see the event of this.

[Exit.

Tra. But, sir, to her love concerneth us to add;

Her father's liking: Which to bring to pass,

As I before imparted to your worship,

I am to get a man,—whate'er he be,

It skills not much; we'll fit him to our turn,—

And he shall be Vincentio of Pisa;

And make assurance, here in Padua,

Of greater sums than I have promised.

So shall you quietly enjoy your hope,

And marry sweet Bianca with consent.

Luc. Were it not that my fellow-schoolmaster

Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly,

'Twere good, methinks, to steal our marriage;

Which once performed, let all the world say—no,

I'll keep mine own, despite of all the world.

Tra. That by degrees we mean to look into,

And watch our vantage in this business:

We'll over-reach the grey-beard, Gremio,
The narrow-prying father, Minola;
The quaint musician, amorous Lucio;
All for my master's sake, Lucentio.—

Re-enter Gremio.

Signior Gremio! came you from the church?
Grem. As willingly as e'er I came from school.
Tra. And is the bride and bridgingroom coming home?
Grem. A bridgingroom, say you? 'tis a groom, indeed,
A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find.
Grem. Why he's a devil, a devil, a very fiend.
Tra. Why, she's a devil, a devil, the devil's dam.
Grem. Tut! she's a lamb, a dove, a fool to him.
I'll tell you, sir Lucentio; When the priest
Should ask—if Katharine should be his wife,
Ay, by gogs-wouns, quoth he; and swore so loud
That, all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book:
And, as he stoop'd again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridgingroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest;
Now take them up, quoth he, if any list.
Tra. What said the wench, when he arose again?
Grem. Trembled and shook; for why, he stamp'd, and swore,
As i: the vicar meant to cozen him.
But after many ceremonies done
He calls for wine—A health, quoth he; as if
He had been abroad, carousing to his mates
After a storm—Quaff'd off the muscadel,
And threw the sops all in the sexton's face;
Having no other reason,—
But that his beard grew thin and hungerly,
And seem'd to ask him sops as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck;
And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous smack,
That, at the parting, all the church did echo.
I, seeing this, came thence for very shame;
And after me, I know, the rout is coming:
Such a mad marriage never was before;
Hark, hark! I hear the mistrels play. [Music.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Bianca, Baptista, Hortensio, Gremio, and Train.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your pains:
I know, you think to dine with me to-day,
And have prepar'd great store of wedding cheer;
But so it is, my haste doth call me hence,
And therefore here I mean to take my leave.
Bap. 'tis possible, you will away to-night?
Pet. I must away to-day, before night come:—
Make it no wonder; if you knew my business,
You would entreat me rather go than stay.
And, honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife:
Dine with my father, drink a health to me;
For I must hence, and farewell to you all.
Tra. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner.
Pet. It may not be.
Grem. Let me entreat you,

Pet. It cannot be.
Kath. Let me entreat
Pet. I am content.
Kath. Are you content to stay?
Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay;
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.
Kath. Now, if you love me, stay.
Pet. —Gremio, my horses.
Grem. Ay, sir, they be ready; the oats have eaten the horses.
Kath. Nay, then,
Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day;
No, nor to-morrow, nor till I please myself.
The door is open, sir, there lies your way,
You may be jogging, while your boots are green;
For me, I'll not be gone, till I please myself:
'Tis like, you'll prove a jolly surly groom,
That take it on you at the first so roundly.
Pet. O Kate, content thee; pr'ythee be not angry.
Kath. I will be angry; What hast thou to do?—
Father, be quiet: he shall stay my leisure.
Grem. Ay, marry, sir: now it begins to work.
Kath. Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner:—
I see, a woman may be made a fool,
If she had not a spirit to resist.
Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command:—
Obey the bride, you that attend on her:
Go to the feast, revel and domineer,
Carouse full measure to her maidenhead,
Be mad and merry,—or go hang yourselves;
But for my bonny Kate, she must with me.
Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret: I will be master of what is mine own:
She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house,
My household-stuff, my field, my barn,
My horse, my ox, my ass, my any thing;
And here she stands, touch her whoever dare;
I'll bring my action on the proudest he
That stops my way to Padua.—Gremio,
Draw forth thy weapon, we're beset with thieves.
Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man:—
Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee.
I'll buckler thee against a million. [Kate;

[Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, and Gremio.
Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones.
Grem. Went they not quickly, I should die with laughing.
Tra. Of all mad matches, never was the like!
Luc. Mistress, what's your opinion of your sister?
Bian. That, being mad herself, she's madly mated.
Grem. I warrant him, Petruchio is Kated.
Bap. Neighbours and friends, though bride and bridgingroom wants.
For to supply the places at the table,
You know there wants no junkets at the feast;—
Lucentio, you shall supply the bridgingroom's place;
And let Bianca take her sister's room.
Tra. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it?
Bap. She shall, Lucentio.—Come, gentlemen.
let's go. [Exeunt
SCENE I.—A Hall in Petruchio's Country House.

Enter Grumio.

Gru. Fye, fye, on all tied jades! on all mad masters! and all foul ways! Was ever man so beaten? was ever man so rayed? was ever man so weary? I am sent before to make a fire, and they are coming after to warm them. Now, were not I a little pot, and soon hot, my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roof of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me: — But, I, with blowing the fire, shall warm myself; for, considering the weather, a taller man than I will take cold. Holla, hoa! Curtis!

Enter Curtis.

Curt. Who is that, calls so loudly?

Gru. A piece of ice: If thou doubt it, thou may'st slide from my shoulder to my heel, with no greater run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtis.

Curt. Is my master and his wife coming, Grumio?

Gru. O, ay, Curtis, ay; and therefore fire, fire; cast on no water.

Curt. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported?

Gru. She was, good Curtis, before this frost: but, thou know'st, winter tames man, woman, and beast; for it with tamed my old master, and my new mistress, and myself, fellow Curtis.

Curt. Away, you three-inch fool! I am no beast.

Gru. Am I but three inches? why, thy horn is a foot; and so long am I, at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose hand (she being now at-hand,) thou shalt soon feel, to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office?

Curt. I pr'ythee, good Grumio, tell me, How goes the world?

Gru. A cold world, Curtis, in every office but thine: and, therefore, fire: Do thy duty, and have thy duty; for my master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

Curt. There's fire ready; And, therefore, good Grumio, the news?

Gru. Why, Jack boy! ho, boy! and as much news as thou wilt.

Curt. Come, you are so full of cony-catching: —

Gru. Why, therefore, fire; for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewed, cobwebs swept; the serving-men in their new fustian, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without, the carpets laid, and every thing in order?

Curt. All ready; And, therefore, I pray thee, news?

Gru. First, know, my horse is tired; my master and mistress fallen out.

Curt. How?

Gru. Out of their saddles into the dirt; And thereby hangs a tale.

Curt. Let's ha' good Grumio.

Gru. Lend thine ear.

Curt. Here.

Gru. There. [Striking him.

Curt. This is to feel a tale, not to hear a tale.

Gru. And therefore 'tis called, a sensible tale: and this cuff was but to knock at your ear, and beseech listening. Now I begin: In pratimis, we came down a foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress:—

Curt. Both on one horse?

Gru. What's that to thee?

Curt. Why, a horse.

Gru. Tell thou the tale: — But hadst thou not crossed me, thou should'st have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse; thou shouldst have heard, in how miry a place: how she was bemolested; how he left her with the horse upon her; how he beat me because her horse stumbled; how she waded through the dirt to pluck him off me; how he swore; how she prayed—that never pray'd before; how I cried; how the horses ran away; how her bridles was burst; how I lost my crupper; with many things of worthy memory; which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave.

Curt. By this reckoning, he is more shrew than she.

Gru. Ay; and that, thou and the proudest of you all shall find, when he comes home. But what talk I of this?—call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sugarsop, and the rest; let their heads be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed, and their garters of an indifferent knell: let them curtesy with their left legs; and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horse-tail, till they kiss their hands. Are they all ready?

Curt. They are.

Gru. Call them forth.

Curt. Do you hear, ho? you must meet my master, to countenance my mistress.

Gru. Why, she hath a face of her own.

Curt. Who knows not that?

Gru. Thou, it seems; that callest for company to countenance her.

Curt. I call them forth to credit her.

Gru. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Enter several Servants.

Nath. Welcome home, Grumio.

Phil. How now, Grumio?

Jos. What, Grumio!

Nich. Fellow Grumio!

Nath. How now, old lad?

Gru. Welcome, you;—how now, you;—what, you;—fellow, you;—and thus much for greeting. Now, my spruce companions, is all ready, and all things neat?

Nath. All things is ready: How near is our master?

Gru. E'en at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not,—Cock's passion, silence! —I hear my master.

Enter Petrucho and Katharina.

Pet. Where be these knaves? What, no man at To hold my stirrup, nor to take my horse! [Door, Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip?

All Serv. Here, here, sir; here, sir.

Pet. Here, sir! here, sir! here, sir! Here, sir!— You logger-headed and unpolish'd grooms! What! no attendance? no regard? no duty?— Where is the foolish knave I sent before?

Gru. Here, sir; as foolish as I was before.

Pet. You peasant swain! you whoreson malt horse drudge!
Did I not bid thee meet me in the park,
And bring along these rascal knaves with thee?
Grü. Nathaniel's coat, sir, was not fully made,
And Gabriel's pumps were all unplank'd d' the heel;
There was no link to colour Peter's hat,
And Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing:
There were none fine, but Adam, Ralph, and Gregory;
The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly;
Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you.

Pet. Go, rascals, go, and fetch my supper in.—
[Exeunt some of the Servants.
Where is the life that late I fed—
[Sings. Where are those—Sit down, Kate, and welcome.
Soul, soul, soul!—

Re-enter Servants, with supper.

Why, when, I say?—Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry.
Off with your boots, you rogues, you villains; When?

It was the friar of orders grey;
As he forth walked on his way—

Out, out, you rogue! you pluck my foot awry:
Take that, and mend the plucking off the other.—
[Strikes him.
Be merry, Kate:—Some water, here; what, ho!
Where's my spaniel Troilus?—Sirrah, get you hence,
And bid my cousin Ferdinand come hither:
[Exit Servant.
One, Kate, that you must kiss, and be acquainted with.—

Where are my slippers?—Shall I have some water?
[4 A basin is presented to him.
Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome heartily:
[Servant lets the cover fall.
You whoreson villain! will you let it fall?
[Strikes him.

Kath. Patience, I pray you; 'twas a fault unwillimg.

Pet. A whoreson, beetle-headed, flap-eard knave!
Come, Kate, sit down; I know you have a stomack.
Will you give thanks, sweet Kate; or else shall
What is this? mutton? [I?

1 Serv. Ay.

Pet. Who brought it?

1 Serv. I.

Pet. 'Tis burnt; and so is all the meat:
What dogs are these?—Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not?
There, take it to you, trenchers, cup, and all:
[Throws the meat, &c. about the stage.

You heedless jolheads, and unmanner'd slaves!
What, do you grumble? I'll be with you straight.
Kath. I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet;
The meat was well, if we were so contented.

Pet. I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried
And I expressly am forbid to touch it, [away.
For it engenders choler, &c. Peter's hat,
And better.'twere that both of us did fast—
Since, of ourselves. ourselves are cholerick,—
Then feed it with such over-roasted flesh.
Be patient; to-morrow it shall be mended,
And, for this night, we'll fast for company:—
Come, I will bring thee to thy bridial chamber.
[Exeunt Petruccio, Katharina, and Curtis.

Nath. [Advancing.] Peter, didst ever see the Peter. He kills her in her own humour. [like?
And since mine eyes are witness of her lightness, I will with you,—if you be so contented,—Forswear Bianca, and her love for ever.

Hor. See, how they kiss and court!—Signior Lucentio,
Here is my hand, and here I firmly vow—Never to woo her more; but do forswear her,As one unworthy all the former favour That I have fondly flatter'd her withal.

Tra. And here I take the like unfeigned oath,Ne'er to marry with her though she would entreat: Fye on her! see, how beastly she doth court him.

Hor. 'Would all the world, but he, had quite forsown! For me,—that I may surely keep mine oath, I will be married to a wealthy widow Ere three days pass; which hath as long lov'd me, As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggar:

And so farewell, signior Lucentio.—Kindness in women, not their beauteous looks,Shall win my love: and so I take my leave,
In resolution as I swore before.

[Exit Hortensio.—Lucentio and Bianca advance.

Tra. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace As to'ngesth to a lover's blessed case! Nay, I have ta'en you napping, gentle love; And have forsown you with Hortensio.

Bian. Tranio, you jest; but have you both for—

Tra. Mistress, we have [sworn me?—

Luc. Then we are rid of Licio.

Tra. I'faith, he'll have a lusty widow now, That shall be woo'd and wedded in a day.

Bian. God give him joy! Tra. Ay, and he'll t'ame her.

Bian. He say so, Tranio. Tra. 'Faith, he is gone unto the taming-school.

Bian. The taming-school! what, is there such a place?

Tra. Ay, mistress, and Petruchio is the master; That teacheth tricks eleven and twenty long,—To tame a shrew, and charm her chattering tongue.

Enter Biondello, running.

Bion. O master, master, I have watch'd so long That I'm dog-wearied; but at last I spied An ancient angel coming down the hill, Will serve the turn.

Tra. What is he, Biondello? Bion. Master, a merchant, or a pedant, I know not what; but formal in apparel, In gait and countenance surely like a father. Luc. And what of him, Tranio?

Tra. If he be cedalous, and trust my tale, I'll make him glad to seem Vincentio; And give assurance to Baptista Mindola. As if he were the right Vincentio. Take in your love, and then let me alone.

[Exeunt Lucentio and Bianca.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir! Tra. And you, sir! you are welcome. Travel you far on, or are you at the furthest? Ped. Sir, at the furthest for a week or two; But then up further; and as far as Rome; And so to Tripoly, if God lend me life.

Ped. My life, sir! how, I pray? for that goes

Tra. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua To come to Padua; know you not the cause? Your ships are stay'd at Venice; and the duke (For private quarrel 'twixt your duke and him,) Hath publish'd and proclaim'd it openly: 'Tis marvel; but that you're but newly come. You might have heard it else proclaim'd about. Ped. Alas, sir, it is worse for me than so: For I have bills for money by exchange From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Tra. Well, sir, to do you courtesy, This will I do, and this will I advise you: First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa? Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa have I often been: Pisa, renowned for grave citizens.

Tra. Among them, know you one Vincentio? Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him; A merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to say, In countenance somewhat doth resemble you. Bion. As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.

[Aside.

Tra. To save your life in this extremity, This favour will I do for his sake; And think it not the worst of all your fortunes, That you are like to sir Vincentio. His name and credit shall you undertake, And in my house you shall be friendly lodg'd;— Look, that you take upon you as you should; You understand me, sir;—so shall you stay Till you have done your business in the city: If this be courtesy, sir, accept of it.

Ped. O, sir, I do; and will repute you ever The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then go with me, to make the matter good. This, by the way, I let you understand;— My father is here look'd for every day, To pass assurance of a dower in marriage 'Twixt me and one Baptista's daughter here: In all these circumstances I'll instruct you: Go with me, sir, to clothe you as becomes you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Petruchio's House.

Enter Katharina and Grumio.

Gru. No, no; forsooth, I dare not, for my life. Kath. The more the wrong, the more his spite What! did he marry me to famish me? [appears: Beggars, that come unto my father's door, Upon entreaty, have a present alms; If not, elsewhere they meet with charity: But I,—who never knew how to entreat, Am starv'd for meat, giddy for lack of sleep; With oats kept waking, and with brawling fed: And that which spites me more than all these wants, He does it under name of perfect love; As who would say,—if I should sleep, or eat, 'Twere deadly sickness, or else present death.— I pr'ythee go, and get me some repast; I care not what, so it be wholesome food. Gru. What say you to a young's foot? Kath. 'Tis passing good; I pr'ythee let me have it. Gru. I fear, it is too cholerick a meat: How say you to a fat tripe, finely broil'd? Kath. I like it well; good Grumio, fetch it me. Gru. I cannot tell; I fear, 'tis cholerick. What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard? Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon. Gru. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Kath. Why, then the beef, and let the mustard rest.

Gru. Nay, then I will not; you shall have the or else you get no beef of Grumio. [mustard, Kath. Then both, or one, or any thing thou wilt. Gru. Why, then the mustard without the beef. Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave, [Beats him. That feed'st me with the very name of meat: Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you, That triumph thus upon my misery! Go, get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio, with a dish of meat; and Hovernas. Pet. Hark! how say my Kate? What, sweeting, all Hor. Mistress, what cheer? [amort? Kath. 'Faith, as cold as can be. Pet. Pluck up thy spirits, look cheerfully upon Here, love; thou see'st how diligent I am, [me. To dress thy meat myself, and bring it thee: [Sets the dish on a table. I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks. What! not a word? Nay then, thou lov'st it not; And all my pains is sorted to no proof:— Here, take away this dish. Kath. Pray you, let it stand. Pet. The poorest service is repaid with thanks; And so shall mine, before you touch the meat. Kath. I thank you, sir. Hor. Signior Petruchio, fye! you are to blame! Come, mistress Kate, I'll bear you company. Pet. Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov'st me.— [Aside. Much good do it unto thy gentle heart! Kate, eat space:—And now my honey-love, Will we return unto thy father's house; And revel it as bravely as the best, With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings, With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things; With scarfs, and fans, and double change of bravery, With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery. What! hast thou din'd? The tailor stays thy leisure, To deck thy body with his ruffling treasure.

Enter Tailor.

Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments; Enter Haberdasher.

Lay forth the gown.—What news with you, sir? [Hab. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak. Pet. Why, this was moulded on a porringor; A velvet dish;—fye, fye! 'tis lewd and filthy; Why, 'tis a cockle, or a walnut-shell, A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap; Away with it, come, let me have a bigger. Kath. I'll have no bigger; this doth fit the time, And gentlewomen wear such caps as these. Pet. When you are gentle, you shall have one too, And not till then. Hor. That will not be in haste. [Aside. Kath. Why, sir, I trust, I may have leave to speak; And speak I will; I am no child, no babe: Your betters have endur'd me say my mind; And, if you cannot, beat you stop your ears. My tongue will tell the anger of my heart; Or else my heart, concealing it, will break; And, rather than it shall, I will be free Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words. Pet. Why, thou say'st true; it is a paltry cap, A custard-coffin, a bauble, a silken pie: I love thee well, in that thou lik'st it not.

Kath. Love me, or love me not, I like the cap; And it I will have, or I will have none.

Pet. Thy gown? why, ay;—Come, tailor, let us see't.

O mercy, God! what masking stuff is here? What's this? a sleeve? 'tis like a demi-cannon: What? up and down, carv'd like an apple-tart? Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slush, and slash, Like to a censer in a barber's shop:— Why, what's devil's name, tailor, call'st thou this? Hor. I see, she's like to have neither cap nor gown. [Aside. Tai. You bid me make it orderly and well, According to the fashion, and the time.

Pet. Marry, and did; but if you be remember'd, I did not bid you mar it to the time. Go, hop me over every kennel home, For you shall hop without my custom, sir: I'll none of it; hence, make your best of it. Kath. I never saw a better fashion'd gown, More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable: Belike, you mean to make a puppet of me. Pet. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of thee.

Tai. She says, your worship means to make a puppet of her.

Pet. O monstrous arrogance! Thou liest, thou Thou thimble, [thread, Thou yard, three-quarters, half-yard, quarter, nail, Thou fea, thou nit, thou winter cricket thou:— Brav'd in mine own house with a skein of thread! Away, thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant; Or I shall so be-mete thee with thy yard, As thou shalt think on prating whilst thou livest! I tell thee, I, that thou hast marr'd her gown. Tai. Your worship is deceived; the gown is made Just as my master had direction: Grumio gave order how it should be done. Gru. I gave him no order, I gave him the stuff. Tai. But how did you desire it should be made? Gru. Marry, sir, with needle and thread. Tai. But did you not request to have it cut? Gru. Thou hast faced many things. Tai. I have. Gru. Face not me: thou hast braved many men; brave not me; I will neither be faced nor braved. I say unto thee,—I bid thy master cut out the gown; but I did not bid him cut it to pieces: ergo, thou liest. Tai. Why, here is the note of the fashion to testify. Pet. Read it. Gru. The note lies in his throat, if he say I said so.

Tai. Imprimis, a loose-bodied gown; Gru. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gown, sew me in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread: I said, a gown. Pet. Proceed. Tai. With a small compassed cap; Gru. I confess the cape. Tai. With a trunk sleeve;— Gru. I confess two sleeves. Tai. The sleeves curiously cut. Pet. Ay, there's the villainy. Gru. Error i'the bill, sir; error i'the bill. I commanded the sleeves should be cut out, and sewed up again: and that I'll prove upon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.
Enter Bonduelio.

Ped. I warrant you: But, sir, here comes your Twere good, he were school'd. [boy;

Tra. Fear you not him. Sirrah, Bonduelio,

Now do your duty thoroughly, I advise you;

Imagine 'twere the right Vincentio.

Bion. Tut! fear not me.

Tra. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptist?

Bion. I told him, that your father was at Venice;

And that you look'd for him this day in Padua.

Tra. Thou'rt a tall fellow; hold thee that to drink.

Here comes Baptist:—set your countenance, sir.

Enter Baptist and Luciento.

Signior Baptist, you are happily met:—

Sir, [to the Pedant.]

This is the gentleman I told you off:

I pray you, stand good father to me now,

Give me Bianca for my patrimony.

Ped. Soft, son!—

Sir, by your leave, having come to Padua

To gather in some debts, my son Lucentio

Made me acquainted with a weighty cause

Of love between your daughter and himself:

And,—for the good report I hear of you;

And for the love he beareth to your daughter,

And she to him,—to stay him not too long,

I am content, in a good father's care,

To have him match'd; and,—if you pleas'd to like

No worse than I, sir,—upon some agreement,

Me shall you find most ready and most willing

With one consent to have her so bestow'd;

For curious I cannot be with you,

Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well.

Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say;—

Your planness, and your shortness, please me well.

Right true it is, your son Lucentio here

Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him,

Or doth dissemble deeply their affections:

And, therefore, if you say no more than this,

That like a father you will deal with him,

And pass my daughter a sufficient dower,

The match is fully made, and all is done:

Your son shall have my daughter with consent.

Tra. I thank you, sir. Where then do you know best,

We be affed; and such assurance ta'en,

As shall with either part's agreement stand?

Bap. Not in my house, Lucentio; for, you know,

Pitchers have ears, and I have many servants:

Besides, old Gremio is heark'ning still;

And, happily, we might be interrupted.

Tra. Then at my lodging, an it like you, sir:

There doth my father lie; and there, this night,

We'll pass the business privately and well:

Send for your daughter by your servant here,

My boy shall fetch the scrivener presently.

The worst is this,—that, at so slender warning,

You're like to have a thin and slender pittance.

Bap. It likes me well:—Cambio, hie you home

And bid Bianca make her ready straight:

And, if you will, tell what hath happened:—

Lucentio's father is arrived in Padua,

And how she's like to be Lucentio's wife.

Luc. I pray the gods she may, with all my heart!

Tra. Daily not with the gods, but get thee gone.

Signior Baptista, shall I lead the way?

Welcome! one mess is like to be your cheer;

Come, sir; we'll better it in Fisa.

SCENE IV.—PA DU A. Before Baptista's House.

Enter Tranio, and the Pedant dressed like Vincentio.

Tra. Sir, this is the house; Please it you, that I call?

Ped. Ay, what else? and, but I be deceived,

Signior Baptista may remember me,

Near twenty year ago, in Genoa, where

We were lodgers at the Pegasus.

Tra. 'Tis well:

And hold your own, in any case, with such

Austerity as 'longeth to a father.
I follow you.

Luc. What say’st thou, Biondello? Bion. You saw my master wink and laugh upon you? Bion. What of that? Luc. Biondello, what of that? Bion. ‘Faith nothing; but he has left me here behind, to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.

Luc. I pray thee, moralize them. Bion. Then thus. Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son. Luc. And what of him? Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper. Luc. And then?

Bion. The old priest at Saint Luke’s church is at your command at all hours. Luc. And what of all this? Bion. I cannot tell; except they are busied about a counterfeit assurance: Take you assurance of her, cum privilegio ad imprimendum solum: to the church;—take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses:

If this be not that you look for, I have no more to say,

But, bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day. [Going.

Luc. Hear’st thou, Biondello? Bion. I cannot tarry: I knew a wench married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir; and so adieu, sir. My master hath appointed me to go to Saint Luke’s, to bid the priest be ready to come against you come with your appendage. [Exit. Luc. I may, and will, if she be so contented: She will be pleased, then wherefore should I doubt? Hap what hap may, I’ll roundly go about her; It shall go hard, if Cambio go without her. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A public Road.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, and Hortensio.

Pet. Come on, o’God’s name; once more toward our father’s.

Good Lord, How bright and goodly shines the moon! [now.

Kath. The moon! the sun; it is not moonlight Pet. I say, it is the moon that shines so bright. Kath. I know it is the sun that shines so bright. Pet. Now, by my mother’s son, and that’s my— It shall be moon, or star, or what I list, [self, Or ere I journey to your father’s house:— Go on, and fetch our horses back again.— Evermore cross’d, and cross’d: nothing but cross’d! Hor. Say as he says, or we shall never go.

Kath. Forward, I pray, since we have come so far,— And be it moon, or sun, or what you please: And if you please to call it a rush-candle, Henceforth I vow it shall be so for me.

Pet. I say, it is the moon. Kath. I know it is.

Pet. Nay, then you lie; it is the blessed sun.

Kath. Then, God be blessed, it is the blessed sun; but it is not, when you say it is not; [sun: And the moon changes even as your mind. What you will have it nam’d, even that it is; And so it shall be so, for Katharine.

Hor. Petruchio, go thy ways; the field is won! Pet. Well, forward, forward; thus the bowl should run, And not unluckily against the bias.— But soft; what company is coming here?

Enter Vincentio, in a travelling dress.

Good morrow, gentle mistress: Where away?—

Tell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too, Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman? Such war of white and red within her cheeks! What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty, As those two eyes become that heavenly face?— Fair lovely maid, once more good day to thee:— Sweet Kate, embrace her for her beauty’s sake.

Hor. ’A will make the man mad, to make a woman of him.

Kath. Young budding virgin, fair, and fresh, and Whiter away; or where is thy abode? [sweet, Happy the parents of so fair a child; Happier the man, whom favoured stars Alot thee for his lovely bed-fellow!

Pet. Why, how now, Kate! I hope thou art not mad:

This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, wither’d; And not a maiden, as thou say’st he is.

Kath. Pardon, old father, my mistaking eyes, That have been so bedazzled with the sun, That every thing I look on seemeth green; Now I perceive thou art a reverend father; Pardon, I pray thee, for my mad mistaking.

Pet. Do, good old grandsire; and, withheld, make known Which way thou travelledst: if along with us, We shall be joyful of thy company.

Vin. Fair sir,—and you my merry mistress,— That with your strange encounter much amaz’d me; My name is call’d—Vincentio: my dwelling—Pisa; And bound I am to Padua; there to visit A son of mine, which long I have not seen.

Pet. What is his name?

Vin. Luciento, gentle sir.

Pet. Happily met; the happier for thy son. And now by law, as well as reverend age, I may entitle thee—my loving father; The sister to my wife, this gentlewoman, Thy son by this hath married: Wonder not, Nor be not grieved; she is of good esteem, Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth; Beside, so qualified as may beseech The spouse of any noble gentleman. Let me embrace with old Vincentio: And wander we to see thy honest son, Who will of thy arrival be full joyous.

Vin. But is this true? or is it else your pleasure, Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest Upon the company you overtake?

Hor. I do assure thee, father, so it is.

Pet. Come, go along, and see the truth hereof; For our first merriment hath made thee jealous.

[Exit Petruchio, Katharina, and Vincentio.

Hor. Well, Petruchio, this hath put me in heart. Have to my widow; and if she be forward, Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward.

[Exit.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—PADUA. Before Lucentio’s House.

Enter on one side Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca :

Gremio walking on the other side.

Bion. Softly and swiftly, sir; for the priest is ready.

Luc. I fly, Biondello: but they may chance to need thee at home, therefore leave us.

Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church o' your pack; and then come back to my master as soon as I can.

[Exeunt Lucentio, Bianca, and Biondello.

Gre. I marvel Cambio comes not this while.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Vincentio, and Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here's the door, this is Lucentio's house.

My father's bears more toward the market-place;

Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you Think, I shall command your welcome here, [go;

And, by all like soberness, cheer is toward.

[Knocks.

Gre. 'Tis they're busy within, you were best knock louder.

[Enter Pedant above, at a window.

Ped. What's he that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is signior Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two, to make merry withal?

Ped. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself; he shall need none, so long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you, your son was beloved in Padua.—Do you hear, sir?—to leave frivolous circumstances.—I pray you, tell signior Lucentio, that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with him.

Ped. Thou liest; his father is come from Pisa, and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. Why, how now, gentleman! [To VINCENT.

why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man's name.

Ped. Lay hands on the villain; I believe, 'a means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

[Re-enter Biondello.

Bion. I have seen them in the church together;

God send 'em good shipping!—But who is here? mine old master, Vincentio? now are we undone, and brought to nothing.

[Seeing Biondello.

Bion. I hope, I may choose, sir.

Vin. Come, hither, you rogue; What! have you forgot me?

Bion. Forgot you? no, sir: I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never see thy master's father, Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old, worshipful old master? yes, marry, sir; see where he looks out of the window.

Vin. Is't so, indeed?

Bion. Help, help, help! here's a madman will murder me.

Ped. Help, son! help, signior Baptista?

Pet. Pr'ythee, Kate, let's stand aside, and see the end of this controversy.

[They retire.

Re-enter Pedant below; Baptista, Tranio, and Servants.

Tra. Sir, what are you, that offer to beat my servant?

Vin. What am I, sir? say, what are you, sir?—O immortal gods! O fine villain! A silken doublet! a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a copapate hat! — O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tra. How now! what's the matter?

Bap. What is! the man lunatic?

Tra. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman: Why, sir, what concerns it you, if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father? O villain! he is a sail-maker in Bergamo.

Bap. You mistake; sir, you mistake, sir: Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name? as if I knew not his name! I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and his name is—Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lucentio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, signior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! O, he hath murdered his master!—Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the duke's name.—O, my son, my son!—tell me, thou villain, where is my son, Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer: [Enter one with an Officer.] carry this mad knave to the gaol:—Father, Baptista, I charge you see, that he be forthcoming.

Vin. Carry me to the gaol!

Gre. Stay, officer; he shall not go to prison.

Bap. Talk not, signior Gremio; I say, he shall go to prison.

Gre. Take heed, signior Baptista, lest you be coney-catched in this business; I dare swear, this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Swear, if thou darest.

Gre. Nay, I dare not swear it.

Tra. Then thou wert best say, that I am not Lucentio.

Gre. Yes, I know thee to be signior Lucentio.

Vin. Away with the dotard; to the gaol with him.

Vin. Thus strangers may be haled and abus'd.—

O monstrous villain!

[Re-enter Biondello, with Lucentio and Bianca.

Bion. O, we are spoiled, and—Yonder he is; deny him, forswear him 'or else we are all undone.

Luc. Pardon, sweet father.

[Knelling.

Vin. Lives my sweetest son?

[To BIONDELLO, TRANIO, and PEDANT RUN OUT.

Bion. Pardon, dear father.

[Knelling.

Bap. How hast thou offended?—

Where is Lucentio?

Luc. Here's Lucentio, Right son unto the right Vincentio;

That have by marriage made thy daughter mine, While counterfeits-supposes blear'd thine eye.
SCENE II.—A Room in LUCENTIO'S House.

A Banquet set out. Enter BAPTISTA, VINCENTIO, GREMIO, the Pedant, LUCENTIO, BIANCA, PETRUCHIO, KATHERINA, HORTENSIO and Widow. TRanio, Biondello, Grimio, and others attending.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes And time it, when raging war is done, agree; To smile at 'scapes and perils overthrown.— My fair Bianca, bid my father welcome, While I with self-same kindness welcome thine.— Brother Petruchio,—sister Katherina,— And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow,— Feast with the best, and welcome to my house; My banquet is to close our stomachs up, After our great good cheer: Pray sit you down; For now we sit to chat, as well as eat.

Pet. Nothing but sit and sit, and eat and eat!

Bap. Padua affords this kindness, son Petruchio.

Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.

Hor. For both our sakes I would that word were true.

Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.

Wid. Then never trust me if I be afraid.

Pet. You are sensible, and yet you miss my sense; mean, Hortensio is afraid of you.

Wid. He that is greedy, thinks the world turns round.

Kath. Mistress, how mean you that?

Wid. Thus I conceive by him. [that?

Pet. Conceives by me!—How likes Hortensio

Hor. My widow says, thus she conceives her tale.

Pet. Very well mended: Kiss him for that, good widow.

Kath. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round:——

I pray you, tell me what you meant by that.

Wid. Your husband, being troubled with a shrew, Measures my husband's sorrow by his woe: And now you know my meaning.

Kath. A very mean meaning.

Wid. Right, I mean you.

Kath. And I am mean, indeed, respecting you.

Pet. To her, Kate!

Hor. To her, widow!

Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down.

Hor. That's my office.

Pet. Spoke like an officer:—Ha! to thee, lad.

[Drinks to HORTENSIO.

Bap. How likes Gremio these quick-witted folks?

Gré. Believe me, sir, they butt together well.

Bian. Head, and butt? a hasty-witted body Would say your head and butt were head and horn.

Vin. Ay, mistress bride, hath that awaken'd you?

Bian. Ay, but not frightened me; therefore I'll sleep again.

Pet. Nay, that you shall not; since you have Have at you for a bitter jest or two. [begun,

Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush, And then pursue me as you draw your bow:——

You are welcome all.

[Exeunt BIANCA, KATHERINA, and Widow.

Pet. She hath prevented me.—Here, signior Tranio, This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not; Therefore, a health to all that shot and miss'd.

Tra. O, sir, Lucentio slipp'd me like his grey hound,

Which runs himself, and catches for his master.

Pet. A good swift simile, but something curiish.

Tra. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself: 'Tis thought your deer holds you at a bay.

Bap. O ho, Petruchio, Tranio hits you now.

Luc. I thank thee for that gird, good Tranio.

Hor. Confess, confess, hath he not hit you here?

Pet. 'A has a little gall'd me, I confess;

And, as the jest did glance away from me, 'Tis ten to one it main'd you two outright.

Bap. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio, I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.

Pet. Well, I say—no: and therefore, for as-

Let's each one send unto his wife; [survived And he, whose wife is most obedient

To come at first when he doth send for her, Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content:——What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns.

Pet. Twenty crowns!

I'll venture so much on my hawk, or hound, But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then.

Hor. Content.

Pet. A match; 'tis done.

Hor. Who shall begin?

Luc. That will I. Go,

Biondello, bid your mistress come to me
Bion. I go. [Exit.
Bap. Son, I will be your half, Bianca comes.
Luc. I'll have no halves; I'll bear it all myself.

Re-enter Biondello.

How now! what news?
Bion. Sir, my mistress sends you word
That she is busy, and she cannot come.
Pet. How! she is busy, and she cannot come! Is that an answer?
Gre. Ay, and a kind one too:
Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.
Pet. I hope, better.
Hor. Sirrah, Biondello, go, and entreat my wife
To come to me forthwith. [Exit Biondello.
Pet. O, ho! entreat her!
Nay, then she must needs come.
Hor. I am afraid, sir,
Do what you can, yours will not be entreated.

Re-enter Biondello.

Now! where's my wife? Bion. She says, you have some goodly jest in hand;
She will not come; she bids you come to her.
Pet. Worse and worse; she will not come! O Intolerable, not to be endur'd! [vile, Sirrah, Grumio, go to your mistress;
Say I command her to come. [Exit Grumio.

Hor. I know her answer.
Pet. What?
Hor. She will not come.
Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Enter Katharina.
Bap. Now, by my holidame, here comes Katharina!
Kath. What is your will, sir, that you send for me?
Pet. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?
Kath. They sit conferring by the parlour fire.
Pet. Go, fetch them hither; if they deny to come,
Swinge me them soundly forth unto their husbands:
Away, I say, and bring them hither straight.

Exit Katharina.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder.
Hor. And so it is, I wonder what it bodes.
Pet. Marry, peace it bodes, and love, and quiet
An awful rule, and right supremacy; [life,
And, to be short, what not, that's sweet and happy.
Bap. Now fair beal thee, good Petruchio!
The wager thou hast won; and I will add
Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns!
Another dowry to another daughter,
For she is chang'd, as she had never been.
Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet:
And show more sign of her obedience,
Her new-built virtue and obedience.

Re-enter Katharina, with Bianca, and Widow.

See, where she comes! and brings your froward wives
As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.—
Katharina, that cap of yours, becomes you not;
Off with that bauble, throw it underfoot.
[Katharina pulls off her cap, and throws it down.
Wid. Lord, let me never have a cause to sigh,
Till I be brought to such a silly pass!
Bian. Fye! what a foolish duty call you this?
Luc. I would, your duty were as foolish too:
The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca,
Hath cost me an hundred crowns since supper-time.

Bian. The more fool you, for laying on my duty.
Pet. Katharine, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women,
What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.
Wid. Come, come, you're mocking; we will have no telling.
Pet. Come on, I say, and first begin with her.
Wid. She shall not.
Pet. I say, she shall;—and first begin with her.
Kath. Fye, fye! unkind that threat'ning unkind brow;
And dare she in scornful glances from those eyes,
To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor:
It blots thy beauty, as frosts bite the meads;
Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair buds;
And in no sense is meet or amiable.
A woman mov'd, is like a fountain troubled,— Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty;
And, while it is so, none so dry or thirsty
Will deign to sip or touch one drop of it.
Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee,
And for thy maintenance: commits his body
To painful labour, both by sea and land;
To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,
While thou liest warm at home, secure and safe;
And craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience;—
Too little payment for so great a debt!
Such duty as the subject owes the prince,
Even such a woman oweth to her husband:
And when she's froward, peevish, sullen, sour,
And not obedient to his honest will,
What is this, but a foul contending rebel,
And graceless traitor to her loving lord?—
I am ashamed, that women are so simple
To offer war, where they should kneel for peace;
Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth,
Unapt for toil, and trouble in the world;
But that our soft conditions, and our hearts,
Should well agree with our external parts?
Come, come, you froward and unable worms!
My mind hath been as big as one of yours.
My heart as great; my reason, haply, more,
To bandy word for word, and frown for frown;—
But now, I see our lances are but straws;
Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare,—
That seeming to be most, which we least are.
Then vail your stomachs, for it is no boast;
And place your hands below your husband's foot:
In token of which duty, if he please,
My hand is ready, may it do him ease.

Pet. Why, there's a wench!—Come on, and kiss me, Kate! [ha't.

Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad: for thou shalt Win 'tis a good hearing, when children are toward.

Luc. But a harsh hearing, when women are
Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed;—[froward.
We three are married, but you two are sped.
'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white;
[To Luciento.
And, being a winner, God give you good night!
[Exeunt Petruchio and Kath.
Hor. Now go thy ways, thou hast 'tamed a curst shrew.

Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be
'tam'd so. [Exeunt.

SCENE.—Sometimes in Sicilia; sometimes in Bohemia.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—SICILIA. An Antechamber in Leontes' Palace.

Enter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch. If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this coming summer, the king of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us; we will be justified in our loves: for, indeed,—

Cam. Beseech you,—

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare—I know not what to say.—We will give you sleepy drinks; that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great deal too dear, for what's given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot show himself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities and royal necessities made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attornied, with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies; that they have seemed to be together, though absent; shook hands, as over a vast; and embraced, as it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves!

Arch. I think, there is not in the world either malice, or matter, to alter it. You have an un-speakable comfort of your young prince Mamillius; it is a gentleman of the greatest promise that ever came into my note.

Cam. I very well agree with you in the hopes of him: It is a gallant child; one that, indeed, physics the subject, makes old hearts fresh; they that went on crutches ere he was born, desire yet their life, to see him a man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die?

Cam. Yes; if there were no other excuse why they should desire to live.

Arch. If the king had no son, they would desire to live on crutches till he had one. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Hermione, Mamillius, Camillo, and Attendants.

Pol. Nine changes of the wat'ry star have been
The shepherd's note, since we have left our throne
Without a burden: time as long again
Would be fill'd up, my brother, with our thanks;
And yet we should, for perpetuity,
Go hence in debt: And therefore, like a cipher,
Yet standing in rich place, I multiply,
With one we-thank-you, many thousands more
That go before it.

Leon. Stay your thanks awhile;
And pay them when you part.

Pol. Sir, that's to-morrow.
I am question'd by my fears, of what may chance.
Or breed upon our absence: That may blow
No sneaking winds at home, to make us say,
This is put forth too truly! Besides, I have stay'd
To tire your royalty.

Leon. We are tougher, brother,
Than you can put us to.

Pol. No longer stay.

Leon. One seven-night longer.

Pol. Very sooth, to-morrow.

Leon. W'ill part the time between's then: and in that I'll no gain-saying.

Pol. Press me not, 'beseech you, so;
There is no tongue that moves, none, none l' the world,
So soon as yours, could win me: so it should now,
Were there necessity in your request, although
'Twere needful I denied it. My affairs
Do even drag me homeward: which to hinder,
Were, in your love, a whip to me; my stay,
To you a charge, and trouble: to save both,
Farewell, our brother.

Leon. Tongue-tied, our queen? Speak you.

Her. I had thought, sir, to have held my peace, until
You had drawn oaths from him, not to stay. You, sir,
Charge him too coldly: Tell him, you are sure,
All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction
The by-gone day proclaim'd; say this to him,
He's best from his best ward.

Leon. Well said, Hermione. To tell, he longs to see his son, were strong:
But let him say so then, and let him go;
But let him swear so, and he shall not stay,
We'll thwack him hence with distaffs.—
Yet of your royal presence [to Polixenes.] I'll adventure
The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia
You take my lord, I'll give him my commission,
To let him there a month, behind the gest
Prefix'd for his parting: yet, good deed, Leontes,
I love thee not a jar o' the clock behind
What lady she her lord.—You'll stay?

Pol. Nay, but you will?

Pol. I may not verily.

Her. Verily!

You put me off with limber vows: But I,
Though you would seek to unsphere the stars with Should yet say, Sir, no going. Verily, [oaths,
You shall not go; a lady's verily is
As potent as a lord's. Will you go yet?
Force me to keep you as a prisoner,
Not like a guest: so you shall pay your fees,
When you depart, and save your thanks. How say you
My prisoner, or my guest? by your dread verily,
One of them you shall be.

Pol. Your guest then, madam: To be your prisoner, should import offending;
Which is for me less easy to commit,
Than you to punish.

Her. Not your gaoler then,
But your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you
Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys;
You were pretty lordlings then.

Pol. We were, fair queen,
Two lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal.

Her. Was not my lord the verier wag o' the two?

Pol. We were as twin'd lambs, that did trisk i' the sun,
And bleat the one at the other: What we chang'd
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing, no, nor dream'd
That any did: Had we pursued that life,
And our weak spirits ne'er been higher rear'd
With stronger blood, we should have answer'd heaven
Boldly, Not guilty; the imposition clear'd,
Hereditary ours.

Her. By this we gather,
You have tripp'd since.

Pol. O my most sacred lady,
Temptations have since then been born to us: for
In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl;
Your precious self had then not cross'd the eyes
Of my young play-fellow.

Her. Grace to boot! Of this make no conclusion; lest you say,
Your queen and I are devils: Yet, go on;
The offences we have made you do, we'll answer;
If you first sinn'd with us, and that with us
You did continue fault, and that you slipp'd not
With any but with us.

Leon. Is he won yet?

Her. He'll stay, my lord.

Leon. At my request, he would not.
Hermione, my dearest, thou never spok'st
To better purpose.

Her. Never?

Leon. Never, but once.

Her. What! have I twice said well? when wasn't before?
I pr'ythee, tell me: Cram us with praise, and make us
As fat as tame things: One good deed, dying tongueless, Slaughters a thousand, waiting upon that.
Our praises are our wages: You may ride us,
With one soft kiss, a thousand furlongs, ere
With spur we heat an acre. But to the goal:—
My last good was, to entreat his stay;
What was my first? it has an elder sister,
Or I mistake you: O, would her name were Grace! But once before I spoke to the purpose: When?
Nay, let me hav't; I long.

Leon. Why, that was when
Three crabb'd months had sour'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clap thyself my love; then didst thou utter,
I am yours for ever.

Her. It is Grace, indeed.—
Why, lo you now I have spoke to the purpose twice;
The one for ever earn'd a royal husband;
The other, for some while a friend.

Leon. [Giving her hand to Polixenes.] Too hot, too hot: [Aside.
To mingle friendship far, is mingling bloods,
I have temper cords on me:—my heart dances,
But not for joy—not joy.—This entertainment
May a free face put on; derive a liberty
From heartiness, from bounty, fertile bosom,
And well become the agent: it may, I grant:
But to be paddling palms, and pinching fingers,
As now they are; and making practis'd smiles,
As in a looking glass;—and then to sigh, as twer-
The mort o' the deer; O, that is entertainment.
My bosom likes not, nor my brows.—Mamillius, Art thou my boy?

Mam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. I'fecks? Why, that's my bawcock. What! hast smutched thy nose?

They say, it's a copy out of mine. Come, captain, We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain: And yet the steer, the heifer, and the calf, Are all call'd neat.—Still virginaling.

Upon his palm?—How now, you want calf! Art thou my calf?

Mam. Yes, if you will, my lord.

Leon. Thou want'st a rough push, and the shoots that I have, To be full like me:—yet, they say we are Almost as like as eggs; women say so, That will say any thing: But were they false As o'er-dyed blacks, as wind, as waters; false As dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes No bourn 'twixt his and mine; yet were it true To say this boy were like me. —Come, sir page, Look on me with your welkin-eye: Sweet villain! Most dear' est! my collop!—Can thy dam?—may't be?

Affection! thy intention stabs the centre: Thou dost make possible, things not so held, Communicat'st with dreams; —(How can this be?)

With what's unreal thou coactive art, And fellow' st nothing: Then, 'tis very credent, Thou may'st co-join with something; and thou dost; (And that beyond commission; and I find it,) And that to the infection of my brains, And hardening of my brows.

Pol. How! my lord?

What cheer? how is't with you, best brother? Her. You look, As if you held a brow of much distraction:

Are you mov'd, my lord?

Leon. No, in good earnest.—How sometimes nature will betray its folly, Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines Of my boy's face, methoughts, I did recoil Twenty-three years; and saw myself unbreech'd, In my green velvet coat; my dagger muzzled, Lest it should bite its master, and so prove, As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. How like, methought, I then was to this kernel, This quash, this gentleman:—Mine honest friend, What dost thou take care for money? Mam. No, my lord, I'll fight.

Leon. You will why, happy man be his dole!— My brother,

Are you so fond of your young prince, as we Do seem to be of ours?

Pol. If at home, sir,

He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter:
Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy;
My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all:
He makes a July's day short as December;
And, with his varying childhood, cures in me
Thoughts that would thick my blood.

Leon. So stands this squire Ofic'd with me: We two will walk, my lord, And leave you to your graver steps. —Hermione,

How thou lov'st us, show in our brother's welcome; Let what is dear in Sicily, be cheap:
Next to thyself, and my young rover, he's Apparent to my heart.

Her. If you would seek us,

We are your's! the garden: Shall's attend you there?

Leon. To your own bents dispose you; you'll be found,

Be you beneath the sky:—I am angling now,
Though you perceive me not how I give line. Go to, go to.

Hermione, How she holds up the neb, the bill to him! And arms her with the boldness of a wife To her allowing husband! Gone already;

Inch-thick, knee-deep, o'er head and ears a fork'd one.]

[Enter Polixeness, Hermione, and Attendants.

Go, play, boy, play;—thy mother plays, and I Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue Will hiss me to my grave; contempt and clamour Will be my knell.—Go, play, boy, play;—There have been,

Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;

And many a man there is, even at this present,

Now, while I speak this, holds his wife by the arm, That little thinks she has been sluic'd in his absence, And hispond fish'd by his next neighbour, by Sir Smile, his neighbour: nay, there's comfort in't, While other men have gates; and those gates open'd,

As mine, against their will: Should all despair, That have revolted wives, the tenth of mankind Would hang themselves. Physick for't there is, It is a bawdy planet, that will strike none; Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powerful, think it, From east, west, north, and south: Be it concluded, No barricado for a belly; know it; It will let in and out the enemy, With bag and baggage: many a thousand of us Have the disease, and feel't not. —How now, boy? Mam. I am like you, they say.

Leon. Why, that's some comfort.

What! Camillo there? Cam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. Go play, Mamillius; thou'rt an honest man.

[Exit Mamillius.

Camillo, this great sir will yet stay longer.

Cam. You had much ado to make his anchor hold: When you cast out, it still came home.

Leon. Didst note it?

Cam. He would not stay at your petitions; made His business more material.

Leon. Didst perceive it?

They're here with me already: whispering, round. Sicilia is a so-forth: 'Tis far gone, [ing,

When I shall gus it last.—How came't, Camillo, That he did stay?

Cam. At the good queen's entreaty. Leon. At the queen's, be't: good, should be pertinent;

But so it is, it is not. Was this taken By any understanding pate but thine?

For thy conceit is soaking, will draw in More than the common blocks:—Not noted, is't, But of the finer natures? by some several, Of head-piece extraordinary? lower messes, Perchance are to this business purblind: say.

Cam. Business, my lord? I think most under- Bohemia stays here longer.

[stand Ha?

Leon. Stay here longer.

Cam. Ay, but why?

Cam. To satisfy your highness, and the entreaties
Of our most gracious mistress.

Leon. Satisfy
The entreaties of your mistress?—satisfy?—
Let that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-councils: wherein, priest-like, thou
Hast cleans'd my bosom; I from thee departed
Thy penitent reform'd: but we have been Dwell'd in thy integrity, deceived'd
In which that seems so.

Cam. Be it forbid, my lord!

Leon. To bide upon't;—Thou art not honest: or,
If thou inclin'st that way, thou art a coward;
Which hones honesty behind, restraining
From course requir'd: Or else thou must be counted
A servant, graffed in my serious trust,
And therein negligent: or else a fool,
That seest a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn,
And tak'st it all for jest.

Cam. My gracious lord,
I may be negligent, foolish, and fearful;
In every one of these no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, fear,
Amongst the infinite doings of the world,
Sometime puts forth: In your affairs, my lord,
If ever I were wilful-negligent,
It was my folly; if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end; if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft affects the wisest: these, my lord,
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. But, 'beseech your grace,
Be plainer with me; let me know my trespass
By its own visage: if I then deny it,
'Tis none of mine.

Leon. Have not you seen, Camillo,
(But that's past doubt: you have; or your eye-glass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn;) or heard,
(For, to a vision so short, but humour
Cannot be mute,) or thought, (for cogitation Resides not in that man, that does not think it,) My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess, (Or else be impudently negative,
To have nor eyes, or ears, nor thought,) then say,
My wife's a hobbyhorse; deserves a name
As rank as any flax-wench, that puts to
Before her troth- plight: say it, and justify it.

Cam. I would not be a stander-by, to hear
My sovereign mistress clouded so, without
My present vengeance taken: 'Shrew my heart,
You never spoke what did become you less
Than this; which to reiterate, were sin
As deep as that, though true.

Leon. Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning check to check? is meeting noses?
Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career
Of laughter with a sigh? (a note infallible
Of breaking honesty;) horning foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift?
Hours, minutes? noon, midnight? and all eyes blind
With the pin and web, but theirs, theirs only,
That would unseen be wicked?—is this nothing?

Why, then the world, and all that's in't, is nothing;
The covering sky is nothing; Bohemia nothing;
My wife is nothing: nor nothing have these nothinges,
If this be nothing.

Cam. Good my lord, be cur'd
Of this diseas'd opinion, and betimes;
For 'tis most dangerous.

Leon. Say, it be; 'tis true.

Cam. No, no, my lord!

Leon. It is; you lie, you lie:
I say, thou liest, Camillo, and I hate thee;
Pronounce thee a gross lout, a mindless slave;
Or else a hovering temporizer, that
Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil,
Inclining to them both!—Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass.

Cam. Who does infect her?

Leon. Why he, that wears her like her medal, hanging
About his neck, Bohemia: Who—if I
Had servants true about me: that bare eyes
To see alike mine honour as their profits,
Their own particular thorns,—they would do that
Which should undo more doing: Ay, and thou,
His cupbearer,—whom I from meanger form
Have bench'd and rear'd to worship; who may'st see Plainly, as heaven sees earth, and earth sees heaven,
How I am galled,—might'st bespice a cup,
To give mine enemy a lasting wick;
Which draught to me were cordial.

Cam. Sir, my lord,
I could do this; and that with no rash passion,
But with a ling'ring dram, that should not work Maliciously like poison: But I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
So sovereignly being honourable.
I have lov'd thee,—

Leon. Make't thy question, and go rot
Dost think, I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation? sully
The purity and whiteness of my sheets,
Which to preserve, is sleep; which being spotted,
Is goads, thorns, nettles, tails of wasps?
Give scandal to the blood o' the prince my son,
Who, I do think is mine, and love as mine;
Without ripe moving to't?—Would I do this?
Could man so blemish?
Scene II.

Winter's Tale.

Cam. O miserable lady!—But, for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poisoner
Of good Polixenes: and my ground to do't
Is the obedience to a master; one,
Who, in rebellion with himself, will have
All that are his, too. To do this deed,
Promotion follows: If I could find example
Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: but since
Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't. I must Forsake the court: to do't, or no, is certain
To me a break-neck. Happy star, reign now!
Here comes Bohemia.

Enter Polixenes.

Pol. This is strange! methinks,
My favour here begins to warp. Not speak?—
Good-day, Camillo.

Cam. Hail, most royal sir!

Pol. What is the news 't the court?

Cam. None rare, my lord.

Pol. The king hath on him such a countenance,
As he had lost some province, and a region,
Lov'd as he loves himself: even now I met him
With customary compliment; when he,
Wafting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me; and
So leaves me, to consider what is breeding,
That changes thus his manners.

Cam. I dare not know, my lord.

Pol. How! dare not? do not. Do you know,
and dare not,
Be intelligent to me! 'Tis thereabouts;
For, to yourself, what you do know, you must;
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your chang'd complexions are to me a mirror,
Which shows me mine chang'd too: for I must be A party in this alteration, finding Myself thus alter'd with it.

Cam. There is a sickness
Which puts some of us in distemper; but I cannot name the disease; and it is caught
Of you that yet are well.

Pol. How! caught of me?
Make me not sighted like the basilisk:
I have look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo,—
As you are certainly a gentleman; thereto
Clerk-like, experience'd, which no less adorns
Our gentrty, than our parents' noble names,
In whose success we are gentle,—I beseech you,
If you know aught which does behave my know-
Thereof to inform'd, imprison it not [ledge
In ignorant concealment.

Cam. I may not answer.

Pol. A sickness caught of me, and yet I well!
I must be answer'd.—Dost thou hear, Camillo,
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man,
Which honour does acknowledge,—whereof the least
Is not this suit of mine,—that thou declare
What incidency thou dost guess of harm
Is creeping toward me; how far off, now near;
Which way to be prevented, if to be;
If not, how best to bear it.

Cam. Sir, I'll tell you;
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable: Therefore, mark my counsel;
Which must be even as swiftly follow'd, as
I mean to utte: it; or both yourself and me
Cry, lost, and so good-night.

Pol. On, good Camillo.

Cam. I am appointed Him to murder you.

Pol. By whom, Camillo?

Cam. By the king.

Pol. For what?

Cam. He thinks, nay, with all confidence he
As he had seen't or been an instrument [swears,
To vice you to't,—that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly.

Pol. O, then my best blood turn
To an infected jelly; and my name
Be yok'd with his, that did betray the best!
Turn then my freshest reputation to
A savour, that may strike the dullest nostril
Where I arrive; and my approach be shunn'd,
Nay, hated too, worse than the great'st infection
That e'er was heard, or read!—

Cam. Swear his thought over
By each particular star in heaven, and
By all their influences, you may as well
Forbid the sea for to obey the moon,
As or by oath remove, or counsel shake
The fabric of his folly; whose foundation
Is pil'd upon his faith, and will continue
The standing of his body.

Pol. How should this grow?

Cam. I know not: but, I am sure, 'tis safer to Avoid what's grown, than question how 'tis born,
If therefore you dare trust my honesty,—
That lies enclosed in this trunk, which you Shall hear along impawn'd,—away to-night.
Your followers I will whisper to the business:
And will, by twos, and threes, at several posterns,
Clear them o' the city: For myself, I'll put
My fortunes to your service, which are here
By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain;
For, by the honour of my parents, I
Have utter'd truth: which if you seek to prove,
I dare not stand by; nor shall you be safer
Than one condemn'd by the king's own mouth,
His execution sworn.

[thereon

Pol. I do believe thee;
I saw his heart in his face. Give me thy hand;
Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine: My ships are ready, and
My people did expect my hence departure
Two days ago.—This jealousy
Is for a precious creature: as she's rare,
Must it be great; and, as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent: and as he does conceive
He is honour'd by a man which ever
Profess'd to him, why, his re-awake not
In that be made more bitter. Fear o'er shades me:
Good expedition be my friend, and comfort
The gracious queen, part of his theme, but nothing
Of his ill-ta'en suspicion! Come, Camillo;
I will respect thee as a father; if Thou bear'st my life off hence: Let us avoid.

Cam. It is in mine authority, to command
The keys of all the posterns: Please your highness
To take the urgent hour: come, sir, away.

[Exeunt.]
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Hermione, Mamillius, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you: he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.
1 Lady. Come, my gracious lord.
Shall I be your play-fellow?
Mam. No, I'll none of you.
1 Lady. Why, my sweet lord?
Mam. You'll kiss me hard, and speak to me as if I were a baby still,—I love you better.
2 Lady. And why so, my good Lord?
Mam. Not for because Your brows are blacker; yet black brows, they say, Become some women best; so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semi-circle, Or half-moon made with a pen.
2 Lady. Who taught you this?
Mam. I learn'd it out of women's faces.—Pray What colour are your eye-brows?
[Now
1 Lady. Blue, my lord.
Mam. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's nose That has been blue, but not her eye-brows.
2 Lady. Hark ye:
The queen, your mother, rounds space: we shall Present our services to a new fine prince, One of these days; and then you'd wanton with us, If we would have you.
1 Lady. She is spread of late Into a goodly bulk: Good time encounter her!
Her. What wisdom stirs amongst you? Come, sir, now I am for you again: Pray you, sit by us, And tell's a tale.
Mam. Merry, or sad, shall't be?
Her. As merry as you will.
Mam. A sad tale's best for winter:
I have one of sprites and goblins.
Her. Let's have that, sir.
Come on, sit down:—Come on, and do your best To fright me with your sprites: you're powerful at Mam. There was a man,— [it. Her. Nay, come, sit down; then on.
Mam. Dwelt by a church-yard:—I will tell it You'd crickets shall not hear it. [softly; Her. Come on then, And give't me in mine ear.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and others.

Leon. Was he met there? his train? Camillo with him?
1 Lord. Behind the tuft of pines I met them; never Saw I men scour so on their way: I ey'd them Even to their ships.
Leon. How bless'd am I
In my just censure! in my true opinion!—
Alack, for lesser knowledge!—How accurs'd, In being so blest!—There may be in the cup A spider sleep'd, and one may drink; depart, And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge Is not infected: but if one present
The abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known How he hath drank, he cracks his gorge, his sides, With violent hefts:—I have drunk, and seen the spider.
Camillo was his help in this, his pander:—

There is a plot against my life, my crown;
All's true that is mistrusted:—that false villain, Whom I employ'd, was pre-employ'd by him: He has discover'd my design, and I Remain a pinch'd thing; yea, a very trick For them to play at will:—How came the posterns So easily open?

1 Lord. By his great authority;
Which often hath no less prevail'd than so,
On your command.
Leon. I know't well.—
Give me the boy; I am glad you did not nurse him:
Though he does hear some signs of me, yet you Have too much blood in him.
Her. What is this! sport?
Leon. Bear the boy hence, he shall not come about her;
Away with him:—and let her sport herself With that she's big with; for 'tis Polixenes Has made thee swell thus.
Her. But I'd say, he had not,
And, I'll be sworn, you would believe my saying, How'er you lean to the norward.
Leon. You, my lords,
Look on her, mark her well; be but about To say, she is a goodly lady, and The justice of your hearts will thereto add, 'Tis pity, she's not honest, honourable: Praise her but for this her without-door form, (Which, on my faith, deserves high speech,) and straight The shrug, the hum, or ha; these petty brands, That calumny doth use:—O, I am out, That mercy does; for calumny will rear Virtue itself;—these shrugs, these hums, and has, When you have said, she's goodly, come between Ere you can say she's honest: But be it known, From him that has most cause to grieve it should be, She's an adultress!
Her. Should a villain say so,
The most replenish'd villain in the world, He were as much more villain! you, my lord, Do but mistake.
Leon. You have mistook, my lady, Polixenes for Leontes: O thou thing Which I'll not call a creature of thy place, Letest barbarism, making me the precedent, Should a like language use to all degrees, And mannerly distinction leave out Betwixt the prince and beggar!—I have said, She's an adultress; I have said, with whom: More, she's a traitor; and Camillo is A federation with her; and one that knows What she should shame to know herself, But with her most vile principal, that she's A bed-swerver; even as bad as those That vulgar's give bold titles; ay, and privy To this their late escape.
Her. No, by my life, Privy to none of this: How will this grieve you, When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that You thus have publish'd me! Gentle my lord, You scarce can right me thoroughly then, to say You did mistake.
Leon. No, no; if I mistake In those foundations which I build upon,
The center is not big enough to bear
A schoolboy's top.—Away with her to prison!
He, who shall speak for her, is afar off guilty,
But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient, till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable.—Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping as our sex
Commonly are; the want of which vain dew,
Perchance, shall dry your pities: but I have
That honourable grief lodg'd here, which burns
Worse than tears drown; 'Beseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified, as your charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me;—and so
The king's will be perform'd!

Leon. Shall I be heard?
[To the Guards.

Her. Who is't that goes with me?—'Beseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good fools;
There is no cause: when you shall know your mistress
Has deserv'd prison, then abound in tears,
As I come out: this action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace.—Adieu, my lord;
I never wish'd to see you sorry; now,
I trust, I shall.—My women, come; you have Leon. Go, do our bidding; hence! [leave.

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

1 Lord. 'Beseech your highness, call the queen
again.

Ant. Be so civil what you do, sir; lest your justice
Prove violence: in which the three great ones suffer,
Yourself, your queen, your son.

1 Lord. For her, my lord,—
I dare my life lay down, and will do't, sir,
Please you to accept it, that the queen is spotless
I the eyes of heaven, and to you; I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove
So otherwise, I'll keep my stables where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her;
Than when I feel and see her, no further trust her;
For every inch of woman in the world,
Ay, every dram of woman's flesh, is false,
If she be.

Leon. Hold your peace.

1 Lord. Good my lord,—
Ant. It is for we speak, not for ourselves:
You are abus'd, and by some putter-on,
That will be damn'd for't; 'would I knew the wills,
I would land-damn him: Be she honour-flaw'd,—
I have three daughters; the eldest is eleven;
The second, and the third, nine, and some five;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't: by mine
honour,
I'll gild them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations: they are co-heirs;
And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leon. Cease; no more.
You smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose: I see't and feel't,
As you feel doing thus; and see withal
The instruments that feel.

Ant. If it be so,

We need no grave to bury honesty;
There's not a grain of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dunghy earth.

Leon. What! lack I credit?
1 Lord. I had rather you did lack, than I, my lord,
Upon this ground: and more it would content me
To have her honour true, than your suspicion;
Be blam'd for't how you might.

Leon. Why, what need we Commune with you of this? but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Our prerogative
Calls not your counsels; but our natural goodness
Imparts this: which—if you (or stupified,
Or seeming so in skill,) cannot, or will not,
Relish as truth, like us; inform yourselves,
We need no more of your advice: the matter,
The loss, the gain, the ordering on't, is all Properly ours.

Ant. And I wish, my liege,
You had only in your silent judgment tried it,
Without more overture.

Leon. How could that be?
Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thou wilt born a fool: Camillo's flight,
Added to their familiarity.
(Which was as gross as ever touch'd conjecture,
That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation,
But only seeing, all other circumstances
Made up to the deed,) doth push on this proceeding.
Yet, for a greater confirmation,
(For, in an act of this importance, 'twere
Most piteous to be wild,) I have despatch'd in post,
To sacred Delphos, to Apollo's temple,
Cleomenes and Dion, whom you know
Of stuff'd sufficiency: Now, from the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had,
Shall stop, or spur me.—Have I done well?

1 Lord. Well done, my lord.

Leon. Though I am satisfied, and need no more Than what I know, yet shall the oracle
Give rest to the minds of others; such as he,
Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth: so have we thought it good,
From our free person she should be confin'd;
Lest that the treachery of the two, fled hence,
Be left her to perform. Come, follow us;
We are to speak in public; for this business
Will raise us all.

Ant. [Aside.] To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth were known.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. The outer Room of a Prison.

Enter Paulina and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison,—call to him;
[Exit an Attendant
Let him have knowledge who I am.—Good lady! No court in Europe is too good for thee:
What dost thou then in prison?—Now, good sir,
Re-enter Attendant, with the Keeper

You know me, do you not?

Keep. For a worthy lady,
And one whom much I honour.

Paul. Pray you then,
Conduct me to the queen.

Keep. I may not, madam; to the contrary
I have express commandment.
Paul. Here's ado,
To lock up honesty and honour from
The access of gentle visitors!—Is it lawful,
Pray you, to see her women? any of them?
Emilia?

Keep. So please you, madam, to put Apart these your attendants, I shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray now, call her.

Keep. Withdraw yourselves. [Exeunt Attendants.]

Paul. Well, be it so, pr'ythee. [Exit Keeper.

Here's such ado to make no stain a stain,
As passes colouring.

Re-enter Keeper, with Emilia.

Dear gentlewoman, how fares our gracious lady?

Emil. As well as one so great, and so forlorn,
May hold together: on her frowns, and griefs,
(Which never tender lady hath borne greater,) She is, something before her time, deliver'd.

Paul. A boy?

Emil. A daughter; and a goodly child,
Lusty, and like to live; the queen receives
Much comfort in't: says, My poor prisoner,
I am innocent as you.

Paul. I dare be sworn:—
These dangerous unsafe lunes o'the king! bestrew them!

He must be told on't, and he shall: the office
Becomes a woman best: I'll take't up upon me:
If I prove honey-mouth'd, let my tongue blister;
And never to my red-look'd anger be
The trumpet any more:—Pray you, Emilia,
Commend my best obedience to the queen;
If she dares trust me with her little babe,
I'll show't the king, and undertake to be
Her advocate to th' loudest: We do not know
How he may soften at the sight o'the child;
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when speaking fails.

Emil. Most worthy madam, Your honour, and your goodness, is so evident,
That your free undertaking cannot miss
A thriving issue; there is no lady living,
So meet for this great errand: Please your ladyship
To visit the next room, I'll presently
Acquaint the queen of your most noble offer;
Who, but to-day, hammer'd of this design;
But durst not tempt a minister of honour,
Lest she should be denied.

Paul. Tell her, Emilia, I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from it,
As boldness from my bosom, let it not be doubted I shall do good.

Emil. Now be you blest for it!

I'll to the queen: Please you, come something nearer.

Keep. Madam, it's the queen to send the babe,
I know not what I shall incur, to pass it,
Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not fear it, sir: The child was prisoner to the womb: and is,
By law and process of great nature, thence Free'd and enfranchis'd: not a party to
The anger of the king; nor guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Keep. I do believe it.
Commit me, for committing honour,) trust it, He shall not rule me.
Ant. Lo you now; you hear! When she will take the rein, I let her run; But she'll not stumble.
Paul. Good my liege, I come,— And, I beseech you, hear me, who profess Myself your loyal servant, your physician, Your most obedient counsellor; yet that dare Less appear so, in comforting your evils, Than such as most seem yours:—I say, I come From your good queen.
Leon. Good queen! Paul. Good queen, my lord, good queen: I say, good queen; And would by combat make her good, so were I A man, the worst about you.
Leon. Force her hence! Paul. Let him, that makes but trifles of his eyes, First hand me: on mine own accord, I'll go; But, first, I'll do my endeavor.—The good queen, For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter, Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing. [Laying down the Child. Leon. Out! A mankind-witch! Hence with her, out o'door: A most intelligencing bawd!
Paul. Not so: I am as ignorant in that, as you In so entitling me: and no less honest Than you are mad; which is enough, I'll warrant, As this world goes, to pass for honest.
Leon. Traitors! Will you not push her out? Give her the bastard:— Thou dotard, [to Antigonus.] thou art woman- tird,' unrooted By thy dame Partlet here,—take up the bastard; Take't up, I say; give't to thy crone.
Paul. For ever Unvenerable be thy hands, if thou Tak'st up the princess, by that forced baseness Which he has put upon't!
Leon. He dreads his wife.
Paul. So, I would, you did; then 'twere past all You'd call your children yours. [doubt, Leon. A nest of traitors! Ant. I am none by this good light.
Paul. Nor I; nor any, But one, that's here; and that's himself: for he The sacred honour of himself, his queen's, His hopeful son's, his babe's, betrays to slander, Whose sting is sharper than the sword's; and will (For, as the case now stands, it is a curse [not He cannot be compell'd to't,) once remove The root of his opinion, which is rotten, As ever oak, or stone was sound.
Leon. A callat, Of boundless tongue; who late hath beat her husband, And now baits me!—This brat is none of mine; It is the issue of Polixenes:— Hence with it! and, together with the dam, Commit them to the fire.
Paul. It is yours! And, might we lay the old proverb to your charge, So like you, 'tis the worse. Behold, my lords, Although the print be little, the whole matter And copy of the father: eye, nose, lip, The trick of his frown, his forehead; nay, the valley, The pretty dimples of his chin, and cheek; his smiles:

The very mould and frame of hand, nail, finger:— And thou, good goddess nature, which hast made it So like to him that got it, if thou hast The ordering of the mind too, 'mongst all colours No yellow in't; lest she suspect, as he does, Her children not her husband's!
Leon. A gross hag!— And, lozely, thou art worthy to be hang'd, That wilt not stay her tongue.
Ant. Hang all the husbands, That cannot do that feat, you'll leave yourself Hardly one subject.
Leon. Once more, take her hence!
Paul. A most unworthy and unnatural lord Can do no more.
Leon. I'll have thee burn'd.
Paul. I care not It is an heretic, that makes the fire, Not she, which burn's in't. I'll not call you But this most cruel usage of your queen [tyrant; (Not able to beseech your accusation Than your own weak-hing'd fancy,) something Of tyranny, and will ignoble make you, [savours Yea, scandalous to the world.
Leon. On your allegiance, Out of the chamber with her. Were I a tyrant, Where were her life? she durst not call me so, If she did know me one. Away with her! Paul. I pray you, do not push me; I'll be gone. Look to your babe, my lord; 'tis yours: Jove send her A better guiding spirit!—What need these hands?— You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies, Will never do him good, not one of you. So, so;— Farewell; we are gone. [Exit Leon. Thou, traitor, hast set on thy wife to this.— My child? away with't—even thou, that hast A heart so tender o'er it, take it hence, And see it instantly consum'd with fire; Even thou, and none but thou. Take it up straight: Within this hour bring me word 'tis done, (And by good testimony,) or I'll seize thy life, With what thou else call'st thine: If thou refuse, And wilt encounter with my wrath, say so; The bastard braves with these my proper hands Shall I dash out. Go, take it to the fire; For thou sett'st on thy wife.
Ant. I did not, sir! These lords, my noble fellows, if they please, Can clear me in't.
1 Lord. We can, my royal liege, He is not guilty of her coming hither.
Leon. You are liars all. [credit; 1 Lord. 'Beseech your highness, give us better We have always truly serv'd you; and beseech So to esteem of us: And on our knees we beg, (As recompense of our dear services, Past, and to come,) that you do change this pur- Which, being so horrible, so bloody, must [pose; Lead on to some foul issue: We all kneel. Leon. I am a feather for each wind that blows:— Shall I live on, to see this bastard kneel And call me father? Better burn it now, Than curse it then. But, be it; let it live: It shall not neither.—You, sir, come you hither? [To Antigonus You, that have been so tenderly officious With lady Margery, your midwife here, there, To save this bastard's life:—for 'tis a bastard,
ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Street in some Town.

Enter Cleomenes and Dion.

Cleo. The climate’s delicate; the air most sweet;
Fertile the isle; the temple most surpassing
The common praise it bears.

Dion. I shall report,
For most it caught me, the celestial habits,
(Methinks, I so should term them,) and the reverence
Of the grave wearers. O, the sacrifice!
How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthly
It was the offering!

Cleo. But, of all, the burst
And the ear-deafening voice o’ the oracle,
Kin to Jove’s thunder, so surpriz’d my sense,
That I was nothing.

Dion. If the event o’ the journey
Prove as successful to the queen,—O, be’t so!—
As it hath been to us, rare, pleasant, speedy,
The time is worth the use on’t.

Cleo. Great Apollo,
Turn all to the best! These proclamations,
So forcing faults upon Hermione,
I little like.

Dion. The violent carriage of it
Will clear, or end, the business: When the oracle, (Thus by Apollo’s great divine seal’d up,) Shall the contents discover, something rare,
Even then will rush to knowledge.—Go,—
Fresh horses;—
And gracious be the issue! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Court of Justice.

Leontes, Lords, and Officers, appear, properly seated.

Leon. This session (to our great grief, we pronounce)

Even pushes ’gainst our heart: The party tried,
The daughter of a king; our wife; and one
Of us too much belov’d.—Let us be clear’d
Of being tyrannous, since we so openly
Proceed in justice; which shall have due course,
Even to the guilt, or the purgation.—
Produce the prisoner!

Offi. Hermione is brought in, guarded; Paulina and Ladies, attending.

Leon. Read the indictment.

Offi. Hermione, queen to the worthy Leontes, king of Sicilia, thou art here accused and arraigned of high treason, in committing adultery with Felixences, king of Bohemia; and conspiring with Camillo to take away the life of our sovereign lord the king, thy royal husband: the pretence whereof being by circumstances partly laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the faith and allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel and aid them, for their better safety, to fly away by night.

Her. Since what I am to say, must be but that Which contradicts my accusation; and
The testimony on my part, no other
But what comes from myself; it shall scarce boot
To say, Not guilty; mine integrity,
[me
Being counted falsehood, shall, as I express it, Be so receiv’d. But thus,—If powers divine Behold our human actions, (as they do,) I doubt not then, but innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience.—You, my lord, best know,
(Who least will seem to do so,) my past life
Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy; which is more
Than history can pattern, though devil’s,
And play'd, to take spectators: For behold me,—
A fellow of the royal bed, which owe
A moiety of the throne, a great king's daughter,
The mother to a hopeful prince,—here standing,
To prate and talk for life, and honour 'fore
Who please to come and hear. For life, I prize it,
As I weigh grief, which I would spare: for honour,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for. I appeal
To your own conscience, sir, before Polixenes
Came to your court, how love was in your grace,
How merited to be so; since he came,
With what encounter so uncurrent I
Have strain'd, to appear thus: if one jot beyond
The bound of honour; or, in act, or will,
That way inclining; harden'd be the hearts
Of all that hear me, and my near'st kin
Cry, Fye upon my grave!
Leon. I ne'er heard yet,
That any of these bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did,
Than to perform it first.
Her. That's true enough;
Though 'tis a saying, sir, not due to me.
Leon. You will not own it.
Her. More than mistress of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes,
(With whom I am accus'd,) I do confess,
I lov'd him, as in honour he requir'd;
With such a kind of love, as might become
A lady like me: with a love, en such;
So, and no other, as yourself command'd:
Which not to have done, I think, had been in me
Both disobedience and ingratitude,
To you, and toward your friend; whose love had spoke,
Even since it could speak, from an infant, freely,
That it was yours. Now, for conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes; though it be dish'd
For me to try how: all I know of it,
Is, that Camillo was an honest man;
And, why he left your court, the gods themselves,
Wotting no more than I, are ignorant.
Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have undertake'n to do in his absence.
Her. Sir!
You speak a language that I understand not;
My life stands in the level of your dreams,
Which I'll lay down.
Leon. Your actions are my dreams;
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it;—As you were past all shame,
(Those of your fact are so,) so past all truth:
Which to deny, concerns more than avails:
For as
Thy brat hath been cast out, like to itself,
No father owning it, (which is, indeed,
More criminal in thee, than it,) so thou
Shalt feel our justice; in whose easiest passage,
Look for no less than death.
Her. Sir, spare your threats;
The hug, which you would fright me with, I seek.
To me can life be no commodity:
The crown and comfort of my life, your favour,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went: My second joy,
And first-fruits of my body, from his presence,
I am barr'd, like one infectious: My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast,—
The innocent milk in its most innocent mouth,— Haled out to murder: Myself on every post
Proclaim'd a strumpet; with immodest hatred,
The child-bed privilege denied, which 'longs
To women of all fashion:—Lastly, hurried
Here to this place, i' the open air, before
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die? Therefore, proceed.
But yet hear this; mistake me not;—No life, I
Prize it not a straw:—but for mine honour,
(Which I would free,) if I shall be condemn'd
Upon surmis's; all proofs sleeping else,
But what your jealousies awake: I tell you
'Tis rigour, and not law.—Your honours all,
I do refer me to the oracle!
Apollo be my judge.
Lord. This your request
Is altogether just; therefore, bring forth,
And in Apollo's name, his oracle.
[Exeunt certain Officers.
Her. The emperor of Russia was my father;
O, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery; yet with eyes
Of pity, not revenge!
Re-enter Officers, with Cleomenes and Dion.
Offi. You here shall swallow upon this sword
Of that you, Cleomenes and Dion, have [justice,
Been both at Delphos; and from thence have brought
This seal'd-up oracle, by the hand deliver'd
Of great Apollo's priest; and that, since then,
You have not dar'd to break the holy seal,
Nor read the secrets in't.
Cleo. Dion. All this we swear.
Leon. Break up the seals, and read.
Offi. [Reads.] Hermione is chaste, Polixenes blameless, Camillo a true subject, Leontes a jealous tyrant, his innocent babe truly begotten; and the king shall live without an heir, if that, which is lost, be not found.
Lords. Now blessed be the great Apollo!
Her. Praised! Leon. Hast thou read truth?
Offi. Ay, my lord; even so
As it is here set down.
Leon. There is no truth at all i' the oracle:
The sessions shall proceed; this is mere falsehood!
Enter a Servant. hastily.
Serv. My lord the king, the king!
Leon. What is the business?
Serv. O sir, I shall be hated to report it:
The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed, is gone.
Leon. How! gone?
Serv. Is dead.
Leon. Apollo's angry; and the heavens themselves
Do strike at my injustice. [Hermione faints.]
How now there!
Paul. This news is mortal to the queen:—Look
And see what death is doing. [down,
Leon. Take her hence:
Her heart is but o'ercharg'd; she will recover.
I have too much belief'rd mine own suspicion:
'Beseech you, tenderly apply to her
Some remedies for life.—
[Exeunt Paulina and Ladies, with Hermione.
Apollo, pardon
My great profaneness 'gainst thine oracle!—
I'll reconcile me to Polixenes;
New woo my queen; recall the good Camillo;
Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy:
For being transported by my jealousies
To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I chose Camillo for the minister, to poison
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command, though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: be, most humane,
And fill'd with honour, to my kingly guest
Unclaspt my practice; quit his fortunes here,
Which you knew great; and to the certain hazard
Of all incertainties himself commended,
No richer than his honour:—How he glisters
Thorough my rust! and how his piety
Does my deeds make the blacker!

Re-enter Paulina.

Paul. Woe the while!
O, cut my lace; lest my heart, cracking it,
Break too!
1 Lord. What fit is this, good lady?
Paul. What studied torments, tyrant, hast for me?
What wheels? racks? fires? What frying? boiling,
In leads, or oils? what old, or newer torture
Must I receive; whose every word deserves
To taste of thy most worst? Thy tyranny
Together working with thy jealousies,—
Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle
For girls of nine!—O, think, what they have done,
And then run mad, indeed; stark mad! for all
Thy by-gone follies were but spites of it.
That thou betray'dst Polixenes, 'twas nothing;
That did but show thee, of a fool, inconstant,
And damnable ungrateful: nor was't much,
Would'st have poison'd good Camillo's honour,
To have him kill a king; poor trespasses,
More monstrous standing by; whereas I reckon
The casting forth to crow a babby-daughter,
To be or none, or little; though a devil
Would have shed water out of fire, ere done't:
Nor is't directly laid to thee, the death
Of the young prince; whose honourable thoughts
(Thoughts high for one so tender,) clest the heart
That could conceive, a gross and foolish sire
Eblemish'd his gracious dam; this is not—no,
Laid to thy answer: But the last,—O, lords,
When I have said, cry, woe!—the queen, the queen,
The sweetest, dearest, creature's dead: and vengeance for't
Not dropp'd down yet.
1 Lord. The higher powers forbid it!
Paul. I say, she's dead: I'll swear't: if word, nor oath, Preval not, go and see: if you can bring
Tracture, or lustre, in her lip, her eye,
Heat outwardly, or breath within, I'll serve you
As I would do the gods,—But, O thou tyrant!
Do not repent these things: for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir; therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair. A thousand tongues
Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Upon a barren mountain, and still winter
In storm perpetual, could not move the gods
To look that way thou wert.
Leon.

Go on, go on!

Thou canst not speak too much; I have deserv'd
All tongues to talk their bitterest!
1 Lord. Say no more;
Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault
I the boldness of your speech.
Paul. I am sorry for't;
All faults I make, when I shall come to know them,
I do repent: Alas, I have show'd too much
The rashness of a woman: he is touch'd
To the noble heart.—What's gone, and what's past help.
Should be past grief: Do not receive affliction
At my petition, I beseech you; rather
Let me be punish'd, that have minded you
Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege,
Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman:
The love I bore your queen,—lo, fool again:—
I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children;
I'll not remember you of my own lord,
Who is lost too: Take your patience to you,
And I'll say nothing.
Leon. Thou didst speak but well,
When most the truth; which I receive much better
Than to be pitied of thee. Pr'ythee, bring me
To the dead bodies of my queen and son:
One grave shall be for both; upon them shall
The causes of their death appear, unto
Our shame perpetual: Once a day I'll visit
The chapel where they lie; and tears, shed there, Shall be my recreation: So long as Nature will bear up with this exercise,
So long I daily vow to use it.—Come,
And lead me to these sorrows.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—BOHEMIA. A desert Country near the Sea.

Enter Antiochus, with the child; and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect then, our ship hath touch'd
The deserts of Bohemia?

[upon
Mar. Ay, my lord; and fear
We have landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters. In my conscience,
The heavens with that we have in hand are angry,
And frown upon us.

Ant. Their sacred wills be done!—Go, get aboard;
Look to thy bark; I'll not be long, before
I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your best haste; and go not Too far in the land; 'tis like to be loud weather;
Besides, this place is famous for the creatures
Of prey, that keep upon't.

Ant. I'll follow instantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart
To be so rid o' the business.

[Exit.

Ant. Come, poor babe:—
I have heard, (but not belief'd,) the spirits of the dead
May walk again; if such thing be, thy mother
Appear'd to me last night; for ne'er was a dream
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head on one side, some another;
I never saw a vessel like sorrow,
So fill'd and so becoming; in pure white robes,
Like very sanctity, she did approach
My cabin where I lay: thrice bow'd before me;
And, gasping to begin some speech, her eyes
Became two spouts: the fury spent, anon
Did this break from her: Good Antigonus!
Since fate, against thy better disposition,
Hath made thy person for the thrower-out
Of my poor babe, according to thine oath,—
Places remote enough are in Bohemia.
There weep, and leave it crying: and, for the babe
Is counted lost for ever, Perdita,
For'thence, call't: for this ungentle business,
Put on thee by my lord, thou ne'er shalt see
Thy wife Paulina more:—and so, with shrieks,
She melted into air. Affrighted much,
I did in time collect myself; and thought
This was so, and no slumber. Dreams are toys;
Yet, for this once, yea, superstitiously,
I will be sware'd by this. I do believe,
Hermione hath suffer'd death: and that
Apollo would, this being indeed the issue
Of King Polixenes, it should here be laid,
Either for life, or death, upon the earth
Of its right father. Blossom, speed thee well!

[Ending down the child.
There lie; and there, thy character: there, these;
[Ending down a bundle.
Which may if fortune please, both breed thee, pretty,
And still rest thine.—The storm begins:—Poor wretch,
That, for thy mother's fault, art thus expos'd
To loss, and what may follow.—Weep I cannot,
But my heart bleeds: and most accr'd am I,
To be by oath enjoin'd to this.—Farewell!
The day frowns more and more—thou art like to
A lullaby too rough: I never saw
The heavens so dim by day. A savage clamour?
—Well may I get aboard!—This is the chase;
I am gone for ever! [Exit, pursued by a bear.

Enter an old Shepherd.
Shep. I would, there were no age between ten
And three-and-twenty; or that youth would sleep
But the rest: for there is nothing in the between But getting wenches with child, wronging the ancient, stealing, fighting,—Hark you now!—
Well, any but these boiled brains of nineteen,
And two-and-twenty, hunt this weather? They have scared away two of my best sheep; which, I fear,
The wolf will sooner find, than the master: if any,
Where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browsing
On ivy.—Good luck, an't be thy will! what have we here? [Taking up the Child.] Mercy on's, a barne; a very pretty barne! A boy, or a child, I wonder? A pretty one; a very pretty one: Sure, some scrape: though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the scrape: This has been some stair-work, some trunk-work, some behind-door-work: they were warmer that got this, than the poor thing is here. I'll take it up for pity;
yet I'll tyrant till my son come; he holla'd but even now.—Whoa, ho hoo!

Enter Clown.
Clo. Hilloa, loa!

Shep. What, art so near? If thou'lt see a thing to talk on when thou art dead and rotten, come hither.—What allest thou, man?

Clo. I have seen two such sights, by sea, and by land;—but I am not to say it is a sea, for it is now the sky; betwixt the firmament and it, you cannot thrust a bookin's point.

Shep. Why, boy, how is it?

Clo. I would, you did but see how it chafes, how it rages, how it takes up the shore! but that's not to the point: O, the most piteous cry of the poor souls! sometimes to see 'em, and not to see 'em: now the ship boring the moon with her mainmast—and anon swallowed with yest and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hogshead. And then for the land service,—To see how the bear tore out his shoulder-bone: how he cried to me for help, and said, his name was Antigonus, a nobleman.—But to make an end of the ship,—to see how the sea flap-dragoned it:—but, first, how the poor souls roared, and the sea mocked them;—and how the poor gentleman roasted, and the bear mocked him,
—both roaring louder than the sea, or weather.

Shep. Name of mercy! when was this, boy?

Clo. Now, now; I have not winked since I saw these sights: the men are not yet cold under water, nor the bear half dined on the gentleman; he's at it now.

Shep. Would I had been by, to have helped the old man!

Clo. You would had you been by the ship-side, to have helped her; there your charity would have lacked footing.

[Aside.
Shep. Heavy matters! heavy matters! but look there hee, boy. Now bless thyself; thou met'st with things dying, I with things new-born. Here's a sight for thee; look thee, a bearing-cloth for a squire's child! look thee here! take up, take up, boy; open't. So let's see; It was told me, I should be rich by the fairies; this is some change-ing.—Open't:—What's within, boy?

Clo. You're a made old man; if the sins of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to live. Gold!
all gold!

Shep. This is fairy-gold, boy, and 'twill prove so: up with it, keep it close; home, home, the next way! We are lucky, boy, and to be so still, requires nothing but secrecy.—Let my sheep go:
—Come, good boy, the next way home.

Clo. Go you the next way with your findings;
I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman,
and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst, but when they are hungry: if there be any of him left, I'll bury it.

Shep. That's a good deed: If thou may'st discern by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to the sight of him.

Clo. Marry, will I; and you shall help to put him i'th'ground.

Shep. 'Tis a lucky day, boy; and we'll do good deeds on't. [Exit.}
ACT IV.

Enter Time, as Chorus

Time. I,—that please some, try all; both joy, and terror,
Of good and bad; that make, and unfold error,—
Now take upon me, in the name of Time,
To use my wings, Impute it not a crime,
To me, or my swift passage, that I slide
O'er sixteen years, and leave the growth untried
Of that wide gap; since it is in my power
To o'erthrow law, and in one self-born hour
To plant and o'erwhelm custom: Let me pass
The same I am, ere ancient order was,
Or what is now received: I witness to
The times that brought them in: So shall I do
To the freshest things now reigning; and make
The glistening of this present, as my tale [stale]
Now seems to it. Your patience this allowing,
I turn my glass; and give my scene such growing,
As you had slept between. Leontes leaving
The effects of his fond jealousies; so grieving,
That he shuts up himself; imagine me,
Genteel spectators, that I now may be
In fair Bohemia; and remember well,
I mentioned a son o' the king's, which Florizel
I now name to you; and with speed so pace
To speak of Perdita, now grown in grace
Equal with wondering: What of her enimes,
I list not prophesy; but let Time's news
Be known, when 'tis brought forth:—a shepherd's daughter.
And what to her adheres, which follows after,
Is the argument of time: Of this allow,
If ever you have spent time worse ere now;
If never yet, that Time itself doth say,
He wishes earnestly, you never may. [Exit.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in the Palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: 'tis a sickness, denying thee any thing; a death, to grant this.

Cam. It is fifteen years, since I saw my country; though I have for the most part been aired abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent king, my master, hath sent for me: to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I o'er-ween to think so; which is another spur to my departures.

Pol. As thou Lovest me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services, by leaving me now: the need I have of thee, thine own goodness hath made; better not to have had thee, than thus to want thee: thou, having made me businesses, which none, without thee, can sufficiently manage, must either stay to execute them thyself, or take away with thee the very services thou hast done: which if I have not enough considered, (as too much I cannot,) to be more thankful to thee, shall be my study; and my profit therein, the heaping friendships. Of that fatal country Sicilia, pr'ythee speak no more: whose very naming punishes me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou call'st him, and reconciled king, my brother; whose loss of his most precious queen and children, are even now to be afresh lamented. Say to me, when saw'st thou the prince Florizel my son? Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them, when they have approved their virtues.

Cam. Sir, it is three days since I saw the prince: What his happier affairs may be, are to me unknown; but I have, missingly, noted, he is of late much retired from court; and is less frequent to his princely exercises, than formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much, Camillo; and with some care; so far, that I have eyes under my service, which look upon his removedness: from whom I have this intelligence; That he is seldom from the house of a most homely shepherd; a man, they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbours, is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard, sir, of such a man who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is extended more, than can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. That's likewise part of my intelligence; but, I fear, the angle that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place: where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd; from whose simplicity, I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Pr'ythee, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command.

Pol. My best Camillo!—We must disguise ourselves. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Road near the Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

When daffodils begin to peer,—
With, heigh! the doxy over the dale,—
Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year;
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.
The white sheet bleeding on the hedge,—
With, hey! the sweet birds, O, how they sing!
Both set my pugging tooth on edge;
For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.
The lark, that tirra-lirra chants,—
With, hey! with, hey! the thrush and the jay;
Are summer songs for me and my aunt;
While we lie tumbling in the hay.

I have served prince Florizel, and, in my time, wore three-pile; but now I am out of service:

But shall I go mourn for that, my dear?
The pale moon shines by night:
And when I wander here and there, I then do most go right.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sow-skin budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it.

My traffick is sheets; when the kite builds, look to lesser linen. My father named me Autolycus; who, being as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles: With die, and drab, I purchased this caparison; and my revenue is the silly cheat: Gallows, and knock, are too powerful on the highway: beating, and hanging, are terrors to me; for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it.—A prize! a prize!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Let me see:—Every 'leven wether—tods;
every tod yields—pound and odd shilling: fifteen hundred shorns,—What comes the wool to?

Aut. If the strings hold, the cock's mine.

[Aside.

Clo. I cannot do without counters.—Let me see;
what am I to buy for our sheep-shearing feast?

Three pound of sugar; five pound of currants;
rice.—What will this sister of mine do with rice?

But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she lays it on. She hath made me four-and-twenty nosegays for the shearers: three-man song-men all, and very good ones; but they are most of them means and bases: but one Puritan amongst him, and he sings psalms to hornpipes. I must have saffron, to colour the warden pies: race—dates,—none; that's out of my note: nutmegs, seven; a race, or two, of ginger; but that I may beg;—four pound of prunes, and as many of raisins o' the sun.

Aut. O, that ever I was born!

[Groveling on the ground.

Clo. I the name of me,—

Aut. O, help me, help me! pluck but off these rags; and then, death, death!

Clo. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need of more rags to lay on thee, rather than have these off.

Aut. O, sir, the loathsomeness of them offends me more than the stripes I have received; which are mighty ones, and millions.

Clo. Alas, poor man! a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Aut. I am robbed, sir, and beaten; my money and apparel ta'en from me, and these detestable things put upon me.

Clo. What, by a horse-man, or a foot-man?

Aut. A foot-man, sweet sir, a foot-man.

Clo. Indeed, he should be a foot-man, by the garments he hath left with thee; if this be a horseman's coat, it hath seen very hot service. Lend me thy hand, I'll help thee: come, lend me thy hand.

[Helping him up.

Aut. O! good sir, tenderly, oh!

Clo. Alas, poor soul!

Aut. O, good sir, softly, good sir! I fear, sir, my shoulder blade is out.

Clo. How now? canst stand?

Aut. Softly, dear sir! [Picks his pocket.] good sir, softly; you ha' done me a charitable office.

Clo. Dost lack any money? I have a little money
for thee.

Aut. No, good sweet sir; no, I beseech you, sir: I have a kinsman not past three quarters of a mile hence, unto whom I was going; I shall there have money, or any thing I want: Offer me no money, I pray you; that kills my heart.

Clo. What manner of fellow was he that robbed
you?

Aut. A fellow, sir, that I have known to go about with trol-ty-machines: I knew him once a servant of the prince; I cannot tell, good sir, for which of his virtues it was, but he was certainly whipped out of the court.

Clo. His vices, you would say; there's no virtue whipped out of the court: they cherish it, to make it stay there; and yet it will no more but abide.

Aut. Vices I would say, sir. I know this man well: he hath been since an ape-bearer; then a process-server, a bailiff; then he compassed a motion of the prodigal son, and married a tinker's wife within a mile where my land and living lies;
and, having flown over many knavish professions,
he settled only in rogue: some call him, Autolycus.

Clo. Out upon him! Prig, for my life, prig: he haunts wakes, fairs, and bear-baitings.

Aut. Very true, sir; he, sir, he; that's the rogue, that put me into this apparel.

Clo. Not a more cowardly rogue in all Bohemia;
if you had but looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run.

Aut. I must confess to you, sir, I am no fighter;
I am false of heart that way; and that he knew, I warrant him.

Clo. How do you now?

Aut. Sweet sir, much better than I was; I can stand, and walk: I will even take my leave of you, and pace softly towards my kinsman's.

Clo. Shall I bring thee on the way?

Aut. No, good-faced sir; no, sweet sir.

Clo. Then fare thee well; I must go buy spices for our sheep-shearing.

Aut. Prosper you, sweet sir!—[Exit Clown.] Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your spice.
I'll be with you at your sheep-shearing too:
If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be enrolled, and my name put in the book of virtue!

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way,
And merrily hent the stilte-a:
A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tires in a mile-a.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter Florizel and Perdita.

Flo. These your unusual weeds to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdess; but Florizel,
Peering in April's front. This your sheep-shearing
Is as a meeting of the petty gods,
And you the queen on't.

Per. Sir, my gracious lord,
To chide at your extremes, it not becomes me;
O, pardon, that I name them: your high self,
The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like pranks'd up: But that our feasts
In every mess have folly, and the feeders
Digest it with a custom, I should blush
To see you so attir'd; sworn, I think,
To show myself a glass.

Flo. I bless the time,
When my good falcon made her flight across
Thy father's ground.

Per. Now Jove afford you cause!
To me, the difference forges dread; your greatness
Hath not been us'd to fear. Even now I tremble
To think, your father, by some accident,
Should pass this way: as you did: O, the fates!
How would he look, to see his work, so noble,
Vilely bound up? What would he say? O: how Should I, in these my borrow'd flam's, behold
The sternness of his presence?

Flo. Apprehend
Nothing but jollity. The gods themselves, Humphring their deities to love, have taken The shapes of beasts upon them: Jupiter Became a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune A ram, and bleated: and the fire-ro'd god, Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain, As I seem now: Their transformations Were never for a piece of beauty rarer; Nor in a way so chaste: since my desires Run not before mine honour: nor my lusts Burn hotter than my faith.

Per. O hut, dear sir, Your resolution cannot hold, when 'tis Oppos'd, as it must be, by the power o' the king; One of these two must be necessities, Which then will speak; that you must change this Or I my life. [purpose.

Flo. Thou dearest Perdita, With these forc'd thoughts, I pr'ythee, darken not The mirth o' the feast: Or I'll be thine, my fair, Or not my father's: for I cannot be Mine own, nor any thing to any, If I be not thine: to this I am most constant, Though destiny say, no. Be merry, gentle; Strangle such thoughts as these, with any thing That you behold the while. Your guests are coming; Lift up your countenance; as it were the day Of celebration of that nuptial, which We two have sworn shall come.

Per. O lady fortune, Stand you auspicious! Enter Shepherd, with POLIKKNS and CAMELLO disguised; Clown, MOPSA, DORCAS, with others.

Flo. See, your guests approach: Address yourself to entertain them sprightly, And let's be red with mirth. Shep. Fye, daughter! when my old liv'd, upon This day, she was both pantler, butcher, cook; Both dame and servant: welcom'd all: serv'd all: Would sing her song, and dance her turn; now here, At upper end o' the table, now, i'the middle; On his shoulder, and his: her face o' fire With labour; and the thing, she took to quench it, She would to each one sip: You are retir'd, As if you were a feasted one, and not The hostess of the meeting: Pray you, bid These unknown friends to us welcome: for it is A way to make us better friends, more known. Come, quench your blushes; and present yourself That which you are, mistress o' the feast: Come on, And bid us welcome to your sheep-shearing, As your good flock shall prosper.

Per. Welcome, sir! [To Pol. It is my father's will, I should take on me The hostess-ship o' the day:—You're welcome, sir! [To CAMELLO. Give me those flowers there, Dorcas.—Reverend sirs, For you there's rosemary, and rue: these keep Seeming, and savour, all the winter long: Grace, and remembrance, be to you both, And welcome to our shearing!

Pol. Shepherdess, (A fair one are you!) well you fit our ages With flowers of winter.

Per. Sir, the year growing ancient,— No, yet on summer's death, nor on the birth Of trembling winter,—the fairest flowers o' the season Are our carnations, and streak'd gillyflowers, Which some call nature's bastards: of that kind Our rustic garden's barren; and I care not To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore, gentle maiden, Do you neglect them?

Per. For I have heard it said, There is an art, which, in their piedness, shares With great creating nature.

Pol. Say, there be; Yet nature is made better by no mean, But nature makes that mean; so, o'er that art, Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry A gentler scion to the wildest stock; And make conceive a bark of baser kind By bud of nobler race; This is an art Which does mend nature,—change it rather: but The art itself is nature.

Per. So it is.

Pol. Then make your garden rich in gillyflowers, And do not call them bastards! I'll not put The dibble in earth to set one slip of them; No more than, were I painted, I would wish [fore This youth would say,'twere well; and only there Desire to breed by me.—Here's flowers for you; Hot lavender, mints, savory, marjoram; The marigold, that goes to bed with the sun, And with him rises weeping; these are flowers Of middle summer, and, I think, they are given To men of middle age: You are very welcome! Cam. I should leave grazing, were I of your And only live by gazing. [flock, Per. Out, alas! You'd be so lean, that blasts of January Would blow you through and through.—Now, my fairest friend, I would, I had some flowers o'the spring, that might Become your time of day; and yours, and yours; That wear upon your virgin branches yet Your maidenheads growing:—O Proserpina, For the flowers now, that, frightened, thou let'st fall From Dis's waggon!—daffodils, That come before the swallow dares, and take The winds of March with beauty; violets, dim, But sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes, Or Cytherea's breath; pale primroses, That die unmarried, ere they can behold Bright Phebus in his strength, a malady Most incident to maids; bold oxlips, and The crown-imperial; lilies of all kinds, The flower-de-luce being one:—O, these I lack, To make you garlands of; and, my sweet friend, To strew him o'er and o'er.

Flo. What like a corse? Per. No, like a bank, for love to lie and play on; Not like a corse; or if,—not to be buried, But quick, and in mine arms. Come, take your Methinks, I play as I have seen them [flowers: In Whitsun' pastoral's: sure this robe Does change my disposition.

Flo. What you do, Still betters what is done. When you speak, sweet, I'd have you do it ever: when you sing, I'd have you buy and sell so; so give alms; Pray so; and, for the ordering your affairs, To sing them too: When you do dance, I wish A wave o'the sea, that you might ever do [you Nothing but that: we're still, still so, and own
No other function: Each your doing,
So singular in each particular,
Crowns what you are doing in the present deeds,
That all your acts are queens.

Per. O Doricles,
Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
And the true blood, which fairly peeps through it,
Do plainly give you out an unstained shepherd;
With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles,
You woud’st me the false way.

Flo. As little skill to fear, as I have purpose
To put you tot.—But, come; our dance, I pray;
Your hand, my Perdita; so turtles pair,
That never mean to part.

Per. I’ll swear for ’em.

Pol. This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever Ran on the green-sward: nothing she does or seems,
But snacks of something greater than herself;
Too noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her something,
That makes her blood look out: Good sooth, she is
The queen of curds and cream.

Clo. Come on, strike up.

Dor. Mopsa must be your mistress: marry, gay— To meher kissing with. [Music.

Mop. Now, in good time!

Clo. Not a word, a word; we stand upon our manners.—

Come, strike up. [Music.

Here a dance of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray, good shepherd, what Fair swain is this, which dances with your daughter?

Shep. They call him Doricles; and he boasts
To have a worthy feeding: but I have it [himself
Upon his own report, and I believe it;
He looks so sweet: He says, he loves my daugh-
I think so too: for never gaz’d the moon [ter;
Upon the water, as he’ll stand, and read,
As ’twere, my daughter’s eyes: and, to be plain,
I think, there is not half a kiss to choose,
Who loves another best.

Pol. She dances fealty.

Shep. So she does any thing; though I report it,
That should be silent: if young Doricles
Do light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreams of.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O master, if you did but hear the pedler at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe; no, the bag-pipe could not move you: he sings several tunes, faster than you’ll tell money; he utters them as he had eaten ballads, and all men’s ears grew to his tunes.

Clo. He could never come better: he shall come in: I love a ballad but even too well; if it be doleful matter, merrily set down, or a very pleasant thing indeed, and sung lamentably.

Serv. He hath songs, for man, or woman, of all sizes; no milliner can so fit his customers with gloves: he has the prettiest love-songs for maids; so without bawdry, which is strange; with such delicate burdens of dildos and fadings: jump her and thump her; and where some stretch-mouth’d rascal would, as it were, mean mischief, and break a foul gap into the matter, he makes the maid to answer, Whoop, do me no harm, good man; puts him off, slightes him, with Whoop, do me no harm, good man.

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Believe me, thou talkest of an admirableconceited fellow. Has he any unbraided wares?

Serv. He hath ribands of all the colours i’the rainbow; points, more than all the lawyers in Bohemia can learnedly handle, though they come to him by the gross; inkle’s, caddisses, cambricks, lawns; why, he sings them over, ’as they were gods or goddesses: you would think, a smock were a she-angel: he so chants to the sleeve-hand, and the work about the square on’t.

Pr’ythee, bring him in; and let him approach singing.

Per. Forewarn him, that he use no scrurious words in his verses.

Clo. You have of these pedlers, that have more in ’em than you’d think, sister.

Per. Ay, good brother, or go about to think.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

Lawn, as white as driven snow;
Cyprus, black as o’er was crow;
Gloves, as sweet as damask-roses;
Masks for faces, and for noses;
Bungle bracelet, necklace-amber,
Perfume for a lady’s chamber:
Golden quills, and stomachers.
For my lads to give their dears;
Pins, and poking-sticks of steel,
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come, buy of me, come; come buy, come buy;
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry:
Come, buy, &c.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopsa, thou should’st take no money of me; but being enthral’d as I am, it will also be the bondage of certain ri-bands and gloves.

Mop. I was promised them against the feast;
but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promised you more than that, or there be liars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promised you:
may be, he has paid you more; which will shame
you to give him again.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids? will they wear their plackets, where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking-time, when you are going to the myn and kyn-hole, to whistle off these secrets; but you must be tittle-tattling before all our guests? ’Tis well they are whispering: Clamour your tongues, and not a word more.

Mop. I have done. Come, you promised me a tawdry lace, and a pair of sweet gloves,

Clo. Have I not told thee, how I was cozen’d by the way and lost all my money?

Aut. And, indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad;
therefore it behoves men to be wary.

Clo. Fear not thou, man, thou shalt lose nothing here.

Aut. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What hast here? ballads?

Mop. Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in print, a’life; for then we are sure they are true.

Aut. Here’s one to a very doleful tune. How a user’s wife was brought to bed of twenty money-bags at a burden; and how she longed to eat ad-der’s heads, and toads carbounadod.

Mop. Is it true, think you?

Aut. Very true; and but a month old.

Dor. Bless me from marrying a usurer!

Aut. Here’s the midwife’s name to’t, one mi-tress Taleporter; and five or six honest wives that were present: Why should I carry lies abroad?

Mop. 'Pray you now, buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by: And let's first see more ballads; we'll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here's another ballad, Of a fish, that appeared upon the coast, on Wednesday the fourscore of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maids: it was thought, she was a woman, and was turned into a cold fish, for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her: The ballad is very pitiful, and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, think you?

Aut. Five justices' hands at it; and witnesses, more than my pack will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too. Another.

Aut. This is a merry ballad; but a very pretty one.

Mop. Let's have some merry ones.

Aut. Why, this is a passing merry one; and goes to the tune of Two maid's wooing a man: there's scarce a maid westward, but she sings it; 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Mop. We can both sing it; if thou'lt bear a part thou shalt hear; 'tis in three parts.

Aut. We had the tune on't a month ago.

Aut. I can bear my part; you must know, 'tis my occupation: have at it with you.

SONG.

A. Get you hence, for I must go;
Where it fits not you to know.
D. Whither? M. O, whither?—D. Whither?
M. It becomes thy oath full well,
Thou to me thy secrets tell:—
D. Me too, let me go thither.
M. Or thou go'st to the grange, or mill:
D. If to either, thou dost ill.
A. Neither D. What, neither?—A. Neither.
D. Thou hast sworn my love to be;
M. Thou hast sworn it more to me:
Then, whither go'st?—say, Whither?

Clo. We'll have this song out anon by ourselves; My father and the gentlemen are in sad talk, and we'll not trouble them: Come, bring away thy pack after me. Wenches, I'll buy for you both: Pedler, let's have the first choice.—Follow me, girls.

Aut. And you shall pay well for 'em. [Aside.

Will you buy any tape,
Or lace for your cape,
My dainty duck, my drea-na?
Any silk, any thread, Any toys for your head.
Of the new'st, and fin'st, fin'st wear-a;
Come to the pedler; Money's a medler,
That doth utter all men's ware-a.

[Exeunt Clown, Autolycus, Dorcas, and Mopsa. Enter a Servant.

Serv. Master, there is three carters, three shepherds, three neat-herds, three swine-herds, that have made themselves all men of hair; they call themselves slaters; and they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gamboals, because they are not in't; but they themselves are o' the mind, (if it be not too rough for some, that know little but bowing,) it will please plentifully.

Shep. Away! we'll none on't; here has been too much homely foolery already:—I know, sir, we weary you.

Pol. You weary those that refresh us: Pray, let's see these four threes of herdsmen.

Serv. One three of them, by their own report, sir, hath danced before the king; and not the worst of the three, but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squire.

Shep. Leave your prating: since these good men are pleased, let them come in; but quickly now.

Serv. Why, they stay at door, sir. [Exit.

Re-enter Servant, with Twelve Rusticks, habited like Satyrs. They dance, and then exit.

Pol. O father, you'll know more of that hereafter.—

Is it not too far gone?—'Tis time to part them.—

He's simple and tells much. [Aside.]—How now, fair shepherd?

Your heart is full of something, that does take
Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was young, And handed love, as you do, I was wont To load the shears with knacks; I would have ransack'd
The pedler's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance; you have let him go, And nothing parted with him: If your lass Interpretation should abuse, and call this,
Your lack of love, or bounty; you were straited For a reply, at least, if you make a care
Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old sir, I know
She prises not such trifles as these are:
The gifts, she looks from me, are pack'd and look'd
Up in my heart; which I have given already,
But not deliver'd.—O, hear me breathe my life:
Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem,
Hath sometime lov'd: I take thy hand; this hand,
As soft as dove's down, and as white as it;
Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the fann'd snow,
That's bolted by the northern blasts twice o'er.

Pol. What follows this?—

How pretty is the young swain seems to wash
The hand, was fair before!—I have put you out:
But, to your protestation; let me hear
What you profess.

Flo. Do, and be witness to't.

Pol. And this my neighbour too?

Flo. And he, and more
Than he, and men; the earth, the heavens, and all:
That, were I crown'd the most imperial monarch, Thereof most worthy; were I the fairest youth That ever made eye swerve; had force, and knowledge,
More than was ever man's,—I would not prize them,
Without her love: for her, employ them all;
Commend them, and condemn them, to her service,
Or to their own perdition.

Pol. Fairly offer'd.

Cam. This shows a sound affection.

Shep. But, my daughter,
Say you the like to him?

Per. I cannot speak
So well, nothing so well; no, nor mean better:
By the pattern of my own thoughts I cut out
The purity of his.

Shep. Take hands, a bargain:—

And, friends unknown, you shall bear witness to't: I give my daughter to him, and will make Her portion equal his.

Flo. O, that must be
I the virtue of your daughter; one being dead,
SCENE III.

WINTER'S TALE.

I shall have more than you can dream of yet;
Enough then for your wonder: But, come on,
Cast off your 'fore these witnesses.

Shew. Come, your hand; —

And, daughter, yours.

Pol. Soft, swain, awhile, 'beseech you; I have you a father?

Flo. I have: But what of him?

Pol. Knows he of this?

Flo. He neither does, nor shall.

Pol. Methinks, a father
Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table. Pray you, once more;
Is it not good, my father, even in this
Of reasonable affairs? is he not stupid
With age, and altering rheums? Can he speak? hear?

Know man from man? dispute his own estate?
Lies he not bed-rid? and again does nothing,
But what he did being childish?

Flo. No, good sir;
He has his health, and amplifier strength, indeed,
Than most have of his age.

Pol. Enraged by my white beard,
You offer him, if this be so, a wrong
Something unfilial: Reason, my son,
Should choose himself a wife; but as good reason,
The father, (all whose joy is nothing else
But fair posterity,) should hold some counsel
In such a business.

Flo. I yield all this;
But, for some other reasons, my grave sir,
Which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquaintance
My father of this business.

Pol. Flo. He shall not.

Pol. Pr'ythee, let him.

Flo. No, he must not.

Shew. Let him, my son; he shall not need to
At knowing of thy choice. [grieve

Flo. Come, come, he must not:—

Mark our contract.

Pol. Mark your divorce, young sir,

[Discovering himself.

Whom son I dare not call; thou art too base
To be acknowledged: Thou a sceptre's heir,
That thus affectst a sheep-hook!—Thou old traitor,
I am sorry, that, by hanging thee, I can but Shorten thy life one week. —And thou, fresh piece
Of excellent craftsmanship; who, of force, must know
The royal fool thou cop'rt with; —

Shew. O, my heart!

Pol. I'll have thy beauty scratch'd with brars, and made
More homely than thy state.—For thee, fond
If I may ever know, thou dost but sigh, [boy,—
That thou no more shalt see this knack (as never
I mean thou shalt,) we'll bar thee from succession;
Not hold thee of our blood, no not our kin,
Far than Deucalion off:—Mark thou my words;
Follow us to the court.—Thou churl, for this time,
Though full of our displeasure, yet we free thee
From the dead blow of it.—And you, enchantment,—

Worthy enough a herdsman; yea, him too,
That makes himself, but for our honour therein,
Unworthy thee,—if ever, henceforth, thou
These rural fashions to his entrance open,
Or hop his body more with thy embraces,

I will devise a death as cruel for thee,
As thou art tender to:—

[Exit Petr.

Per. Even here undone!
I was not much afeard: for once, or twice,
I was about to speak; and tell him plainly,
The self-same sun, that shines upon his court,
Hides not his visage from our cottage, but Looks on alike.—Will't please you, sir, be gone?

[To Florizel.

I told you, what would come of this! 'Beseech you,
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,—
Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch further,
But milk my ewes, and weep.

Cam. Why, how now, father! Speak, ere thou diest.

Shew. I cannot speak, nor think,
Nor dare to know that which I know.—O, sir,

[To Florizel.

You have undone a man of fourscore-three,
That thought to fill his grave in quiet; yea,
To die upon the bed my father died,
To lie close by his honest bones: but now
Some hangman must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shovels-in dust.—O cursed wretch!

[To Perdita.

That knew'st this was the prince, and wouldst adventure
To mingle with him.—Undone! undone!
If I might die within this hour, I have liv'd to die when I desire.

[Exit Flo.

Flo. Why look you so upon me?
I am but sorry, not afeard; delay'd,
But nothing alter'd: What I was, I am:
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My leas unwillingly.

Cam. Gracious my lord,
You know your father's temper; at this time
He will allow no speech,—which, I do guess,
You do not purpose to him:—and as hardly
Will he endure your sight as yet, I fear:
Then, till the fury of his highness settle,
Come not before him.

Flo. I think, Camillo.

Cam. Even he, my lord.

Per. How often have I told you, 'twould be How often said, my dignity would last [thu?
But till 'twere known?

Flo. It cannot fail, but by
The violation of my faith; And then
Let nature crush the sides o'the earth together,
And mar the seeds within! Lift up thy looks:
From my succession wipe me, father! I Am heir to my affection.

Cam. Be advised.

Flo. I am; and by my fancy: if my reason
Will thereto be obedient, I have reason;
If not, my senses, better pleas'd with madness,
Do bid it welcome.

Cam. This is desperate, sir.

Flo. So call it: but it does fulfil my vow;
I needs must think it honestly. Camillo,
Not for Bohemia, nor the pomp that may
Be thereat glean'd; for all the sun sees or
The close earth wombs, or the profound seas hide
In unknown fathoms, will I break my oath
To this my fair belov'd: Therefore, I pray you,
As you have ever been my father's honour'd friend,
When he shall miss me, (as, in faith, I mean not
To see him any more,) cast your good counsels
Upon his passion; Let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. This you may know,
And so deliver,—I am put to sea
With her, whom here I cannot hold on shore;
And, most opportune to our need, I have
A vessel rides fast by, but not prepar'd
For this design. What course I mean to hold,
Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concern me the reporting.
Cam. O, my lord, I
Would your spirit were easier for advice,
Or stronger for your need.
Flo. Hark, Perdita.—[Takes her aside.]
I'll hear you by and by. [To Camillo.
Cam. He's irremovable, Resolv'd for flight: Now were I happy, if
His going I could frame to serve my turn;
Save him from danger, do him love and honour;
Pur chase the sight again of dear Sicilia,
And that unhappy king, my master, whom
I so much thirst to see.
Flo. Now, good Camillo, I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. [Going.
Cam. Sir, I think,
You have heard of my poor services, 'tis the love
That I have borne your father?
Flo. Very nobly
Have you deserv'd: it is my father's music,
To speak your deeds; not little of his care
To have them recom pense'd as thought on.
Cam. Well, my lord,
If you may please to think I love the king;
And, through him, what is nearest to him, which
Is your gracious self; embrace but my direction,
(If your more ponderous and settled project
May suffer alteration,) on mine honour
I'll point you where you shall have such receiving
As shall become your highness; where you may Enjoy your mistress; (from the whom, I see,
There's no disjunction to be made, but by,
As heavens for fend! your ruin :) marry her;
And (with my best endeavours, in your absence,) Your discontenting father strive to qualify,
And bring him up to liking.
Flo. How, Camillo,
May this, almost a miracle, be done?
That I may call thee something more than man,
And, after that, trust to thee.
Cam. Have you thought on
A place, whereto you'll go?
Flo. Not any yet:
But as the unthought-on accident is guilty
To what we willily do; so we profess,
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows.
Cam. Then list to me:
This follows,—if you will not change your pur-
But undergo this flight:—Make for Sicilia; [pose,
And there present yourself, and your fair princess,
(For so, I see, she must be,) 'tis Leoncels;
She shall be habited, as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Methinks, I see
Leontes, opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcome forth: asks thee, the son, forgiveness,
As were 't the father's person: kisses the hands
Of your fresh princess: o'er and o'er divides him
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness: the one
He chides to hell, and bids the other grow,
Faster than thought, or time.
Flo. Worthy Camillo,
What colour for my visitation shall I
Hold up before him?
Cam. Sent by the king your father
To greet him, and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you, as from your father, shall deliver,
Things known betwixt us three, I'll write you down.
The which shall point you forth at every sitting,
What you must say; that he shall not perceive,
But that you have your father's bosom there,
And speak his very heart.
Flo. There is some sap in this.
Cam. A course more promising
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain,
To miseries enough: no hope to help you:
But, as you shake off one, to take another:
Nothing so certain as your anchors; who
Do their best office, if they can but stay you
Where you'll be lost to be: Besides, you know,
Prosperity's the very bond of love;
Whose fresh complexion and whose heart together
Affliction alters.
Per. 'One of these is true:
I think, affliction may subdue the cheek,
But not take in the mind.
Cam. Yes, say you so?
There shall not, at your father's house, these seven
Be born another such. [years,
Flo. My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
I the rear of birth.
Cam. I cannot say, 'tis pity
She lacks instructions; for she seems a mistress
To most that teach.
Per. Your pardon, sir, for this:
I'll blush you thanks.
Flo. My prettiest Perdita.—
But, O, the thorns we stand upon!—Camillo,— Preserver of my father, now of me;
The medicin of our house!—how shall we do?
We are not furnish'd like Bohemia's son;
Nor shall appear in Sicily——
Cam. My lord,
Fear none of this: I think, you know, my fortunes
Do all lie there: it shall be so my care
To have you royally appointed, as if
The scene you play, were mine. For instance, sir,
That you may know you shall not want,—one word.
[They talk aside.

Enter Attolcus.

Aut. Ha, ha! what a fool honesty is! and trust, his own sworn brother, a very simple gentleman! I have sold all his trumpery; not a counterfeit stone, not a riband, glass, pomander, brooch, table-book, ballad, knife, tape, glove, shoe-tye, bracelet, horning, to keep my pack from fasting:—they throng who should buy first; as if my trinkets had been hallowed, and brought a benediction to the buyer:
by which means, I saw whose purse was best in picture; and, what I saw, to my good use, I remembered. My clown, (who wants but something a reasonable man,) grew so in love with the wenches' song, that he would not stir his petticoats, till he had both tune and words which so drew the rest of the herd to me, that all their other senses stuck in ears: you might have pinched a placket, it was senseless; 'twas nothing, to gild a copiece of a purse; I would have fil'd keys off, that hung in chains: no hearing, no feeling, but my sir's song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that, in this time of lethargy, I picked and cut most of their festival-purses: and had not the old man come in with a whoobob against his daughter and the king's son, and scared my choughs from the chaff, I had not left a purse alive in the whole army. [CAM. Flo. and Per. come forward.]

Cam. Nay, but my letters by this means being there
So soon as you arrive, shall clear that doubt.
Flo. And those that you'll procure from king Leontes,—
Cam. Shall satisfy your father.
Per. Happy be you!
All that you speak, shows fair.
Cam. Who have we here?—[Seeing Autolycus.

We'll make an instrument of this; omit
Nothing, may give us aid.
Aut. If they have overheard me now,—why hanging.
Cam. How now, good fellow? why shakest thou so? Fear not, man; here's no harm intended to thee.
Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir.
Cam. Why, be so still; here's nobody will steal that from thee: Yet, for the outside of thy poverty we must make an exchange: therefore, disease thee instantly, (thou must think, there's necessity in't,) and change garments with this gentleman: Though the pennyworth, on his side, be the worst, yet hold thee, there's some boot.
Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir:—I know ye well enough.
[Aside.

Cam. Nay, pr'ythee, despatch: the gentleman is half-flayed already.
Aut. Are you in earnest, sir?—I smell the trick of it.—[Aside
Flo. Despatch, I pr'ythee.
Aut. Indeed, I have had earnest; but I cannot with conscience take it.
Cam. Unbuckle, unbuckle.—[Flo. and Autol. exchange garments.

Fortunate mistress,—let my prophecy
Come home to you!—you must retire yourself
Into some covert: take your sweetheart's hat, And pluck it o'er your brows: muffle your face; Dismantle you; and as you can, dislike
The truth of your own seeming; that you may, (For I do fear eyes over you,) to shipboard Get undescrated.
Per. I see, the play so lies,
That I must bear a part.
Cam. No remedy,—
Have you done there?
Flo. Should I now meet my father,
He would not call me son.
Cam. Nay, you shall have No hat:—Come, lady, come.—Farewell, my friend.
Aut. Adieu, sir.
Flo. O Perdita, what have we twain forgot?
Pray you, a word. [They converse apart.

Of this escape, and whither they are bound;
Wherein, my hope is, I shall so prevail,
To force him after; in whose company

I shall review Sicilia; for whose sight
I have a woman's longing.
Flo. Fortune speed us!—Thus we set on, Camillo, to the sea-side.
Cam. The swifter speed, the better.
[Enter Florizel, Perdita, and Camillo
Aut. I understand the business, I hear it: To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cut-purse; a good nose is requisite also, to smell out work for the other senses. I see, this is the time that the unjust man doth thrive. What an exchange had this been, without boot? what a boot is here, with this exchange? Sure, the gods do this year connive at us, and we may do any thing extempore. The prince himself is about a piece of iniquity; stealing away from his father, with his clog at his heels: If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king wthal, I would do't: I hold it the more knavery to conceal it; and therein am I constant to my profession.

Enter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside;—here is more matter for a hot brain; Every lane's-end, every shop, church, session, hanging, yields a careful man work.
Clo. See, see; what a man you are now! there is no other way, but to tell the king she's a changeling, and none of your flesh and blood.
Shep. Nay, but hear me.
Clo. Nay, but hear me.
Shep. Go to then.
Clo. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king; and, so, your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him. Show those things you found about her; those secret things, all but what she has with her: This being done, let the law go whistle; I warrant you.
Shep. I will tell the king all, every word, yea, and his son's pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law.
Clo. Indeed, brother-in-law was the furthest off you could have been to him; and then your blood had been the dearer, by I know how much an ounce.
Shep. Well; let us to the king; there is that in this fardeI, will make him scratch his beard!
Aut. I know not what impediment this complaint may be to the flight of my master.
Clo. 'Pray heartily he be at palace.
Aut. Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance:—Let me pocket up my pelter's excrement. [Takes off his false beard.] How now, rusticks! what? what? what? whither are you bound?
Shep. To the palace, as it like your worship.
Aut. Your affairs there? what? with whom? in the condition of that fardeI, the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what having, breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be known, discover.
Clo. We are but plain fellows, sir.
Aut. A lie; you are rough and hairy: Let me have no lying; it becomes none but tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie: but we pay them for it with stamped coin, not stabbing steel; therefore they do not give us the lie.
Clo. Your worship had like to have given us one, if you had not taken yourself with the manner.
Sh. Are you a courtier, an't like you, sir?
A. Whether it like me or no, I am a courtier.
See'st thou not the air of the court in these enfoldings? hast not my gait in it, the measure of the court? receives not thy nose court-odour from me? reflect I not on thy baseness, court-contempt? Think'st thou, for that I insinuate, or toeze from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier? I am courtier cap-a-pè; and one that will either push on, or pluck back thy business there: whereupon I command thee to open thy affair.

Sh. My business, sir, is to the king.
A. What advocate hast thou to him?
Sh. I know not, an't like you.

Clo. Advocate's the court-word for a pheasant; say, you have none.

Sh. None, sir; I have no pheasant, cock, nor hen

A. How bless'd are we, that are not simple men!
Yet nature might have made me as these are, Therefore I'll not disdain.

Clo. This cannot be but a great courtier.

Sh. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

Clo. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical: a great man, I'll warrant; I know, by the pickin' on's teeth.

A. The fardel there? what's i'the fardel?
Wherefore that box?

Sh. Sir, there lies such secrets in this fardel, and box, which none must know but the king; and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

A. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Sh. Why, sir?

A. The king is not at the palace: he is gone aboard a new ship to pure melancholy, and air himself: For, if thou be'st capable of things serious, thou must know, the king is full of grief.

Sh. So 'tis said, sir; about his son, that should have married a shepherd's daughter.

A. If that shepherd be not in hand-fast, let him fly; the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of man, the heart of monster.

Clo. Think you so, sir?

A. Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter; but those that are germane to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the hangman: which, though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram-tender, to offer to have his daughter come into grace! Some say, he shall be stoned; but that death is too soft for him, say I: Draw our throne into a sheep-cote!—all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easy.

Clo. Has the old man c'er a son, sir, do you hear, an't like you, sir?

A. He has a son, who shall be flayed alive; then 'moirited over with honey, set on the head of a wasp's nest; then stand, till he be three-quarters and a dram dead: then recovered again with aquavitae, or some other hot infusion: then, raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him; where he is to behold him with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these traitorly rascals, whose miseries are to be smiled at, their offences being so capital? Tell me, (for you seem to be honest plain men,) what have you to the king: being something gently considered, I'll bring you where he is abode, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your behalfs; and, if it be in man, besides the king, to effect your suits, here is man shall do it.

Clo. He seems to be of great authority: close with him, give him gold; and though authority be a stubborn bear, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold; show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado: Remember, stoned and flayed alive.

Sh. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: 't'll make it as much more; and leave this young man in pawn, till I bring it you.

A. After I have done what I promised?

Sh. Ay, sir.

A. Well, give me the moiety.—Are you a party in this business?

Clo. In some sort, sir; but though my case be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out of it.

A. O, that's the case of the shepherd's son:—Hang him, he'll be made an example!

Clo. Comfort, good comfort: we must to the king, and show our strange sights: he must know, 'tis none of your daughter, nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does, when the business is performed; and remain, as he says, your pawn, till it be brought you.

A. I will trust you. Walk before toward the sea-side; go on the right-hand; I will but look upon the hodge and follow you.

Clo. We are blessed in this man, as I may say, even blessed.

Sh. Let's before, as he bids us: he was provided to do us good. [Exeunt Shepherd and Clown.

A. If I had a mind to be honest, I see, fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion; gold, and a means to do the prince my master good; which, who knows how that may turn back to my advancement? I will bring these two moles, these blind ones, aboard him: if he think it fit to shore them again, and that the complaint they have to the king concerns him nothing, let him call me, rogue, for being so far officious; for I am proof against that title, and what shame else belongs to: To him will I present them, there may be matter in it. [Exit.
ACT V.

I might have look'd upon my queen's full eyes: Have taken treasure from her lips,—

Paul. And left them more rich, for what they yielded.

Leon. Thou speak'st truth.

No more such wives; therefore, no wife: one worse, And better us'd, would make her sainted spirit Again possess her corpse; and, on this stage, (Where we offenders now appear,) soul-vexed, Begin, And why to me? Paul. Had she such power, She had just cause.

Leon. She had; and would incense me To murder her I married.

Paul. I should so:

Were I the ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you mark Her eye; and tell me, for what dull part in't You chose her then: then I'd shriek, that even your ears Should ript to hear me; and the words that follow'd Should be, Remember mine!

Leon. Stars, very stars, And all eyes else dead coals!—fear thou no wife,— I'll have no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear Never to marry, but by my free leave?

Paul. Unless another, As like Hermione as is her picture, Affront his eye.

Cleo. Good madam,—

Paul. I have done. Yet, if my lord will marry,—if you will, sir, No remedy, but you will; give me the office To choose you a queen; she shall not be so young As was your former: but she shall be such, As, walk'd your first queen's ghost, it should take To see her in your arms. [joy

Leon. My true Paulina, We shall not marry, till thou bidd'st us.

Paul. That Shall be, when your first queen's again in breath: Never till then.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princess, (she The fairest I have yet beheld,) desires access To your high presence.

Leon. What with him? he comes not Like to his father's greatness: his approach So out of circumstance, and sudden, tells us, 'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but fore'd By need, and accident.—What train?

Gent. But few, And those but mean.

Leon. His princess, say you, with him? Gent. Ay, the most peerless piece of earth, I That c'er the sun shone bright on. [think, Paul. O Hermione, As every present time doth boast itself Above a better, gone; so must thy grave Give way to what's seen new. Sir, you yourself Have said, and writ so, (but your writing now Is colder than that theme,) She had not been, Nor was not to be equal'd: —thus your verse Flow'd with her beauty once; 'tis shrewdly ebb'd,
To say you have seen a better.

Gent. Pardon, madam;
The one I have almost forgot; (your pardon,)
The other, when she has obtain'd your eye,
Will have your tongue too. This is such a creature,
Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal
Of all professors else; make proselytes
Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How? not women?

Gent. Women will love her, that she is a woman,
More worth than any man; men, that she is
The rarest of all women.

Leon. Go, Cleomenes;
Yourself, assisted with your honour'd friends,
Bring them to our embracement.—Still, 'tis strange, [Enter Cleomenes, Lords, and Gentleman.
He thus should steal upon us.

Paul. Had our prince,
(Jewel of children,) seen this hour, he had pair'd
Well with this lord; there was not full a month
Between their births.

Leon. Pr'ythee, no more; thou know'st
He dies to me again, when talk'd of: sure,
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider, that which may Unfurnish me of reason.—They are come.—

Re-enter Cleomenes, with Florizel, Perdita, and Attendants.

Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince;
For she did print your royal father off,
Conceiving you: Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him; and speak of something, wildly
By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome!
And your fair princess, goddess!—O, alas!
I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as
You, gracious couple, do! and then I lost
(All mine own folly,) the society,
Amity too, of your brave father; whom,
Though bearing misery, I desire my life
Once more to look upon.

Flo. By his command
Have I here touched Sicilia: and from him
Give you all greetings, that a king, at friend,
Can send his brother: and, but infirmity
(Which waits upon worn times,) hath something His wished ability, he had himself seiz'd
The lands and waters 'twixt your throne and his Measure'd, to look upon you; whom he loves
(He bade me say so,) more than all the sceptres,
And those that bear them, living.

Leon. O, my brother,
(Good gentleman!) the wrongs I have done thee,
Affresh within me; and these thy offices,
[stir
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness!—Welcome hither,
As is the spring to the earth. And hath he too
Expos'd this paragon to the fearful usage
(At least, ungentle,) of the dreadful Neptune,
To greeet a man, not worth her pains; much less
The adventure of her person?

Flo. Good, my lord,
She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Salmus,
That noble honour'd lord, is fear'd, and lov'd?

Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him, whose daughter

His tears proclaim'd his, parting with her: thence (A prosperous south-wind friendly,) we have cross'd,
To execute the charge my father gave me,
For visiting your highness: My best train
I have from your Sicilian shores dismiss'd;
Who for Bohemia bend, to signify
Not only my success in Libya, sir,
But my arrival, and my wife's, in safety
Here, where we are.

Leon. The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air, whilst you
Do climate here! You have a holy father,
A graceful gentleman; against whose person,
So sacred as it is, I have done sin:
For which the heavens, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless; and your father's bless'd
(As he from heaven merit's it,) with you,
Worthy his goodness. What might I have been,
Might I a son and daughter now have look'd on,
Such goodly things as you!

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir,
That which I shall report, will bear no credit,
Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir,
Bohemia greets you from himself by me:
Desires you to attach his son; who has (His dignity and duty both cast off,)—
Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with
A shepherd's daughter.

Leon. Where's Bohemia! speak.

Lord. Here in your city: I now came from him:
I speak amazedly; and it becomes
My marvel, and my message. To your court
While he was hast'n, (in the chase, it seems,) Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady, and
Her brother, having both their country quitted
With this young prince.

Flo. Camillo has betray'd me! Whose honour, and whose honesty, till now,
Endur'd all weathers.

Lord. Lay't so to his charge;
He's with the king your father.

Leon. Who! Camillo?

Lord. Camillo, sir; I speak with him; who now
Has these poor men in question. Never saw I
Wretches so quake: they kneel, they kiss the earth;
Forswear themselves as often as they speak:
Bohemia stops his ears, and threatens them
With divers deaths in death.

Per. O my poor father!—
The heaven sets spies upon us, will not have
Our contract celebrated.

Leon. You are married?

Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be;
The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first:—
The odds for high and low's alike.

Leon. My lord,
Is this the daughter of a king?

Flo. She is,
When once she is my wife.

Leon. That once, I see, by your good father's Will come on very slowly. I am sorry, [speed,
Most sorry, you have broken from his liking,
Where you were tied in duty: and as sorry,
Your choice is not so rich in worth as beauty,
That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Dear, look up:
Though fortune, visible an enemy,
Should chase us, with my father; power no jot
Hath she to change our loves.—Beseech you, sir,
Remember since you ow’d no more to time
Than I do now: with thought of such affections,
Step forth mine advocate; at your request,
My father will grant precious things, as trifles.
Leon. Would he do so, I’d beg your precious
Which he counts but a trifle. [mistress,
Paul. Sir, my liege,
Your eye hath too much youth in’t: not a month
Fore your queen died, she was more worth such
Than what you look on now. [gazes
Leon. I thought of her,
Even in these looks I made.—But your petition
[To FLORIZEL.
Is yet unanswer’d: I will to your father;
Your honour not o’erthrown by your desires,
I am a friend to them, and you: upon which errand
I now go toward him; therefore follow me,
And mark what way I make: Come, good my lord.
[Exeunt

SCENE II.—The same. Before the Palace.

Enter Autolycus and a Gentleman.

Aut. Beseech you, sir, were you present at this relation?
1 Gent. I was by at the opening of the farde, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it: whereupon, after a little amazedness, we were all commanded out of the chamber; only this, methought I heard the shepherd say, he found the child.

Aut. I would most gladly know the issue of it.
1 Gent. I make a broken delivery of the business:—But the changes I perceived in the king, and Camillo, were very notes of admiration: they seemed almost, with staring on one another, to tear the cases of their eyes; there was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture; they looked, as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed: A notable passion of wonder appeared in them: but the wisest beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if the importance were joy, or sorrow: but in the extremity of the one, it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.
Here comes a gentleman, that, happily, knows more: The news, Rogero?
2 Gent. Nothing but bonfires: The oracle is fulfilled; the king’s daughter is found: such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that ballad-makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter a third Gentleman.
Here comes the lady Paulina’s steward; he can de-deliver you more.—How goes it now, sir? this news, which is called true, is so like an old tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspicion: Has the king found his heir?

3 Gent. Most true; if ever truth were pregnant by circumstance; that, which you hear, you’ll swear you see, there is such unity in the proofs. The mantle of queen Hermione;—her jewel about the neck of it;—the letters of Antigonus, found with it, which they know to be his character,—the majesty of the creature in resemblance of the mother;
—the affection of nobleness, which nature shows above her breeding,—and many other evidences, proclaim her, with all certainty to be the king’s daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?
2 Gent. No.
3 Gent. Then have you lost a sight which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another; so, and in such manner, that, it seemed, sorrow wept to take leave of them: for their joy waded in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands: with countenance of such distraction, that they were to be known by garment, not by favour. Our king, being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter; as if that joy were now become a loss, cries, O, thy mother, thy mother! then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter, with cli-ping her; now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by, like a weather-bitten conduit of many kings’ reigns. I never heard of such another encounter, which ladies report to follow it, and undue description to do it...

2 Gent. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carried hence the child?
3 Gent. Like an old tale still; which will have matter to rehearse, though credit be asleep, and not an ear open: He was torn to pieces with a bear:
this avouches the shepherd’s son; who has not only his innocence (which seems much,) to justify him, but a handkerchief, and rings, of his, that Paulina knows:
1 Gent. What became of his bark, and his followers?
3 Gent. Wrecked, the same instant of their master’s death; and in the view of the shepherd;
so that all the instruments, which aided to expose the child, were even then lost, when it was found.
But, O, the noble combat, that, ‘twixt joy and sorrow, was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband; another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled: She lifted the princes from the earth; and so locks her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing.
1 Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes; for by such was it acted.

3 Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all, and that which angled for mine eyes (caught the water, though not the fish,) was, when at the relation of the queen’s death, with the manner how she came to it. (bravely confessed, and lamented by the king,) how attentiveness wounded his daughter; till, from one sign of colour to another, she did, with an alas! I would fain say, bleed tears; for, I am sure, my heart was blood. Who was most marble there, changed colour, some swooned, all sorrowed: if all the world could have seen it, the woe had been universal.
1 Gent. Are they returned to the court?
3 Gent. No: the princess hearing of her mother’s statute, which is in the keeping of Paulina,— a piece many years in doing, and now newly performed by that rare Italian master, Julio Romanò who, had he himself eternity, and could put breath into his work, would beguile nature of her custom, so perfectly is he her ape: he so near to Hermione hath done Hermione, that they say one would speak to her, and stand in hope of answer; thither, with all greediness of affection, are they gone; and there they intend to sup.
2 Gent. I thought, she had some great matter there in hand; for she hath privately, twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed house. Shall we thither, and with our company, pierce the rejoicing?

1 Gent. Who would be thence, that has the benefit of access? every wink of an eye, some new grace will be born: our absence makes us unthrifty to our knowledge. Let's along.

[Exeunt Gentlemen.]

Aut. Now, had I not the dash of my former life in me, would prefyrment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his son aboard the prince; told him, I heard them talk of a fardeal, and I know not what; but be at that time, over-fond of the shepherd's daughter, (so he then took her to be,) who began to be much sea-sick, and himself little better, extremity of weather continuing, this mystery remained undiscovered. But 'tis all one to me; for had I been the finder out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discredits.

Enter Shepherd and Clown.

Shep. Here come those I have done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossoms of their fortune.

Clo. Come, boy; I am past more children, but thy sons and daughters will be all gentleman-born.

Clo. You are well met, sir: You denied to fight with me this other day, because I was no gentleman-born: See you these clothes? say, you see them not, and think me still no gentleman-born: you were best say, these robes are not gentleman-born. Give me the lie; do; and try whether I am not now a gentleman-born.

Aut. I know, you are now, sir, a gentleman born.

Clo. Ay, and have been so any time these four hours.

Shep. And so have I, boy!

Clo. So you have:—but I was a gentleman born before my father: for the king's son took me by the hand, and called me, brother; and then the two kings called my father, brother; and then the prince, my brother, and the princess, my sister, called my father, father; and so we wept: and there was the first gentleman-like tears that ever were shed.

Shep. We may live, son, to shed many more.

Clo. Ay; or else 'ware hard luck; being in so preposterous estate as we are.

Aut. I humbly beseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship, and to give me your good report to the prince my master.

Shep. Pr'ythee son, do; for we must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.

Clo. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Aut. Ay, an it like your good worship.

Clo. Give me thy hand: I will swear to the prince, thou art as honest a true fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, but not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman! Let boors and franklins say it, I'll swear it.

Shep. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be ne'er so false, a true gentleman may swear it, in the behalf of his friend:—And I'll swear to the prince, thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know, thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk; but I'll swear it: and I would, thou would'st be a tall fellow of thy hands.

Aut. I will prove so, sir, to my power.

Clo. Ay, by any means, prove a tall fellow: If I do not wonder, how thou dares venture to be drunk, not being a tall fellow, trust me, not.—Hark! the kings and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the queen's picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good masters.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in Paulina's House.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizel, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina, Lords, and Attendants.

Leon. O grave and good Paulina, the great That I have had of thee! [comfort Paul. What, sovereign sir, I did not well, I meant well: All my services, You have paid home: but that you have vouchsa'ld With your crown'd brother, and these your contracted

Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visit; It is a surplus of your grace, which never
My life may last to answer.

Paul. O Paulina, We honour you with trouble: But we came To see the statue of our queen; your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much content In many singularities: but we saw not That which my daughter came to look upon, The statue of her mother.

Paul. As she liv'd peerless, So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Excels whatever yet you look'd upon, Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it Lonely, apart: But here it is: prepare To see the life as lively mock'd, as ever Still sleep mock'd death: behold; and say, 'tis well.

[Paulina undraws a curtain, and discovers a statue.

I like your silence, it the more shows off
Your wonder: But yet speak;—first, you, my Comes it not something near? [liege.

Leon. Her natural posture!—

Chide me, dear stone; that I may say, indeed,
Thou art Hermione: or, rather, thou art she,
In thy not chiding; for she was as tender,
As infancy, and grace.—But yet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wrinkled; nothing So aged, as this seems.

Pol. O, not by much.

Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence; Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes As she liv'd now.

Leon. As now she might have done, So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, thus she stood, Even with such life of majesty, (warm life, As now it coldly stands,) when first I woo'd her! I am ash'm'd: Does not the stone rebuke me, For being more stone than it!—O, royal piece, There's magic in thy majesty; which has My evils conjur'd to remembrance; and From thy admiring daughter took the spirits. Standing like stone with thee!

Per. And give me leave; And do not say, 'tis superstition, that I kneel, and then implore her blessing.—Lady,
Dear queen, that ended when I but began,
Give me that hand of yours, to kiss.

Paul.
O, patience!
The statue is but newly fix’d, the colour’s
Not dry.

Cam. My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid on:
Which sixteen winters cannot blow away,
So many summers dry: scarce any joy
Did ever so long live; no sorrow,
But kill’d itself much sooner.

Pol.
Dear my brother
Let him, that was the cause of this, have power
To take off so much grief from you, as he Will piece up in himself.

Paul.
Indeed, my lord,
If I had thought, the sight of my poor image
Would thus have wrought you (for the stone
I’d not have show’d it.

Leon.
Do not draw the curtain.
Paul. No longer shall you gaze on’t; lest your
May think anon, it moves.

[Exeunt.

Paul.
I’ll draw the curtain;
My lord’s almost so far transported, that He’ll think anon it lives.

Leo.
O sweet Paulina,
Make me to think so twenty years together;
No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Let’s alone.

Paul. I am sorry, sir, I have thus far stirr’d you: but I could afflict you further.

Leon.
Do, Paulina;
For this affliction has a taste as sweet
As any cordial comfort.—Still, methinks,
There is an air comes from her: What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her!

Paul.
Good my lord, forbear:
The ruddiness upon her lip is wet;
You’ll mar it, if you kiss it; stain your own
With oily painting; Shall I draw the curtain?
Leon. No, not these twenty years.

Per.
So long could I
Stand by, a looker on.

Paul.
Either forbear,
Quit presently the chapel; or resolve you
For more amazement: If you can behold it,
I’ll make the statue move indeed; descend,
And take you by the hand: but then you’ll think,
(Which I protest against,) I am assisted
By wicked powers.

Leon.
What you can make her do,
I am content to look on; what to speak,
I am content to hear; for ’tis as easy
To make her speak, as move.

Paul.
It is requir’d,
You do awake your faith: Then, all stand still;
Or those, that think it is unlawful business
I am about, let them depart.

Leon.
No foot shall stir!
COMEDY OF ERRORS.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

SOLINUS, Duke of Ephesus.

SCENE,— Ephesus.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Hall in the Duke’s Palace.

Enter Duke, Eason, Gaoler, Officers, and other Attendants.

Æge. Proceed, Solinus, to procure my fall,
And, by the doom of death, end woes and all.

Duke. Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more;
I am not partial, to infringe our laws:
The enmity and discord, which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,—
Who, wanting gilders to redeem their lives,
Have sealed his rigorous statutes with their bloods,—
Excludes all pity from our threatening looks.
For, since the mortal and intestine jars
’Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracusans and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:
Nay, more,
If any, born at Ephesus, be seen
At any Syracusan marts and fairs:
Again, If any Syracusan born,
Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies,
His goods confiscate to the duke’s dispose;
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty, and to ransom him.—
Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks:
Therefore, by law thou art condemn’d to die.

Æge. Yet this my comfort; when your words are done,
My woes end likewise with the evening sun.

Duke. Well, Syracusan, say, in brief, the cause
Why thou departest from thy native home;
And for what cause thou cam’st to Ephesus.

Æge. A heavier task could not have been impos’d,
Than I to speak my griefs unspeakable!
Yet, that the world may witness, that my end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence,
I’ll utter what my sorrow gives me leave.
In Syracusa was I born; and wed

Unto a woman, happy but for me,
And by me too, had not our hap been bad.
With her I liv’d in joy; our wealth increas’d,
By prosperous voyages I often made
To Epidamnum, till my factor ‘s death,
And he (great care of goods at random left)
Drew me from kind embraces of my spouse:
From whom my absence was not six months old,
Before herself (almost at fainting, under
The pleasing punishment that women bear.)
Had made provision for her following me,
And soon, and safe, arrived where I was.
There she had not been long, but she became
A joyful mother of two goodly sons;
And, which was strange, the one so like the other.
As could not be distinguish’d but by names.
That very hour, and in the self-same inn,
A poor mean woman was delivered
Of such a burden, male twins, both alike:
Those, for their parents were exceeding poor,
I bought, and brought up to attend my sons.
My wife, not meanly proud of two such boys,
Made daily motions for our home return:
Unwilling I agreed; alas, too soon!

We came aboard:
A league from Epidamnum had we sail’d,
Before the always-wind-obeying deep
Gave any tragic instance of our harm:
But longer did we not retain much hope;
For what obscured light the heavens did grant
Did but convey unto our fearful minds
A doubtful warrant of immediate death;
Which, though myself would gladly have embrac’d,
Yet the incessant weepings of my wife,
Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
That morn’d for fashion, ignorant what to fear,
Forc’d me to seek delays for them and me.
And this it was,—for other means was none.—
The sailors sought for safety by our boat,
And left the ship, then sinking-ripe, to us.
SCENE II.

COMEDY OF ERRORS.

My wife, more careful for the latter-born,
Had fasten'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as sea-faring men provide for storms:
To him one of the other twain was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other.
The children thus dispos'd, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix'd,
Fasten'd ourselves at either end the mast;
And floating straight, obedient to the stream,
With lesser weight, towards Corinth, as we thought.
At length the sun, gazing upon the earth,
Dispers'd those vapours that offended us;
And, by the benefit of his wish'd light,
The seas wax'd calm, and we discover'd
Two ships from far making main to us,—
Of Corinth that, of Epidaurus this:
But ere they came,—O, let me say no more!—
Gather the sequel by that went before.

Duke. Nay, forward, old man, do not break off
For we may pity, though not pardon thee. [so;
Æge.] O, had the gods done so, I see not now
Worthily term'd them merciless to us!
For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encounter'd by a mighty rock;
Which being violently borne upon,
Our helpful ship was splitted in the midst,
So that, in this unjust divorce of us,
Fortune had left to both of us alike
What to delight in, what to sorrow for.—
Her part, poor soul I seeming as burdened
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind;
And in our sight they three were taken up
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought.
At length, another ship had seiz'd on us;
And, knowing whom it was their hap to save,
Gave helpful welcome to their shipwreck'd guests;
And would have releas'd the fishers of their prey,
Had not their bark been very slow of sail,
And therefore homewards did they bend their course.—
Thus have you heard me sever'd from my bliss;
That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd,
To tell sad stories of my own mishaps.

Duke. And, for the sake of them thou sorriest
Do me the favour to dilate at full [for,
What hath befall'n of them, and thee, till now.
Æge. My youngest boy, and yet my eldest care,
At eighteen years became inquisitive
After his brother; and importun'd me,
That his attendant, (for his case was like,
Reft of his brother, but retain'd his name,) Might hear him company in the quest of him:
Whom whilst I labour'd of a love to see,
I hazarded the loss of whom I lov'd.
Five summers have I spent in furthest Greece,
Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia,
And, coasting homeward, came to Ephesus;
Hopeless to find, yet loath to leave unsought,
Or that, or any place that harbours men.
But here must end the story of my life;
And happy were I in my timely death,
Could all my travels warrant me they live.

Duke. Hopeless Ægeon, whom the fates have
To bear the extremity of dire mishap! [mark'd
Now, trust me, were it not against our laws,
Against my crown, my oath, my dignity,
Which princes, would they, may not disannul,
My soul should sue as advocate for thee.
But, though thou art adjudged to the death,
And passed sentence may not be recall'd,
But to our honour's great disparagement,
Yet will I favour thee in what I can:
Therefore, merchant, I'll limit thee this day,
To seek thy help by beneficial help:
Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus:
Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the sum,
And live; if not, then thou art doom'd to die:—
Gauler, take him to thy custody.

Æge. Hopeless, and helpless, doth Ægeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end. [Exit.]

SCENE II. — A public Place.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse, and a Merchant.

Mer. Therefore, give out, you are of Epidaurus,
Lest that your goods too soon be confiscate.
This very day, a Syracuse merchant
Is apprehended for arrival here;
And, not being able to buy out his life,
According to the statute of the town,
Dies ere the sun, which does not rise in the west.——
There is your money that I had to keep.

Ant. S. Go bear it to the Centaur, where we host,
And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee.
Within this hour it will be dinner-time:
Till that, I'll view the manners of the town,
Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
And then return, and sleep within mine inn;
For with long travel I am still and weary.—
Get thee away.

Dro. S. Many a man would take you at your
And go indeed, having so good a mean. [word.

Ant. S. A trusty villain, sir; that very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jests.
What, will you walk with me about the town,
And then go to my inn, and dine with me?

Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
I crave your pardon. Soon, at five o'clock,
Please you will meet with you upon the mart;
And afterwards consort you until bed-time;
My present business calls me from you now.

Ant. S. Farewell till then: I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down, to view the city.

Mer. Sir, I commend you to your own content.
[Exit Merchant.

Ant. S. He that commends me to mine own content,
Commends me to the thing I cannot get.
I to the world am like a drop of water,
That in the ocean seeks another drop;
Who, failing there to find his fellow forth,
Unseen, inquisitive, confounds himself;
So I, to find a mother, and a brother
In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanack of my true date,—
What now? How chance, thou art return'd so soon?

Dro. E. Return'd so soon! rather approach'd too late:
The capon burns, the pig falls from the spit;
The clock hath strucken twelve upon the bell,
My mistress made it one upon my cheek:
She is so hot, because the meat is cold;
The meat is cold, because you come not home; You come not home, because you have no stomach; You have no stomach, having broke your fast; But we, that season; Are penitent for your default to-day.

Ant. S. Stop—in your wind, sir; tell me this, I pray;
Where have you left the money that I gave you?

Dro. E. O,—sixpence, that I had o’Wednesday last,
To pay the saddler for my mistress’ crupper;—
The saddler had it, sir, I kept it not.

Ant. S. I am not in a sportive humour now;
Tell them I say not, where is their money?
We being strangers here, how dar’st thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody!

Dro. E. I pray you, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner:
I from my mistress come to you in post;
If I return, I shall be post indeed;
For she will score your fault upon my pate.
Methinks, your maw, like mine, should be your clock,
And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. S. Come, Dromio, come, these jests are out of season;
Reserve them till a merrier hour than this.
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir, why you gave no gold to me!

Ant. S. Come on, sir knave; have done your foolishness,
And tell me, how thou hast dispos’d thy charge.

Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart
Home to your house, the Phoenix, sir, to dinner;
My mistress, and her sister, stay for you.

Ant. S. Now, as I am a Christian, answer me,
In what safe place you have bestow’d my money;
Or, I shall break that merry scone of yours,
That stands’d tricks when I am undispos’d:
Where is the thousand marks thou hadst of me?

Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate,
Some of my mistress’ marks upon my shoulders,
But not a thousand marks between you both.
If I should pay your worship those again,
Perchance, you will not bear them patiently.

Ant. S. Thy mistress’ marks! what mistress, slave, hast thou?

Dro. E. Your worship’s wife, my mistress at the Phoenix;
She that doth fast, till you come home to dinner
And prays, that you will hie you home to dinner.

Ant. S. What, wilt thou flout me thus unto my face,
Being forbid! There, take you that, sir knave.

Dro. E. What mean you, sir? for God’s sake, hold your hands;
Nay, an you will not, sir, I’ll take my heels.

Ant. S. Upon my life, by some device or other,
The villain is o’er-raught of all my money.
They say, this town is full of cozenage;
As, nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye,
Dark-working sorcerers, that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches, that deform the body;
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks —
And many such like liberties of sin:
If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner.
I’ll to the Centaur, to go seek this slave;
I greatly fear, my money is not safe.

[Exit Dro. E.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Public Place.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Neither my husband, nor the slave return’d,
That in such haste I sent to seek his master!
Sure, Luciana, it is two o’clock.

Luc. Perhaps, some merchant hath invited him,
And from the mart he’s somewhere gone to dinner.
Good sister, let us dine, and never fret:
A man is master of his liberty:
Time is their master; and, when they see time,
They’ll go, or come: If so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty ours be more?

Luc. Because their business still lies out o’door.

Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. O, know, he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There’s none, but asses, will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lass’d with woe.
There’s nothing, situate under heaven’s eye,
But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky:
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males’ subject, and at their controls:
Men, more divine, the masters of all these,
Louis of the wide world, and wild wat’ry seas,
Indued with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pre-eminence than fish and fowls,
Are masters to their females, and their lords:
Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unwed.

Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage-bed.

Adr. But, were you wedded, you would bear some sway.

Luc. Ere I learn love, I’ll practise to obey.

Adr. How, if your husband start some other

Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

Patience, unmov’d, no marvel though she pause;
They can be meek, that have no other cause.
A wretched soul, bruis’d with adversity,
We bid be quiet, when we hear it cry;
But were we burden’d with like weight of pain,
As much, or more, we should ourselves complain:
So thou, that hast no unkind mate to grieve thee,
With urging helpless patience wouldst relieve me:
But, if thou live to see like right heref,
This fool-beg’d patience in thee will be left.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try;—
Here comes your man, now is your husband nigh.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Adr. Say, is your tardy master now at hand?

Dro. E. Nay, he is at two hands with me, and
That my two ears can witness.

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? know’st thou his mind?

Dro. E. Ay, ay, he told his mind upon mine ear;
Beshrew his hand, I scarce could understand it.
Luc. Spake he so doubtfully, thou couldst not feel his meaning?

Dro. E. Nay, he struck so plainly, I could too well feel his blows; and withal so doubtfully, that I could scarce understand them.

Adr. But say, I pr'ythee, is he coming home?

Dro. E. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-

Adr. Horn-mad, thou villain? [mad.

Dro. E. I mean not cuckold-mad; but, sure, he's stark mad:

When I desir'd him to come home to dinner, He ask'd me for a thousand marks in gold:
'Tis dinner time, quoth I; My gold, quoth he: Your meat doth burn, quoth I; My gold, quoth he: Will you come home? quoth I; My gold, quoth he: Whence is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain?

The pig, quoth I, is burn'd; My gold, quoth he; My mistress, sir, quoth I; Hang up thy mistress; I know not thy mistress; out on thy mistress!

Luc. Quoth who?

Dro. E. Quoth my master:

I know, quoth he, no house, no wife, no mistress; So that my errand, due unto my tongue, I thank him, I bare home upon my shoulders; For, in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Adr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him home.

Dro. E. Go back again! and be new beaten home?

For God's sake send some other messenger.

Adr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate across.

Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with other Between you I shall have a holy head. [beating;

Adr. Hence, prating peasant; fetch thy master home.

Dro. E. Am I so round with you, as you with me,

That like a football you do spur me thus? You spur me hence, and he will spur me bither: If I last in this service, you must case me in leather.

[Exeunt.

Luc. Fye, how impatience low'rith in your face!

Adr. His company must do his minions grace, Whilst I at home starve for a merry look.

Hath homely age the alluring beauty took From your poor check? then he hath wasted it; Are my discourses dull? barren my wit? If volatile and sharp discourse be marr'd, Unkindness blunts it, more than marble hard.

Do their gay vestments his affections bait? That's not my fault, he's master of my state:

What ruins are in me, that can be found By him not ruin'd? then is he the ground Of my defauters: My decayed fair A sunny look of his would soon repair:

But, too unruly deer, he breaks the pale, And feeds from home; poor I am but his stale.

Luc. Self-harming jealousy!—fye, beat it hence.

Adr. Unfeeling fools can with such wrongs dispense:

I know his eye doth homage otherwhere; Or else, what lets it but he would be here?

Sister, you know, he promis'd me a chain;— Would that alone, alone he would detain, So he would keep fair quarter with his bed! I see, the jewel best enamelled, Will lose his beauty; and though gold 'bides still, That others touch, yet often touching will Wear gold; and so no man that hath a name,

But falsehood and corruption doth it shame.

Since that my beauty cannot please his eye, I'll weep what's left away, and weeping die.

Luc. How many fond fools serve mad jealousy!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold, I gave to Dromio, is laid up safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave Is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out.

By computation, and mine host's report, I could not speak with Dromio, since at first I sent him from the mart: See, here he comes.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

How now, sir? is your merry humour alter'd?

As you love strokes, so jest with me again.

You know no Centaur? you receiv'd no gold? Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner?

My house was at the Phoenix? Wast thou mad, That thus so madly thou didst answer me?

Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a word?

Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half-an-hour since.

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence,

Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me.

Ant. S. Villain, thou didst defraud the gold's receipt;

And told'st me of a mistress, and a dinner:

For which, I hope, thou felt'st I was displais'd.

Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry vein: What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.

Ant. S. Yea, dost thou jeer, and flout me in the teeth?

Think'st thou, I jest? Hold, take thou that, and eat that.

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake: now thy jest is earnest:

Upon what bargain do you give it me?

Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes Do use you for my fool, and chat with you, Your sauciness will jest upon my love, And make a common of my serious hours.

When the sun shines, let foolish gnats make sport. But creep in caverns, when he hides his beams.

If you will jest with me, know my aspect, And fashion your demeanour to my looks, Or I will beat this method in your scions.

Dro. S. Sence, call it you? so you would leave battering, I had rather have it a head; an you use these blows long, I must get a scone for my head, and insconce it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders.—But, I pray sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. S. Dost thou not know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir; but that I am beaten.

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore; for, they say, every why hath a wherfore.

Ant. S. Why, first,—for flouting me; and then, wherefore,—

For urging it the second time to me.

Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season?

When, in the why, and the wherfore, is neither rhyme nor reason?

Well, sir, I thank you.
Ant. S. Thank me, sir! for what.
Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something that you gave me for nothing.
Ant. S. I'll make you amends next, to give you nothing for something,—But, say, sir, is it dinner-time?

Dro. S. No, sir; I think the meat wants that I have.
Ant. S. In good time, sir, what's that?
Dro. S. Basting.
Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.
Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you eat none of it.
Ant. S. Your reason?
Dro. S. Lest it make you choleric, and purchase me another dry basting.
Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time;
There's a time for all things.
Dro. S. I durst have denied that, before you were so choleric.
Ant. S. By what rule, sir?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bald pate of father Time himself.
Ant. S. Let's hear it.
Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair, that grows bald by nature.
Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?
Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a perk, and recover the lost, hair of another man.
Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?
Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beasts: and what he hath scantled men in hair, he hath given them in wit.
Ant. S. Why, but there's many a man hath more hair than wit.
Dro. S. Not a man of those, but he hath the wit to lose his hair.
Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men plain dealers without wit.
Dro. S. The plain dealer, the sooner lost: Yet he loseth it in a kind of jollity.
Ant. S. For what reason?
Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.
Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.
Dro. S. Sure ones then.
Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing falsing.
Dro. S. Certain ones then.
Ant. S. Name them.

Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in drying the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.
Ant. S. You would all this time have proved, there is no time for all things.
Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, no time to recover hair lost by nature.
Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.
Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is bald, and therefore, to the world's end, will have bald followers.
Ant. S. I knew, 'twould be a bald conclusion:
But soft! who wafts us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Aadr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange, and frown;
Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects,
I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.
The time was once, when thou urg'd would'st vow
That never words were music to thine ear,
That never object pleasing in thine eye,
That never touch well welcome to thy hand.
That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake, look'd, touch'd, orcarry'd to thee.
How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it,
That thou art then estranged from thyself?
Thyself I call it, this strange thing to me,
That undividable, incorporable,
Am better than thy dear self's better part.
Ah, do not tear away thyself from me;
For know, my love, as easy may'st thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulph,
And take unmingled thence that drop again,
Without addition, or diminishing,
As take from me thyself, and not me too.
How dearly would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious!
And that this body, consolidate to thee,
By rufian lust should be contaminate!
Would'st thou not spit at me, and spurn at me,
And hurl the name of husband in my face,
And tear the stain'd skin off my harlot brow,
And from my false hand cut the wedding-ring,
And break it with a deep-divorcing vow?
I know thou canst; and therefore, see, thou do it.
I am possess'd with an adulterate blot:
My blood is mingled with the crime of lust:
For, if we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpet'd by thy-contagion.
Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed;
I live dis-stain'd, thou, undishonoured.

Ant. S. Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you not:
In Ephesus I am but two hours old,
As strange unto your town, as to your talk;
Who, every word by all my wit being scann'd,
Want wit in all one word to understand.

Luc. Fye, brother! how the world is chang'd with you:
When were you wont to use my sister thus?
She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner.

Ant. S. By Dromio?

Dro. S. By me?

Aadr. By thee; and this thou didst return from
That he did buffet thee, and, in his blows [him,—
Denied my house for his, me for his wife.

Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentlewoman?
What is the course and drift of your compact?

Dro. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time!

Ant. S. Villain, thou best; for even her very Didst thou deliver to me on the mart. [words

Dro. S. I never spake with her in all my life.

Ant. S. How can she thus then call us by our Unless it be by inspiration?[names,

Aadr. How ill agrees it with your gravity,
To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave,
Abetting him to thwart me in my mood?
Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt,
But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.
Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine:
 Thou art an elin, my husband; I, a vine;
Whose weakness, married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicat:
If aught possess thee from me, it is cross,
Usurping ivy, briar, or idle moss;
Who, all for want of pruning, with intrusion
Inflect thy sap, and live on thy confusion.

Ant. S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her theme:
What, was I married to her in my dream?
SCENE I.—The same.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus, DROMIO of Ephesus, ANGELO, and BALTHAZAR.

ANT. E. Good signior Angelo, you must excuse us all.

My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours:
Say, that I linger'd with you at your shop,
To see the making of her carcanet,
And that to-morrow you will bring it home.
But here's a villain, that would face me down.
He met me on the mart; and that I beat him,
And charg'd him with a thousand marks in gold;
And that I did deny my wife and house:

Thou drunkard, thou, what didst thou mean by this?

DRO. E. Say what you will, sir, but I know what I know:
That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to show:
If the skin were parchment, and the blows you gave were ink,
Your own handwriting would tell you what I think.

ANT. E. I think, thou art an ass.

DRO. E. Marry, so it doth appear
By the wrongs I suffer, and the blows I bear.
I should kick, being kick'd; and, being at that pass,
You would keep from my heels, and beware of an ass.

ANT. E. You are sad, signior Balthazar; 'Pray God, our cheer
May answer my good will, and your good welcome here.

BAL. I hold your dainties cheap, sir, and your welcome dear.

ANT. E. O, signior Balthazar, either at flesh or fish.
A table full of welcome makes scarce one dainty dish.

BAL. Good meat, sir, is common; that every churl affords.

ANT. E. And welcome more common; for that's nothing but words.

'Tis so, I am an ass; else it could never be,
But I should know her as well as she knows me.

ADR. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool,
To put the finger in the eye and weep,
Whilst man, and master, laugh my woes to scorn.—
Come, sir, to dinner; Dromio, keep the gate:—

Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day,
And shrive you of a thousand idle pranks:
Sirrah, if any ask you for your master,
Say, he dinces forth, and let no creature enter.—

Come, sister:—Dromio, play the porter well.

ANT. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?
Sleeping or waking? mad, or well advis'd?
Known unto these, and to myself disguis'd
I'll say as they say, and perserve so,
And in this mist at all adventures go.

DRO. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?

ADR. Ay; and let none enter, lest I break your pate.

LUC. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine too late.

[Exeunt.]
If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.

_Ant. E._ Go, get thee gone, fetch me an iron crow.

_Bal._ Have patience, sir, O, let it not be so; Herein you war against your reputation, And draw within the compass of suspect The unviolated honour of your wife. Once this,—Your long experience of her wisdom, Her sober virtue, years, and modesty, Plead on her part some cause to you unknown; And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse Why at this time the doors are made against you. Be rul'd by me; depart in patience, And let us to the Tiger all to dinner: And, about evening, come yourself alone, To know the reason of this strange restraint. If by strong hand you offer to break in, Now in the stirring passage of the day, A vulgar comment will be made of it; And that supposed by the common rout Against your yet ungalled estimation, That may with foul intrusion enter in, And dwell upon your grave when you are dead: For slander lives upon succession; For ever hou'sd, where it once gets possession.

_Ant. E._ You have prevail'd; I will depart in quiet,
And, in despierty of mirth, mean to be merry. I know a wench of excellent discourse,— Pretty and witty; wild, and, yet too, gentle;— There will we dine: this woman that I mean, My wife (but, I protest, without desir'd) Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal; To her will we to dinner.—Get you home, And fetch the chain: by this, I know, 'tis made: Bring it, I pray you, to the Porcupine; For there's the house; that chain will I bestow (Be it for nothing but to spite my wife,) Upon mine hostess there: good sir, make haste: Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me, I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll disdain me.

_Ang._ I'll meet you at that place, some hour before dinner.

_Ant. E._ Do so; This jest shall cost me some expence.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter _Luciana_ and _Antipholus of Syracuse._

_Luc._ And may it be that you have quite forgot A husband's office? shall. Antipholus, hate, Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot? Shall love, in building, grow so ruinate? If you did wed my sister for her wealth, Then, for her wealth's sake, use her with more kindness: Or, if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth; Muffle your false love with some show of blindness; Let not my sister read it in your eye; Be not thy tongue thy own shame, an orator; Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty; Apparel vice like virtue's harbinger: Bear a fair presence though your heart be tainted; Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint; Be secret false: What need she be acquainted? What simple thief brags of his own attaint? 'tis double wrong, to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board;
Shame hath a bastard-fame, well managed;
Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.
Alas, poor women! make us but believe,
Being compact of credit, that you love us;
Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve;
We in your motion turn, and you may move us.
Then, gentle brother, get you in again;
Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife:
'Tis holy sport, to be a little vain,
When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.
Ant. S. Sweet mistress, (what your name is else,
I know not,
Nor by what wonder you do hit on mine,)
Less, in your knowledge, and your grace, you shew not,
Than our earth's wonder; more than earth divine.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;
Lay open to my earthly gross conceit,
Smoother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words' deceit.
Against my soul's pure truth why labour you,
To make it wander in an unknown field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transform me then, and to your power I'll yield.
But if that I am, then well I know,
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage do I owe;
Far more, far more, to you do I decline.
O, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears;
Sing, siren, for thyself, and I will dote:
Spread 'o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie;
And, in that glorious supposition, think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die—
Let love, being light, be drowned if she sink!
Luce. What, are you mad, that you do reason so?
Ant. S. Not mad; but mated; how, I do not know.
Luce. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.
Ant. S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, being by.
Luce. Gaze where you should, and that will clear your sight.
Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on night.
Luce. Why call you me love? call my sister so.
Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.
Luce. That's my sister.
Ant. S. No;
It is thyself, mine own self's better part;
Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart;
My food, my fortune, and my sweet hope's aim,
My sole earth's heaven, and my heaven's claim.
Luce. All this my sister is, or else should be.
Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I aim thee:
Thee will I love, and with thee lead my life;
Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife:
Give me thy hand.
Luce. O soft, sir, hold you still;
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good will.
[Exit Luce.

Enter from the house of ANTIPholus of Ephesus, Dromio of Syracuse.

Ant. S. Why, now, Dromio? where run'st thou so fast?
Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio?
am I your man? am I myself?
Ant. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man, and beside myself.
Ant. S. What woman's man? and how beside thyself?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, beside myself, I am due to a woman; one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.
Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee?
Dro. S. Marry sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast:
not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.
Ant. S. What is she?
Dro. S. A very foredence body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of, without he say, sir-reverence: I have but lean luck in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage.
Ant. S. How dost thou mean—a fat marriage?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchen-wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light. I warrant, her rags, and the tallow in them, will burn a Poland winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.
Ant. S. What complexion is she of?
Dro. S. Svart, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept; For why? she sweats, a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.
Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.
Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it.
Ant. S. What's her name?
Dro. S. Nell, sir;—but her name and three quarters, that is an ell and three-quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.
Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth?
Dro. S. No longer from head to foot, than from hip to hip; she is spherical, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.
Ant. S. In what part of her body stands Ireland?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks; I found it out by the bogs.
Ant. S. Where Scotland?
Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard in the palm of the hand.
Ant. S. Where France?
Dro. S. In her forehead; armed and reverted, making war against her hair.
Ant. S. Where England?
Dro. S. I looked for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no whiteness in them: but I guess, it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that ran between France and it.
Ant. S. Where Spain?
Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it hot in her breast.
Ant. S. Where America—the Indies?
Dro. S. O, sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadas of carracks to be ballast at her nose.
Ant. S. Where stood Belinia, the Netherlands?
Dro. S. O, sir, I did not look so low.—To conclude, this drudge, or diviner, laid claim to me;
called me Dromio; swore, I was assured to her:
told me what privy marks I had about me, as the mark of my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I, amazed, ran from her as a witch: and, I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtail-dog, and made me turn ‘t the wheel.

Ant. S. Go, hie thee presently, post to the road; And if the wind blow any way from shore, I will not harbour in this town to-night. If any bark put forth, come to the mart, Where I will walk, till thou return to me. If every one knows us, and we know none, ’Tis time, I think, to trudge, pack, and be gone.

Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life, So fly I from her that would be my wife. [Exit.

Ant. S. There’s none but witches do inhabit here; And therefore ’tis high time that I were hence. She, that doth call me husband, even my soul Doth for a wife abhor: but her fair sister, Possess’d with such a gentle sovereign grace, Of such enchanting presence and discourse, Hath almost made me traitor to myself: But, lest myself be guilty to self-wrong, I’ll stop mine ears against the mermaid’s song.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Master Antipholus?

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter a Merchant, Angelo, and an Officer.

Mer. You know, since Pentecost the sum is due, And since I have not much importun’d you; Nor now I had not, but that I am bound To Persia, and want gliders for my voyage: Therefore make present satisfaction, Or I’ll attack you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum, that I do owe to you, Is growing to me by Antipholus: And, in the instant that I met with you, He had of me a chain; at five o’clock, I shall receive the money for the same: Plesaeth you walk with me down to his house, I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and Dromio of Ephesus.

Off. That labour may you save: see where he comes.

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith’s house, go thou And buy a rope’s end; that will I bestow Among my wife and her confederates, For locking me out of my doors by day.— But soft, I see the goldsmith:—get thee gone; Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a year! I buy a rope! [Exit Dromio.

Ant. E. A man is well holp up, that trusts to you: I promised your presence, and the chain; But neither chain, nor goldsmith, came to me: Belike, you thought our love would last too long, If it were chain’d together; and therefore came not.

Ang. Saving your merry humour, here’s the note, How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat; The fineness of the gold, and chargeful fashion; Which does amount to three odd ducats more Than I stand debted to this gentleman:

Ant. S. Ay, that’s my name.

Ang. I know it well, sir. Lo, here is the chain; I thought to have ta’en you at the Porcupine: The chain finish’d made me stay thus long.

Ant. S. What is your will, that I shall do with this?

Ang. What please yourself, sir; I have made it for you.

Ant. S. Made it for me, sir! I bespeak it not.

Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twenty times you have: Go home with it, and please your wife withal; And soon at supper-time I’ll visit you And then receive my money for the chain.

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now, For fear you ne’er see chain nor money more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir; fare you well. [Exit.

Ant. S. What I should think of this, I cannot But this I think, there’s no man is so vain, [tell: That would refuse so fair an offer’d chain. I see, a man here needs not live by shifts, When in the streets he meets such golden gifts, I’ll to the mart, and there for Dromio stay; If any ship put out, then straight away. [Exit.
Ant. E. I answer you! What should I answer you?
Ang. The money, that you owe me for the chain.
Ant. E. I owe you none, till I receive the chain.
Ang. You know, I gave it you half-an-hour since.
Ant. E. You gave me none; you wrong me much to say so.
Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it:
Consider, how it stands upon my credit.
Mer. Well, officer, arrest him at my suit.
Off. I do; and charge you in the duke's name, to obey me.
Ang. This touches me in reputation:
Either consent to pay this sum for me,
Or I attach you by this officer.
Ant. E. Consent to pay thee that I never had!
Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou dar'st.
Ang. Here is thy fee; arrest him officer;—
I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should scorn me so apparently.
Off. I do arrest you, sir, you hear the suit.
Ant. E. I do obey thee, till I give thee bail:—
But, sirrah, I shall buy this sport as dear
As all the metal in your shop will answer.
Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epidamnus,
That stays but till her owner comes aboard,
And then, sir, bears away: our fraughtage, sir,
I have convey'd aboard; and I have bought
The oil, the balsamum, and aqua-vite.
The ship is in her trim; the merry wind
Blows fair from land: they stay for nought at all,
But for their owner, master, and yourself.
Ant. E. How now! a madman? Why thou pee-vish sheep,
What ship of Epidamnus stays for me?

Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.
Ant. E. Thoudrunken slave, I sent thee for a rope;
And told thee to what purpose, and what end.

Dro. S. You sent me, sir, for a rope's-end as
You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark. [soon:
Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure,
And teach your ears to listen with more heed.
To Adriana, villain, he thees straight:
Give her this key, and tell her, in the desk
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats; let her send it;
Tell her, I am arrested in the street,
And that shall bail me: he thee, slave; be gone.
On, officer, to prison till it come.

[Exeunt Merchant, Angelo, Officer, and Ant. E.

Dro. S. To Adriana! that is where we din'd,
Where Dowsabel did claim me for her husband.
She is too big: I hope, for me to compass.
Thither I must, although against my will,
For servants must their masters' minds fulfill. [Exit.]

SCENE II. — The same.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah, Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Might'st thou perceive austerely in his eye
That he did plead in earnest, yes or no?
Look'd he or red, or pale; or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case,
Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face?

Luc. First, he denied you had him in no right.
Adr. He meant, he did me none; the more my spite.
Luc. Then swore he, that he was a stranger here.
Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn
Luc. Then pleaded I for you. [he were.
Adr. And what said he?
Luc. That love I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me.
Adr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?
Luc. With words, that in an honest suit might move.
First, he did praise my beauty; then, my speech.
Adr. Did'st speak him fair?
Luc. Have patience, I beseech.
Adr. I cannot, nor I will not, hold me still;
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his
He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere, [will.
Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless every where;
Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkind;
Stigmatic in making, worse in mind.
Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one?
No evil lost is wall'd when it is gone.
Adr. Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And yet would herein others' eyes were worse;
Far from her nest the lapwing cries, away;
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Here, go: the desk, the purse; sweet now, make haste.
Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?
Dro. S. By running fast.
Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he well?
Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than hell.
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
One, whose hard heart is button'd up with steel;
A fiend, a fairy, pitiless and rough;
A wolf, nay, worse, a fellow all in buff;
A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that coun-termands
The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands;
A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry foot
well;
One, that before the judgment, carries poor souls
Adr. Why, man, what is the matter? [to hell.
Dro. S. I do not know the matter; he is 'rested on the case.
Adr. What, is he arrested? tell me, at whose suit.
Dro. S. I know not, at whose suit he is arrested,
well;
But he's in a suit of buff, which 'rested him, that can I tell:
Will you send him, mistress, redemption, the money in the desk?
Adr. Go fetch it sister.—This I wonder at,
Exeunt Luciana.

That he, unknown to me, should be in debt:—
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?
Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing;
A chain, a chain: do you not hear it ring?
Adr. What, the chain?
Dro. S. No, no, the bell: 'tis time, that I were gone.
It was two ere I left him, and now the clock strikes
one.
Adr. The hours come back! that did I never hear.
Dro. S. O yes. If any hour meet a sergeant,
'a turns back for very fear.
Adr. As if time were in debt! how fondly dost thou reason!

Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he's worth, to season.

Nay, he's a thief too: have you not heard men say, That time comes stealing on by night and day? If he be in debt, and theft, and a Sergeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back an hour in a day?

Enter Luciana.

Adr. Go, Dromio; there's the money, bear it straight;
And bring thy master home immediately.—
Come, sister; I am press'd down with conceit;
Conceit, my comfort, and my injury. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. There's not a man I meet, but doth salute me
As if I were their well-acquainted friend;
And every one doth call me by my name.
Some tender money to me, some invite me;
Some other give me thanks for kindnesses;
Some offer me commodities to buy:
Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop,
And show'd me silks that he had bought for me,
And, therewithal, took measure of my body.
Sure, these are but imaginary wiles,
And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for:
What, have you got the picture of Old Adam new apparelled?

Ant. S. What gold is this? What Adam dost thou mean?

Dro. S. Not that Adam, that kept the paradise, but the Adam, that keeps the prison: he that goes in that man's skin that was killed for the prodigal;
he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel,
and bid you forsake your liberty.

Ant. S. I understand thee not.

Dro. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case; he that went like a base-viol, in a case of leather; the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a fob,
and 'tis them; he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men,
and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than a morris-pike.

Ant. S. What—thou mean'st an officer?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, the sergeant of the band; he that brings any man to answer it, that breaks his band;
one that thinks a man always going to bed,
and says, God give you good rest!

Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your folly. Is there any ship goeth forth to-night? may we be gone?

Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth to-night;
and then were you hindered by the sergeant, to tarry for the hoy, Delay: Here are the angels that you sent for, to deliver you.

Ant. S. The fellow is distract, and so am I;
And here we wander in illusions;
Some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Courtesan.

Cour. Well met, well met, master Antipholus.
I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now;
Is that the chain, you promised me to-day?

Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee tempt me
Dro. S. Master, is this mistress Satan? [not!

Ant. S. It is the devil.

Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the devil's dam;
and here she comes in the habit of a light wench;
and thereof comes, that the wenches say, God damn me, that's as much as to say, God make me a light wench.
It is written, they appear to men like angels of light: light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn: ergo, light wenches will burn: Come not near her.

Cour. Your man and you are marvellous merry,
sir.
Will you go with me? We'll mend our dinner here.
Dro. S. Master, if you do expect spoon-meal, or bespeak a long spoon.
Ant. S. Why, Dromio?
Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon, that must eat with the devil.

Ant. S. Avoid then, friend! what tell'st thou me of supping?
Thou art, as you are all, a sorcerer:
I conjure thee to leave me, and be gone.

Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner,
Or, for my diamond, the chain you promised'd;
And, I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Dro. S. Some devils ask but the paring of one's
A rush, a hair, a drop of blood, a pin,
A nut, a cherry-stone; but she, more covetous,
Would have a chain.
Master, be wise; an' if you give it her,
The devil will shake her chain, and fright us with it.

Cour. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain;
I hope, you do not mean to cheat me so.

Ant. S. Avant, thou witch! Come, Dromio, let us go.

Dro. S. Fly pride, says the peacock: Mistress, that you know.

[Exeunt Ant. S. and Dro. S.]

Cour. Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad,
Else would he never so demean himself:
A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats,
And for the same, he promised me a chain;
Both one, and other, he denies me now,
The reason that I gather he is mad,
(For the present instance of his rage,) Is a mad tale, he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own doors being shut against his entrance.
Belike, his wife, acquainted with his fits,
On purpose shut the doors against his way.
My way is now, to hie home to his house,
And tell his wife, that, being lunatick,
He rush'd into my house, and took perforce
My ring away: This course I fittest choose;
For forty ducats is too much to lose.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and an Officer.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man, I will not break away:
I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money
To warrant thee, as I am 'rested for.
My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
And will not lightly trust the messenger,
That I should be attach'd in Ephesus:
I tell you, 'twill sound harshly in her ears.
Enter Dromio of Ephesus, with a rope's end.

Here comes my man: I think he brings the money.

How now, sir? have you that I sent you for?

Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.

Ant. E. But where's the money?

Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope.

Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?

Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.

Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee hie thee

home?

Dro. E. To a rope's end, sir; and to that end am I return'd.

Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome

you. [Beating him.

Off. Good sir, be patient.

Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.

Off. Good now, hold thy tongue.

Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands.

Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain!

Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir, that I might not feel your blows.

Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass, indeed; you may prove it by my long ears. I have served him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service, but blows: when I am cold, he heats me with beating: when I am warm,

he cools me with beating. I am waxed with it,

when I sleep; raised with it, when I sit; driven out of doors with it, when I go from home;

welcomed home with it, when I return: nay, I bear

it on my shoulders, as a beggar wont her brat;

and, I think, when he hath lamed me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, and the Courtezan, with Pinch, and others.

Ant. E. Come, go along; my wife is coming yonder.

Dro. E. Mistress, repecte finem, respect your end; or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, Bew-ware the rope's end.

Ant. E. Witth thou still talk? [Beats him.

COUR. How say you now? is not your husband

Adr. His incivility confirms no less. — [mad?

Good doctor Pinch, you are a conjuror;

Establish him in his true sense again,

And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas, how fiery and how sharp he looks!

COUR. Mark, how he trembles in his ecstasy!

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your ear.

Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, hou'sd within this

To yield possession to my holy prayers, —[man,

And to thy state of darkness hie thee straight;

I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven.

Ant. E. Peace, doting wizard, peace; I am not mad.

Adr. O, that thou wert not, poor distressed soul!

Ant. E. You, minion, you, are these your customers?

Did this companion with the saffron face

Revel and feast it at my house to-day,

Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut,

And I denied to enter in my house?

Adr. O husband, God doth know, you din'd at home,

Where would you had remain'd until this time,

Free from these slanders, and this open shame!

Ant. E. I din'd at home! Thou villain, what say'st thou?

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. E. Were not my doors lock'd up, and I shut out?

Dro. E. Perdy, your doors were lock'd, and you

shut out.

Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?

Dro. E. Sans fable, she herself revil'd you there.

Ant. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rail, taunt, and scorn me?

Dro. E. Certes, she did; the kitchen-vestal scorn'd you.

Ant. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Dro. E. In verity, you did;—my bones bear

witness,

That since have felt the vigour of his rage.

Adr. Is't good to soothe him in these contraries?

Pinch. It is no shame; the fellow finds his vein,

And, yielding to him, humours well his frenzy.

Ant. E. Thou hast sabord'd the goldsmith to arrest me.

Adr. Alas! I sent you money to redeem you,

By Dromio here, who came in haste for it.

Dro. E. Money by me? heart and good-will you might,

But, surely, master, not a rag of money.

Ant. E. Went'st not thou to her for a purse of ducats?

Adr. He came to me, and I deliver'd it.

Luc. And I am witness with her, that she did.

Dro. E. God and the rope-maker, bear me

witness,

That I was sent for nothing but a rope!

Pinch. Mistress, both man and master is possess'd;

I know it by their pale and deadly looks:

They must be bound, and laid in some dark room.

Ant. E. Say, wherefore didst thou lock me forth to-day,

And why dost thou deny the bag of gold?

Adr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.

Dro. E. And, gentle master, I receiv'd no gold;

But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. Dissembling villain, thou speak'st false in both.

Ant. E. Dissembling harlot, thou art false in

And art confederate with a damned pack, —[all;

To make a loathsome abject scorn of me:

But with these nails I'll pluck out these false eyes

That would behold me in this shameful sport.

[Pinch and his Assistants bind Ant. E. and Dro. E.

Adr. O, bind him, bind him, let him not come near me.

Pinch. More company;—the fiend is strong within him.

Luc. Ah me, poor man! how pale and wan he looks!

Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou

garer, thou,

I am thy prisoner: wilt thou murder them?

To make a rescue? x
Comedy of Errors.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you; But, I protest, he had the chain of me, Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city?

Ang. Of very reverent reputation, sir, Of credit infinite, highly belov'd, Second to none that lives here in the city: His word might bear my wealth at any time.

Mer. Speak softly: yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his neck, Which he forswore, most monstrously, to have. Good sir, draw near to me, I'll speak to him.— Signior Antipholus, I wonder much That you would put me to this shame and trouble; And not without some scandal to yourself, With circumstance, and oaths, so to deny This chain, which now you wear so openly: Besides the charge, the shame, imprisonment, You have done wrong to this my honest friend; Who, but for staying on our controversy, Had hoisted sail, and put to sea to-day: This chain you had of me, can you deny it?

Ant. S. I think, I had; I never did deny it.

Mer. Yes, that you did, sir; and forswore it too.

Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it, or forswear it?

Mer. These ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear thee: Fye on thee, wretch! 'tis pity, that thou liv'st To walk where any honest men resort.

Adr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it Not.

Cour. When as your husband, all in rage, to-day Came to my house, and took away my ring, (The ring I saw upon his finger now,) Straight after, did I meet him with a chain.

Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it: Come, gaoler, bring me where the goldsmith is, I long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, with his rapier drawn, and Dromio of Syracuse.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.

Adr. And come with naked swords; let's call To have them bound again [more help. Off. Away, they'll kill us.

[Exeunt Officer, Adr. and Luc.

Ant. S. I see, these witches are afraid of swords.

Dro. She, that would be your wife, now ran from you.

Ant. S. Come to the Centaur; fetch our stuff from thence: I long that we were safe and sound aboard.

Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night, they will surely do us no harm; you saw, they speak us fair, give us gold: methinks, they are such a gentle nation, that but for the mountain of mad flesh that claims marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still, and turn witch.

Ant. S. I will not stay to night for all the town; Therefore away, to get our stuff aboard. [Exeunt.
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing,
Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

Astr. To none of these, except it be the last;
Namely, some love, that drew him oft from home.

Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.

Astr. Why, so I did.

Abb. Ay, but not rough enough.

Astr. As roughly, as my modesty would let me.

Abb. Happily, in private.

And in assemblies too.

Abb. Ay, but not enough.

Astr. It was the copy of our conference:
In bed, he slept not for my urging it;
At board, he fed not for my urging it;
Alone, it was the subject of my theme;
In company, I often glanced it;
Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.

Abb. And therefore came it, that the man was mad:
The venom clamours of a jealous woman
Poison more deadly than a mad dog's tooth.
It seems, his sleepers were hinder'd by thy raving:
And therefore comes it, that his head is light.

Thou say'st, his meat was sauc'd with thy upbraiding.
Unquiet meals make ill digestion, [ing's;
Thereof the raging fire of fever bred;
And what's a fever but a fit of madness?

Thou say'st, his sports were hinder'd by thy browls:
Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue,
But moody and dull melancholy.
(Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair;)
And, at her heels, a huge infectious troop
Of pale distemperatures, and foes to life?
In food, in sport, and life-preserving rest
To be disturb'd, would mad or man or beast:
The consequence is then, thy jealous fits
Have scar'd thy husband from the use of wits.

Luc. She never reprehended him but mildly,
When he demean'd himself rough, rude and rude.

Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not?

Astr. She did betray me to my own reproof.—
Good people, enter, and lay hold on him.

Abb. No, not a creature enters in my house.

Astr. Then, let your servants bring my husband forth.

Abb. Neither; he took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands,
Till I have brought him to his wits again,
Or lose my labour in assaying it.

Astr. I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness, for it is my office,
And will have no attorney but myself;
And therefore let me have him home with me.

Abb. Be patient: for I will not let him stir,
Till I have used the approved means I have,
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again;
It is a branch and parcel of mine oath,
A charitable duty of my order;
Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.

Astr. I will not hence, and leave my husband
And ill it doth beseech your holiness, [here;
To separate the husband and the wife.

Abb. Be quiet, and depart, thou shalt not have him. [Exit Abbess.

Luc. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

Astr. Come, go; I will fall prostrate at his feet,
And never rise until my tears and prayers
Have won his grace to come in person hither,
And take perforce my husband from the abbess.
He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you, To scorch your face, and to disfigure you: [Cry within. Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress; fly, be gone. Duke. Come, stand by me, fear nothing: Guard with halberds.

Adr. Ah me, it is my husband! Witness you That he is borne about invisible; Even now we housed him in the abbey here; And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Ephesus.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious duke, oh, grant me justice! Even for the service that long since I did thee, When I besrid thee in the wars, and took Deep scars to save thy life; even for the blood That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

Æge. Unless the fear of death doth make me dote, I see my son Antipholus, and Dromio.

Ant. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman there. She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife; That hath abused and dishonour'd me, In the strength and height of injury! Beyond imagination is the wrong, That she this day hath shameless thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

Ant. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me.

While she, with harlots, feasted in my house.

Duke. A grievous fault: Say, woman, didst thou so? [sister,

Adr. No, my good lord:—myself, he, and my To-day did dine together: So befall my soul, As this is false, he burdens me withal!

Luc. Ne'er may I look on day, nor sleep on night, But she tells to your highness simple truth!

Æge. O perjur'd woman! they are both forsworn. In this the madman justly chargeth them.

Ant. E. My liege, I am advised what I say; Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine, Nor heady-rash, provok'd with raging ire, Albeit, my wrongs might make one wiser mad. This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner: That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her, Could witness it, for he was with me then; Who part'd with me to go fetch a chain, Promising to bring it to the Porcupine, Where Balthazar and I did dine together. Our dinner done, and he not coming thither, I went to seek him: In the street I met him; And in his company, that gentleman. There did this perjur'd goldsmith swear me down, That I this day of him receiv'd the chain, Which, God he knows, I saw not: for the which, He did arrest me with an officer. I did obey; and sent my peasant home For certain ducats: I left with none return'd. Then fairly I bespake the officer, To go in person with me to my house. By the way we met My wife, her sister, and a rabble more Of vile confederates; along with them They brought one Pinch; a hungry lean-faced vil- A mere anatomy, a mountebank, [lair, A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller; A needy, hollow-ey'd, sharp-looking wretch, A living dead man; this pernicious slave, Forsworn took on him as a conjurer:

And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse, And with no face, as 'twere, out-facing me, Cries out, I was possess'd: then altogether They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence; And in a dark and dankish vault at home There left me and my man, both bound together; Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder, I gain'd my freedom, and immediately Ran hither to your grace, whom I beseech To give me ample satisfaction For these deep shames, and great indignities.

Ang. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him; That he dined not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a chain of thee, or no?

Ang. He had, my lord: and when he ran in here, These people saw the chain about his neck.

Mer. Besides, I will be sworn, these ears of mine Heard you confess, you had the chain of him, After you forswore it on the mart.

And, thereupon I drew my sword on you; And then you fled into this abbey here, From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walls, Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me; I never saw the chain, so help me heaven!

And this is false, you burden me withal.

Duke. What an intricate impecch is this! I think, you all have drank of Circe's cup. If here you hous'd him, here he would have been: If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly — You say, he dined at home; the goldsmith here Denies that saying — Sirrah, what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her there, at the Porcupine.

Cour. He did; and from my finger snatch'd that ring. [her.

Ant. E. 'Tis true, my liege, this ring I had of Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey here?

Cour. As sure, my liege, as I do see your grace.

Duke. Why, this is strange:—Go call the abbess: I think, you are all mated, or stark mad. [bith;

Æge. Most mighty duke, vouchsafe me speak a Haply, I see a friend will save my life, [word, And pay the sum that may deliver me.

Æge. Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus? And is not that your bondman Dromio?

Dro. E. Within this hour, I was his bondman, sir, But he, I thank him, gnaw'd in two my cords: Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound.

Æge. I am sure, you both of you remember me Dro. E. Ourselves we do remember, sir, by you; For lately we were bound, as you are now. You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir?

Æge. Why look you strange on me? you know me well.

Ant. E. I never saw you in my life, till now.

Æge. Oh! grief hath chang'd me, since you saw me last; And careful hours, with Time's deformed hand, Have written strange deformities in my face: But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?

Ant. E. Neither.

Æge. Dromio, nor thou?

Dro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.

Æge. I am sure, thou dost.

Dro. E. Ay, sir? but I am sure, I do not; and whosoever a man denies, you are now bound to believe him.

_Age._ Not know my voice! O, time's extremity! Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue, in seven short years, that here my only son Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares? Though now this grained face of mine be hld In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow, And all the conduits of my blood froze up; Yet hath my night of life some memory, My wasting lamps some fading glimmer left, My dull deaf ears a little use to hear: All these old witnesses (I cannot err,) Tell me, thou art my son Antipholus.

_Ant._ I never saw my father in my life.

_Age._ But seven years since, in Syracus, boy, Thou know'st, we parted: but, perhaps, my son, Thou shan't to acknowledge me in misery.

_Ant._ The duke, and all that know me in the Can witness with me that it is not so; [city, I ne'er saw Syracus in my life.

_Duke._ I tell thee, Syracusian, twenty years Have I been patron to Antipholus, During which time he ne'er saw Syracusia: I see, thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Enter the Abbess, with ANTIPHOLUS SYRACUSAN, and DROMIO SYRACUSAN.

_Abb._ Most mighty duke, behold a man much wrong'd. [All gather to see him.

_Ad._ I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me. [Duke. One of these men is genius to the other; And so of these: Which is the natural man, And which the spirit? Who deciphers them?

_Dro._ I, sir, am Dromio; command him away. _Dro._ E, i, sir, am Dromio; pray, let me stay. _Ant._ S, _Age_, art thou not? or else his ghost? _Dro._ S, O, my old master, who hath bound him here?

_Abb._ Wherefore bound him, I will lose his bonds, And gain a husband by his liberty:— Speak, old _Age_, if thou be'st the man That had'st a wife once call'd _Amelia_, That bore thee at a burden two fair sons: O, if thou be'st the same _Amelia_, speak, And speak unto the same _Amelia_! _Age._ If I dream not, thou art _Amelia_; If thou art she, tell me, where is that son That floated with thee on the fatal raft? _Abb._ By men of Epidamnum, he, and I, And the twin Dromio, all were taken up: But, by and by, rude fishermen of Corinth By force took Dromio, and my son from them, And me they left with those of Epidamnum: What then became of them, I cannot tell; I, to this fortune that you see me in.

_Duke._ Why, here begins his morning story right: These two Antipholus's, these two so like, And these two Dromios, one in semblance,— Besides her urging of her wreck at sea,— There was the parents to these children, Which accidentally are met together. Antipholus, thou cam'st from Corinth first?

_Ant._ S, No, sir, not I; I came from Syracus.

_Duke._ Stay, stand apart; I know not which is which.

_An._ E, I came from Corinth, my most gracious _Dro._ E, And I with him. [lord.

_An._ E, Brought to this town by that most famous warrior Duke Memphion, your most renowned uncle.

_Ant._ Which of you two did dine with me to-day?

_An._ S, I, gentle mistress.

_Ad._ And are not you my husband?

_An._ E, No, I say nay to that.

_An._ S, And so do I, yet did she call me so; And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here, Did call me brother:—What I told you then, I hope, I shall have leisure to make good; If this be not a dream I see and hear.

_Ang._ That is the chain, sir, which you had of me. _Ant._ S, I think it be, sir; I deny it not.

_An._ E, And you, sir, for this chain arrested me. _Ang._ I think I did, sir; I deny it not.

_Ad._ I sent you money, sir, to be your bail, By Dromio; but I think he brought it not.

_Dro._ E, No, none by me.

_An._ S, This purse of ducats I receiv'd from you, And Dromio my man did bring them me: I see, we still did meet each other's man, And I was ta'en for him, and he for me, And thereupon these Errors are arose.

_An._ E, These ducats pawn I for my father here. _Duke._ It shall not need, thy father hath his life. _Cour._ Sir, I must have that diamond from you. _Ant._ E, There, take it; and much thanks for my good cheer.

_Abb._ Renowned duke, vouchsafe to take the pains, To go with us into the abbey here, And hear at large discoursed all our fortunes:— And all that are assembled in this place, That by this sympathized one day's error Have suffer'd wrong, go, keep us company, And we shall make full satisfaction.— Twenty-five years have I but gone in travail Of you, my sons; nor, till this present hour, My heavy burdens are delivered:— The duke, my husband, and my children both, And you the calendars of their nativity, Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me; After so long grief, such nativity!

_Duke._ With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. [Exeunt Duke, Abbess, _Age_, _Amelia_, Merchant, Angelo, and Attendants.

_Dro._ S, Master, shall I fetch your stuff from shipboard?

_An._ E, Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embark'd?

_Dro._ S, Your goods, that lay at host, sir, in the Countur.

_An._ S, He speaks to me; I am your master, Dromio:

_Come, go with us: we'll look to that anon: Embrace thy brother there, rejoice with him._

[Exeunt Antipholus S. and E., Adr. and Luc.

_Dro._ S, There is a fat friend at your master's house, That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner; She now shall be my sister, not my wife. _Dro._ E, Methinks, you are my glass, and not I see by you, I am a sweet-faced youth. Will you walk in to see their gossiping?

_Dro._ S, Not I, sir; you are my elder. _Dro._ E, That's a question: how shall we try it? _Dro._ S, We will draw cuts for the senior: till then, lead thou first.

_Dro._ E, Nay, then thus:

We came into the world like brother and brother: And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another [Exeunt._
MACBETH.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

DUNCAN, King of Scotland.
MALCOLM, his Son.
DONALBAIN, his Sons.
MACBETH, Banquo, generals of the King's Army.
MACDUFF, Lenox, Ross, Menteith, Angus, Cathness, Flanse, sons to Banquo.
SWARD, Earl of Northumberland, general of the English forces.

SCENE.—in the end of the Fourth Act, lies in England; through the rest of the Play, in Scotland; and, chiefly, at Macbeth's Castle.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An open Place. Thunder and Lightning.

Enter three Witches.

1 Witch. When shall we three meet again,
In thunder, lightning, or in rain?
2 Witch. When the hurlyburly's done,
When the battle's lost and won:
3 Witch. That will be ere the set of sun.
1 Witch. Where the place?
2 Witch. Upon the heath:
3 Witch. There to meet with Macbeth.
1 Witch. I come, Graymalkin!
All. Paddock calls:—Anon.—
Fair is foul, and foul is fair:
Hover through the fog and filthy air.
[Witches vanish.

SCENE II.—A Camp near Fores. Alarum within.

Enter King DUNCAN, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lenox, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Soldier.

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.
Mal. This is the sergeant,
Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought
'Gainst my captivity:—Hail, brave friend! I say to the king the knowledge of the broil,
As thou didst leave it.
Sold. Doubtfully it stood;
As two spent swimmers, that do cling together,
And choke their art. The merciless Macdonwald (Worthy to be a rebel; for, to that,
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon him,) from the western isles
Of Kerns and Gallowglasses is supplied;
And fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's whore: But all's too weak:
For brave Macbeth, (well he deserves that name,) Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution, Like valour's minion,
Carv'd out his passage, till he fac'd the slave;
And ne'er shook hands, nor bade farewell to him, Till he unseem'd him from the nave to the chaps,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements.
Dun. O, valiant cousin! worthy gentleman! Sold. As whence the sun 'gins his reflexion Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break; So from that spring, whence comfort seem'd to come, Discomfort swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark: No sooner justice had, with valour arm'd, Compell'd these skipping Kerns to trust their But the Norwegian lord, surveying vantage, [heels With forbish'd arms, and new supplies of men, Began a fresh assault.
Dun. Dismay'd not this Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo? Sold. Yes; As sparrows, eagles; or the hare, the lion. If I say sooth, I must report they were As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks; So they Doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe:
Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds, Or memorise another Golgotha,
I cannot tell: But I am faint, my gashes cry for help.
Dun. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds;
They smack of honour both:—Go, get him surgeons.
[Exit Soldier attended.

Who comes here?
MACBETH
Scene III.—A Heath. Thunder.

Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?
3 Witch. Sister, where thou?
1 Witch. A sailor's wife had chesnuts in her lap, and mouch'd and mouch'd and mouch'd:

Give me, quoth I:

Apoint thee, witch! the rump-fed ronyon cries.
Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' the Tiger:
But in a sieve I'll thither sail,
And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do.
2 Witch. I'll give thee a wind.
1 Witch. Thou art kind.
3 Witch. And I another.
1 Witch. I myself have all the other;
And the very ports they blow,
All the quarters that they know
The shipman's card.
I will drain him dry as hay:
Sleep shall, neither night nor day,
Hang upon his pent-house lid;
He shall live a man forlorn;
Weary sev'n nights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine:
Though his bark cannot be lov'd,
Yet it shall be tempest-toss'd.
Look what I have.
2 Witch. Show me, show me.
1 Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb, Wreck'd as homeward he did come. (Drum within.

3 Witch. A drum, a drum:
Macbeth doth come
All. The weird sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about;
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again, to make up nine:
Peace!—the charm's wound up.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.
Ban. How is't call'd to Fores?—What are those wither'd, and so wild in their attire; [these, That look not like the inhabitants of the earth, And yet are on't? Live ye? or are ye aught That man may question? You seem to understand By each at once her choppy finger laying [me, Upon her skinny lips:—You should be women, And yet your beards forbid me to interpret That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can:—What are you?
1 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Glamis!
2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor!
3 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! that shalt be king hereafter.
Ban. Good sir, why do you start; and seem to fear Things that do sound so fair?—I the name of Are ye fantastical, or that indeed [truth, Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner You greet with present grace, and great prediction Of noble having; and of royal hope, That he seems rapt withal; to me you speak not: If you can look into the seeds of time, And say, which grain will grow, and which will not: Speak then to me, who neither beg, nor fear, Your favours, nor your hate.
1 Witch. Hail!
2 Witch. Hail!
3 Witch. Hail!
1 Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.
2 Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.
3 Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be So all hail, Macbeth and Banquo! [none: 1 Witch. Banquo, and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more:
By Sinel's death, I know, I am thane of Glamis; But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives, A prosperous gentleman; and, to be king, Stands not within the prospect of belief, No more than to be Cawdor. Say, from whence You owe this strange intelligence? or why Upon this blasted heath you stop our way With such prophetic greeting?—Speak, I charge you. [Witches vanish.
Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has, And these are of them: Whither are they vanish'd? Macb. Into the air: and what seem'd corporal, melted As breath into the wind.—'Would they had staid! Ban. Were such things here, as we do speak Or have we eaten of the insane root, [about? That takes the reason prisoner? Macb. Your children shall be kings.
Ban. You shall be king.
Macb. And thane of Cawdor too; went it not so?
Ban. To the self-same tune, and words. Who's here? [Enter Ross and Angus.

Rosse. The king hath happily receiv'd, Macbeth, The news of thy success: and when he reads Thy personal venture in the rebels' fight, His wonders and his praises do contend, Which should be thine, or his: Silenc'd with that
MACBETH.

In viewing o'er the rest o' the self-same day,
He finds thee in the stout Norwegian ranks,
Nothing afeard of what thyself didst make,
Strange images of death. As thick as tale,
Came post with post; and every one did bear
 Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent,
To give thee, from our royal master, thanks;
To herald thee into his sight, not pay thee.

Rosse. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor:
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane! For it is thine.

Ban. What, can the devil speak true?
Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives; Why do you dress me
In borrow'd robes?

Ang. Who was the thane, lives yet;
But under heavy judgment bears that life
Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was Compass'd with Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not;
But treasons capital, confess'd, and prov'd,
Have overthrown him.

Macb. Glamis, and thane of Cawdor:
The greatest is behind.—Thanks for your pains.—
Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no less to them?

Ban. That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown,
Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange:
And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequences.—

Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme.—I thank you, gentlemen.—
This superfluous soliciting, or did line the rebel
Cannot be ill; cannot be good.—If ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success,
Commencing in a truth? I am thane of Cawdor:
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not.

Ban. Look, how our partner's rapt.

Macb. If chance will have me king, why, chance
May crown me, without my stir.

Ban. New honours come upon him
Like our strange garments; cleave not to their
But with the aid of use. [mould]

Macb. Come what come may;
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your Macb. Give me your favour:—my dull brain was wrought

With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your

Are register'd where every day I turn
The leaf to read them.—Let us toward the king.—
Think upon what hath chance'd; and, at more time,
The interim having weigh'd it, let us speak
Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Macb. Till then, enough.—Come, friends. [Exit]

SCENE IV.—Fores. A Room in the Palace.

Fourth. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lenox, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not
Those in commission yet return'd?

Mal. My liege,
They are not yet come back. But I have spoke
With one that saw him die: who did report,
That very frankly he confess'd his treasons;
Implor'd your highness' pardon; and set forth
A deep repentance: nothing in his life
Became him, like the leaving it; he died
As one that had been studied in his death,
To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd,
As 'twere a careless trifle.

Dun. There's no art,
To find the mind's construction in the face:
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.—O worthiest cousin!

Enter MACBETH, BANQUO, ROSSIE, and ANGUS.

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me: Thou art so far before,
That swiftest wing of recom pense is slow
To overtake thee. 'Would thou hast had less deserv'd;
That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been mine! only I have left to say,
More is thy due than more than all can pay.

Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it, pays itself.
Your highness' part
Is to receive our duties: and our duties
Are to your throne and state, children, and servants;
Which do but what they should, by doing every Safe toward your love and honour. [thing

Dun. Welcome kither:
I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing.—Noble Banquo,
That hast no less deserv'd, nor must be known
No less to have done so, let me inform thee,
And hold thee to my heart.

Ban. There if I grow,
The harvest is your own.

Dun. My plenteous joys,
Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow.—Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest, Malcolm; whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland: which honour must
Not, unaccompanied, invest him only,
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deserve.-From hence to Inverness,
And bind us further to you.

Macb. The rest is labour, which is not us'd for I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful [you:
The hearing of my wife with your approach:
So, bow 'ning take my leave.

Dun. My worthy Cawdor!

Macb. The prince of Cumberland!—That is a
On which I must fall down, or else o'er-leap, [step,
As in my way it lies. Stars, hide your ares!
Let not light see my black and deep desires:
The eye wink at the hand yet let that be,
Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see. [Exit.

Dun. True, worthy Banquo; he is full so valiant
And in his commendations I am fed; [liant;
It is a banquet to me. Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. [Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Inverness. A room in Macbeth's Castle.

Enter Lady Macbeth, reading a letter.
Lady M. They met me in the day of success;
and I have learned by the perfectest report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burned in desire to question them further, they made themselves rarer, into that air, to which they vanished.
While I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came misses from the king, who all-hatted me, Thane of Cawdor: by which title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with, Hail, king that shalt be! This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness; that thou mightst not lose the duties of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.
Glumis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be
What thou art promis'd:—Yet do I fear thy name
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness, [tire;
To catch the nearest way: Thou would'st be great;
Art not without ambition; but without
The illness should attend it. What thou would'st highly,
That would'st thou holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win: thou'dst have,
great Glumis,
That which cries, Thus thou must do, if thou have
And that which is true, into that else, do, [it;
Than wishest should be undone. Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear;
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem
To have thee crown'd withal. —What is your tidings?

Enter an Attendant.

Att. The king comes here to-night.
Lady M. Thou'rt mad to say it:
Is not thy master with him? who, wer't so,
Would have inform'd for preparation.
Att. So please you, it is true; our thane is coming:
One of my fellows had the speed of him;
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending,
He brings great news. The raven himself is hoarse, [Exit Attendant.

That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under many battlements. Come, come, you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unseen me here;
And fill me, from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of direst cruelty! I make thick my blood,
Stop up the access and passage o remorse;
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect and it! Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you murd'ring ministers—
Wherever in your sightless substances

---

You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, Hold, hold!—Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor!

Enter Macbeth.

Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter!
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.
Lady M. And when goes hence?
Macb. To-morrow,—as he purposes.

Lady M. O, never
Shall sun that morrow see!
Your face, my thane, is as a book, where men
May read strange matters;—To beguile the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under it. He that's coming Must be convenient for: and you shall put
This night's great business into my despatch;
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masteredom.

Macb. We will speak further.

Lady M. Only look up clear.
To alter favour ever is to fear:
Leave all the rest to me. [Exeunt.

---

SCENE VI.—The same. Before the Castle.

Hautboys. Servants of Macbeth attending.

Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Banquo, Lenox, Macduff, Ross, Angus, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat: the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his lovd mansionry, that the heavens' breath
Smells wooingly here: no jotty, frieze, buttress,
Nor coigne of vantage, but this bird hath made
His pendent bed, and procerant cradle: Where they Most breed and haunt, I have observ'd, the air is delicate.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Dun. See, see! our honour'd hostess!
The love that follows us, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach you,
How you shall bid God yield us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business, to contend
Against those honours deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house: For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits.

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We court 's him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor: but he rides well;
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp him
To his home before us: Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in compt, MACBETH.

ACT II.

To make their audit at your highness' pleasure, Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand: Conduct me to mine host; we love him highly, And shall continue our graces towards him. By your leave, hostess. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The same. A Room in the Castle.

Hauteboys and torches. Enter, and pass over the stage, a sewer, and divers servants with dishes and service. Then enter Macbeth.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well It was done quickly: If the assassination Could trammel up the consequence, and catch, With his surcease, success; that but this blow Might be the be-all, and the end-all here, But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,— We'd jump the life to come.—But in these cases, We still have judgment here; that we but teach Bloody instructions, which being taught, return To plague the inventor: This even-handed justice Commends the ingredients of our poison'd chalice To our own lips. He's here in double trust: First, as I am his kinsman and his subject, Strong both against the deed; then, as his host, Who should against his murderer shut the door, Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been So clear in his great office, that his virtues Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against The deep damnation of his taking-off: And pity, like a naked new-born babe, Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubim, hors'd Upon the eight-foot couriers of the air, Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye, That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no spur To prick the sides of my intent, but only Vaulting ambition, which o'er-leaps itself, And falls on the other.—How now, what news? Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. He has almost supp'd; Why have you left the chamber?

Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?

Lady M. Know you not, he has?

Macb. We will proceed no further in this business: He hath honour'd me of late; and I have bought Golden opinions from all sorts of people, Which would be worn now in their newest gloss, Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk, Wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since?

And wakes it now, to look so green and pale At what it did so freely? From this time, Such I account thy love. Art thou afeard To be the same in thine own act and valour, As thou art in desire? Would'st thou have that Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life, And live a coward in thine own esteem; Letting I dare not wait upon I would, Like the poor cat? the adage?

Macb. Pr'ythee, peace: I dare do all that may become a man; Who dares do more, is none.

Lady M. What beast was it then, That made you break this enterprise to me? When you durst do it, then you were a man; And, to be more than what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor place, Did then adhere, and yet you would make both: They have made themselves, and that their fitness now Does unmake you. I have given suck; and know How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me: I would, while it was smiling in my face, Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums, And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn, as you Have done to this.

Macb. If we should fail,—

Lady M. We fail! But screw your courage to the sticking place, And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep, (Whereto the rather shall his day's hard journey Soundly invite him,) his two chamberlains Will I with wine and wassail so convince, That memory, the warden of the brain, Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason A limbeck only: When in swinish sleep Their drenched natures lie, as in a death, What cannot you and I perform upon The unguarded Duncan? what not put upon His spongy officers; who shall bear the guilt Of our great quell?

Macb. Bring forth men-children only! For thy undaunted mettle should compose Nothing but males. Will it not be receiv'd, When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers, That they have done't?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other, As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up Each corporal agent to this terrible feat. Away, and mock the time with fairest show; False face must hide what the false heart doth know. [Exeunt.
This diamond be gets your wife withal, By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up In measures less content.

Macb. Being unprepar'd, Our will become the servant to defect; Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All's well. I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters: To you they have show'd some truth. Yet, when we can entreat an hour to serve, Would spend it in some words upon that business, if you would grant the time.

Macb. At your kind'st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent,— It shall make honour for you.

[when 'tis,

Ban. So I lose none, In seeking to augment it, but still keep My bosom franchise'd, and allegiance clear, I shall be counsel'd.

Macb. Good repose, the while!

Ban. Thanks, sir; The like to you!

[Exit Banquo.

Macb. Go, bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready, She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.

[Exit Servant.

Is this a dagger which I see before me, The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:— I have thee not, and yet I see thee still. Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible To feeling as to sight? or art thou but A dagger of the mind; a false creation, Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain? I see thee yet, in form as palpable As this which now I draw. Thou mar'st me the way that I was going; And such an instrument I was to use. Mine eyes have seen the fool's o' the other senses, Or else worth all the rest; I see thee still; And on thy blade, and dudgeon, gouts of blood, Which was not so before.—There's no such thing: It is the bloody business, which informs Thus to mine eyes.—Now o'er the one half world Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse The curtain'd sleep; now witchcraft celebrates Pale Hecate's offering; and wither'd murder, Alarum'd by his sentinel, the wolf, Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,

With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his demoves like a ghost.—Thou sure and firm-set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk: for fear Thy very stones prate of my whereabout, And take the present horror from the time, [lives] Which now suits with it.—Whilest I threat, he Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

[4 bell rings.

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me. Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell That summons thee to heaven, or to hell.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The same.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk, hath made me bold: What hath quench'd them, hath given me fire:—

Hark!—Peace!

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman, Which gives the stern'st good night. He is about The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms [it: Do mock their charge with snores: I have drugg'd their posssets, That death and nature do contend about them, Whether they live, or die.

Macb. [Within.] Who's there?—what, ho!

Lady M. Alack! I am afraid they have awk'd, And 'tis not done:—the attempt, and not the deed, Confounds us;—Hark!—I laid their daggers ready, He could not miss them.—Had he not resembled My father as he slept I had done't.—My husband?

[Enter MACBETH.

Macb. I have done the deed:—Didst thou not hear a noise?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream, and the Did not you speak? [crickets cry.

Macb. ?

Lady M. Now.

Macb. As I descended?

Lady M. Ay.

Macb. Hark!—

Who lies i' the second chamber?

Lady M. Donalbain.

Macb. This is a sorry sight. [Looking on his hands.

Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in his sleep, and one cried, murder!

That they did wake each other; I stood and heard them: But they did say their prayers, and address'd them Again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cried, God bless us! and, Amen, the other; As they had seen me, with these hangman's hands. Listening their fear, I could not say, amen, When they did say, God bless us.

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce, I had most need of blessing, and amen [amen? Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought After these ways; so, it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought, I heard a voice cry, Sleep no more!

Macb. Macbeth does murder sleep, the innocent sleep; Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care, The death of each day's life, sord labour's bath, Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course, Chief nourisher in life's feast.

Lady M. What do you mean?

Macb. Still it cried, Sleep no more! to all the house:

Glamis hath murder'd sleep: and therefore Cawdor Shall sleep no more, Macbeth shall sleep no more!

Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thane, You do unbend your noble strength, to think So brainickly of things.—Go, get some water, And wash this filthy witness from your hand.— Why did you bring these daggers from the place? They must lie there: Go, carry them; and smear The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more: I am afraid to think what I have done;

Look on't again, I dare not.
Lady M. Infirm of purpose! Give me the daggers: The sleeping and the dead, Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood, That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed, I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal, For it must seem their guilt.

Macb. Whence is that knocking? How is't with me, when every noise appals me? What hands are here? Ha! they pluck out mine eyes! Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No; this my hand will rather-The multitudinous seas incarnadine, Making the green—one red.

Re-enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shame To wear a heart so white. [Knock.] I hear a knocking At the south entry: retire we to our chamber. A little water cleans us of this deed: How easy is it then? Your constancy Hath left you unadorned. [Knock.] Hark! More knocking: Get on your night-gown, lest occasion call us, And show us to be watchers:—Be not lost So poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed,—were best not know myself. [Knock.]

Wake Duncan with thy knocking; Ay, 'would thou couldst?'

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter a Porter. [Knock and within.

Porter. Here's a knocking indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old turning the key. [Knock.] Knock, knock, knock: Who's there, i' the name of Belzebub? Here's a farmer, that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty: Come in time; have napkins enough about you; here you'll swear for't. [Knock.] Knock, knock: Who's there, i' the other devil's name? 'Faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven: O, come in, equivocator. [Knock.]

Knock, knock, knock: Who's there? 'Faith, here's an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French hose: Come in, tailor, here you may roast your goose. [Knock.]

Knock, knock: Never at quiet! What are you?—But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire. [Knock.]

Anon, anon; I pray you, remember the porter. [Opens the gate.]

Macb. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed, that you do lie so late?

Port. 'Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock: and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macb. What three things does drink especially provoke?

Port. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Lechery, sir, it provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance: Therefore, much drink may be said to be an equi-vocator with lechery: it makes him, and it mars him; it gits him on and it takes him off; it persuades him, and dishartens him: makes him stand to, and not stand to: in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him.

Macb. I believe, drink gave thee the lie last night.

Port. That it did, sir, i' the very throat o' me: But I required him for his lie; and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Macb. Is thy master stirring?—Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes.

Enter MACDUFF.

Len. Good-morrow, noble sir!

Macb. Good-morrow, both! Macd. Is the king stirring, worthy Thanet?

Macb. Not yet.

Macd. He did command me to call timely on him; I have almost slipp'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him.

Macd. I know, this is a joyful trouble to you; But yet, 'tis one.

Macb. The labour we delight in, physics pain. This is the door.

Macb. I'll make so bold to call,

For 'tis my limited service. [Exit MACDUFF.

Len. Goes the king From hence to-day?

Macb. He does:—he did appoint so.

Len. The night has been unruly: Where we lay, Our chimneys were blown down: and, as they say, Lamentings heard i' the air; strange screams of And prophesying, with accents terrible, [death; Of dire combustion, and confus'd events, New hatch'd to the woeful time. The obscure bird Clamour'd the livelong night: some say, the earth Was feverous, and did shake.

Macb. 'Twas a rough night.

Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel A fellow to it.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. O horror! horror! horror! Tongue, nor Cannot conceive, nor name thee! [heart, Macb. Len. What's the matter?

Macd. Commotion now hath made his master— Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope [piece the Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence The life o' the building.

Macb. What is't you say? the life.

Len. Mean you his majesty?

Macd. Approach the chamber, and destroy your sight With a new Gorgon:—Do not bid me speak; See, and then speak yourselves. —Awake! awake!—[Exit MACDUFF and LENOX

Ring the alarum-bell:—Murder! and treason! Banquo, and Donalbain! Malcolm! awake! Shake off this doyly sleep, death's counterfeit, And look on death itself! up, up, and see The great doom's image—Malcolm! Banquo! As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites To countenance this horror! [Beat rings

Enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. What's the business, That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley The sleepers of the house? speak, speak—

Macd. O, gentle lady, 'Tis not for you to hear what I can speak: The repetition, in a woman's ear, Would murder as it fell.—O Banquo! Banquo
Enter Banquo.

Our royal master's murder'd!

Lady M. Woe, alas!

What, in our house?

Ban. Too cruel, any where.—

Dear Duff, I pr'ythee, contradict thyself,
And say, it is not so.

Enter Macbeth and Lenox.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time; for, from this instant,
There's nothing serious in mortality:
All is but toys: renown, and grace, is dead;
The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter Malcolm and Donalbain.

Don. What is amiss?

Macb. You are, and do not know it:
The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd.

Maed. Your royal father's murder'd.

Mal. O, by whom then?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done't:
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which, unwip'd, we found
Upon their pillows:
They start'd, and were distracted; no man's life
Was to be trusted with them.

Maed. O, yet I do repent of my fury,
That I did kill them.

Maed. Wherefore did you so?

Maed. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate, and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man:
The expedition of my violent love
Out-ran the pauser, reason.—Here lay Duncan,
His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood;
And his gash'd stab look'd like a breach in nature
For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers,
StEEP'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers
Unmannerly breech'd with gore: Who could refrain,
That had a heart to love, or that heart
Courage, to make his love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho!

Maed. Look to the lady.

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues,
That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. What should be spoken here,
Where our fate, hid within an auger-hole,
May rush, and seize us? Let's away; our tears
Are not yet brew'd.

Mal. Nor our strong sorrow on
The foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady:

(Lady Macbeth is carried out.

And when we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet,
And question this most bloody piece of work,
To know it further. Fears and scruples shake us:
In the great hand of God I stand; and thence,
Against the univ'dl'd pretence I fight
Of treasonous malice.

Maed. And so do I.

All. So all.

Maed. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet the hall together.

All. Well contented.

[Exeunt all but Mal. and Don.

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with
To shew an unfelt sorrow, is an office
Which the false man does easy: I'll to England.

Don. To Ireland, I; our separated fortune
Shall keep us both the safer: where we are,
There's daggers in men's smiles: the near in blood,
The nearer bloody.

Maed. This murderous shaft's that shot,
Hath not yet lighted; and our safest way
Is, to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away: There's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Without the Castle.

Enter Rosses and an Old Man.

Old M. Three score and ten I can remember well.
Within the volume of which time, I have seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange; but this sore
Hath trifled former knowings.

[night

Rosse. Ah, good father,
Thou see'st, the heavens, as troubled with man's act,
Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock, 'tis day,
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp;
Is it night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb,
When living light should kiss it?

Old M. 'Tis unnatural,
Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last,
A falcon, tow'ring in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at, and kill'd.

Rosse. And Duncan's horses, (a thing most strange and certain,) Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make War with mankind.

Old M. 'Tis said, they ate each other.

Rosse. They did so; to the amazement of mine eyes,
That look'd upon. Here comes the good Macduff:

Enter Macduff.

How goes the world sir, now?

Macd. Why, see you not?

Rosse. Is't known, who did this more bloody

Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slain. [Deed?

Rosse. Alas, the day!

What good could they pretend?

Macd. They were subdued:
Malcolm, and Donalbain, the king's two sons,
Are stoll'n away and fled; which puts upon them
Suspicion of the deed.

Rosse. 'Gainst nature still:
Thriftless ambition, that wit raven up
Thine own life's means!—Then 'tis most like,
The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth.

Macd. He is already nam'd; and gone to Scone,
To be investid.

Rosse. Where is Duncan's body?

Macd. Carried to Colomes-kill;
The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones.

Rosse. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No, cousin, I'll to Fife.

Rosse. Well, I will thither.

Macd. Well, may you see things well done there:
Lest our old robes sit easier than our new!

Rosse. Father, Farewell.

Old M. God's benison go with you; and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes!

[Exeunt.]
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Forey. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Banquo.

Ban. Thou hast it now, King, Cawdor, Glamis,
As the weird women promis’d; and, I fear, [all,
Thou play’dst most foully for’st; yet it was said,
It should not stand in thy posterity;
But that myself should be the root, and father
Of many kings. If there come truth from them,
(As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine,) Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But, hush; no more.

Senetounded. Enter Macbeth as King; Lady Macbeth as Queen; Lenox, Rosses, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here’s our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all-things unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I’ll request your presence.

Ban. Let your highness Command upon me; to the which, my duties Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desir’d your good advice (Which still hath been both grave and prosperous.) In this day’s council; but we’ll take to-morrow.
Is’t far your ride?

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time ‘Twill this and supper: go not my horse the better, I must become a borrower of the night,
For a dark hour, or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

Ban. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow’d In England, and in Ireland; not confessing Their cruel partake, filling their hearers With strange invention: But of that to-morrow; When, therewithal, we shall have cause of state, Craving us jointly. Hie you to horse: Adieu, Till you return at night. Goes Fleance with you? Ban. Ay, my good lord; our time does call upon us.

Macb. I wish your horses swift, and sure of foot;
And so I do commend you to your backs.

Ban. Farewell.—[Exit Banquo. Let every man be master of his time Till seven at night; to make society The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself Till supper-time alone: while then, God be with you. [Exeunt Lady Macbeth, Lords, Ladies, &c. Sirrah, a word: Attend those men our pleasure? Attend. They are, my lord, without the palace gate.

Macb. Bring them before us.—[Exit Attent.]

To this, is nothing; But to be safely thus:—Our fears in Banquo Stick deep; and in his royalty of nature [dares; Reigns that, which would be fear’d: ‘Tis much he And, to that dauntless temper of his mind, He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour To act in safety. There is none, but he Whose being I do fear: And under him My genius is rebuk’d; as, it is said, Mark Antony’s was by Caesar. He chid the sisters, When first they put the name of king upon me, And bade them speak to him; then, prophet-like, They hail’d him father to a line of kings: Upon my head they plac’d a fruitless crown, And put a barren sceptre in my gripes, Thence to be wrench’d with an unlineal hand, No son of mine succeeding. If it be so, For Banquo’s issue have I fil’d my mind; For them the gracious Duncan have I murder’d; Put rancours in the vessel of my peace Only for them; and mine eternal jewel Given to the common enemy of man, To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings! Rather than so, come, fate, into the list, And champion me to the utterance!—Who’s there?—

Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers. Now to the door, and stay there till we call. [Exit Attendant.

Was it not yesterday we spoke together? 1 Mur. It was, so please your highness.

Macb. Well then, now Have you consider’d of my speeches? Know, That it was he, in the times past, which held you So under fortune; which, you thought, had been Our innocent self; this I made good to you In our last conference; pass’d in probation with you, How you were borne in hand; how cross’d; the instruments; Who wrought with them; and all things else, that To half a soul, and a notion craz’d, [might, Say, Thus did Banquo. 1 Mur. You made it known to us. Macb. I did so; and went further, which is now Our point of second meeting. Do you find Your patience so predominant in your nature, That you can let this go? Are you so gospell’d, To pray for this good man, and for his issue, Whose heavy hand hath bow’d you to the grave, And beggar’d yours for ever? 1 Mur. We are men, my liege. Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men; As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs, Shoghs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves, are cleped All by the name of dogs: the valued file Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle, The house-keeper, the hunter, every one According to the gift which bounteous nature Hath in him clos’d: whereby he does receive Particular addition, from the bill That writes them all alike: and so of men. Now, if you have a station in the file, And not in the worst rank of manhood, say it; And I will put that business in your bosoms, Whose execution takes your enemy off; Grapples you to the heart and love of us, Who wear our health but sickly in his life, Which in his death were perfect. 2 Mur. I am one, my liege, Whom the vile blows and buffets of the world Have so incens’d, that I am reckless what I do to spite the world.
SCENE III.

MACBETH.

1 Mur. And I another, So weary with disasters, tugg'd with fortune, That I would set my life on any chance, To mend it, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you Know, Banquo was your enemy.

2 Mur. True, my lord.

Macb. So is he mine; and in such bloody distemper That every minute of his being thrusts [tance, Against my near'st of life: And though I could With bare-foot'd power sweep him from my sight, And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not, For certain friends that are both his and mine, Whose loves I may not drop, but wail his fall Whom I myself struck down: and thence it is, That I to your assistance do make love; Masking the business from the common eye, For sundry weighty reasons.

2 Mur. We shall, my lord, Perform what you command us.

1 Mur. Though our lives——

Macb. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour, at most, I will advise you where to plant yourselves. Acquaint you with the perfect spy o'the time, The moment on't; for 't must be done to-night, And something from the palace; always thought, That I require a clearness: And with him, (To leave no rubs, nor botches, in the work,) Pianec his son, that keeps him company, Whose absence is no less material to me Than is his father's, must embrace the fate Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart; I'll come to you anon.

2 Mur. We are resolv'd, my lord.

Macb. I'll call upon you straight; abide within. It is concluded:——Banquo, thy soul's flight, If it find heaven, must find it out to-night.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same. Another Room.

Enter Lady Macbeth a and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?

Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his For a few words. [leisure

Serv. Madam, I will. [Exit.

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent, Where our desire is got without content: 'Tis safer to be that which we destroy, Than, by destruction, dwell in doubtful joy.——

Enter MACBETH.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone, Of sorriest fancies your companions making? Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died With them they think on? Things without remedy, Should be without regard: what's done, is done.

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it; She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice Remains in danger of her former tooth. But let The frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer, Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep In the affliction of these terrible dreams, That shake us nightly: Better be with the dead, Whom we, to gain our place, have sent to peace, Than on the torture of the mind to lie In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave; After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well;

Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison. Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing, Can touch him further!

Lady M. Come on;

Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks; Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I, love; and so, I pray, be you: Let your remembrance apply to Banquo; Present him eminence, both with eye and tongue: Unsafe the while, that we Must lave our honours in these flatterer streams; And make our faces vizards to our hearts, Disguising what they are.

Lady M. You must leave this.

Macb. O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife! Thou know'st, that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives. Lady M. But in them nature's copy's not eterno. Macb. There's comfort yet; they are assailable; Then be thou jocund: Ere the bat hath flown His cloister'd flight; ere, to black Hecate's summons.

The shard-borne beetle, with his drowsy hums, Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done A deed of dreadful note.

Lady M. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck, Till thou applaud the deed. Come, sealing night, Skarf up the tender eye of pitiful day; And, with thy bloody and invisible hand, Cancel, and tear to pieces, that great bond Which keeps me pale——Light thickens; and the Makes wing to the rocky wood: [crow Good things of day begin to droop and drowse; While night's black agents to their prey do rouse. Thou marvell'st at my words: but hold thee still; Things, bad begun, make strong themselves by ill: So, pr'ythee, go with me.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Park or Lawn, with a Gate leading to the Palace.

Enter three murderers.

1 Mur. But who did bid thee join with us?

2 Mur. Macbeth. 3 Mur. He needs not our mistrust; since he is——

Our offices, and what we have to do,——

To the direction just.

1 Mur. Then stand with us.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day: Now spurs the lated traveller space,

To gain the timely inn; and near approaches The subject of our watch.

3 Mur. Hark! I hear horses. Ban. [Within.] Give us a light there, ho! 2 Mur. Then it is he; the rest That are within the note of expectation, Already are i'the court.

1 Mur. His horses go about.

3 Mur. Almost a mile; but he does usually, So all men do, from hence to the palace gate Make it their walk.

Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, a Servant with a torch proceeding them.

2 Mur. A light, a light! 3 Mur. 'Tis he. 1 Mur. Stand to't. Ban. It will be rain to-night.
MACBETH.

SCENE IV.—A Room of State in the Palace. A Banquet prepared.

Enter MACBETH, Lady MACBETH, ROSSE, LENOX, LORDS, and Attendants.

MACB. You know your own degrees, sit down:
And last, the hearty welcome. [at first
Lords. Thanks to your majesty.
MACB. Ourself will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.
Our hostess keeps her state; but, in best time,
We will require her welcome.
LADY M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our
For my heart speaks, they are welcome. [friends;

Enter first Murderer, to the door.

MACB. See, they encounter thee with their hearts’ thanks:—
Both sides are even: Here I’ll sit t’the midst:
Be large in mirth; anon, we’ll drink a measure
The table round.—There’s blood upon thy face.
Mur. ’Tis Banquo’s then.
MACB. ’Tis better thee without, than he within.
Is he despatch’d?
Mur. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for [he’s good,
MACB. Thou art the best o’the cut throats: Yet
That did the like for Fleance: if thou didst it,
Thou art the nonpareil.
Mur. Most royal sir,
Fleance is ‘scap’d.
MACB. Then comes my fit again: I else
been perfect;
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock;
As broad, and general, as the casing air:
But now, I am cabin’d, cribb’d, confin’d, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. But Banquo’s safe?
Mur. Ay, my good lord: safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trench’d gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature.
MACB. Thanks for that:—
There the grown serpent lies; the worm, that’s fled,
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone; to-morrow
We’ll hear, ourselves again. [Exit Murderer.

LADY M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold,
That is not often vouch’d, while ’tis a making,
’Tis given with welcome: To feed, were best at home;
In thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony,
Ting were bare without it.
MACB. Sweet remembrancer!—ow, good digestion wait on appetite, nd health on both!
Len. May it please your highness sit?

MACB. Here had we now our country’s honour
roof’d,
Were the gra’d person of our Banquo present;
Who may I ratheer challenge for unkindness
Than pity for mischance!
ROSSE. His absence, sir,
Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your
To grace us with your royal company? [highness
MACB. The table’s full.
LEN. Here’s a place reserv’d, sir.
MACB. Where?
LEN. Here, my lord. What is’t that moves your highness?
MACB. Which of you have done this?
Lords. What, my good lord?
MACB. Thou canst not say, I did it: never shake
Thy gory looks at me.
ROSSE. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well.
LADY M. Sit, worthy friends:—my lord is often thus,
And hath been from his youth: ’pray you, keep
The fit is momentary; was a thought [seat;
He will again be well; If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion;
Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?
MACB. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on
That which might appal the devil.
LADY M. O proper stuff!
This is the very painting of your fear:
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws, and starts, (Impostors to true fear) would well become
A woman’s story, at a winter’s fire,
Authoriz’d by her grandam. Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? When all’s done,
You look but on a stool.
MACB. Pr’ythee, see there! behold! look! lo!
how say you?
Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak too.
If charnel-houses, and our graves, must send
Those that we bury, back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. [Ghost disappears.
LADY M. What! quite unmann’d in folly?
MACB. If I stand here, I saw him.
Fye, for shame!—
MACB. Blood hath been shed ere now, ’tis the olden time,
Ere human statute purg’d the gentle weal;
Ay, and since too, murderers have been perform’d
Too terrible for the ear: the times have been,
That, when the brains were out, the man would die,
And there an end: but now, they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns
And push us from our stools: This is more strange
Than such a murder is.
LADY M. My worthy lord,
Your noble friends do lack you.
MACB. I do forget:—
Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends;
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;
Then I’ll sit down:—Give me some wine, fill full:—
I drink to the general joy of the whole table.

GHOST rises.

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss;
Would he were here! to all, and him, we thirst.
And all to all.
SCENE VI.

MACBETH. 321

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Macb. Avant! and quit my sight! Let the earth hide thee!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with!

Lady M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: 'tis no other;
Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hycran tiger,
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: Or, be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I inhibit thee, protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow!

[Ghost disappears.]

Unreal mockery, hence!—Why, so;—being gone,
I am a man again.—Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have dispatch'd the mirth, broke t he good meeting,
With most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? You make me strange
Even to the disposition that I owe,
When now I think you can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine are blanch'd with fear.

Rose. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse;
Question enranges him: at once, good night:—
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health
Attend his majesty!

Lady M. A kind good night to all! [Exeunt Lords and Attendants.]

Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood:

Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak;

Augurs, and understood relations, have
By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth

The secret'st man of blood.—What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies
At our great bidding? [his person,

Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?

Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send:
There's not a one of them, but in his house
I keep a servant fee'd. I will to-morrow, (Betimes I will,) unto the weird sisters:
More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know,
By the worst means, the worst: for mine own good,
All causes shall give way; I am in blood
Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Remaining were as tedious as go' er:
Strange things I have in head, that will to hand;
Which must be acted, ere they may be scann'd.

Lady M. You lack the season of all natures, sleep.

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep: My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use:—
We are yet but young in deed. [Exeunt.]
SCENE I.—A dark Cave. In the middle, a Cauldron boiling. Thunder.
Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
2 Witch. Thrice; and once the hedge-pigwhin'd.
3 Witch. Harper cries:—'Tis time, 'tis time.

1 Witch. Round about the cauldron go; In the poison'd entrails throw,— Toad, that under coldest stone,
Days and nights hast thirty-one
Sweeter'd venom sleeping got,
Boil thou first i' the charmed pot!

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake:
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork, and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble:
Like a hell-broth and bubble.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

3 Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf;
Witches' mummy; maw, and gulf,
Of the ravin'd salt-sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' the dark
Liver of blaspheming Jew;
Gall of goat, and slips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse;
Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab,
Make the gruel thick and slab:
Add thereto a tiger's chandron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter Hecat, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share 't the gains.
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

All which we pine for now: And this report
Hath so exasperate the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute, Sir, not I,
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, You'll true the time
That clogs me with this answer.

Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His message ere he come; that a swift blessing
May soon return to this our suffering country
Under a hand accurs'd!

Lord. My prayers with him!

[Exeunt]
That this great king may kindly say,
Our duties did his welcome pay.

[Music. The Witches dance, and vanish.]

Macb. Where are they?—Gone?—Let this pernicious hour
Stand aye accursed in the calendar!—
Come in, without there

Enter LENOX.

Macb. Came they not by you? Len. No, indeed, my lord.
Macb. Infected be the air whereon they ride; And damn'd, all those that trust them—I did hear
The galloping of horse: Who was't came by? Len. 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Time, thou anticip'st my dread exploits The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it: From this moment, The very firstlings of my heart shall be The firstlings of my hand. And even now, To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and The castle of Macduff I will surprise; [done: Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o'the sword His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls That trace his line. No boasting like a fool; This deed I'll do, before this purpose cool: But no more sights!—Where are these gentlemen? Come, bring me where they are. [Execut.

SCENE II.—FIFE. A ROOM IN MACDUFF'S CASTLE.

Enter Lady MACDUFF, her son, and ROSSE.

Lady Macd. What had he done, to make him fly the land?—Rosse. You must have patience, madam.

L. Macd. He had none: His flight was madness: When our actions do not, Our fears do make us traitors.

Rosse. You know not, Whether it was his wisdom, or his fear.

L. Macd. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave His mansion, and his titles, in a place [his babes, From whence himself does fly? He loves us not: He wants the natural touch: for the poor wren, The most diminutive of birds, will fight, Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. All is the fear, and nothing is the love; As little is the wisdom, where the flight So runs against all reason.

Rosse. My dearest coz, I pray you, school yourself: But, for your husband, He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows The fits o'the season. I dare not speak much further: But cruel are the times, when we are traitors, And do not know ourselves; when we hold rumour From what we fear; yet know not what we fear; But float upon a wild and violent sea,
Each way, and move—I take my leave of you: Shall not be long but I'll be here again: Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward To what they were before.—My pretty cousin, Blessing upon you!
L. Macd. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherless.
Rosse. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer,
It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort:
I take my leave at once. [Exit Rosse.
L. Macd. Sirrah, your father's dead;
And what will you do now? How will you live?
Son. As birds do, mother.
L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?
Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.
L. Macd. Poor bird! thou'rt never fear the net,
The pit-fall, nor the gin. [nor lime,
Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for.
My father is not dead, for all your saying.
L. Macd. Yes, he is dead; how wilt thou do for a father?
Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?
L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market.
Son. Then you'll buy 'em to sell again.
L. Macd. Thou speakest with all thy wit; and With wit enough for thee. [yet i'faith,
Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?
L. Macd. Ay, that he was.
Son. What is a traitor?
L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.
Son. And be all traitors that do so?
L. Macd. Every one that does so, is a traitor, and must be hanged.
Son. And must they all be hanged that swear and lie?
L. Macd. Every one.
Son. Who must hang them?
L. Macd. Why, the honest men.
Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools: for there are liars and swearers enough to beat the honest men, and hang up them.
L. Macd. Now God help thee, poor monkey! But how wilt thou do for a father?
Son. If he were dead, you'd weep for him: if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.
L. Macd. Poor prattler! how thou talkest.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect.
I doubt, some danger does approach you nearly:
If you will take a homely man's advice,
Be not found here; hence, with your little ones.
To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage.
Do to worse to you, were fell cruelty,
Which is too nigh your person. Heaven preserve you!
I dare abide no longer. [Exit Messenger.

L. Macd. Whither should I fly?
I have done no harm. But I remember now
I am in this earthly world; where, to do harm,
Is often laudable; to do good, sometime,
Accounted dangerous folly: Why then, alas!
Do I put up that wanly womanly defence.
To say, I have done no harm.—What are these faces?

Enter Murderers.

Mur. Where is your husband?
L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unsanctified,
Where such as thou may'st find him.
Mur. He's a traitor.
Son. Thou ly'st, thou shag-car'd villain.
MACBETH.

Mac. What should he be?
Mal. It is myself: I mean: in whom I know All the particulars of vice so grafted,
That, when they shall be open’d, black Macbeth Will seem as pure as snow; and the poor state Esteem him as a lamb, being compar’d With my confineless harms.

Mac. Not in the legions Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn’d In evils, to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, snatching of every sin
That has a name: But there’s no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust: and my desire
All continent impediments would o’er-bear,
That did oppose my will: Better Macbeth,
Than such a one to reign.

Mac. Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet
To take upon you what is yours; you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And seem to see the time you may so hood-wink.
We have willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin’d.

Mal. With this there grows,
In my most ill-compos’d affection, such
A stanchless avarice, that, were I king
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels, and this other’s house:
And yet him cold, the time you may so hood-wink.
To make me hunger more; that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good, and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

Mac. This avarice
Sticks deeper; grows with more pernicious root
Than summer-seeding lust; and it hath been
The sword of our slain kings: Yet do not fear;
Scotland hath foysons to fill up your will,
Of your mere own: All these are portable,
With other graces weigh’d.

Mal. But I have none: The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no reliash of them; but abroad
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord intoll’d,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Mac. O Scotland! Scotland!
Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
I am as I have spoken.

Mac. Fit to govern!
No, not to live.—O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant bloody-scepter’d,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accurs’d,
And does blaspheme his brethren?—Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen, that bore thee,
Of’ner upon her knees than on her feet.

Died every day she liv’d. Fare thee well!
These evils, thou repeat’st upon thyself,
Have banish’d me from Scotland.—O, my breast,
Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip’d the black scruples, reconcile’d my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power; and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste: But God above
Deal between thee and me! for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own destruction; here abjure
The taints and blame I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith; would not betray
The devil to his fellow; and delight
No less in truth, than life: my first false speaking
Was this upon myself: What I am truly,
Is thine, and my poor country’s, to command
Whither, indeed, before thy here-approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at a point, was setting forth;
Now we’ll together; and the chance of goodness,
Be like our warranted quarrel! Why are you silent?

Mac. Such welcome and unswerving things at
'Tis hard to reconcile.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth,
I pray you?

Mal. Ay, sir: there are a crew of wretched souls,
That stay his cure: their malady convinces
The great assay of art; but, at his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heaven given in his hand,
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor.

Mal. What s the disease he means?

Mal. 'Tis call’d the evil:
A most miraculous work in this good king:
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits Heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely-visited people,
All swoln and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The more despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers; and 'tis spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy;
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace.

Rosse. See, who comes here?
Mal. My countryman; but yet I know him not.

Mal. I know him now: Good God betimes re-
The means that make us strangers!

Rosse. Sir, Amen.

Mal. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse. Alas, poor country!
Almost afraid to know itself! It cannot
Be call’d our mother, but our grave: where nothing,
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks that rent the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy; the dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd, for who; and good men's Expire before the flowers in their caps, [lives
Dying, or ere they sicken.

Macd. O, relation,
Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal. What is the newest grief?

Rosse. That of an hour's age doth this the
Each minute teems a new one. [speaker;

Macd. How does my wife?

Rosse. Why, well.

Macd. And all my children?

Rosse. Well too.

Macd. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

Rosse. No; they were well at peace, when I did leave them.

Macd. Be not a niggard of your speech; How goes it?

Rosse. When I came hither to transport the tidings,
Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out;
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For I saw the tyrant's power a-foot:
Now is the time of help; your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women fight
To doff their dire distresses.

Mal. Be it their comfort,
We are coming thither: gracious England hath
Lent us good Seward, and ten thousand men;
An older, and a better soldier, none
That Christendom gives out.

Rosse. 'Would I could answer
This comfort with the like! But I have words,
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Macd. What concern they?
The general cause? or is it a fea-grief,
Due to some single breast?

Rosse. No mind, that's honest,
But in it shares some woe; though the main part
Pertains to you alone.

Macd. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Rosse. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

Macd. Humph! I guess at it.

Rosse. Your castle is surpris'd; your wife, and babes,
Savagely slaughter'd: to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven!—

What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows;
Give sorrow word: the grief, that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-draught heart, and bids it break.

Mal. My children too?

Rosse. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.

Mal. And I must be from thence!

My wife kill'd too?

Rosse. I have said.

Mal. Be comforted:

Let's make us med'cines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Mal. He has no children.—All my pretty ones?

Did you say, all?—O, hell-kite!—All?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Mal. I shall do so;
But I must also feel it as a man:
I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me.—Did heaven
look on,
And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee I naught that I am,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls: Heaven rest them
now!

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword: let grief
Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Mal. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes,
And braggart with my tongue!—But gentle
Heaven,
Cut short all intermission; front to front,
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland, and myself;
Within my sword's length set him; if he 'scape,
Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This tune goes manly.
Come, go we 'to the king: our power is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave. Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you may;
The night is long, that never finds the day.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—DUNSIANE. A Room in the Castle.

Enter a Doctor of Physic, and a waiting Gent-woman.

Doct. I have two nights watched with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walked?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doct. A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching.—In this slumberous agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may, to me; and 'tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one; having no witness to confirm my speech.

Enter Lady Macbeth, with a taper.

Lo you, here she comes! This is her very guile;
and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her: stand close.

Doct. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continually; 'tis her command.

Doct. You see, her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut.

Doct. What is it she does now? Look how she rubs her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here's a spot.

Doct. Hark, she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say!—One; Two: Why, then 'tis time to do't:—

Hell is murky!—Fye, my lord, fye! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?

Doct. Do you mark that?

Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife; Where is she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean?—No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that: you mar all with this starting.

Doct. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: Heaven knows what she has known.

Lady M. Here's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand, Od's! Oh! oh!

Doct. What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charged.

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom, for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well,—

Gent. 'Pray God, it be, sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practice: Yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have died holly in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your night-gown; look not so pale—I tell you yet again, Banquo's buried; he cannot come out of his grave.

Doct. Even so?

Lady M. 'Tis bed, to bed; there's knocking at the gate. Come, come, come, give me your hand; What's done, cannot be undone; To bed, to bed, to bed. [Exit Lady M.

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Poul whisperings are abroad: Unnatural deeds do breed unnatural troubles: Infected minds To their deaf pillowls will discharge their secrets. More needs she the divine, than the physician.—

God, God, forgive us all! Look after her; Remove from her the means of all annoyance, And still keep eyes upon her:—So, good night: My mind she has mated, and amaz'd my sight: I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. Good night, good doctor. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Country near Dunsinane.

Enter, with drum and colours, Montrose, Cathness, Angus, Lenox, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm.

His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff.

Revenge hurn in them: for their dear causes Would, to the bleeding, and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Near Birnam wood Shall we well meet them; that way are they coming.

Cath. Who, knows, if Donalbain be with his brother?

Len. For certain, sir, he is not: I have a file

Of all the gentry; there is Siward's son,

And many unrash youths, that even now

Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant?

Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies:

Some say he's mad; others, that lesser hate him,

Do call it valiant fury: but, for certain,

He cannot buckler his distemper'd cause

Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel

His secret murders sticking on his hands;

Now minutely revolts upbraids his faith-breath;

Those he commands, move only in command;

Nothing in love: now does he feel his title

Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe

Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who then shall blame

His pester'd senses to recoil, and start,

When all that is within him does condemn

Itself, for being there.

Cath. Well, march we on,

To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd:

Meet we the medicin of the sickly weal:

And with him pour we, in our country's purge,

Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs,

To daw the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.

Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE III.—Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Macbeth, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all;

Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane,

I cannot taint with fear. What's the boy Malcolm? Was he not born of woman? The spirits that know

All mortal consequents pronounce'd me thus:

Fear not, Macbeth; no man, that's born of woman,

Shall e'er have power on thee. Then fly, false thanes, And mingle with the English epicures:

The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,

Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear.

Enter a Servant.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-fac'd loon! Where got'st thou that goose look?

Serv. There is ten thousand.

Macb. Geese, villain?

Serv. Soldiers, sir.

Macb. Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear, Thou lily-liver'd boy. What so dier's, patch?

Death of thy soul! those liken cheeks of thine Are counsellors to fear. What dier's, whey-face

Serv. The English force, so please you,

MACBETH.

ACT V.

Macb. Take thy face hence.—Seyton!—I am sick at heart.
When I behold—Seyton, I say!—This push
Will cheer me ever, or disseat me now.
I have liv'd long enough: my way of life
Is fall'n into the sea, the yellow leaf:
And that which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have; but, in their stead,
Curses not loud, but deep, mouth-honour, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, but dare
Seyton!—Enter Seyton.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure?
Macb. What news more?
Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported.

Macb. I'll fight, till from my bones my flesh be Given me my armour. [Hack'd.

Macb. 'Tis not needed yet.
Send out more horses, skirr the country round;
Hang those that talk of fear.—Give me mine armour.

How does your patient, doctor?

Doc. Not so sick, my lord,
As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies,
That keep her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that:
Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd?
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow;
Raze out the written troubles of the brain;
And, with some sweet oblivion antidote,
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff,
Which weighs upon the heart?

Doc. Therein the patient,
Must minister to himself.

Macb. Throw physic to the dogs, I'll none of it:
Come, put mine armour on; give me my staff:—
Seyton, send out. —Doctor, the thanes fly from me:
Come, sir, despatch:—If thou could'st, doctor, cast
The water of my land, find her disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee to the very echo,
That should applaud again.—Pull't off, I say.—
What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug,
Would scour these English hence?—Hearest thou
Of them?

Doc. Ay, my good lord; your royal preparation
Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it after me.—
I will not be afraid of death and bane,
Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane.
[Exit.

Doc. Were I from Dunsinane away and clear,
Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Exit.

Enter, with drum and colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD, and his son, MACDUFF, MENTEITH, CATHERINE, ANGUS, LINNOX, ROSSIE, and Soldiers, marching.

Mal. Cousins, I hope, the days are near at hand,
That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Sio. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear't before him; thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host, and make discovery
Err in report of us.

Sold. It shall be done.

Sio. We learn no other, but the confidant tyrant Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure
Our setting down before't.

Mal. 'Tis his main hope:
For where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too.

Maco. Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

Sio. The time approaches,
That will with due decision make us know
What we shall say we have, and what we owe.
Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate;
But certain issue strokes must arbitrate
Towards which, advance the war.
[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE V.—DUNSINANE. Within the Castle.

Enter, with drums and colours, MACBETH, SEYTON, and Soldiers.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls;
The cry is still, They come: Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine, and the ague, and them up.
Were they not for'd with those that should be ours,
We might have met them dreadful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. What is that noise?
[Anon, of women.

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord.

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir
As life were in't: I have supp'd full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaughter'd thoughts,
Cannot once start me. —Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb. She should have died hereafter;
There would have been a time for such a word.—
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
And then is heard no more: it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing.—

Enter a Messenger.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue; thy story quickly.
Mess. Gracious my lord,
I shall report that which I say I saw,
But know not how to do it.

Macb. Well, say, sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar, and slave!
[Striking him.

Mess. Let me endure your wrath, if't be not so;
Within this three mile may you see it coming; I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false, Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive, Till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth, I care not if thou dost for me as much.— I pall in resolution; and begin To doubt the equivocation of the fiend, That lies like truth: Fear not, till Birnam wood Do come to Dunsinane;—and now a wood Comes toward Dunsinane.—Arm, arm, and out!— If this, which he avouches, does appear, There is nor flying hence nor tarrying here. I 'gin to be a-warey of the sun, And wish the estate o' the world were now undone.— Ring the alarum bell: Blow wind! come, wreak! At least we'll die with harness on our back. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same. A Plain before the Castle.

Enter, with drums and colours, Malcolm, old Siward, Macduff, &c., and their Army, with boughs.

Mal. Now, near enough; your leavy screens throw down, And show like those you are:—You, worthy uncle, Shall, with my cousin, your right-noble son, Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff, and we, Shall take upon us what else remains to do, According to our order.

Siw. Fare you well.—
Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night, Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.

Macd. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all breath, Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death. [Exeunt. Alarums continued.]

SCENE VII.—The same. Another part of the Plain.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly, But, bear-like, I must fight the course.—What's he, That was not born of woman? Such a one Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young Siward.

Yo. Siw. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

Yo. Siw. No; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Yo. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.

Yo. Siw. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword
I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. [They fight, and young Siward is slain.

Macb. Thou wast born of woman.—But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn, Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born. [Exeunt. Alarums. Enter Macduff.

Macd. That way the noise is:—Tyrant, show thy face:
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine, My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.
I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms Are hir'd to bear their slaves; either thou, Macbeth, Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge, I shent again undeeded. There thou should'st be; By this great clatter, one of greatest note Seems bruit'd. Let me find him, fortune
And more I beg not. [Exit Siward.

Mal. This way, my lord;—the castle's gently render'd: The tyrant's people on both sides do fight:
The noble thanes do bravely in the war; The day almost itself professes yours, And little is to do.

Yo. Siw. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.

Siw. Enter, sir, the castle.

[Exeunt. Alarums.]

Re-enter Macbeth.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die On mine own sword? whiles I see lives, the gashes Do better upon them.

Re-enter Macduff.

Macd. Turn, hell-hound, turn.

Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee: But get thee back, my soul is too much charg'd With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words, My voice is in my sword; thou bloodier villain Than terms can give thee out! [They fight.

Macb. Thou lostest labour:
As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed: Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests; I bear a charmed life, which must not yield To one of woman born.

Macd. Despair thy charm;
And let the angel, whom thou still hast serv'd, Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb Untimely ripp'd.

Macb. Accursed be that tongue that tells me so, For it hath cow'd my better part of man! And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd, That palter with us in a double sense; That keep the word of promise to our ear, And break it to our hope. I'll not fight with thee.

Macb. Then yield thee, coward, And live to be the show and gaze o' the time. We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are, Painted upon a pole; and underwrit, Here may you see the tyrant.

Macb. I'll not yield, To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet, And to be bated with the rabble's curse. Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane, And thou oppos'd, being of no woman born, Yet I will try the last: Before my body I throw my warlike shield: lay on, Macduff; And damn'd be him that first cries, Hold, enough. [Exeunt, fighting.

Mal. I would, the friends we miss were safe arriv'd.

Siw. Some must go off; and yet, by these I see, So great a day as this is cheaply bought.
Mai. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.

Rosse. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt:
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Siw. Then he is dead?

Rosse. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow
Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Siw. Had he his hurts before?

Rosse. Ay, on the front.

Shv. Why, then, God's soldier be he!

Macd. Hail, king! for so thou art: Behold, where stands

The usurper's cursed head: the time is free:
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,—
Hail, king of Scotland!

All. King of Scotland, hail!

Mai. We shall not spend a large expense of time,
Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. My thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honour nam'd. What's more to do,
Which would be planted newly with the time,—
As calling home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny;
Producing forth the cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher, and his fiend-like queen:
That, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands
Took off her life;—This, and what needful else
That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
We will perform in measure, time, and place:
So thanks to all at once, and to each one,
Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]
KING JOHN.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

KING JOHN.
PRINCE HENRY, his Son, afterwards King Henry III.

Lords, Ladies, Citizens of Angiers, Sheriff, Heralds, Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, and other Attendants.

SCENE.—Sometimes in England, and sometimes in France.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—NORTHAMPTON. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, Salisbury, and others, with Chatillon.

King John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us? Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France.

In my behaviour, to the majesty,
The bond'majesty of England here.
Eli. A strange beginning;—broad'majesty!
K. John. Silence, good mother; hear the embassy.
Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son, Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim To this fair island, and the territories; To Ireland, Poitiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine; Desiring thee to lay aside the sword, Which sways usurpingly these several titles; And put the same into young Arthur's hand, Thy nephew and right royal sovereign.
K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this? Chat. The proud controul of fierce and bloody war,

To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.
K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood,
Controlment for controlment; so answer France.
Chat. Then take my king's defiance from me The furthest limit of my embassy. [mouth,
K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace:
Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France;

For ere thou canst report I will be there,
The thunder of my cannon shall be heard:
So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
And sullen presage of your own decay,—
An honourable conduct let him have:
Pembroke, look to't: Farewell, Chatillon.

[Exit Chatillon and Pembroke.

Eli. What now, my son? have I not ever said,
How that ambitious Constance would not cease,
Till she had kindled France, and all the world,
Upon the right and party of her son?
This might have been prevented, and made whole,
With very easy arguments of love;
Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.

K. John. Our strong possession, and our right,
For us.
Eli. Your strong possession, much more than your right;
Or else it must go wrong with you, and me:
So much my conscience whispers in your ear;
Which none but heaven, and you, and I, shall hear.

Enter the Sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers Essex.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy,
Come from the country to be judged by you,
That e'er I heard: Shall I produce the men?
K. John. Let them approach.—[Exit Sheriff.
Our abbeys, and our priories, shall pay
Re-enter Sheriff, with Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip, his bastard Brother.

This expedition's charge.—What men are you?
Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman,
Born in Northamptonshire; and eldest son,
As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge:
A soldier, by the honour-giving hand
Of Coeur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?
Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir?
You came not of one mother then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king,
That is well known: and, as I think, one father:
But, for the certain knowledge of that truth,
I put you o'er to heaven, and to my mother;
Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

Ell. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy mother,
And wound her honour with this diffidence.

Bast. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it;
That is my brother's plea, and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, 'a pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a-year:
Heaven guard my mother's honour, and my land!

K. John. A good blunt fellow:—Why, being younger born,
Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance?

Bast. I know not why, except to get the land.
For on my father he slanted five hundred pound a-year:
But where I be as true begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head;
But, that I am as well begot, my liege,
(Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me!) Compare our faces, and be judge yourself.
If old Sir Robert did beget us both,
And were our father, and this son like him;—
O old Sir Robert, father, on my knee
I give heaven thanks, I was not like to thee.

K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here!

Ell. He hath a trick of Coeur-de-lion's face,
The accent of his tongue affecteth him:
Do you not read some tokens of my son
In the large composition of this man?

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts.
And finds them perfect Richard.—Sirrah, speak,
What doth move you to claim your brother's land?

Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father;
With that half-face would he have all my land:
A half-faced great five hundred pound a-year!

Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,
Your brother did employ my father much:—

Bast. Well, sir, by this you cannot get my land:
Your tale must be, how he employ'd my mother.

Rob. And once despatch'd him in an embassy
To Germany, there, with the emperor,
To treat of high affairs touching that time:
The advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's;
Where how he did prevail, I shame to speak:
But truth is truth; large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay,
(As I have heard my father speak himself,) When this same lusty gentleman was got.
Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath'd
His lands to me; and took it, on his death,
That this, my mother's son, was none of his;
And, if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the name of time.
Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,
My father's land, as was my father's will.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him:
And, if she did play false, the fault was hers:
Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands
That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother,
Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,
Had of your father claim'd this son for his?
In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept
This calf, bred from his cow, from all the world;
In sooth, he might: then, if he were my brother's,
My brother might not claim him; nor your father,
Being none of his, refuse him:—This concludes,—
My mother's son did get your father's heir;
Your father's heir must have your father's land.

Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force,
To dispossess that child which is not his?

Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir,
Than was his will to get me, as I think.

Ell. Whether hadst thou rather,—be a Faulconbridge,
And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land;
Or the reputed son of Coeur-de-lion,
Lord of thy presence, and no land beside?

Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape
And I had his, sir Robert his, like him;
And if my legs were two such riding-roses,
My arms such eel-skins stuff'd; my face so thin,
That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose,
Lest men should say, Look, where three-farthings goes!
And, to his shape, were heir to all this land,
'Would I might never stir from off this place,
I'd give it every foot to have this face;
I would not be sir Nob in any case.

Ell. I like thee well; Wilt thou forsake thy Bequesth thy land to him, and follow me?
I am a soldier, and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance:
Your face hath got five hundred pounds a year;
Yet sell your face for five pence, and 'tis dear.

K. John. Nay, I would have you go before me thither.

Bast. Our country manners give our better way.

K. John. What is thy name?

K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose form thou bear'st:
Kneel thou down Philip, but arise more great;
Arise, sir Richard, and Plantagenet.

Bast. Brother, by the mother's side, give me your hand;
My father gave me honour, yours gave land:
Now blessed be the hour, by night or day
When I was got, sir Robert was away.

Ell. The very spirit of Plantagenet!—
I am thy grandame, Richard; call me so.

Bast. Madam, by chance, but not by truth:
What though?

K. John. Go, Faulconbridge; now hast thou thy desire,
A landless knight makes thee a landed 'squire.—
Come, madam, and come, Richard; we must speed
For France, for France; for it is more than need.

Bast. Brother, adieu; Good fortune come to
For thou wast got'the way of honesty [there!]
[Exeunt all but the BASTARD.

A foot of honour better than I was;
But many a many foot of land the worse.
Well, now can I make any Joan a lady:\---
Good den, sir Richard.—God-a-mercy, fellow:\---
And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter:
For new-made honour doth forget men's names;
'Tis too respective, and too sociable,
For your conversion. Now your traveller,—
He and his tooth-pick at my worship's mess;
And where my knightly stomach is suffic'd,
Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My picked man of countries:\---My dear sir, (Thuc, leaning on my elbow, I begin,)
I shall beseech you—That is question now;
And then comes answer like an ABC-book:\---
O, sir, says answer, at your best command;
At your employment; at your service, sir:\---
No sir, says question, I, sweet sir, at yours:
And so, ere answer knows what question would,
(Staying in dialogue of compliment;
And talking of the Alps, and Apennines,
The Pyrenean, and the river Po,) It draws toward supper in conclusion so.
But this is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit, like myself:
For he is but a bastard to the time,
That doth not smack of observation;
(And so am I, whether I smack, or no;) And not alone in habit and device,
Exterior form, outward accoutrement;
But from the inward motion to deliver
Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth:
Which, though I will not practise to deceive,
Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn;
For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising—
But who comes in such haste, in riding robes?
What woman-post is this? hath she no husband,
That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter Lady Faulconbridge, and James Gurney.
O me! it is my mother:—How now, good lady?
What brings you here to court so hastily?

Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother?
where is he?

That holds in chase mine honour up and down?

Bast. My brother Robert? old sir Robert's son?
Colbrand the giant, that same mighty man?
Is it sir Robert's son, that you seek so?

Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Ay, thou unreverend boy,

Sir Robert's son: Why scorn'st thou at sir Robert?
He is sir Robert's son; and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave a Gur. Good leave, good Philip. [while]

Bast. Philip?—sparrow!—James,
There's toys abroad; anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit Gurney.

Madam, I was not old sir Robert's son;
Sir Robert might have eat his part in me
Upon Good-Friday, and ne'er broke his fast:
Sir Robert could do well; Marry (to confess!) Could he get me? Sir Robert could not do it;
We know his handy work:—Therefore, good
To whom am I beholden for these limbs? [mother,
Sir Robert never holt to make this leg.

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother too,
That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine honour?
What means this scorn, thou most untoward knave?

Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,—Basilisco-like:

What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.
But, mother, I am not sir Robert's son;
I have disclaim'd sir Robert, and my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone;
Then, good my mother, let me know my father;
Some proper man, I hope; Who was it, mother?

Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself a Faucon—
Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil. [bridge?

Lady F. King Richard Coeur-de-lion was thy
By long and vehement suit I was seduced [father:
To make room for him in my husband's bed:—
Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge!—
Thou art the issue of my dear offence,
Which was so strongly urg'd, past my defence.
Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again,
Madam, I would not wish a better father.
Some sins do bear their privilege on earth,
And so doth yours: your fault was not your folly;
Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,— Subjected tribute to commanding love,—
Against whose fury and unmatched force
The awless lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's hand.
He, that perforce robs lions of their hearts,
May easily win a woman's. Ay, my mother,
With all my heart I thank thee for my father!
Who lives and dares but say, thou didst not well
When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell.
Come, lady, I will show thee to my kin;
And they shall say, when Richard me begot.
If thou hadst said him nay, it had been sin:
Who says it was, he lies; I say, 'twas not.

[Exeunt

ACT II.

SCENE I.—France. Before the Walls of Angiers.

Enter on one side, the Archduke of Austria, and Forces; on the other, Philip, King of France, and Forces; Lewis, Constance, Arthur, and Attendants.

Lew. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.—
Arthur, that great fore-runner of thy blood,
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,

By this brave duke came early to his grave:
And, for amends to his posterity,
At our importance hither is he come,
To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf;
And to rebuke the usurpation
Of thy unnatural uncle, English John;
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.

Arth. God shall forgive you Coeur-de-lion's death.
The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war:
I give you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love:
Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke. [right?]
  Lew. A noble boy! Who would not do thee.
  Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss,
As seal to this indendenture of my love;
That to my home I will no more return,
Till Angiers, and the right thou hast in France,
Together with that pale, that white-face'd shore,
Whose foot spurn't back the ocean's roaring tides,
And costs from other lands her islanders,
Even till that England, hedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes,
Even till that utmost corner of the west
Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy,
Will I not think of home, but follow arms.
  Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks,
Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength,
To make a more requital to your love.
  Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs, that lift their
In such a just and charitable war.
  K. Phi. Well then, to work; our cannon shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town.—
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To culi the plots of best advantages:—
We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy.
  Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy,
Lest unadvis'd you stain your swords with blood:
My lord Chatillon may from England bring
That right in peace, which here we urge in war;
And then we shall repent each drop of blood,
That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter Chatillon.

  K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—lo, upon thy wish,
Our messenger Chatillon is arriv'd.—
What England says, say briefly, gentle lord,
We coolly pass for thee; Chatillon, speak.
  Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,
And stir them up against a mightier task.
England, impatient of your just demands,
Hath put himself in arms; the adverse winds,
Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I:
His marches are expedient to this town,
His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him along is come the mother-queen,
An Até, stirring him to blood and strife;
With her her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain
With them a bastard of the king deceased:
And all the unsettled moulds of the land,—
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery, voluntaries,
With ladies' faces, and fierce dragons' spleens,—
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here.
In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide,
To do offence and scath in Christendom.
The interruption of their churlish drums [Drums beat.
Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand,
To parcel, or to fight; therefore, prepare.

K. Phi. How much unlook'd-for is this expedition!
  Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much
We must awake endeavour for defence;
For courage mounteth with occasion:
Let them be welcome then, we are prepar'd.

Enter King John, Elinor, Blanch, the Bastard, Flemmokr, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France; if France in peace
Our just and lineal entrance to our own!
If not; bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven!
Whiles we, God's wrathful agent, do correct
Their proud contempt that beat his peace to heaven.
  K. Phi. Peace be to England; if that war return
From France to England, there to live in peace!
England we love; and, for that England's sake,
With burden of our armour here we sweat:
This toil of ours should be a work of thine;
But thou from loving England art so far,
That thou hast not, under-wrought his lawful king,
Cut off the sequence of posterity,
Outfaced infant state, and done a rape
Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
Look here upon thy brother Geffrey's face:—
These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his
This little abstract doth contain that large,
Which died in Geffrey; and the hand of time
Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume
That Geffrey was thy elder brother born,
And this his son; England was Geffrey's right,
And this is Geffrey's. In the name of God,
How comes it then, that thou art call'd a king,
When living blood doth in these temples beat,
Which owe the crown that thou o'er-masterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission, France,
To draw my answer from thy articles?
  K. Phi. From that supremal judge, that stirs good thoughts
In any breast of strong authority,
To look into the plots and stains of right.
That judge hath made me guardian to this boy
Under whose warrant, I impeach thy wrong;
And, by whose help, I mean to chastise it.
  K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority.
  K. Phi. Excuse; it is to beat usurping down.
  Eli. Who is it, thou dost call usurper, France?
  Const. Let me make answer;—thou usurping son.
  Eli. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king;
That thou may'st be a queen, and check the world!
  Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true,
As thine was to thy husband: and this boy
Liker in feature to his father Geffrey,
Than thou and John in manners; being as like,
As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think,
His father never was so true begot;
It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.
  Eli. There's a good mother, boy, that blasts thy father.
  Const. There's a good grandam, boy, that would Peace! [Blot thee.
  Bast. Hear the crier.
  Aust. What the devil art thou?
  Bast. One that will play the devil, sir, with you
An 'a may catch your hide and you alone.
You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,
Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard;
I'll smoke your skin-cost, an I catch you right; Sirrah, look to 't; 't faith, I will, 't faith.

Blanch. O, well did he become that lion's robe, That did disrobe the lion of that robe!
Best. It lies as sightly on the back of him, As great Alcides' shoes upon an ass:—
But, ass, I'll take that burden from your back; Or lay on that, shall make your shoulders crack.
Arst. What cracker is this same, that deas our ears With this abundance of superfluous breath?
K. Phi. Lewis, determine what we shall do straight.

Lew. Women and fools, break off your conference. —
King John, this is the very sum of all,—
England, and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:—
Wilt thou resign them, and lay down thy arms?
K. John. My life as soon:—I do defy thee,
Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand;
And, out of my dear love, I'll give thee more
Than e'er the coward hand of France can win:
Submit thee, boy.

Eth. Come to thy grandam, child.
Const. Do, child, go to' grandam, child;
Give grandam kingdom, and it' grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
There's a good grandam.

Arth. Good my mother, peace!
I would, that I were low laid in my grave;
I am not worth this coall that's made for me.

Eth. His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.

Const. Now shame upon you, whe'r she does, or no!
His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,
Draw those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee;
Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be bibri'd
To do him justice, and revenge on you.

Eth. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!
Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth!
Call not me slanderer; thou, and thine, usurp
The dominations, royalties, and rights,
Of this oppressed boy: This is thy eldest son's son;
Infamous in nothing but in thee;
Thy sins are visited in this poor child;
The canon of the law is laid on him,
Being but the second generation
Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.

K. John. Bedlam, have done.

Const. I have butt this to say,—
That he's not only plagued for her sin,
But God hath made her sin and her the plague
On this removed issue, plaguer'd for her,
And with her plague, her sin; his injury
Her injury,—the beadle to her sin;
All punish'd in the person of this child,
And all for her; A plague upon her!

Eth. Thou unadvised scold, I can produce
A will, that bars the title of thy son.

Const. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked will;
A woman's will; a canker'd grandam's will!

K. Phi. Peace, lady; pause, or be more tempestuous; it ill beseems this presence, to cry aim:

To these ill-tuned repetitions.—

Some trumpet summon hither to the walls

These men of Angiers; let us hear them speak,
Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpets sound. Enter Citizens upon the walls.

1 Cit. Who is it, that hath war'd us to the walls?
K. Phi. 'Tis France, for England.
You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects,—
K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects,
Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle.
K. John. For our advantage;—Therefore, hear us first.—

These flags of France, that are advanced here
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endemagement:
The cannons have their bowls full of wrath;
And ready mounted are they, to spit forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls:
All preparation for a bloody siege,
And merciless proceeding by these French,
Confront your city's eyes, your winking gates
And, but for our approach, those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about,
By the compulsion of their ordinance
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide havoc made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But, on the sight of this, your lawful king,—
Who painfully, with much expedient march,
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscratch'd your city's threaten'd cheeks,—
Behold, the French, amaz'd, vouchsafe a parle:
And now, instead of bullets wrap'd in fire,
To make a shaking fever in your walls,
They shoot but calm words, folded up in smoke
To make a faithless error in your ears:
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
And let us in, your king; whose labour'd spirits,
Forewarned in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your citadels.

K. Philip. When I have said, make answer to us both.

Lo, in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet;
Son to the elder brother of this man,
And king o'er him, and all that he enjoys:
For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town;
Being no further enemy to you,
Than the constraint of hospitable zeal,
In the relief of this oppressed child,
Religiously provokes. Be pleased then
To pay that duty, which you truly owe,
To him that owes it; namely, this young prince:
And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up;
Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven:
And, with a blessed and unvex'd retire,
With unjack'd swords, and helmets all unbruis'd.
We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, wives, and you, in peace
But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the roundure of your old-fac'd walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war;
Though all these English, and their discipline,
Were harbour'd in their rude circumference.
Then, tell us, shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challeng'd it?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stalk in blood to our possession?

1 Cit. In brief, we are the king of England's subjects;
For him, and in his right, we hold this town.
K. John. Acknowledge then, the king, and let me in.

1 Cit. That can we not: but he that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
Have we ransack'd our gates against the world.
K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove the king?
And, if not that, I bring you witnesses,
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed.—
Bast. Bastards, and else.
K. John. To verify our title with their lives.
K. Phi. As many, and as well-born bloods as Bast. Some bastards too.
[those,
K. Phi. Stand in his face to contradict his claim.
1 Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthiest,
We, for the worthiest, hold the right from both.
K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those
That to their everlasting residence,
[souls,
Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet,
In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king!
K. Phi. Amen, Amen!—Mount chevaliers! to arms!
Bast. St. George,—that swing'd the dragon, and cour'since,
Sits on his horseback at mine hostess' door,
Teach us some fence!—Sirrah, were I at home,
At your den, sirrah, [to Austria] with your [i'd set an ox-head to your lion's hide, [lieness,
And make a monster of you.
Aust. Peace! no more.
Bast. O, tremble; for you hear the lion roar.
K. John. Up higher to the plain; where we'll set forth,
In best appointment, all our regiments.
Bast. Speed then to take advantage of the field.
K. Phi. It shall be so;—[to Lewis] and at the other hill
Command the rest to stand. God, and our right!
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same.

Alarums and Exercisces; then a Retreat. Enter a French Herald, with trumpets, to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,
And let young Arthur, duke of Bretagne, in;
Who, by the hand of France, this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother,
Whose sons lie scatter'd on the bleeding ground;
Many a widow's husband groveling lies,
Coldly embracing the discoul'd earth;
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;
Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
To enter conquerors, and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne, England's king, and yours.

Enter an English Herald, with trumpets.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells;

King John, your king and England's, doth ap-
Commander of this hot malicious day! [proach,
Their armours, that march'd hence so silver-bright,
Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood;
There stuck no plume in any English crest,
That is removed by a staff of France;
Our colours do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first march'd forth;
And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dyed in the dying slaughter of their foes;
Open your gates, and give the victors way.
Cit. Heralds, from off our towers we might be-
From first to last, the onset and retire [hold,
Of both your armies; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured:
Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answer'd
blows;
Strength match'd with strength, and power cor-
fronted power:
Both are alike: and both alike we like.
One must prove greatest: while they weigh so ever,
We hold our town for neither; yet for both.

Enter, at one side, King John, with his power;
Elidor, Blanch, and the Bastard; at the other, King Philip,
Lewis, Austria, and Forces.
K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?
Say, shall the current of our right run on?
Whose passage vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel, and o'erswell
With course disturb'd even thy confining shores;
Unless thou let his silver water keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean.
K. Phi. England, thou hast not sav'd one drop of blood
In this hot trial, more than we of France;
Rather, lost more: And by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks,—
Before we will lay down our just-born arms,
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we
Or add a royal number to the dead;
[bear,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slanders coupled to the name of kings.
Bast. Ha, majesty! how high thy glory towers,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire!
ob, now doth Death line his dead chaps with steel;
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
And now he feasts, moulting the flesh of men,
in undetermin'd differences of kings.—
Why stand these royal fronts amaz'd thus?
Cry, havoc, kings! back to the stained field,
You equal potions, fiery-kindled spirits!
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The other's peace; till then, blows, blood, and death!
K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet admit?
K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who's your king?
1 Cit. The king of England, when we know the king.
K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.
K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy
And bear possession of our person here;
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.
1 Cit. A greater power than we, denies all this
And, till it be undoubtedly, we do lock
Our former scuffle in our strong-barr'd gates:
KING JOHN.

Scene II.

King'd of our fears; until our fears, resolv'd,
Be by some certain king purg'd and depos'd.

Bast. By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers flout you, kings;
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Your royal presences be rul'd by me;
Do like the mutinies of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while, and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town:
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon charged to the mouths;
Till their soul-fearing cloures have brawldown
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unforeseen desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
That done, disserve your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again;
Turn face to face, and bloody point to point.
Then, in a moment, fortune shall cull forth
Out of one side her happy minion;
To whom in favour she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.
How like you this wild counsel, mighty states?
Smaks it not something of the policy?

K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well:—France, shall we knot our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground;
Then, after, fight who shall be king of it?

Bast. An if thou hast the mettle of a king,—
Being wrong'd, as we are, by this peevish town,—
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls:
And when that we have dash'd them to the ground,
Why, then defy each other: and, pell-mell,
Make work upon ourselves, for heaven or hell!

K. Phi. Let it be so:—Say, where will you assault?

K. John. We from the west will send deseru-
Into this city's bosom.

Bast. I from the north.

K. Phi. Our thunder from the south,
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.

Bast. O prudent discipline! From north to south;
Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth.

I'll stir them to it:—Come, away, away!

1 C't. Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe awhile to stay,
And I shall show you peace, and fair-fac'd league;
Win you this city without stroke or wound;
Itseve those breathing lives to die in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field:
Perséver not, but hear me, mighty kings.

K. John. Speak on, with favour; we are bent to hear.

1 C't. That daughter there of Spain, the lady Blanch,
Is near to England; Look upon the years
Of Lewis the Dauphin, and that lovely maid:
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should be find it fairer than in Blanch?
If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch?
If love ambitious sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch?

Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth.
Is the young Dauphin every way complete:
If not complete, O say, he is not she;
And she again wants nothing, to name want.
If want it be not, that she is not he:
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such a she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fullness of perfection lies in him.
O, two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in:
And two such shores to two such streams made one,
Two such controlling hounds shall you be, kings,
To these two princes, if you marry them.
This union will do more than battery can,
To our fast-closed gates; for, at this match,
With swifter spleen than powder can enforce,
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope,
And give you entrance; but, without this match,
The sea enraged is not half so deaf,
Lions more confident, mountains and rocks
More free from motion; no, not death himself
In mortal fury half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city.

Bast. Here's a stay,
That shakes the rotten carcass of old death
Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks, and Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
As maids of thirteen do of puppies dogs!
What cannoneer begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon, fire, and smoke, and bounce;
He gives the bastinado with his tongue;
Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his,
But buffets better than a fist of France:
Zounds! I was never so bethump'd with words,
Since I first call'd my brother's father, dad.

Eli. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match;
Give with our niece a dowry large enough:
For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie
Thy now unsur'd assurance to the crown,
That you green boy shall have no sun to rape
The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit.
I see a yielding in the looks of France;
Mark, how they whisper: urge them while their
Are capable of this ambition:

Lest zeal, now melted, by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was.

1 C't. Why answer not the double majesties
This friendly treaty of our threaten'd town?

K. Phi. Speak, England, first, that hath been forward first
To speak unto this city: What say you?

K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely
Can in this book of beauty read, I love,
Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:
For Anjou, and fair Touraine, Maine, Poictiers,
And all that we upon this side the seas
(Except this city now by us besieg'd,)
Find liable to our crown and dignity,
Shall gild her bridal bed; and make her rich
In titles, honours, and promotions,
As she in beauty, education, blood,
Holds hand with any princess of the world.

K. Phi. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's face.

Lew. I do, my lord, and in her eye I find
KING JOHN.

ACT III.

Will give her sadness very little cure.—
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow lady? In her right we came;
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way,
To our own vantage

K. John. We will heal up all,
For we'll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne,
And earl of Richmound; and this rich fair town
We'll make him lord of.—Call the lady Constance
Some speedy messenger bid her repair
To our solemnity: I trust we shall,
If not fill up the measure of her will,
Yet in some measure satisfy her heart,
That we shall stop her exclamation.
Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
To this undook'd-for unprepared pomp.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.—The Citizens retire from the walls.

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition.
John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part:
And France, (whose armour confection buckled
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field, [on;
As God's own soldier,) rounded in the ear
With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil;
That broker that still breaks the pate of faith;
That daily break-vow; he that wins all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids:—
Who having no external thing to lose
But the word maid,—cheats the poor maid of that;
That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commo-
Commodity, the blase of the world; [dilately—
The world, who of itself is peace well,
Made to run even, upon even grounds;
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent:—
And this same bias, this commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word
Clapp'd on the outward eye of fickle France,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid,
From a resolv'd and honourable war,
To a most base and vile-concluded peace.—
And why rai I on this commodity?—
But for because he hath not woo'd me yet:
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm:
But for my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, railth on the rich.
Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say,—there is no sin, but to be rich
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say,—there is no vice, but beggary:
Since kings break faith upon commodity,
Gain, be my lord! for I will worship thee! [Exeit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. The French King's Tent.

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace!
False blood to false blood join'd! Gone to be friends!
Shall Lewis have Blanch? and Blanch those provinces?
It is not so; thou hast mis-spoke, mis-heard;

A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
The shadow of myself form'd in her eye;
Which, being but the shadow of your son,
Becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow:
I do protest, I never lov'd myself,
Till now infixed I beheld myself,
Drawn in the flattening table of her eye.

[Whispers with Blanch.

Bast. Drawn in the flattening table of her eye?—
Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow—
And quarter'd in her heart,—he doth eazy
Himself love's traitor! This is pity now,
That hang'd, and drawn, and quarter'd, there
In such a love, so vile a lust as he! [should be,
Blanch. My uncle's will in this respect, is mine.
If he see aught in you, that makes him like,
That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will;
Or, if you will, (to speak more properly,) I will enforce it easily to my love.
Further I will not flatter you, my lord,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Than this,—that nothing do I see in you, (Though churlish thoughts themselves should be your judge,)
That I can find should merit any hate.

K. John. What say these young ones?—What say you, my niece?

Blanch. That she is bound in honour still to do
What you in wisdom shall vouchsafe to say.

K. John. Speak then, prince Dauphin; can you love this lady?

Leu. Nay, as much as if I can refrain from love;
For I do love her most unfeignedly.

K. John. Then do I give Volquessen, Tournaire, Maine,
Pocicters, and Anjou, these five provinces,
With her to thee; and this addition more,
Full thirty thousand marks of English coin.—
Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withal,
Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It likes us well;—Young princes close your hands.

Aust. And your lips too; for, I am well assur'd,
That I did so, when I was first assur'd.

K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made;
For at saint Mary's chapel, presently,
The rites of marriage shall be solemniz'd.—
Is not the lady Constance in this troop?—
I know, she is not; for this match made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much:
Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows.

Leu. She is sad and passionate at your highness' tent.

K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have made,

Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again:
It cannot be; thou dost but say, 'tis so:
I trust, I may not trust thee; for thy word
Is but the vain breath of a common man:
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man;
I have a king's oath to the contrary.
Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening me,
For I am sick, and capable of fears;
Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;
A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears;
And though thou now confess, thou didst but jest,
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son?
What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o'er its bounds?
Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?
Then speak again; not all thy former tale,
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.
Sal. As true, as, I believe, thou think'st false,
That give you cause to prove my saying true.
Const. O, if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,
Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die;
And let belief and life encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall, and die.—
Lewis marry Blanch! O, boy, then where art thou?
France friend with England! what becomes of me?
Fellow, be gone: I cannotbrook thy sight;
This news hath made thee a most ugly man.
Sal. What other harm have I, good lady, done,
But spoke the harm that is by others done?
Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is,
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.
Arth. I do beseech you, madam, be content,
If thou, that bid'st me be content, wert
Ugly, and sand'rous to thy mother's womb, [grin,
Full of unpleasing blot's, and sightless stains,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks,
I would not care, I then would be content;
For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown.
But thou art fair; and at thy birth, dear boy!
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great;
Of nature's gifts thou may'st with lilies boast,
And with the half-blown rose: but fortune, O!
She is corrupted, chang'd, and won from thee;
She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John;
And with her golden hand hath pluck'd O on France
To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
And made his majesty the bawd to theirs.
France is a bawd to fortune, and king John;
That strumpet fortune, that usurping John:—
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forsworn?
Envenom him with words; or get thee gone,
And leave these woes alone, which I alone,
Am bound to under-bear.
Pardon me, madam, I may not go without you to the kings.
Const. Thou may'st, thou shalt, I will not go with thee:
I will instruct my sorrows to be proud:
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.
To me, and to the state of my great grief,
Let kings assemble; for my grief's so great,
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up: here I and sorrow sit;
Here is my throne, by kings come bow to it.

Enter KING JOHN, KING PHILIP, LEWIS, BLANCH, ELMOR, BASTARD, AUSTRIA, AND ATTENDANTS.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter; and this blessed Ever in France shall be kept festival; [day,
To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist;
Turning, with splendor of his precious eye,
The meagre cloudy earth to glittering gold:
The yearly course, that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holy day.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holy day!—[Rising.

What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done?
That it in golden letters should be set,
Among the high tides, in the calendar?
Nay, rather, turn this day out of the week;
This day of shame, oppression, perjury;
Or, if it must stand still, let wives with-child
Pray, that their burdens may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be cross'd:
But on this day, let scamen fear no wreck;
No bargains break, that are not this day made:
This day, all things begun come to ill end;
Yea, faith itself to hollow falseshold change!

K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause
To curse the fair proceedings of this day.
Have I not sworn to you my majesty?

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit,
Resembling majesty; which, being touch'd, and tried,
Proves valueless: You are forsworn, forsworn;
You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood,
But now in arms you strengthen it with yours;
The grapping vigour and rough frown of war,
Is cold in amity and painted peace,
And our oppression hath made up this league:—
Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjur'd kings!
A widow cries; be husband to me, heavens!
Let not the hours of this ungodly day
Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset,
Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings!
Hear me, O, hear me!

Aust. Lady Constance, peace.

Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a war.

O Lymoges! O Austria! thou dost shame
That bloody spoil: Thou slave, thou wretch, thou
Thou little villain, great in villainy!
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
Thou fortune's champion? that dost never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by
To teach thee safety!—thou art perjur'd too,
And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool; to brag and stamp, and swear,
Upon my party! thou cold-blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Heen sworn my soldier? bidding me depend
Upon thy tears, thy fortune, and thy strength?
And dost thou now fall over to my foes!
Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame!
And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs!

Aust. O, that a man should speak those words
to me!

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. Thou dar'st not say so, villain, for thy life.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

K. John. We like not this; thou dost forget yself.

Enter PANDURIN.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

Z 2
Pand. Hail, you anointed deities of heaven!—To thee, King John, my holy errand is. I Pandurph, of fair Milan cardinal, And from pope Innocent the legate here, Do, in his name, religiously demand, Why thou against the church, our holy mother, So wilfully dost spurn; and, for force perforce, Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop Of Canterbury, from that holy see?—This, in our 'foresaid holy father's name, Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories, Can task the free breath of a sacred king? Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous, To charge me to an answer, as the pope. Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England, Add thus much more,—That no Italian priest Shall sit the or toll in our dominions: But as we under heaven are supreme head, So, under him, that great supremacy, Where we do reign, we will alone uphold, Without the assistance of a mortal hand: So tell the pope; all reverence set apart, To him, and his usurp'd authority.

K. Phi. Brother of England, you blaspheme in

K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christendom, Are led so grossly by this meddling priest, Dreading the curse that money may buy out; And, by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust, Purchase corrupted pardon of a man, Who, in that sale, sells pardon from himself; Though you, and all the rest, so grossly led, This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish; Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then by the lawful power that I have, That shall stand curs'd, and excommunicate: And blessed shall he be, that doth revolv From his allegiance to an heretic; And meritorious shall that hand be call'd, Canonized, and worship'd as a saint, That takes away by any secret course Thy hateful life.

Const. O, lawful let it be, That I have room with Rome to curse a while! Good father cardinal, cry thou, amen, To my keen curses: for, without my wrong, There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pand. There's law and warrant, lady, for my curse.

Const. And for mine too; when law can do no Let it be lawful, that law bar no wrong: [right, Law cannot give my child his kingdom here; For he, that holds his kingdom, holds the law: Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong, How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse, Let go to the hand of that arch-heretic; And raise the power of France upon his head, Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

Edi. Look'st thou pale, France? do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that, devil! lest that France repent, And, by disjointing hands, hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on his recreant limbs.

Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs,

Because—

Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.

K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal?

Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?

Lew. Bethe think you, father; for the difference Is, purchase of a heavy curse from Rome, Or the light loss of England for a friend:

Forego the easier.

Blanch. That's the curse of Rome.

Blanch. The lady Constance speaks not from her faith, But from her need.

Const. O, if thou grant my need. Which only lives but by the death of faith, That need must needs infer this principle,— That faith would live again by death of need: O, then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up; Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down.

K. John. The king is mov'd, and answers not to this.

Const. O, be remov'd from him, and answer well.

Aust. Do so, king Philip; hang no more in doubt.

Bast. Hang nothing but a calf's-skin, most sweet love.

K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what to say.

Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee more, If thou stand excommunicate, and curs'd?

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours, And tell me, how you would bestow yourself. This royal hand and mine are newly knit: And the conjunction of our inward souls Married in league, coupled and link'd together With all religious strength of sacred vows; The latest breath that gave the sound of words, Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love, Between our kingdoms, and our royal selves; And even before this truce, but new before,— No longer than we well could wash our hands, To clap this royal bargain up of peace,— Heaven knows, they were besneear'd and over-stain'd.

With slaughter's pencil; where revenge did paint The fearful difference of incensed kings: And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood, So newly join'd in love, so strong in both. Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret?

Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven, Make such unconstant children of ourselves, As now again to snatch our palm from palm; Unwear faith sworn; and on the marriage-bed Of smiling peace to march a bloody host, And make a riot on the gentle brow Of true sincerity? O holy sir,

My reverend father, let it not be so: Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose Some gentle order; and then we shall be bless'd To do your pleasure, and continue friends.

Pand. All form is formless, order orderless, Save what is opposite to England's love. Therefore, to arms, be champion of our church! Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
A mother's curse, on her revolting son.
France, thou may'st hold a serpent by the tongue,
A caged lion by the mortal paw,
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth.
Than keep in peace the hand which thou dost hold.
K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand but not my faith.

Pand. So mak'st thou faith an enemy to faith;
And, like a civil war, set'st oath to oath,
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy vow
First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform'd;
That is, to be the champion of our church!
What since thou swear'st, is sworn against thyself,
And may not be performed by thyself.
For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss.
Is not amiss when it is truly done;
And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it:
The better act of purposes mistook
Is, to mistake again; though indirect,
Yet indirectness thereby grows direct,
And falsehood, falsehood cures; as fire cools fire,
Within the scorched veins of one new burn'd.
It is religion, that doth make vows kept;
But thou hast sworn against religion;
By what thou swear'st, against the thing thou swear'st;
And mak'st an oath the surety for thy truth
Against an oath: The truth thou art unseer
To swear, swear only not to be forsworn;
Else, what a mockery should it be to swear?
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;
And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear,
Therefore, thy latter vows, against thy first,
Is in thyself rebellion to thyself;
And better conquest never can'st thou make,
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against those giddy loose suggestions:
Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them: but, if not, then know,
The peril of our curses light on thee;
So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off,
But, in despair, die under their black weight.
Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!

Bast. Will't not be?

Wilt not a calf's-skin stop that mouth of thine?

Lew. Father, to arms!

Blanch. Upon thy wedding day?
Against the blood that thou hast married?
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd men?
Shall braying trumpets, and loud churlish drums,—
Clamours of hell,—be measures to our pomp?
O husband, hear me!—ah, slack, how new
Is husband in my mouth!—even for that name,
Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,
Upon my knee I beg; go not to arms
Against mine uncle.

Const. O, upon my knee,
Made hard with kneading, I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
Fore-thought by heaven.

Blanch. Now shall I see thy love; What motive may
Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?

Const. That which upholdeth him that thee upheolds,
His honour: O, that thine honour, Lewis, thine honour!

Lew. I muse, your majesty doth seem so cold,
When such profound respects do pull you on.

Pand. I will denounce a curse upon his head.

K. Phi. Thou shalt not need:—England, I'll fall from thee.

Const. O fair return of banish'd majesty!

Eli. O foul revolt of French inconstancy!

K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

Bast. Old time the clock-setter, that bale sexton time,
Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue.

Blanch. The sun's o'ercast with blood: Fair day adieu!

Which is the side that I must go withal?
I am with both: each army hath a hand;
And, in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl assunder, and dismember me.

Hubbard, I cannot pray that thou may'st win;
Uncle, I need must pray that thou may'st lose;
Father, I may not wish the fortune thine;

Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive:
Whoevers wins, on that side shall I lose;

Assured loss before the match be play'd.

Leev. Lady, with me; with me thy fortune lies.

Blanch. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.

[Exit Bastard.

France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath;
A rage, whose heat hath this condition,
That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
The blood, and dearest-valu'd blood of France.

K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn

To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire:

Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

K. John. No more than he that threats.—To arms let's lie!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Plains near ANGERS.

Alarums; Excursions. Enter the Bastard, with Austria's head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous
Some airy devil hovers in the sky, [hot;
And pours down mischief. Austria's head, lie there;
While Philip breathes.

Enter King John, Arthur, and Hubert.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy:—Philip, make
My mother is assailed in our tent,
[up:
And ta'en, I fear.

Bast. My lord, I rescue'd her;
Her highness is in safety, fear you not;
But on, my liege; for very little pains
Will bring this labour to an happy end.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Alarums; Excursions; Retreat. Enter King John,
ELINOR, ARTHUR, the Bastard, HUBERT, and Lords.

K. John. So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind,
[To Elinor.
So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad:
[To Arthur.
Thy damsel loves thee; and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.
[grief

Arth. O, this will make my mother die with K. John. Cousin, [to the Bastard.] away for England; haste before:
And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; imprison'd angels
KING JOHN.

Set thou at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon:
Use our commission in his utmost force. [back,
Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me
When gold and silver beckons me to come on.
I leave your highness:—Grandam, I will pray
(If ever I remember to be holy),
For your fair safety; so I kiss your hand.
Eli. Farewell, my gentle cousin.
K. John.

Eli. Come hither, little kinsman; mark, a word.
[She takes Arthur aside.
K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O my gentle
Hubert,
We owe thee much; within this wall of flesh
There is a soul, counts thee her creditor,
And with advantage means to pay thy lover:
And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath
Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished.
Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,—
But I will fit it with some better time.
By heaven, Hubert, I am almost asham’d
To say what good respect I have of thee.
Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty.
K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet:
But thou shalt have: and creep time ne’er so slow,
Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good.
I had a thing to say,—But let it go:
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gauds,
To give me audience:—If the midnight bell
Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
Sound one unto the drowsy race of night;
If this same were a church-yard where we stand,
And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs;
Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,
Had bak’d thy blood, and made it heavy, thick,
(Which, else, runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making the idiot, laughter, keep men’s eyes,
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment—
A passion hateful to my purposes;) Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone,
Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words;
Then, in despite of brooded watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:
But ah, I will not:—Yet I love thee well;
And, by my troth, I think, thou lov’st me well.
Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjure to my act,
By heaven, I’d do’t.
K. John. Do not I know, thou wouldst?
Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
On yon young boy: I’ll tell thee what, my friend.
He is a very serpent in my way;
And, wheresoe’er this foot of mine doth tread,
He lies before me: Dost thou understand me?
Thou art his keeper.
Hub.
Hub. My lord?
K. John. He shall not live.
K. John. Enough.—
I could be merry now: Hubert, I love thee.
Well, I’ll not say what I intend for thee:
Remember!—Madam, fare you well;
I’ll send those powers o’er to your majesty.
Eli. My blessing go with thee!
K. John. For England, cousin:
Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
With all true duty.—On toward Calais, ho!
[Execut.

SCENE IV.—The same. The French King’s Tent.
Enter King Philip, Lewis, Pandulph, and Attendants.
K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of convicted sail
Is scatter’d and disjoin’d from fellowship.
Pand. Courage and comfort! all shall yet go well.
K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so
And bloody England into England gone,
O’erbearing interruption, spite of France?
Low. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:
So hot a speed with such advice dispos’d,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: Who hath read or heard,
Of any kindred action like to this?
K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this praise,
So we could find some pattern of our shame.

Enter Constance.

K. Phi. Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;
Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,
In the vile prison of afflicted breath:—
I pr’ythee, lady, go away with me.

Const. No, now! now see the issue of your peace!
K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle Constance!

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death:—O amiable lovely death!
Thou odorous stench! sound rottenness!
Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones;
And put my eye-balls in thy vauntly brows;
And ring these fingers with thy household worms;
And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust,
And be a carrion monster like thyself:
Come, grin on me; and I will think thou smil’st,
And that thine essence is as thy wife! Misery’s love,
O, come to me!
K. Phi. O fair affliction, peace.

Const. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry—
O, that my tongue were in the thunder’s mouth!
Then with a passion would I shake the world;
And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot hear a lady’s feeble voice,
Which scorns a modern invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.

Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so;
I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine;
My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey’s wife;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:
I am not mad:—I would to heaven, I were!
For then, ’tis like I should forget myself:
O, if I could, what grief should I forget!—
Preach some philosophy to make me mad.
And thou shalt be canoniz'd, cardinal;
For, being not mad, but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason
How I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang myself:
If I were mad, I should forget my son;
Or madly think, a babe of clouts were he:
I am not mad; too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.
  K. Phi. Bind up those tresses: O, what love I
In the fair multitude of those her hairs! [note
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
Even to that drop ten thousand wiry friends
Do gloe themselves in sociable grief;
Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sticking together in calamity.
  Const. To England if you will.
  K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.
  Const. Yes, that I will; And wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their bonds; and cried aloud,
O that these hands could so redeem my son,
As they have given these hairs their liberty!
But now I envy at their liberty,
And will again commit them to their bands,
Because my poor child is a prisoner.
And, father cardinal, I have heard you say,
That we shall see and know our friends in heaven:
If that be true, I shall see my boy again;
For, since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
To him that did but yesterday suspire,
There was not such a gracious creature born.
But now will canker-sorrow eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost;
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit;
And so he'll die: and, rising so again,
When I shall meet him in the court of heaven
I shall not know him: therefore, never, never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more!
  Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.
  Const. He talks to me, that never had a son.
  K. Phi. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.
  Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me;
Puts on his pretty looks; repeats his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;
Then, have I reason to be fond of grief.
Fare you well: had you such a loss as I,
I could give better comfort than you do.——
I will not keep this form upon my head,
[Tearing off her head-dress.
When there is such disorder in my wit.
O lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!
My life, my joy, my food, my all--the world!
My solace, comfort, and my sorrows' cure! [Exit.
  K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her.
[Exit.
  Lew. There's nothing in this world, can make me
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale, [joy:
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man;
And bitter shame hath spoiled the sweet world's taste,
That it yields naught, but shame, and bitterness.
  Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repair and health,
The face is stranger, and the eye, despite,
On their departure most of all show evil:
What have you lost by losing of this day?
  Lew. All days of glory, joy, and happiness.
  Pand. If you had won it, certainly, you had.
No, no: when fortune means to men most good,
She looks upon them with a threatening eye.
'Tis strange to think how much King John hath lost
In this which he accounts so clearly won:
Are not you grieved, that Arthur is his prisoner?
  Lew. As heartily, as he is glad he hath him.
  Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood
Now hear me speak, with a prophetic spirit;
For even the breath of what I mean to speak
Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub,
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foot to England's throne; and, therefore, mark,
John hath seiz'd Arthur; and it cannot be,
That, whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins,
The mis plac'd John should entertain an hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest:
A sceptre, snatch'd with an unruly hand,
Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd:
And he, that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up:
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;
So be it, for it cannot be but so.
  Lew. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?
  Pand. You, in the right of lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claim that Arthur did.
  Lew. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.
  Pand. How green are you, and fresh in this old world!
John lays you plots; the times conspire with you:
For he, that steeps his safety in true blood,
Shall find but bloody safety, and untrue.
This act, so evilly born, shall cool the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal:
That none so small advantage shall step forth,
To check his reign, but they will cherish it;
No natural exhalation in the sky,
No scope of nature, no distemper'd day,
No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck away his natural cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, pressages, and tongues of heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.
  Lew. May be, he will not touch young Arthur's
But hold himself safe in his imprisonment.
  Pand. O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that news he dies: and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change;
And pick strong matter of revolt, and wrath,
Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John.
Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot;
And, O, what better matter breeds for you,
Than I have speak'd?—the bastard Faulconbridge
Is now in England, rasacking the church,
Offending charity: If but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side;
Or, as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. O noble Dauphin.
Go with me to the king: 'Tis wonderful,
What may be wrought out of their discontent
Now that their souls are top-full of offence:
For England he accounts so clearly won:
  Lew. Strong reasons make strong actions: Let us go;
If you say, ay, the king will not say, no. [Exeunt.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Hubert and Two Attendants.

Hub. Heat me these iron hot; and, look thou
Within the arras: when I strike my foot [stand
Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth;
And bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Fast to the chair: be heedful: hence, and watch.

[Aside.]

I Attend. I hope, your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples! Fear not you: look 'to't. [Exit Attendants.

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter Arthur.

Arth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.

Arth. As little prince (having so great a title
To be more prince,) as may be.—You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me!

Methinks, no body should be sad but I:
Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my christendom,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be as merry as the day is long:
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practises more harm to me:
He is afraid of me, and I of him:
Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son?
No, indeed, is't not; And I would to heaven,
I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. If I talk to him, with his innocent prate
He will awake my mercy, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sudden, and despatch. [Aside.

Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to:
In sooth, I would you were a little sick; [day:
That I might sit all night, and watch with you:
I warrant, I love you more than you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my bo-

Read here, young Arthur. [Showing a paper.] How now, foolish rheum! [Aside.

Turning disputive torture out of door!
I must be brief; lest resolution drop
Out at mine eyes, in tender womanish tears.—

Can you not read it? Is it not fair writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:
Must you with hot iron burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows,
(The best I had, a princess wrou'th it me.)
And I did never ask it you again;
And with my hand at midnight held your head;
And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time;
Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your grief?

Or, what good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still,
And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;
But you at your sick service had a prince.
Nay, you may think, my love was crafty love,

And call it, cunning; Do, an if you will:
If heaven be pleas'd that you must use me ill,

Why, then you must.—Will you put out mine
These eyes, that never did, nor never shall, [eyes?
So much as frown on you?

Hub. I have sworn to do it:

And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah, none, but in this iron age, would do
The iron of itself, though heat red-hot, [it!

Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears,
And quench his fiery indignation,
Even in the matter of mine innocence;

Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.

Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?

An if an angel should have come to me,
And told me, Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believ'd no tongue, but Hubert's.

Hub. Come forth! [Stamps

Re-enter Attendants, with cords, irons, &c.

Do as I bid you.

Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out,

Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men!

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

Arth. Alas, what need you be so boist'rousrough?

I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.

For heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

Nay, hear me, Hubert! drive these men away,

And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;

I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,

Nor look upon the iron aguerly:

Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,

Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.

I Attend. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deed. [Exit Attendants.

Arth. Alas! I then have chid away my friend;

He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart:—

Let him come back, that his compassion may

Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Arth. O heaven!—that there were but a mote in yours,

A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,

Any annoyance in that precious sense!

Then, feeling what small things are boist'rous there,

Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise? go to, hold your tongue.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:

Let me hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert!

Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,

So I may keep mine eyes: O, spare mine eyes;

Though to no use, but still to look on you!

Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold,

And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy.

Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief,

Being create for comfort, to be us'd

In undeserv'd extremes: See else yourself:

There is no malice in this burning coal;
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

Arth. And if you do, you will but make it blusht,
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:

_Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes;
And, like a dog that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on._

All things, that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack
That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron, extends,
Creatures of note, for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live: I will not touch thine
For all the treasure that thine uncle owes: [eyes
Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, boy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. O, now you look like Hubert! all this
You were disguised. [while

Hub. Peace: no more. Adieu;
Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.
And, pretty child, sleep doubtless, and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven!—I thank you, Hubert.

Hub. Silence: no more: Go closely in with me;
Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Exeunt.

---

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room of State in the Palace.

_Enter King John, crowned; Pembroke, Salisbury, and other Lords. The King takes his State._

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again crown'd,
And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

Pem. This once again, but that your highness pleas'd,
Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off;
The faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land,
With any long'd-for change, or better state.

_Sal._ Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard a title that was rich before,
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on a little breth,
To mix dissembl'd spice in honest joy,
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the royal eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful, and ridiculous excess.

Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told;
And, in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.

_Sal._ In this, the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured;
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about;
Startles and frights consideration;
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

_Pem._ When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness:
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault,
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse;
As patches, set upon a little breth,
Disredit more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

_Sal._ To this effect, before you were new-crown'd,
We breath'd our counsel: but it pleas'd your highness to overbear it; and we are all well pleas'd: [necess
Since all and every part of what we would,
Doth make a stand at what you so wisely will.

*K. John._ Some reasons of this double coronation
I have possess'd you with, and think them strong:
And more, more strong, (when lesser is my fear,) I shall induce you with: Mean time, but ask
What you would have reform'd, that is not well;
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear and grant you your requests.

*Pem._ Then I, (as one that am the tongue of these,
To sound the purposes of all their hearts,) Both for myself and them, (but, chief of all,
Your safety, for the whch myself and them
Bend their best studies,) heartily request
The enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument,—
If, what in rest you have, in right you hold,
Why then your fears, (which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong,) should move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days
With barbarous ignorance, and close his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise?
That the time's enemies may not have this
To grace occasions, let it be our suit,
That you have bid us ask his liberty;
Which for our goods we do no further ask,
Than whereupon our weal, on you depending,
Counts it your weal, he have his liberty.

*K. John._ Let it be so; I do commit his youth

_Enter Hubert._

To your direction.—Hubert, what news with you?

*Pem._ This is the man should do the bloody deed;
He show'd his warrant to a friend of mine:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his
Does show the mood of a much-troubled breast;
And I do fearefully believe, 'tis done,
What we so feare'd he had a charge to do.

_Sal._ The colour of the king doth come and go,
Between his purpose and his conscience,
Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

_Pem._ And, when it breaks, I fear will issue thence
The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

*K. John._ We cannot hold mortality's strong hand:—
Good lords, although my will to give is living,
The suit which you demand is gone and dead:
He tells us, Arthur is deceas'd to-night.

_Sal._ Indeed, we fear'd, his sickness was past cure.

_Pem._ Indeed, we heard how near his death he
Before the child himself felt he was sick: [was,
This must be answer'd, either here, or hence.

*K. John._ Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

_Sal._ It is apparent foul-play; and 'tis shame,
That greatness should so grossly offer it:
So thrive it in your term! and so farewell.

_Pem._ Stay yet, lord Salisbury; I'll go with thee,
And find the inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forced grave.
That blood, which ow'd the breadth of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold;
Bad world the while!
This must not be thus borne: this will break out
To all our sorrows, and
And I doubt.

K. John. They burn in indignation; I repent;
There is no sure foundation set on blood;
No certain life achiev'd by others' death.—

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast;
Where is that blood,
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm:
Pour down thy weather.—How goes all in France?

Mess. From France to England.—Never such a
For any foreign preparation, [power
Was levied in the body of a land!
The copy of your speed is learn'd by them;
For, when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings come, that, full of idle arriv'd.

K. John. O, where hath our intelligence been drunk?
Where hath it slept?
Where is my mother's care?
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

Mess. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust; the first of April, died
Your noble mother;
And, as I hear, my lord,
The lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before:
but this from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true, or false, I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion!
O, make a league with me, till I have pleas'd
My discontented peers!—What! mother dead?
How wildly then walks my estate in France!—
Under whose conduct came those powers of France,
That thou for truth giv'st out, are landed here?

Mess. Under the Dauphin.

Enter the Bastard and Peter of Pomfret.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tidings.—Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Bast. But, if you be afeard to hear the worst,
Then let the worst, unheard, fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin;
for I was amaz'd
Under the tide:
but now I breathe again
Aloft the flood;
and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.

Bast. How I have sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express,
But, as I travelled hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasied;
Possess'd with rumour, full of idle dreams:
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes,
That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore dost thou so?

Peter. For knowing that the truth will fall out so.
K. John. Hubert, away with him! imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whereon, he says,
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd:
Deliver him to safety, and return,
For I must use thee.—O my gentle cousin,

[Exit Hubert, with Peter.
Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd?

Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it:
Besides, I met lord Bigot, and lord Salisbury,
(With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire,)
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go
And thrust thyself into their companies:
I have a way to win their loves again
Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot
before.——
O, let me have no subject enemies,
When adverse foreigners afford my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!—
De Mercurius, set feathers to thy heels;
And fly, like thought, from them to me again.

Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.

[Exit.

K. John. Spoke like a spriteful noble gentleman.—

Go after him;
for he, perhaps, shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers
And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege.

[Exit.

K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter Hubert.

Hub. My lord, they say, five moons were seen to-night:
Four fixed; and the fifth did whirl about
The other four, in wondrous motion.

K. John. Five moons?

Hub. Old men, and beldams, in the streets
Do prophesy upon it dangerously;
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths:
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear;
And he, that speaks, doth grip the hearer's wrist;
Whilst he, that hears, makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news;
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,)
Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were embattled and rank'd in Kent:
Another lean unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?
Why urg'st thou so oft young Arthur's death?
Thy hand hath murder'd him: I had mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill

Hub. Had none, my lord! why, did you not provok me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings, to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life:
And, on the winking of authority,
To understand a law; to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frowns
More upon humour than advis'd respect.

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.
K. John. O, when the last account 'twixt heaven and earth
Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation!
How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done! Hadiest not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd, to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind:
But, taking note of thy abhor'd aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villany,
Apt, liable, to be employ'd in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death;
And thou, to be endeared to a king,
Made it no conscience to destroy a prince.
Hub. My lord,—
K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head, or made a pause,
When I spake darkly what I purposed;
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face,
As bid me tell my tale in express words;
Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break off,
And those thy fears might have wrought fears in me:
But thou didst understand me by my signs,
And didst in signs again parley with sin;
Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
And, consequently, thy rude hand to act
The deed, which both our tongues held vile to name,—
Out of my sight, and never see me more!
My nobles leave me; and my state is brav'd,
Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers:
Nay, in the body of this fleshly land,
This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath,
Hostility and civil tumult reigns
Between my conscience, and my cousin's death
Hub. Arm you against your other enemies,
I'll make a peace between your soul and you.
Young Arthur is alive: This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.
Within this bosom never enter'd yet
The dreadful motion of a mur'd'rous thought,
And you have slander'd nature in my form;
Which howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind.
Than to be butcher of an innocent child.
the peers,
Throw this report on their incensed rage,
And make them tame to their obedience!
Forgive the comment that my passion made
Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind,
And foul imaginary eyes of blood
Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
O, answer not; but to my closet bring
The angry lords, with all expedient haste:
I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Before the Castle.
Enter Arthun, on the walls.
Arth. The wall is high; and yet will I leap down—
Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not!—
There's few, or none, do know me; if they did,
The thimble-bone beheld disguis'd me quite.
I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it.
If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I'll find a thousand shifts to get away:
As good to die, and go, as die, and stay.
[Leaps down
O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones:—
Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones!
[Dies
Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BOOT.
Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund's
It is our safety, and we must embrace [Bury;
This gentle offer of the perilous time.
Pem. Who brought that letter from the cardinal?
Sal. The count Melun, a noble lord of France;
Whose private with me, of the Dauphin's love,
Is much more general than these lines import.
Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.
Sal. Or, rather then set forward: for 'twill be
Two long days' journey, lords, or e'er we meet.
[Dies
Enter the BASTARD.
Bast. Once more to-day will met, distemper'd lords!
The king, by me, requests your presence straight.
Sal. The king hath dispossess'd himself of us;
We will not line his thin belstained cloak.
With our pure honours, nor attend the foot
That leaves the print of blood where-er it walks:
Return, and tell him so; we know the worst.
Bast. And, if he find thee, you think, good words, I think,
were best.
Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now.
Bast. But there is little reason in your grief,
Therefore, 'twere reason, you had manners now.
Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege.
Bast. 'Tis true; to hurt his master, no man else.
Sal. This is the prison: What is he lies here?
[Seeing Arthun.
Pem. O death, made proud with pure and princely beauty!
The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.
Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done,
Doth lay it open, to urge on revenge.
Big. Or, when he doom'd this beauty to a grave,
Found it too precious-princely for a grave.
Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you beheld,
Or have you read, or heard? or could you think?
Or do you almost think, although you see,
That you do see? could thought without this object,
Form such another? This is the very top,
The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,
Of murder's arms: This is the bloodiest shame,
The wildest savag'ry, the vilest stroke,
That ever wall-ey'd wrath, or staring rage,
Presented to the tears of soft remorse.
Pem. All murders past, do stand excus'd in this:
And this so sole, and so unmatchable,
Shall give a holiness, a purity,
To the yet-unbegotten sin of times;
And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest,
Examined by this heinous spectacle.
Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work;
The graceless action of a heavy hand,
If that it be the work of any hand.
Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?—
We had a kind of light, what would ensue;
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand;
The practice, and the purpose, of the king—
From whose obedience I forbade my soul,
Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life
And breathing to his breathless excellence.
The incense of a vow, a holy vow;
Never to taste the pleasures of the world,
Never to be infected with delight,
Nor conversant with ease and idleness,
Till I have set a glory to this hand,
By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pem. Big. Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:
Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.

Sal. O, he is bold, and blushes not at death:
Avaunt, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law?

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, lord Salisbury, stand back, I say;
By heaven, I think, my sword's as sharp as yours:
I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,
Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;
Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget
Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.

Big. Out, dunghill! Dar'st thou brave a nobleman?

Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend
My innocent life against an emperor.

Sal. Thou art a murderer.

Hub. Do not prove me so;
Yet, I am none: Whose tongue soo'er speaks false,
Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly, lies.

Pem. Cut him to pieces.

Bast. Keep the peace, I say.

Sal. Stand by, or I shall gall you, Faulconbridge.

Bast. Thou wert better gav the devil, Salisbury: If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot, Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me shame, I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime; Or I'll so mall you and your towing-iron,
That you shall think the devil is come from hell.

Big. What wilt thou do, renowned Faulcon-
Second a villain and a murderer? [bridge?

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this prince?

Hub. 'Tis not an hour, since I left him well: I honour'd him, I loved him; and will weep My date of life out, for his sweet life's loss.

Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes, For villany is not without such reum;
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocency. Away, with me, all you whose souls abhor

The uncleanly savours of a slaughter-house;
For I am stilled with this smell of sin.

Bast. Here's a good world!—Knew you of this fair work?
Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert.

Hub. Do but hear me, sir?

Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what;
Thou art damn'd as black—nay, nothing is so black;
Thou art more deep damn'd than prince Lucifer.
There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Upon my soul,——

Bast. If thou didst but consent
To this most cruel act, do but despair,
And, if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be
A beam to hang thee on; or wouldst thou drown
Put but a little water in a spoon, (thyself,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.——
I do suspect thee very grievously.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought
Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath
Which was embound in this beauteous clay,
Let hell want pains enough to torture me!
I left him well.

Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms.—
I am amaz'd, methinks; and lose my way
Among the thorns and dangers of this world.—
How easy dost thou take all England up!
From forth this morsel of dead royalty,
The life, the right, and truth of all this realm
Is fied to heaven; and England now is left To tug and scramble, and to part by the teeth
The unowed interest of proud-swelling state.
Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarlieth in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now powers from home, and discontented at home,
Meet in one line, and vast confusion waits (As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast,) The eminent decay of wrested pomp.
Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture can Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child,
And follow me with speed; I'll to the king:
A thousand businesses are brief in hand,
And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.

Exeunt.

SCENE I. — The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King John, Pandulph with the crown, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory.

Pand. Take again [Giving John the crown.

From this my hand, as holding of the pope,
Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word; go meet the French:

ACT V.

And from his holiness use all your power
To stop their marches, 'fore we are inflam'd.
Our discontented counties do revolt;
Our people quarrel with obedience;
Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul,
To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.
This inundation of mistemper'd humour
Rests by you only to be qualified.
Then pause not; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be minister'd,
Or overthrow incurable ensues.
K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.

Bast. Away then, with good courage; yet, I know Our party may well meet a prouder foe. [Execut.]

KING JOHN.

SCENE II.—A Plain near St. Edmund's-Bury.

Enter in arms, Lewis, Salisbury, Melun, Pembroke, Boro, and Soldiers.

Lewis. My lord Melun, let this be copied out, And keep it safe for our remembrance: Return the precipitate to these lords again; That, having our fair order written down, Both they, and we, purusing o'er these notes, May know wherefore we took the sacrament, And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Salisbury. Upon our sides it never shall be broken. And, noble dauphin, albeit we swear A voluntary zeal, and unurg'd faith, To your proceedings; yet, believe me, prince, I am not glad that such a sore of time Should seek a platter by contemned revolt, And heal the inveterate canker of one wound, By making many: O, it grieves my soul. That I must draw this metal from my side To be a widow-maker; O, and there, Where honourable rescue, and defence, Cries out upon the name of Salisbury: But such is the infection of the time, That, for the health and physic of our right, We cannot deal but with the very hand Of stern injustice and confused wrong.— And is't not pity, O my grieved friends! That we, the sons and children of this isle, Were born to see so sad an omen this: Wherein we step after a stranger march Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up Her enemies' ranks, (I must withdraw and weep Upon the spot of this enforced cause,) To grace the gentry of a land remote, And follow unacquainted colours here? What, here?—O nation, that thou could'st remove! That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about, Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself, And grapple thee unto a pagan shore; Where these two Christian armies might combine The blood of malice in a vein of league, And not to spend it so unneighbourly!

Lewis. A noble temper dost thou show in this; And great affections, wrestling in thy bosom, Do make an earthquake of nobility. O, what a noble combat hast thou fought, Between compulsion, and a brave respect! Let me wipe off this honourable dew, That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks: My heart hath melted at a lady's tears, Being an ordinary inundation; But this effusion of such manly drops, This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul, Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury, And with a great heart heave away this storm: Commend these waters to those baby eyes, That never saw the giant world er'ag'd! Nor met with fortune other than at feasts, Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping. Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up, Upon your stubborn usage of the pope: But, since you are a gentle conversant, My tongue shall hush again this storm of war, And make fair weather in your blustering land. On this Ascension-day, remember well, Upon your oath of service to the pope, Go I to make the French lay down their arms. [Exit.

K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the prophet Say, that, before Ascension-day at noon, My crown I should give off? Even so I have: I did suppose, it should be on constraint; But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds out, But Dover castle: London hath receiv'd, Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers: Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone To offer service to your enemy; And wild amazement hurries up and down The little number of your doubtful friends.

K. John. Would not my lords return to me again, After they heard young Arthur was alive? Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets; An empty casket where the jewel of life By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.

K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.

Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew. But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad? Be great in act, as you have been in thought; Let not the world see fear, and sad distrust, Govern the motion of a kingly eye: Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire; Threaten the threat'ner, and outface the brow Of bragging horror: so shall inferior eyes, That borrow their behaviours from the great, Grow great by your example, and put on The dauntless spirit of resolution. Away; and glitter like the god of war, Whose line extends, so that the heavens show Show boldness and aspiring confidence. What, shall they seek the lion in his den, And fright him there? and make him tremble there? O, let it not be said!—Forage and run To meet displeasure farther from the doors; And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh.

K. John. The legate of the pope hath been with And I have made a happy peace with him; [me, And he hath promised to dismiss the powers Led by the Dauphin.

Bast. O inglorious league! Shall we, upon the footing of our land, Send fair-play orders, and make compromise, Insinuation, parley, and base truce, To arms invasive? shall a heartless boy, A cocker'd silken wanton, brave our fields And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil, Mocking the air with colours idly spread, And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms: Perchance, the cardinal cannot make your peace; Or if he do, let it at least be said, They saw we had a purpose of defence.
Into the purse of rich prosperity,
As Lewis himself:—so, nobles, shall you all,
That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.

Enter Pandolph, attended.

And even there, methinks, an angel spake:
And where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of heaven;
And on our actions set the name of right,
With holy breath.

Pand. Hail, noble prince of France!
The next is this,—King John hath reconci'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church,
The great metropolis and see of Rome:
Therefore thy threat'ning colours now wind up,
And tame the savage spirit of wild war;
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmful than in show.

Lew. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not
I am too high-born to be propertied, [back;
To be a secondary at control,
Of useful serving-man, and instrument,
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
Between this chastis'd kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprize into my heart;
And come you now to tell me, John hath made
His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I, by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And, now it is half-conquer'd, must I back,
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne,
What men provided, what munition sent,
To underprop this action? is't not I,
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,
Sweat in this business, and maintain this war?
Have I not heard these islanders shout out,
Vive le roy! as I have bank'd their towns?
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match play'd for a crown?
And shall I now give over the yielded set?
No, on my soul, it never shall be said.

Pand. You look but on the outside of this work.

Lew. Outside or inside, I will not return
Till my attempt so much be glorified
As to my ample hope was promised
Before I drew this gallant head of war,
And call'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.—

[Trumpet sounds.]

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience; I am sent to speak:
My holy lord of Milan, from the king
I come, to learn how you have dealt for him;
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The dauphin is too wilful-opposite.

And will not temporize with my entreaties;
He flatly says, he'll not lay down his arms.

Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,
The youth says well:—Now hear our English king;
For thus his royalty doth speak in me.
He is prepar'd; and reason, too, he should:
This apish and unmannerly approach,
This harness'd masculine, and unadvised revel,
This unhair'd sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
That hand, which had the strength, even at you.
Door,
To cudgel you, and make you take the hatch;
To dive, like buckets, in concealed wells;
To crouch in litter of your stable planks;
To lie, like swine, lock'd up in chests and trunks;
To hug with swine; to seek sweet safety out
In vaults and prisons; and to thrill, and shake,
Even at the crying of your nation's crow,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman:—
Shall that victorious hand be feeble here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
No: Know, the gallant monarch is in arms;
And like an eagle o'er his siery towers,
To sound annoyance that comes near his nest,—
And you degenerate, your grate revolts,
You bloody Neroses, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England, blush for shame:
For your own ladies, and pale-visag'd maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gauntlets change,
Their needls to lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination.

Lew. There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace;
We grant, thou canst outscold us: fare thee well;
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabbler.

Pand. Give me leave to speak.

Bast. No, I will speak.

Lew. We will attend to neither:—
Strike up the drums; and let the tongue of war
Plead for our interest, and our being here.

Bast. Indeed, your drums, being beatu, will cry out;
And so shall you, being beaten: Do but start
An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready brac'd,
That shall reverberate all as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand
(Not trusting to this halting legate here, Whom he hath us'd rather for sport than need,)
Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits
A bare-ribb'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Lew. Strike up our drums, to find this danger out.

Bast. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Field of Battle.

Alarms. Enter King John and Hubert.

K. John. How goes the day with us? O, tell me,
Hubert.

Hub. Badly, I fear: How fares your majesty?
K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so Lies heavy on me; O, my heart is sick! [long;

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulcon-
Desires your majesty to leave the field; [bridge,
And send him word by me, which way you go.

K. John. Tell him, toward Swinstead, to the abbey there.

Mess. Be of good comfort; for the great supply,
That was expected by the dauphin here,
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin sands.
This news was brought to Richard but even now:
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

K. John. Ah me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news.
Set on toward Swinstead: to my litter straight;
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. Another part of the same.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, Duger, and others.

Sal. I did not think the king so stor'd with friends.

Pem. Up once again; put spirit in the French;
If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day.

Pem. They say, king John, sore sick, hath left the field.

Enter Melun wounded, and led by Soldiers.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.
Sal. When we were happy, we had other names.

Pem. It is the count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold;

Unthread the rude eye of rebellion,
And welcome home again discarded faith.
Seek out the king John, and fall before his feet;
For, if the French be lords of this loud day,
He means to recompense the pains you take,
By cutting off your heads: Thus hath he sworn,
And I with him, and many more with me,
Upon the altar at Saint Edmund's-Bury;
Even on that altar, where we swore to you
Dear amity and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible? may this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life;
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax
Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
Why should I then be false; since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?

I say again, if Lewis do win the day,
He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east:
But even this night,—whose black contagious
Already smokes about the burning crest [breath
Of the old, feeble, and day-weary sun,—
Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire;
Paying the fine of rated treachery,
Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,
If Lewis by your assistance win the day,
Commend me to one Hubert, with your king;
The love of him,—and this respect besides,

For that my grandsire was an Englishman,— Awakes my conscience to confess all this.
In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field;
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
In peace, and part this body and my soul
With contemplation and devout desires.

Sal. We do believe thee,—And forgive my
But I do love the favour and the form
Of this most fair occasion, by the which
We will unthread the steps of damned flight;
And, like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd
And calmly run on in obedience,
Even to our ocean, to our great king John.—
My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence;
For I do see the cruel pangs of death Right in thine eye.—Away, my friends! New flight;
And happy newness, that intends old right.

[Exeunt, leading off Melun.

SCENE V.—The same. The French Camp.

Enter Lewis and his Train.

Lev. The sun of heaven, methought, was loath to set:
But stay'd, and made the western welkin blush,
When the English measur'd backward their own;
In faint retire: O, bravely came we off, [ground
When with a volley of our needless shot,
After such bloody toil, we bid good night;
And wound our tatter'd colours clearly up,
Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the dauphin?

Lev. Here:—What news?

Mess. The count Melun is slain; the English
By his persuasion, are again fall'n off: [lords
And your supply, which you have wish'd so long,
Are cast away, and sunk, on Goodwin sands.
Lev. Ah, foul shrewd news!—Beshrew thy very heart!
I did not think to be so sad to-night,
As this hath made me.—Who was he, that said,
King John did fly, an hour or two before
The stumbling night did part our weary powers?

Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

Lev. Well; keep good quarters, and good care;
The day shall not be up so soon as I, [to-night
To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—An open Place in the neighbourhood of Swinstead-Abbey.

Enter the Bastard and Hubert, meeting.

Hub. Who's there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or I shoot.

Bast. A friend.—What art thou?

Hub. Of the part of England.

Bast. Whither dost thou go?

Hub. What's that to thee? Why may I not demand
Of thine affairs, as well as thou of mine?

Bast. Hubert, I think.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought:
I will, upon all hazards, well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well:
Bast. Who thou wilt: an if thou please, thou may'st befriended me so much, as to think I come one way of the Plantagenets.
Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou, and eyeless night, have done me shame:—Brave soldier, pardon me, that any accent, breaking from thy tongue, should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.
Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?
Hub. Why, here walk I, in the black brow of To find you out.
Bast. Brief, then; and what's the news?
Hub. O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night, Black, fearless, comfortable, and horrible.
Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news; I am no woman, I'll not swoon at it.
Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk: I left him almost speechless, and broke out To acquaint you with this evil; that you might The better arm you to the sudden time, Than if you had at leisure known of this.
Bast. How did he take it; who did taste to him?
Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain, whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king Yet speaks, and peradventure, may recover.
Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?
Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all come back, and brought prince Henry in their company; At whose request the king hath pardon'd them, and they are all about his majesty.
Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven, And tempt us not to bear above our power! I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night. Passing these flats, are taken by the tide, These Lincoln washes have devoured them; Myself, well mounted, hardly have escap'd. Away, before! conduct me to the king; I doubt, he will be dead, or ere I come. [Exit Hubert.

SCENE VII.—The Orchard of Swinstead-Abbay.

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bigot.

P. Hen. It is too late; the life of all his blood Is touch'd corruptibly; and his pure brain [Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-house.] Both, by the idle comments that it makes, Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pemb. His highness yet doth speak; and holds That, being brought into the open air, [belief, It would allay the burning quality Of that fell poison which assaileth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.

Doth he still rage?

Pemb. He is more patient Than when you left him; even now he sung.

P. Hen. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes, In their continuance will not feel themselves. Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts, Leaves them insensible; and his siege is now Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds, With many legions of strange fantasies; Which, in their throng and press to that last hold, Confound themselves. 'Tis strange, that death should sing.—

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan, Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death; And, from the organ-pipe of frailty, sings His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are To set a form upon that indigest, [born Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

Re-enter Boyne and Attendants, who bring in King John, in a chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room; It would not out at windows, nor at doors. There is so hot a summer in my bosom, That all my bowels crumble up to dust; I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen Upon a parchment: and against this fire Do I shrink up.

P. Hen. How fares your majesty?

K. John. Poison'd;—ill fare;—dead, forsook, cast off:

And none of you will bid the winter come, To thrust his icy fingers in my maw; Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course Through my burn'd bosom; nor entreat the north To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips, And comfort me with cold:—I do not ask you much, I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait, And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O, that there were some virtue in my That might relieve you! [tears. K. John. The salt in them is hot.— Within me is a hell; and there the poison Is, as a fiend, confin'd to tyrannize

On unreprievable condemned blood.

Bast. O, I am scalced with my violent motion, And spie'n of speed to see your majesty.

K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye.

The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd; And all the shrouds, wherewith my life should sail, Are turned to one thread, one little hair: My heart hath one poor string to stay it by, Which holds but till thy news be utter'd; And then all this thou seest is but a cloath, And module of confounded royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward; Whère, heaven he knows, how we shall answer him: For, in a night, the best part of my power, As I upon advantage did remove, Were in the washes, all unwarily, Devoured by the unexpected flood.

(The King dies.)

Sal. You breathe those dead news in as dead an ear.—

My liege! my lord!—But now a king,—now thus: P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop. What surety of the world, what hope, what stay, When this was now a king, and now is clay!

Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind, To do the office for thee of revenge; And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven, As it on earth hath been thy servant still.

Now, now, you stars, that move in your right spheres, Where be your powers? Show now your mended faiths; And instantly return with me again, To push destruction, and perpetual shame,
Out of the weak door of our fainting land:
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.
   Sal. It seems, you know not then so much as we:
The cardinal Pandulph is within at rest,
   Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees
Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.
   Sat. Nay, it is in a manner done already;
   Sal. It seems, you know not then so much as we:
The cardinal Pandulph is within at rest,
   Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees
Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.
Enter King Richard, attended; John of Gaunt, and other Nobles, with him.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time, honour'd
Lancaster,
Hast thou, according to thy oath and band,
Brought hither Henry Hereford thy bold son;
Here to make good the boisterous late appeal,
Which then our leisure would not let us hear,
Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray.

Gaunt. I have, my liege.

K. Rich. Tell me moreover, hast thou sounded
If he appeal the duke on ancient malice; [him,
Or worthily as a good subject should,
On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that arument,—

On some apparent danger seen in him,
Aim'd at your highness, no inveterate malice.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence; face to face,
And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear
The accuser, and the accused, freely speak:—

[Execute some Attendants.

High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire,
In rage as the sea, hasty as fire.
Re-enter Attendants, with Bolingbroke and Norfolk.

Boiling. Many years of happy days befal
My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!

Nor. Each day still better other's happiness;
Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,
Add an immortal title to your crown!

K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one but flatters us,
As well appeareth by the cause you come;
Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.—
Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object
Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Boiling. First, (heaven be the record to my
In the devotion of a subject's love, [speech!)
Tendering the precious safety of my prince,
And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely presence.—
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good upon this earth,
Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.
Thou art a traitor, and a miscreant;
Too good to be so, and too bad to live;
Since, the more fair and crystal is the sky,
The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly.
Once more, the more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat;
And wish, (so please my sovereign,) ere I move,
What my tongue speaks, my right-drawn sword may prove.

Nor. Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal:
'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain:
The blood is hot, that must be cool'd for this,
Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush'd, and nought at all to say:
First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs me
From giving reins and spurs to my free speech;
Which else would post, until it had return'd
These terms of treason doubled down his throat.
Setting aside his high blood's royalty,
And let him be no kinsman to my liege,
I do defy him, and I spit at him;
Call him—a slandering coward, and a villain:
Which to maintain, I would allow him odds;
And meet him, were I tied to run a-foot
Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground uninhabitable
Wherever Englishman durst set his foot.
Mean time, let this defend my loyalty,—
By all my hopes, most falsely doth he lie.

Boiling. Pale trembling coward! there I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of the king;
And lay aside my high blood's royalty,
Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except
If guilty dread hath left thee so much strength,
As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop;
By that, and all the rites of knighthood else,
Will I redress against thee, arm to arm,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise.

Nor. I take it up; and, by that sword I swear,
Which gently lay'd my kindliness on my shoulder,
I'll answer thee in any fair degree,
Or chivalrous design of knightly trial:
And, when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjustly fight!

K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's
It must be great, that can inherit us [charge?
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Boiling. Look: what I speak my life shall prove it true:—
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles,
In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers;
The which he hath detain'd for lawful employments,
Like a false traitor, and injurious villain.
Besides I say, and will in battle prove,—
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,—
That all the treasons, for these eighteen years
Complotting and contriving in this land,
Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and spring.
Further I say,—and further will maintain
Upon his bad life, to make all this good,—
That he did plot the duke of Gloster's death;
Suggest his soon-believing adversaries;
And, consequently, like a traitor coward,
Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood:
Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To me, for justice, and rough chastisement—
And, by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent!

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!—
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?

Nor. O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf,
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
Honour, and good men, hate so foul a liar.

K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and ears:
Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
(As is but my father's brother's son,)
Now by my sceptre's awe I make a vow,
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unstooping firmness of my upright soul;
He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou;
Free speech, and fearless, I to thee allow.

Nor. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart
Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest
Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais,
Disburs'd I duly to his highness' soldiers:
The other part reserv'd I by consent;
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt,
Upon remainder of a dear account,
Since last I went to France to fetch his queen:
Now swallow down that lie!—For Gloster's death,
I slew him not; but to my own disgrace,
Neglected my sworn duty in that case,—
For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
The honourable father to my foe,
Once did I lay in ambush for your life,
A trespass that doth vex my grieved soul:
But, ere I last receiv'd the sacrament,
I did confess it; and exactly begged
Your grace's pardon, and, I hope, I had it.
This is my fault: As for the rest appeal'd,
It issues from the rancour of a villain,
A recreant and most degenerate traitor:
Which in myself I boldy will defend;
And interchangeably hurl down my gage
Upon this overweening traitor's foot,
To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom:
In haste whereof, most heartily I pray
Your highness to assign our trial day.

K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by Let's purge this choleric without letting blood: [me;
This we prescribe, though no physician;
Deep malice makes too deep incision:
Forget, forgive; conclude, and be agreed;
Our doctors say, this is no time to bleed.—
Good uncle, let this end where it begins;
We'll calm the duke of Norfolk, you your son.

Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my age:
Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk's gage.

K. Rich. And, Norfolk, throw down his.

Gaunt. When, Harry! when Obedience bids, I should not bid again!

K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down; we bid; there is no boot.

Nor. Myself I throw, dread sovereign, at thy foot:
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
(Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,)
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here;
Pierc'd to the soul with slander's venom'd spear;
The which no balm can cure, but his heart-blood
Which breath'd this poison!

K. Rich.
Rage must be withstood:
Give me his gage:—Lions make leopards tame.

Nor. Yea, but not change their spots: take but my shame,
And I resign my gage. My dear dear lord,
The purest treasure mortal times afford,
Is—spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded lumps, or painted clay.
A jewel in a ten-times-barr’d-up chest
Is—a bold spirit in a loyal breast.
Mine honour is my life; both grow in one;
Take honour from me, and my life is done:—
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try;
In that I live, and for that will I die.

K. Rich. Cousin, throw down your gage; do you begin.

Boling. O, God defend my soul from such foul sin!
Shall I seem crest-fallen in my father’s sight?
Or with pale beggar-fear impeach my height
Before this outcast dastard? Ere my tongue
Shall wound mine honour with such feeble words,
Or sound so base a parcel, my teeth shall tear
The slavish motive of recanting fear;
And spilt it bleeding, in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray’s face!

K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command:
Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
At Coventry, upon Saint Lambert’s day;
There shall your swords and lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your settled hate;
Since we can not atone you, we shall see
Justice design the victor’s chivalry.—
Marshal, command our officers-at-arms
Be ready to direct these home alarms. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster’s Palace.

Enter Gaunt and Duchess of Gloucester.

Gaunt. Alas! the part I had in Gaunt’s blood
Doth more solicit me, than your exclamations,
To spurn the broils of the butchers of his life.
But since correction lieth in those hands,
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;
Who when he sees the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain but vengeance on offenders’ heads.

Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?
Edward’s seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Were as seven phials of his sacred blood,
Or seven fair branches springing from one root:
Some of those seven are dried by nature’s course,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut:
But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gaunt,—
One phial full of Edward’s sacred blood,
One flourishing branch of his most royal root,—
Is crack’d, and all the precious liquor spilt;
Is hack’d down, and his summer-leaves all faded,
By envy’s hand, and murder’s bloody axe,—
Ah, Gaunt! his blood was thine; that bed, that womb,
That metal, that self-mould, that fashion’d thee,
Made him a man; and though thou liv’st, and breath’st,
Yet art thou slain in him: thou dost consent
In some large measure to thy father’s death,
In that thou seest thy wretched brother die,
Who was the model of thy father’s life.
Call it not patience, Gaunt, it is despair;
In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter’d,
Thou show’st the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee:
That which in mean men we entitle—patience,
Is pale cowardice in noble breasts.—
What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life,
The best way is—to venge my Gaunt’s death.

Gaunt. Heaven’s is the quarrel; for heaven’s substitute,
His deputy placed in his sight,
Hath caus’d his death: which if wrongfully,
Let heaven revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister.

Duch. Where then, alas! may I complain myself?

Gaunt. To heaven, the widow’s champion and defence.

Duch. Why then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt.
Thou go’st to Coventry, there to behold
Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight:
O, sit my husband’s wrongs on Hereford’s spear,
That it may enter butcher Mowbray’s breast!
Or, if misfortune miss the first career,
Be Mowbray’s sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his foaming courser’s back,
And throw the river headlong in the lists,
A caifer recreant to my cousin Hereford!
Farewell, old Gaunt; thy sometimes brother’s wife,
With her companion grief must end her life.

Gaunt. Sister, farewell! I must to Coventry:
As much good stay with thee, as go with me!

Duch. Yet one word more;—Grief boundeth where it falls,
Not with the empty hollowness, but weight:
I take my leave before I have begun;
For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done.
Commend me to my brother, Edmund York.
Lo, this is all:—Nay, yet depart not so;
Though this be all, do not so quickly go;
I shall remember more. Bid him—O, what?—
With all good speed at Flashy visit me,
Alack, and what shall good old York there see,
But empty lodgings and unfurnished walls,
Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones?
And what cheer there for welcome, but my groans?
Therefore commend me; let him not come there,
To seek out sorrow that dwells everywhere:
Desolate, desolate, will I hence, and die;
The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye!

SCENE III.—Gosford-green, near Coventry.

Lists set out, and a Throne. Heralds, 5c. attending.

Enter the Lord Marshal and Aumerle.

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm’d?

Aum. Yes, at all points; and longs to enter in.

Mar. The duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant’s trumpet.

Aum. Why then, the champions are prepar’d and stay
For nothing but his majesty’s approach.

Flourish of trumpets. Enter King Richard, who takes his seat on his throne; Gaunt, and several Noblemen, who take their places. A trumpet is sounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Then enter Norfolk, in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion
The cause of his arrival here in arms.

Ask him his name; and orderly proceed
To swear him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. In God’s name, and the king’s, say who thou art,
And why thou com'st, thus knighly clad in arms:
Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel?
Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thy oath;
And so defend thee heaven, and thy valour!

Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk;
Who hither come engaged by my oath,
(Which, heaven defend a knight should violate!) Both to defend my loyalty and truth,
To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,
Against the duke of Hereford that appeals me;
And, by the grace of God, and this mine arm,
To prove him, in defending of myself,
A traitor to my God, my king, and me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

[He takes his seat.

Trumpet sounds. Enter Bolingbroke, in armour; preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither
Thus plated in habiliments of war;
And formally according to our law
Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. What is thy name? and wherefore com'st thou hither,
Before King Richard, in his royal lists?
Against whom comest thou? and what's thy quarrel?
Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Am I; who ready here do stand in arms,
To prove, by heaven's grace, and my body's valour,
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous;
To God of heaven, King Richard, and to me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Mar. On pain of death, no person be so bold,
Or daring-hardy, as to touch the lists;
Except the marshal, and such officers
Appointed to direct these fair designs.

Boling. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand,
And bow my knee before his majesty:
For Mowbray, and myself, are like two men That vow a long and weary pilgrimage;
Then let us take a ceremonious leave,
And loving farewell, of our several friends.

Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your highness,
And craves to kiss your hand, and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend, and fold him in our arms.

Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,
So be thy fortune in this royal fight!
Farewell, my blood; which if to-day thou shed,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Boling. O, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear; As confident, as is the falcon's flight Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.

My loving lord, [to Lord Marshal.] I take my leave of you;
Of you, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle:—

Noth, although I have to do with death; But lusty, young, and cheery drawing breath.
Lo, as at English feasts, so I regret
The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet:
O thou, the earthy author of my blood.

[To Gaunt.

Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,

Doth with a two-fold vigour lift me up
To reach at victory above my head,—
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers; And with thy blessings steel my lance's point, That it may enter Mowbray's waken coat, And furbish new the name of John of Gaunt,
Even in the lusty 'haviour of his son.

Gaunt. Heaven in thy good cause make thee prosperous!
Be swift like lightning in the execution; And let thy blows, doubly redoubled, Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy;
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocency, and Saint George to thrive! [He takes his seat.

Nor. [Rising.] However heaven, or fortune, cast my lot,
There lives, or dies, true to king Richard's throne,
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman:
Never did captivate with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroul'd enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soul doth celebrate
This feast of battle with mine adversary.
Most mighty liege!—and my companion peers,—
Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:
As gentle and as jocund, as to jest,
Go I to fight: Truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I esp'y Virtue with valour couched in thine eye.—
Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

[The King and the Lords return to their seats.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

Boling. [Rising.] Strong as a tower in hope, I cry—amen.

Mar. Go bear this lance [to an Officer.] to Thomas, duke of Norfolk.

1 Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby, Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself;
On pain to be found false and recreant,
To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,
A traitor to his God, his king, and him,
And dare him to set forward to the fight.

2 Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
On pain to be found false and recreant, Both to defend himself, and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his sovereign, and to him, disloyal; Courageously, and with a free desire, Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound, trumpets: and set forward, com-

[La charge sounded.

Stay, the king hath thrown his warder down.

K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their spears,
And both return back to their chairs again:— Withdraw with us:—and let the trumpets sound, While we return these dukes what we decreed.—

[Draw near [To the Companions.

And list, what with our council we have done.
For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd With that dear blood which it hath fostered; And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours' swords;

[And for we think the eagle-winged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,
With rival-hating envy, set you on
To make our peace, which in our country’s cradle
Draws the sweet infancy—breath of gentle sleep;
Which so rous’d up with boisterous untum’d drums,
With harsh resounding trumpets’ dreadful bray,
And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,
Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,
And make us wade even in our kindred’s blood;—
Therefore, we banish you our territories:—
You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of death,
Till twice five summers have enrich’d our fields,
Shall not regret our fair dominions,
But tread the strangler paths of banishment.

Boling. Your will be done: This must my comfort be,—
That sun, that warns you here, shall shine on me;
And those his golden beams, to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,
Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The fly-slow hours shall not determine
The dateless limit of thy dear exile;—
The hopeless word of—never to return
Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.

Nor. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege!
And all unlock’d for from your highness’ mouth:
A dearer merit, not so deep a main
As to be cast forth in the common air,
Have I deserved at your highness’ hand.
The language I have learn’d these forty years,
My native English, now I must forego:
And now my tongue’s use is to me no more,
Than an unstript viol, or a harp
Or like a cunning instrument cas’d up,
Or, being open, put into his hands
That knows no touch to tune the harmony.
Within my mouth you have engaol’d my tongue,
Doubly portculis’d, with my teeth, and lips;
And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance
Is made my gaoler to attend on me.
I am too old to fawn upon a nurse,
Too far in years to be a pupil now;
What is thy sentence then, but speechless death,
Which robs me from my air, from breathing native breath?

K. Rich. It boasteth not to be compassionate;
After our sentence plaining comes too late.

Nor. Then thus I turn me from my country’s light,
To dwell in solemn shades of endless night!

K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with thee.
Lay on our royal sword your banish’d hands;
Swear by the duty that you owe to heaven,
(Our part therein we banish with yourselves,)
To keep the oath that we administer:
You never shall (so help you truth and heaven!) Embrace each other’s love in banishment;
Nor never look upon each other’s face;
 Nor never write, regret, nor reconcile
This lowering tempest of your home-bred hate;
Nor never by advised purpose meet,
To plot, contrive, or complot any ill,
Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.

Boling. I swear.

Nor. And I, to keep all this.

Boling. Norfolk, so far as to mine enemy;—
By this time, had the king permitted us,
One of our souls had wander’d in the air,
Banish’d this frail sepulchre of our flesh,
As now our flesh is banish’d from this land.
Confess thy treasons, ere thou fly the realm;
Since thou hast far to go, bear not along
The clogging burden of a guilty soul.

Nor. No, Bolingbroke; if ever I were traitor,
My name be blotted from the book of life,
And from I heaven banish’d, as from hence!
But what thou art, heaven, thou, and I do know;
And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.

Farewell, my liege:—Now no way can I stray;
Save back to England, all the world’s my way.

Exit.

K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
I see thy grieved heart; thy sad aspect
Hath from the number of his banish’d years
Pluck’d four away;—Six frozen winters spent,
Return [to Bolingb.], with welcome home from banishment.

Boling. How long a time lies in one little word!
Four lagging winters, and four wanton springs,
End in a word; Such is the breath of kings.

Gaunt. I thank my liege, that, in regard of me,
He shortens four years of my son’s exile:
But little vantage shall I reap thereby:
For, ere the six years, that he hath to spend,
Can change their moons, and bring their times about,
My oil-dried lamp, and time-bewasted light,
Shall be extinct with age, and endless night;
My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
And blindfold death not let me see my son.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live.

Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give.

Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow,
And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow:
Thou canst help time to farrow me with age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage;
Thy word is current with him for my death:
But, dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.

K. Rich. Thy son is banish’d upon good advice,
Wherefore thy tongue a party-verdict gave;
Why at our justice seem’st thou then to lower?

Gaunt. Things sweet to taste, prove in digestion sour.

You urg’d me as a judge; but I had rather,
You would have bid me argue like a father:—
O, had it been a stranger, not my child,
To smooth his fault I should have been more mild:
A partial slander sought I to avoid
And in the sentence my own life destroy’d.
Alas, I look’d, when some of you should say,
I was too strict, to make mine own away;
But you gave leave to mine unwilling tongue,
Against my will, to do myself this wrong.

K. Rich. Cousin, farewell:—and, uncle, bid him so;
Six years we banish him, and he shall go.

Favour. Exeunt K. Richard and Train.

Aum. Cousin, farewell: what presence must not know,
From where you do remain, let paper show.

Mar. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride
As far as land will let me, by your side. [words, Gaunt. O, to what purpose dost thou hear thy
That thou return’st no greeting to thy friends?

Boling. I have too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue’s office should be prodigal
To breathe the abundant dolour of the heart.
Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time.

Boling. Joy absent, grief is present for that time.

Gaunt. What is six winters? They are quickly gone.

Boling. To men in joy; but grief makes one ten.

Gaunt. Call it a travel that thou tak'st for pleasure.

Boling. My heart will sigh, when I miscall it so, Which finds it an enforced pilgrimage.

Gaunt. The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home-return.

Boling. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make
Will but remember me, what a deal of world I wander from the jewels that I love.

Must I not serve a long apprenticeship
To foreign passages; and in the end,
Having my freedom, boast of nothing else
But that I was a journeyman to grief?

Gaunt. All places that the eye of heaven visits,
Are to a wise man ports and havens:
Teach thy necessity to reason thus;
There is no virtue like necessity.

Think not, the king did banish thee;
But thou the king: Woe doth the heavier sit,
Where it perceives it is but faintly borne.

Go, say—I sent thee forth to purchase honour, And not—the king exil'd thee: or suppose,
Devouring patience hangs in our air,
And thou art flying to a fresher clime.

Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it
To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou Suppose the singing birds, musicians; [com'st.
The grass whereon thou tread'st, the presence strew'd:
The flowers, fair ladies; and thy steps, no more Than a delightful measure, or a dance:
For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light.

Boling. O, who can hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?
Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a feast?
Or wallow naked in December snow,
By thinking on fastidious summer's heat?—
O, no! I apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse:
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more,
Than when it bites, but laneth not the sore.

Gaunt. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way:
Had I thy youth and cause, I would not stay.

Boling. Then, England's ground, farewell: sweet soil, adieu;
My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet! Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,— Though banish'd, yet a true-born Englishman.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in the King's Castle.

Enter King Richard, Bagot, and Green; Aumerle following.

K. Rich. We did observe—Cousin Aumerle,
How far brought you high Hereford on his way?
Aunm. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so,
But to the next highway, and there I left him.

K. Rich. And, say, what store of parting tears were shed:
Aunm. 'Faith, not by me, except the north-east wind,
Which then blew bitterly against our faces,
Awak'd the sleeping rheum; and so, by chance, Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin, when you parted
Aunm. Farewell: [with him? And, for my heart disdained that my tongue
Should so profane the word that taught me craft To counterfeit oppression of such grief,
That words seem'd buried in my sorrow's grave.

Marly, would the word farewell have lengthen'd hours,
And added joys to his short banishment,
He should have had a volume of farewells;
But, since it would not, he had none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment,
Whether our kinsman come to see his friends.
Ourself, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green,
Observ'd his courtship to the common people:—
How he did seem to dive into their hearts,
With humble and familiar courtesy;
What rage he throw away on slaves;
Wooing poor craftsmen, with the craft of smiles,
And patient underbearing of his fortune,
As 'twere, to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench;
A brace of draymen bid—God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee,
With—Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends—
As were our England in reverson his,
And he our subjects' next degree in hope.

Green. Well, he's gone; and with him go these thoughts.—
Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland:
Expedient manage must be made, my liege;
Ere further leisure yield them further means,
For their advantage, and your highness' loss.

K. Rich. We will ourselves in person to this war.

And, for our coifers—with too great a court,
And liberal largess,—are grown somewhat light,
We are enforce'd to farm our royal realm;
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand: If that come short,
Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;
Wheroeto, when they shall know what men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,
And send them after to supply our wants;
For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

Bushy, what news?

Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my Suddenly taken; and hath sent post-haste, Lord
To treat your majesty to visit him.

K. Rich. Where lies he?

Bushy. At Ely-house.

K. Rich. Now put it, heaven, in his physician's
To help him to his grave immediately! [mind,
The lining of his coiffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.—
Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him:
Pray God, we may make haste, and come too late!

[Exeunt]
ACT II.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Room in Ely-House.

Gaunt on a couch; the Duchess of York, and others standing by him.

Gaunt. Will the king come? that I may breathe my last
In wholesome counsel to his unstayd youth.
York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath;
For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.
Gaunt. O, but they say, the tongues of dying men
Enforce attention, like deep harmony;
Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain.
For they breathe truth, that breathe their words in pain.
He, that no more must say, is listen'd more
Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose;
More are men's ends mark'd, than their lives before;
The setting sun, and music at the close,
As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last;
Writ in remembrance, more than things long past;
Though thoughts of Richard would not hear,
My death's sad tale may yet undate his ear.
York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds,
As, praises of his state: then, there are found
Lascivious metres; to whose venom-sound
The open ear of youth doth always listen:
Report of fashions in proud Italy;
Whose manners still our tardy apish nation
Limbs after in base imitation.
Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,
(As it be now, there's no respect how vile,) That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears? Then all too late comes counsel to be heard,
Where will doth mutiny with wit's regard.
Direct not him, whose way himself will choose;
'Tis breath thou lackest, and that breath wilt thou lose.

Gaunt. Methinks, I am a prophet new inspir'd;
And thus, expiring, do foretell of him:
His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last;
For violent fires soon burn out themselves:
Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short;
He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes;
With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder:
Light vanity, insatiate cormorant,
Consuming means, soon preys upon itself.
This royal throne of kings, this sceptre'd isle,
This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demi-paradise;
This fortress, built by nature for herself,
Against infection, and the band of war:
This happy breed of men, this little world;
This precious stone set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a most offensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands;
This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,
This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Fed by their breed, and famous by their birth,
Renowned for their deeds as far from home, (For Christian service, and true chivalry,) As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry,
Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's Son:

This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land,
Dear for her reputation through the world,—
Is now loose'd out (I die pronouncing it;) Like to a tenement, or pelting farm:
England, bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With inky blots, and rotten parchment bonds;
That England, that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a shameful conquest of itself:—
O, would the scandal vanish with my life,
How happy then were my ensuing death! Enter King Richard and Queen; Aumerle, Bushy, Green, Bagot, Ross, and Willoughby.
York. The king is come: deal mildly with his youth;
For young hot colts, being rag'd, do rage the more.

Queen. How fares our noble uncle Lancaster?
K. Rich. What comfort, man? How is't with aged Gaunt?
Gaunt. O, how that name befits my composition! Old Gaunt, indeed; and gaunt, in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat, that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure, that some fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast, I mean—my children's looks;
And, therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt;
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.
K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Gaunt. No, misery makes sport to mock itself.
Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me,
I mock my name, my great king, to flatter thee.

K. Rich. Should dying men flatter those that live?
Gaunt. No, no; men living flatter those that die.

K. Rich. Thou, now a-dying, say'st—thou flatterer, Gaunt. Oh! no; thou diest, though I the sicker be.
K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee
Gaunt. Now, He that made me, knows I see thee ill;
Ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill,
Thy death-bed is no lesser than thy land,
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick:
And thou, too careless patient as thou art,
Commit'st thy anointed body to the cure
Of those physicians that first wounded thee:
A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown,
Whose compass is no bigger than thy head;
And yet, incaged in so small a verge,
The waste is no whit lesser than thy land.
O, had thy grand sire, with a prophet's eye,
Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons,
From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame;
Deposing thee before thouwert possess'd,
Which art possess'd now to depose thyself.
Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,
It were a shame, to let this land by lease:
But, for thy world, enjoying but this land,
Is it not more than shame, to shame it so?
Landlord of England art thou now, not king:
Thy state of law is bondsclave to the law;
And thou—
K. Rich. — a lunatic lean-witted fool,
Presuming on an age’s privilege,
Dar’st with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheek; chasing the royal blood,
With fury, from his native residence.
Now by my seat’s right royal majesty,
Wert thou not brother to great Edward’s son,
This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head,
Should run thy head from thy unreverend shoulders.
Gaunt. O, spare me not, my brother Edward’s
For that I was his father Edward’s son;
That blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou tapp’d out, and drunkenly carous’d:
My brother Gloster, plain well-meaning soul,
(Whom fair befal in heaven ‘mongst happy souls!)
May be a precedent and witness good,
That thou respect’st not spilling Edward’s blood:
Join with the present sickness that I have;
And thy unkindness be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too-long wither’d flower.
Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee!—
These words hereafter thy tormentors be!—
Convey me to my bed, then to my grave:—
Love they to live, to love and honour have.
[Exit, borne out by his Attendants.
K. Rich. And let them die, that age and sullens have;
For both hast thou, and both become the grave.
York. ’Beseach your majesty, impute his words
To wayward sickness and age in him:
He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry duke of Hereford, were he here.
K. Rich. Right; you say true: as Hereford’s love, so his:
As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.
Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.
North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your majesty.
K. Rich. What says he now?
North. Nay, nothing; all is said:
His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent!
York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt
Through death be poor, it ends a mortal woe. [so
K. Rich. The ripen’d fruit first falls, and so doth
His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be: [he
So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars:
We must supplant those roughrug-headed kerns;
Which live like venom, where no venom else,
But only they, hath privilege to live.
And, for these great affairs do ask some charge,
Towards our assistance, we do seize to us
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables,
Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess’d.
York. How long shall I be patient? Ah, how Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong? [long
Not Gloster’s death, nor Hereford’s banishment,
Not Gaunt’s rebukes, nor England’s private wrongs,
Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke
About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign’s face.—
I am the last of noble Edward’s sons.
Of whom thy father, prince of Wales, was first;
In war, was never lion rag’d more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than was that young and princely gentleman:
His face thou hast, for even so look’d he,
Accomplish’d with the number of thy hours;
But, when he frown’d, it was against the French,
And not against his friends: his noble hand
Did win what he did spend, and spent not that:
Which his triumphant father’s hand had won:
His hands were guilty of no kindred’s blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.
O, Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
Or else he never would compare between.
K. Rich. Why, uncle, what’s the matter?
York. O, my liege,
Pardon me, if you please; if not, I pleas’d
Not to be pardon’d, am content withal.
Seek you to seize, and gripe into your hands,
The royalties and rights of banish’d Hereford?
Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heir?
Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
Take Hereford’s rights away, and take from time
His charters, and his customary rights;
Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;
Be not thyself, for how art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession?
Now, afore God (God forbid, I say true!)
If you do wrongfully seize Hereford’s rights,
Call in the letters-patent that he hath
By his attorneys-general to sue
His livery, and deny his offer’d homage,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honour and allegiance cannot think.
K. Rich. Think what you will; we seize into our hands
His plate, his goods, his money and his lands.
York. I’ll not be by, the while: My liege, farewell:
What will ensue hereof, there’s none can tell:
But by bad courses may be understood,
That their events can never fall out good.
[Exit.
K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire
Bid him repair to us to Ely-house,
[straight
To see this business: To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and ’tis time, I trow;
And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our uncle York lord governor of England,
For he is just, and always lov’d us well.
Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;
Be merry, for our time of stay is short.
[Flourish.
[Exeunt KING, QUEEN, BUSHY, AUMERLE, GREEN, and BAGOT.
North. Well lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead.
Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke.
Willo. Barely in title, not in revenue.
North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.
Ross. My heart is great: but it must break with silence,
Ere’t be disburden’d with a liberal tongue.
North, Nay, speak thy mind; and let him never speak more.
That speaks thy words again, to do thee harm!
Willo. Tends, that thou’st speak, to the duke of Hereford?
If it be so, out with it boldly, man;
Quick is mine ear, to hear of good towards him.
Ross. No good at all, that I can do for him;
Unless you call it good, to pity him,
Bereft and gelded of his patrimony.
North. Now, afore heaven, 'tis shame, such wrongs are borne,
In him a royal prince, and many more
Of noble blood in this declining land.
The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers, and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute
'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.

_Ross._ The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,
And lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fin'd
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.

_Willo._ And daily new exactions are devis'd;
As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what:
But what, o'God's name, doth become of this?

_North._ Wars have not wasted it, for war'd he hath not,
But basely yielded upon compromise.
That which his ancestors achieved with blows:
More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars.

_Ross._ The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.

_Willo._ The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man.

_North._ Reproach and dissolution hangeth over him.
_Ross._ He hath not money for these Irish wars,
His burdensome taxations notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.

_North._ His noble kinsman: most degenerate king!
But lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm:
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.
_Ross._ We see the very wreck that we must suffer:
And unavoidable is the danger now,
For suffering the causes of our wreck.

_North._ Not so; even through the hollow eyes
I spy life peering; but I dare not say _of death,
How near the tidings of our comfort is!

_Willo._ Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.

_Ross._ Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
Thy words are but as thoughts; therefore, be bold.

_North._ Then thus:—I have from Port-le-Blanc,
In Britain, receiv'd intelligence,
[by a bay
That Harry Hereford, Reignold Cobham,
[The son of Richard Earl of Arundel,]
That late broke from the duke of Exeter,
His brother, archbishop—late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, sir John Ramston,
Sir John Norberry, sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quoit,—

_All these, well furnish'd by the duke of Bretagne,
With eight tail ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience,
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:
Perhaps, they had ere this; but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our dropping country's broken wing,
Redeem from breaking pawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's girt,
And make high majesty look like itself,—
Away with me in post to Ravensburg!
But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay and be secret, and myself will go.

_Ross._ To horse! to horse! urge doubts to them that fear.

_Willo._ Hold out my horse, and I will first be there!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

_Enter Queen, Bushy, and Basor._

Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad.
You promis'd, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.

Queen. To please the king, I did; to please my
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause_
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard: Yet, again, methinks,
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me; and my inward soul
With nothing troubles: am nothing it grieves,
More than with parting from my lord the king.

Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,
Which show like grief itself, but are not so:
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blindig tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives, which rightly gaz'd upon,
Show nothing but confusion: ey'd awry,
Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Finds shapes of griefs, more than himself, to wail;
Which, look'd on it as it is, is nought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, thrice-gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not; more's not seen:
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary.

Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: How'er it be,
I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad,
As—thoughts in my thinking, on no thought I think,—
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.

Queen. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still deriv'd
From some fore-father grief; mine is not so;
For nothing hath begot my something grief;
Or something hath the nothing that I grieve
'Tis in inversion that I do possess;
But what it is, that is not yet known; what
I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe I wot.

[Enter Green.

Green. God save your majesty!—and well met,
gentlemen,
I hope, the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland?

Queen. Why hop'st thou so? 'tis better hope he is;
For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope;
Then wherefore dost thou hope, he is not shipp'd?

Green. That he, our hope, might have retir'd his power,
And driven into despair an enemy's hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land:
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd
At Ravensburg.

Queen. 'Tis now God in heaven forbid!

Green. O, madam, 'tis too true; and that is worse,—
SCENE III.

KING RICHARD II.

The lord Northumberland, his young son Henry Percy,
The lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Willoughby,
With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.

Bushi. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland,
And all the rest of the revolting faction
Traitors?

Green. We have; wherein the earl of Worcester
Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship,
And all the household servials fled with him
To Bolingbroke.

Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my woo.

And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir:
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy;
And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Bushi. Despair not, madam.

Green. Who shall hinder me?

I will despair, and be at enmity
With cozening hope; he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter York.

Green. Here comes the duke of York.

Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck;
O, full of careful business are his looks;—
Uncle,
For heaven's sake, speak comfortable words.

York. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts;
Comfort's in heaven, and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives, but crosses, care, and grief.
Your husband he is gone to save far off,
Whilst others come to make him lose at home:
Here am I left to underprop his land;
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself:
Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.

York. He was?—Why, so!—go all which way it will!—
The nobles they are fled, the commons cold,
And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.—

Sirrah. Get thee to Flashy, to my sister Gloster; Bid her send me presently a thousand pound:
Hold, take my ring.

Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:
To-day, as I came by, I called there;—
But I shall grieve you to report the rest.

York. What is it, knave?

Serv. An hour before I came, the duchess died.

York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes Comes rushing on this woful land at once! I know not what to do:—I would to God, (8o my untruth had not provok'd him to it.)
The king had cut off my head with my brother's.—
What, are there posts despatch'd for Ireland?—
How shall we do for money for these wars?—
Come, sister,—cousin, I would say: pray, pardon me.

Go, fellow, [to the Servant.] get thee home, provide some carts,
And bring away the armour that is there.—

[Exit Servant.

Gentlemen, will you go muster men? If I know How, or which way, to order these affairs,
Thus thrust disorderly into my hands,
Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen;—
The one's my sovereign, whom both my oath
And duty bids defend; the other again,
Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd;—
Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.
Well, somewhat we must do.—Come, cousin, I'll Dispose of you:—Go, muster up your men,
And meet me presently at Berkley-castle.
I should to Flashy too;
But time will not permit.—All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six-and-seven.

Bushi. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland,
But none returns. For us to levy power,
Proportional to the enemy,
Is all impossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in love,
Is near the hate of those love not the king.

Bagot. And that's the wavering commons: for their love
Lies in their purses; and whose empties them,
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

Bushi. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.

Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we,
Because we ever have been near the king.

Green. Well, I'll for refuge straight to Bristol.
The earl of Wiltshire is already there. [castle.

Bushi. Thither will I with you: for little office
The hateful commons will perform for us;
Except, like curs, to tear us all to pieces.—
Will you go along with us?

Bagot. No; I'll to Ireland to his majesty.

Farewell: if heart's presages be not vain,
We three here part, that ne'er shall meet again.

Bushi. That's as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

Green. Alas, poor duke; the task he undertake Is—num'b'ring sands, and drinking oceans dry;
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.

Bushi. Farewell at once; for once, for all, and Green. Well, we may meet again. [ever.

Bagot. I fear me, never.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Wilds in GLOSTERSHIRE.

Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now? North. Believe me, noble lord,
I am a stranger here in Glostershire. These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome: And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable.
But, I bethink me, what a weary way From Ravenspur to Cotswold, will be found In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company; Which, I protest, hath very much beguil'd The tediousness and process of my travel:
But theirs is sweet'en'd with the hope to have The present benefit which I possess:
And hope to joy, is little less in joy,
Than hope enjoy'd: by this the weary lords Shall make their way seem short; as mine hath done By sight of what I have, your noble company.

Boling. Of much less value is my company,
Than your good words.—But who comes here?
Enter Harry Percy.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy, Sent from my brother Worcester, whencesoever.— Harry, how fares your uncle? Percy. I had thought, my lord, to have learnt'st his health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the queen? Percy. No, my good lord; he hath forsook the Broken his staff of office, and dispers'd [court, The household of the king.

North. What was his reason? He was not so resolv'd, when last we spake together. Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed, But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurg, [traitor. To offer service to the duke of Hereford: And sent me o'er by Berkley, to discover What power the duke of York had levied there; Then with direction to repair to Ravenspurg.

North. Have you forgot the duke of Hereford, boy? Percy. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot, Which ne'er I did remember: to my knowledge, I never in my life did look on him.

North. Then learn to know him now; this is Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service, Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young; Which elder days shall ripen, and confirm To more approved service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy; and be sure, I count myself in nothing else so happy, As 'in a soul rememb'ring my good friends; And, as my fortune ripens with thy love, It shall be still thy true love's recompense: My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it.

North. How far is it to Berkley? And what stir Keeps good old York there, with his men of war? Percy. There stands the castle, by you tuft of trees, Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard: And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and Sey-None else of name, and noble estimate. [mourn;

Enter Ross and Willoughby.

North. Here come the lords of Ross and Wil-Which bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste. Boling. Welcome, my lords: I wot your love A banish'd traitor; all my treasury [pursues Is yet but unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd, Shall be your love and labour's recompense.

Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble lord.

Willo. And far surmounts our labour to attain it.

Boling. Evermore—thanks, the exchequer of the poor;

Which, till my infant fortune comes to years, Stands for my bounty.—But who comes here?

Enter Berkley.

North. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess. Berk. My lord of Hereford, my message is to you.

Boling. My lord my answer is—to Lancaster; And I am come to seek that name in England: And I must find that title in your tongue, Before I make reply to aught you say.

Berk. I mistake not, my lord; 'tis not my meaning, To rase one title of your honour out:— To you, my lord, I come, (what lord you will,) From the most glorious regent of this land, The duke of York; to know, what pricks you on To take the advantage of the absent time, And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York, attended.

York. Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you; Here comes his grace in person.—My noble uncle! [Kneel. Boling. York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy Whose duty is deceiver and false. [kneel, Boling. My gracious uncle!— York. Tut, tut! Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle; I am no traitor's uncle; and that word—grace, In an ungracious mouth, is but profane. Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs Dar'd once to touch a dust of England's ground? But then more why;—Why have they dar'd to So many miles upon her peaceful bosom; [march Frighting her pale-fac'd villages with war, And ostentation of despyed arms? Com'st thou because the anointed king is hence? Why,—foolish boy, the king is left behind, And in my vital bosom lies his power. Were I but now the lord of such hot youth, As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself, Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men, From forth the ranks of many thousand French; O, then, how quickly should this arm of mine, Now prisoner to the palsy, châtitle thee, And minister correction to thy fault! Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault;

On what condition stands it, and wherein? York. Even in condition of the worst degree,—In gross rebellion, and detested treason: Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come, Before the expiration of thy time, In braving arms against thy sovereign. Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Here—But as I come, I come for Lancaster. [ford: And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace, Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye: You are my father, for, methinks in you I see old Gaunt alive; O, then, my father! Will you permit that I shall stand condemn'd A wand'ring vagabond; my rights and liberties Pluck'd from my arms perforce, and given away To upset unhurts? Wherefore was I born? If that my cousin king be king of England, It must be granted, I am duke of Lancaster. You have a son, Aumerle, my noble kinsman; Had you first died, and he been thus trod down, He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father, To rouse his wrongs, and chase them to the bay. I am denied to sue my livery here, And yet my letters-patent give me leave: My father's goods are all distrain'd, and sold; And these, and all, are all amiss employ'd,— What would you have me do? I am a subject, And challenge law: Attorneys are denied me; And therefore personally I lay my claim To my inheritance of free descent. North. The noble duke hath been too much abus'd.

Ross. It stands your grace upon, to do him right. Willo. Base men by his endowments are made great.
KING RICHARD II.

SCENE II.

York. My lords of England, let me tell you this.
I have had feeling of my cousin’s wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to do him right:
But in this kind to come, in braving arms,
Be his own carver, and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong,—it may not be;
And you that do abet him in this kind,
Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn, his coming is
But for his own: and, for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid;
And let him ne'er see joy, that breaks that oath.

York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms;
I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak, and all ill left:
But, if I could, by Him that gave me life,
I would attach you all, and make you stoop
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;
But, since I cannot, be it known to you,
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;—
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And there reside you for this night.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept.
But we must win your grace, to go with us
To Bristol-castle; which, they say, is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their 'complices;
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to weed, and pluck away.

York. It may be, I will go with you: but yet
I'll pause;
For I am loath to break our country's laws.

Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are:
Things past redress, are now with me past care.

[Exeunt]

SCENE IV.—A Camp in Wales.

Enter Salisbury and a Captain.

Cap. My lord of Salisbury, we have staid ten
And hardly kept our countrymen together, [days,
And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welch—
The king reposeth all his confidence [man;
In thee.

Cap. 'Tis thought, the king is dead; we will not stay.
The bay-tree's in our country are all wither'd,
And meteors fright the fixed-stars of heaven;
The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth,
And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful changes
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap,—
The one, in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other, to enjoy by rage and war:
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.—
Farewell! our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assured, Richard their king is dead. [Exit

Sal. Ah, Richard! with the eyes of heavy mind,
I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
Fall to the base earth from the firmament!
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest;
Thy friends are fled, to wait upon thy foes;
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Bolingbroke's Camp at Bristol.

Enter Bolingbroke, York, Northumberland, Percy,
Willoughby, Ross: Officers behind, with Bushy and Green: Prisoners.

Boling. Bring forth these men.—
Bushy, and Green, I will not vex your souls
(Since presently your souls must part your bodies,)
With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 'twere no charity: yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here, in the view of men,
I will unfold some causes of your death.
You have misled a prince, a royal king,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappied and disgrigur'd clean.
You have, in manner, with your sinful hours,
Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him;
Broke the possession of a royal bed,
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.
Myself—a prince, by fortune of my birth;
Near to the king in blood; and near in love,
Till you did make him misinterpret me,—
I have stoop'd my neck under your injuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment:
Whilst you have fed upon my seigniors,
Dispar'd my parks, and fell'd my forest woods;
From my own windows torn my household-cost,
Raz'd out my impress, leaving me no sign—
Save men's opinions, and my living blood,—
To show the world I am a gentleman. [this,
This, and much more, much more than twice all

Condemns you to the death:—See them deliver'd
To execution and the hand of death. [over

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me,
Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is,—that heaven will take
Your souls,
And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Boling. My lord Northumberland, see them despatch'd.

[Exeunt Northumberland and others, with Prisoners.

Uncle, you say, the queen is at your house:
For heaven's sake, fairly let her be entreated:
Tell her, I send to her my kind commends;
Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.

York. A gentleman of mine I have despatch'd
With letters of your love to her at large.

Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle.—Come, lords, away:
To fight with Glendower and his 'complices;
Awhile to work, and, after, holiday. [Exeunt]

SCENE II.—The Coast of Wales. A Castle in view.

Flourish: Drums and Trumpets. Enter King Richard,
Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, and Soldiers.

K. Rich. Barklowgley-castle call you this at hand?

Aum. Yea, my lord. How brooks your grace
After late tossing on the breaking seas? [the air,
K. Rich. Needs must I like it well; I weep
for joy,
To stand upon my kingdom once again._
Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand,
Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs:
As a long parted mother with her child
Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting;
So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,
And do thee favour with my royal hands.
Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth;
Nor with thy sweets comfort his rav'rous sense:
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way;
Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet
Which with usurping steps do trample thee.
Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies:
And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,
Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder;
Whose double-tongue may with a mortal touch
Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.—
Mock not my senseless conjunction, lords;
This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms.

Bishop. Fear not, my lord; that Power, that made you king,
Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all.
The means that heaven yields must be embraced,
And not neglected; else, if heaven would,
And we will not, heaven's offer we refuse;
The proffer'd means of success and redress.

Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;
Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,
Grows strong and great, in substance, and in friends.

K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know'st thou
That when the searching eye of heaven is hid [not],
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,
In murders, and in outrage, bloody here;
But when, from under this terrestrial ball,
He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines,
And darts his light through every guilty hole,—
Then murders, treasons, and detested sins,
The cloak of night being pluck'd from off their backs,
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?
So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,—
Who all this while hath revel'd in the night,
Whilst we were wand'ring with the antipodes,—
Shall see us rising in our throne the east,
His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.
Not all the water in the rough rude sea
Can wash the balm from an anointed king:
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The deputy elected by the Lord:
For every man that Bolingbroke hath press'd,
To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown,
God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay
A glorious angel: then, if angels fight,
Weak men must fall: for heaven still guards the right.

Enter Salisbury.

Welcome, my lord; How far off lies your power?
Sal. Nor near, nor farther off, my gracious lord,
Than this weak arm: Discomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me speak of nothing but despair.
One day too late, I fear, my noble lord,
Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth:
O, call back yesterday, bid time return,
And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men.

To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late,
O'erthrows thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;
For all the Welchmen, hearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispers'd and fled.

Aum. Comfort, my liege: why looks your grace so pale?

K. Rich. But now, the blood of twenty thousand
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled; [mer
And, till so much blood thither come again,
Have I not reason to look pale and dead:
All souls that will be safe, fly from my side;
For time hath set a blot upon my pride.

Aum. Comfort, my liege; remember who you are.

K. Rich. I had forgot myself: Am I not king?
Awake thou sluggard majesty! thou sleep'st.
Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory.—Look not to the ground,
Ye favourites of a king; Are we not high?
High be our thoughts: I know, my uncle York
Hath power enough to serve our turn.—But who comes here?

Enter Scroop.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my liege,
Than can my care-tun'd tongue deliver him.

K. Rich. Mine ear is open, and my heart prepared;
The worst is worldly loss, thou canst not unfold.
Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 'twas my care;
And what loss is, it to be rid of care?
Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?
Greater he shall not be; if he serve God,
We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so:
Revolt our subjects? that we cannot meddle;
They break their faith to God, as well as us:
Cry, woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay;
The worst is—death, and death will have his day!

Scroop. Glad am I, that your highness is so arm'd
To bear the tides of calamity.
Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolved to tears;
So high above his limits swell the rage
Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land
With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.
White beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps
Against thy majesty: boys, with women's voices,
Strive to speak big, and clap their female joints
In still unwidly arms against thy crown:
Thy very beardsmen learn to bend their bows
Of double-fatal yew against thy state;
Yea, distaff-women manage rusty bills
Against thy seat: both old and young rebel,
And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale so ill.
Where is the Earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?
What is become of Bushy? where is Green?
That they have let the dangerous enemy
Measure our confines with such peaceful steps;
If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it.
I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord.

K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn'd without reemption!
Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man!
Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my heart!
Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas!
Would they make peace? terrible hell make war
Upon their spotted souls for this offence!
Scroop. Sweet love, I see, changing his property,
Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate:—
Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made
With heads, and not with hands: those whom you curse,
Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound,
And lie full low, grav'd in the hollow ground.

_Aum._ Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire, dead?

_Scroop._ Yea, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.

_Aum._ Where is the duke my father with his power?

_K. Rich._ No matter where; of comfort no man speak:
Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
Let's choose executors, and talk of wills:
And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposed bodies to the ground?
Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,
And nothing can we call our own, but death;
And that small model of the barren earth,
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
For heaven's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
And tell sad stories of the death of kings:
How some have been depos'd, some slain in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd;
Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd;
All murder'd:—For within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps death his court: and there the antic sits,
Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp;
Allowing him a breath, a little scene
To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
Infusing him with self and vain conceit,—
As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brass impregnable; and, humour'd thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little pin
Bores through his castle-wall, and—farewell king!
Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
With solemn reverence; throw away respect,
Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty,
For you have but mistook me all this while:
I live with bread like you, feel want, taste grief,
Need friends:—Subjected thus,
How can you say to me—I am a king?

_Car._ My lord, wise men ne'er wall their present
But presently prevent the ways to wait. [woes,
To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe,
And so your follies fight against yourself.
Fear, and be slain; no worse can come to fight;
And fight and die, is death destroying death?
When a great dying, pays death servile breath.

_Aum._ My father hath a power, enquire of him;
And learn to make a body of a limb.

_K. Rich._ Thou child'st me well:—Proud Bolingbroke,
I come
To change blows with thee for our day of doom.
This ague-feit of fear is over-blown;
An easy task it is, to win our own.—
Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

_Scroop._ Men judge by the complexion of the sky
The state and inclination of the day:
So may you by my dull and heavy eye,
My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.
I play the torturer, by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken:
Your uncle York hath join'd with Bolingbroke;
And all your northern castles yielded up,
And all your southern gentlemen-in-arms
Upon his party.

_K. Rich._ Thou hast said enough.
Besireth thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth

[To Aumerle.]

Of that sweet way I was in to despair!
What say you now? What comfort have we now?
By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more.
Go to Flint-castle; there I'll pine away;
A king, men's slave, shall kingly vogue,
That power I have, discharge; and let them go
To car the land that hath some hope to grow,
For I have none:—Let no man speak again
To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

_Aum._ My liege, one word.

_K. Rich._ He does me double wrong,
That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
Discharge my followers, let them hence:—Away,
From Richard's night, to Bolingbroke's fair day.

[Exeunt.]

---

_SCENE III.—WALES. Before FLINT-CASTLE._

_Enter, with drum and colours, Bolingbroke and Forces; York, Northumberland, and others._

_Boling._ So that by this intelligence we learn,
The Welchmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed,
With some few private friends, upon this coast.

_North._ The news is very fair, and good, my lord; Richard;
Boling. It would beseen the lord Northumberland,
To say—king Richard:—Alack the heavy day,
When such a sacred king should hide his head!

_North._ Your grace mistakes me; only to be brief,
Left I his title out.

_York._ The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head, your whole head's length.

_Boling._ Mistake not, uncle, further than you should.

_York._ Take not, good cousin, further than you should,
Lest you mis-take: The heavens are o'er your head.

_Boling._ I know it, uncle; and oppose not Myself against their will.—But who comes here?

_Enter Percy._

_Well, Harry; what, will not this castle yield?_

_Percy._ The castle royally is mann'd, my lord,
Against thy entrance.

_Boling._ Royally! Why, it contains no king?

_Percy._ Yes, my good lord,
It doth contain a king; king Richard lies
Within the limits of yon lime and stone:
And with him are the lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergymen
Of holy reverence, who, I cannot learn.

_North._ Belfike, it is the bishop of Carlisle.

_Boling._ Noble lord,

[To North.]
Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle;
Through brass and trumpet send the breath of parle
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver.
Harry Bolingbroke.
On both his knees, doth kiss king Richard's hand;
And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart,
To his most royal person: hither come
Even at his feet to lay my arms and power;
Provided that, my banishment repeal'd,
And lands restor'd again, be freely granted:
If not, I'll use the advantage of my power,
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood,
Ruin'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:
The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall show.
Go, signify as much; while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.—
[Northumberland advances to the Castle, with a trumpet.
Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drum,
That from the castle's tooter'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perus'd.
Methinks, king Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thund'ring shock
At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven.
Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water;
The rage be his, while on the earth I rain
My waters on the earth, and not on him.—
March on, and mark king Richard how he looks.
A parie sounded, and answered by another trumpet within.
Flibour. Enter on the walls King Richard, the Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, Sloop, and Salisbury.
York. See, see, king Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun,
From out the fiery portal of the east;
When he perceives the envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the track
Of his bright passage to the occident.
Yet looks he like a king; behold, his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lighten'd forth;
Constraining majesty; Alack, alack, for woe,
That any harm should stain so fair a show!
K. Rich. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood
To watch the fearful bending of thy knee.
[To Northumberland.
Because we thought ourself thy lawful king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
If we be not, show us the hand of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship;
For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
Can gripe the sacred handle of our sceptre,
Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp.
And though you think, that all, as you have done
Have torn their souls, by turning them from us,
And we are barren, and bereft of friends;—
Yet know,—my master, God omnipotent,
Is mustering in his clouds, on our behalf,
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot,
That lift your vassal hands against my head,
And threat the glory of my precious crown.
Tell Bolingbroke, (for yond', methinks, he is,)
That every strike he makes upon my land,
Is dangerous treason: He is come to ope
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons
Shall ill become the flower of England's face:
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her pasture's grass with faithful English blood.
North. The king of heaven forbid, our lord the king
Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice-noble cousin,
Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand;
And by thy honourable tomorrow bears,
That stands upon thy royal grandsire's bones;
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents that spring from one most gracious head;
And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt;
And by the worth and honour of himself,
Comprising all that may be sworn or said,—
His coming hither hath no further scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees;
Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will commend to rust,
Hi! barbed steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.
K. Rich. Northumberland, say,—thus the king returns;—
His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction;
With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends.—
We do debase ourself, cousin, do we not,
[To Aumerle.
To look so poorly, and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?
Aum. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle words,
Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful
K. Rich. O God! O God! that e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yon proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! O, that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name!
Or that I could forget what I have been
Or not remember what I must be now!
Swell'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to beat.
Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.
Aum. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke.
K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must he submit?
The king shall do it. Must he be depos'd?
The king shall be contented: Must he lose
The name of king? o'God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels, for a set of beads!
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel, for an alms-man's gown;
My figur'd goblets, for a dish of wood;
My sceptre, for a palmer's walking-staff;
My subjects, for a pair of carved saints;
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little little grave, an obscure grave:—
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head;
For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live;
And, buried once, why not upon my head?
Aumerle, thou weep'st; My tender-hearted cousin!
We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a death in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
As thus:—To drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid,—There lies
Two kinsmen, digg'd their graves with weepingeyes?
Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you mock at me.—
Most mighty prince, my lord Northumberland,
What says king Bolingbroke? will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says—ay.
North. My lord, in the base court doth attend
To speak with you; may'st please you to come down?
K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glistening
Phaeton,
Wanting the management of unruly jades.
[Turn, retire to Bolingbroke.
In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base,
To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down? Down, court! down king!
For night-owls shriek, where mounting larks should sing.
[Exeunt, from above.
Boling. What says his majesty?
North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King Richard, and his Attendants below.
Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.—

[Thus bowing.
K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee,
To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
I rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, [Touching his own head.] although your knee be low.
Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.
K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all.
Boling. So far be mine, my most redistributed lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love.
K. Rich. Well you deserve:—They well deserve to have,
That know the strong'st and surest way to get.
Uncle, give me your hand: nay, dry your eyes; Tears show their love, but want their remedies.
Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.
What you will have, I'll give, and willing too; For do we must; what force will have we do.—
Set on towards London:—Cousin, is it so?

Boling. Yea, my good lord.
K. Rich. Then I must not say, No.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter the Queen, and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden,
To drive away the heavy thought of care?
1 Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.
Queen. 'Twill make me think,
The world is full of rubs, and that my fortune Runs 'gainst the bias.
1 Lady. Madam, we will dance.
Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.
1 Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.
Queen. Of sorrow, or of joy?
1 Lady. Of either, madam.
Queen. Of neither, girl:
For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:
For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots not to complain.
1 Lady. Madam, I'll sing.
Queen. 'Tis well, that thou hast cause;
But thou should'st please me better, would'st thou weep.
1 Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you good.
Queen. And I could weep, would weeping do
And never borrow any tear of thee. [me good,
But stay, here come the gardeners:
Let's step into the shadow of these trees.—

Enter a Gardener and two Servants.

My wretchedness unto a row of pins,
They'll talk of state: for every one doth so
Against a change: Woe is forerun with woe.

[Queen and Ladies retire.

Gard. Go, bind thou up yon dangling apricocks,
Which, like unruly children, make their sire
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight:
Give some supportance to the bending twigs.—
Go thou, and like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of too-fast-growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:
All must be even in our government.
You thus employ'd, I will go root away
The noisome weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.
1 Serv. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,
Keep law, and form, and due proportion,
Showing, as in a model, our firm estate?
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers chok'd up,
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars?

Gard. Hold thy peace:—
He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring,
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:
The weeds, that his broad-spreading leaves d shelter,
That seem'd in eating him to hold him up,
Are pluck'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke;
I mean the earl of Wiltshire, Bashy, Green.
1 Serv. What, are they dead?
Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath seiz'd the wasteful king.—Oh! what pity is it,
That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land,
As we this garden! We at time of year
Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees;
Lest, being over-proud with sap and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself:
Had he done so to great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste
Their fruits of duty. All superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste of idle hours hath quite throwen down.
1 Serv. What, think you then, the king shall be depos'd?
Gard. Depress'd he is already: and depos'd,
'Tis doubt, he will be: Letters came last night
To a dear friend of the good duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.
Queen. O, I am press'd to death,
Through want of speaking!—Thou, old Adam's likeness,
[Coming from her concealment.
Set to dress this garden, how dares
Thy harsh-rude tongue sound this unpleasing news?
What Eve, what serpent hath suggested thee
To make a second fall of cursed man?
Why dost thou say, king Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how,
Cam'st thou by these ill-tidings? speak, thou wretch.
Gard. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I,
To breathe this news: yet, what I say is true.
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bolingbroke; their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides himself, are all the English peers,
And with that odds he weighs king Richard down.
Post you to London, and you'll find it so:
I speak no more than every one doth know.
Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light
Of Doth not thy embassage belong to me,
[foot, And am I last that knows it? O, thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go,
To meet at London London's king in woe.—
What, was I born to this! that my sad look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?
Gardener, for telling me this news say woe,
I would, the plants thou graft'st, may never grow
[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.
Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse,
I would my skill were subject to thy curse.
Here did she drop a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace:
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. Westminster Hall. The Lords spiritual on the right side of the throne; the Lords temporal on the left; the Commons below.

Enter Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Surrey, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwater, another Lord, Bishop of Carlisle, Akeb of Westminster, and Attendants.
Officers behind with Bagot.
Boling. Call forth Bagot:—
Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind;
What thou dost know of noble Gloster's death;
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timeless end.
Bagot. Then set before my face the lord Aumerle.
Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bagot. My lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd.
In that dead time when Gloster's death was plotted,
I heard you say,—Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court
As far as Caesars, to my uncle's head?
Amongst much other talk, that very time,
I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand crowns,
Than Bolingbroke's return to England;
Adding withal, how blest this land would be,
In this your cousin's death.

Aum. Princes, and noble lords,
What answer shall I make to this base man?
Shall I so muchdishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement?
Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd
With the attainer of his stand'rous lips.—
There is my gage, the mannal seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest,
And will maintain, what thou hast said, is false,
In thy heart-blood, though being all too base
To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear; thou shalt not take it up.
Aum. Exceping one, I would he were the best
In all this presence, that hath mov'd me so.
Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathies,
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine:
By that fair sun that shows me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloster's death.
If thou deny'st it, twenty times thou liest;
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Aum. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that day.
Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.
Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.
Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true
In this appeal, as thou art all unjust:
And, that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing; seize it, if thou dar'st.
Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

Lord. I take the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle;
And spur thee on with full as many lies
As may be holla'd in thy treacherous ear
From sun to sun: there is my honour's pawn.
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

_Amm._ Who sets me here? by heaven, I'll throw
I have a thousand spirits in one breast, [at all:
To answer twenty thousand such as you.

_Surrey._ My lord Fitzwater, I do remember well
The very time, Aumerle, and you did talk.

_Fitz._ My lord, 'tis true: you were in presence then;
And you can witness me, this is true.

_Surrey._ As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is _Fitz._ Surrey, thou liest. [true
_Surrey._ Dishonourable boy!
That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge,
Till thou the lie-giver, and that lie, do lie
In earth as quiet as thy father's soul.
In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

_Fitz._ How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse!
If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live,
I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness,
And spit upon him, whilst I say, he lies,
And lies, and lies: there is my bond of faith,
To tie thee to my strong correction.—
As I intend to thrive in this new world,
Aumerle is guilty of my true capital.
Besides, I heard the th'ld Norfolk say,
That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men
To execute the noble duke at Calais.

_Amm._ Some honest Christian trust me with a gage,
That Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this,
If he may be repeal'd to try his honour.

_Boling._ These differences shall all rest under gage,
Till Norfolk be repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be,
And, though mine enemy, restor'd again
To all his land and seignories.

_Car._ That honourable day shall ne'er be seen—
Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought
For Jesu Christ; in glorious Christian field
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross,
Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens:
And, toil'd with works of war, retir'd himself
To Italy; and there, at Venice, gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long.

_Boling._ Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?
_Car._ As sure as I live, my lord.

_Boling._ Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom
Of good old Abraham!—Lords appellants,
Your differences shall all rest under gage,
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

_Enter York, attended._

_York._ Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields
To the possession of thy royal hand:
Ascend his throne, descending now from him,—
And long live Henry, of that name the fourth!

_Boling._ In God's name, I'll ascend the regal
_Car._ Marry, God forbid!—[thron

_Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best beseeching me to speak the truth.
Would God, that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge

Of noble Richard; then true nobleless would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here, that is not Richard's subject?
Thieves are not judg'd, but they are by to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them:
And shall the figure of God's majesty,
His capital, an English subject, elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judg'd by subject and inferior breath,
And he himself not present? O, forbid it, God,
That, in a Christian climate, souls refin'd
Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed:
I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stirr'd up by Heaven thus boldly for his king.
My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king:
And if you crown him, let me prophecy,—
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act.
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And, in this seat of peace, tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny,
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead men's aculls.
O, if you rear this house against this house,
It will the woefullest division prove,
That ever fell from earth and cursed earth:
Prevent, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest child, child's children, cry against you—woe!

_North._ Well have you argu'd, sir; and, for your
Of capital treason we arrest you here:— [pains,
My lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial.—

_May't please you, lords, to grant the common suit?

_Boling._ Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may surrender; so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.

_York._ I will be his conduct. [Exit

_Boling._ Lords, you that are here under our arrest,
Procure your sureties for your days of answer:—
Little are we beholden to your love, [To CARLISLE,
And little look'd for at your helping hands.

_Re-enter York, with KING RICHARD, and Officers bearing the crown, &c._

_K. Rich._ Alack, why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee:—
Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favours of these men: Were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, All hail! to me?
So Judas did to Christ: but he, in twelve,
Found truth in all, but one; I, in twelve thousand,
None.

God save the king!—Will no man say, amen?
Am I both priest and clerk? well then, amen.
God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet amen, if Heaven do think him me.—

_To do what service am I sent for hither?

_York._ To do that office of thine own good will,
Which tired majesty did make thee offer,—
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke.

_K. Rich._ Give me the crown!—Here, cousin, seize the crown;
Here, on this side, my hand; on that side, thine.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down, unseen, and full of water:
That bucket down, and full of tears, am I,
Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

Boiling. I thought you had been willing to resign.

K. Rich. My crown, I am, but still my griefs are mine:
You may my glories and my state depose,
But not my griefs; still am I king of those.

Boiling. Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. Rich. Your cares set up, do not pluck my cares down.
My care is—loss of care, by old care done;
Your care is—gain of care, by new care won;
The cares I give, I have, though given away;
They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boiling. Are you contented to resign the crown?
K. Rich. Ay, no;—no, ay;—for I must nothing
Therefore no, no, for I resign to thee.
[be;
Now mark me how I will undo myself:—
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
The pride of kingly sway from out my heart;
With mine own tears I wash away my balm,
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,
With mine own breath release all duteous oaths:
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manors, rents, revenues, I forego;
My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny:
God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me!
God keep all vows unbrok, are made to thee!
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd;
And thou with all pless'd, that hast all achiev'd!
Long mayst thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And so lie Richard in an earthy pit!
God save king Henry, unking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days?
What more remains?

North. No more, but that you read [Offering a paper.

These accusations, and these grievous crimes,
Committed by your person, and your followers,
Against the state and profit of this land;
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthy depos'd.

K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
My weav'd-up follies? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy offences were upon record,
Would it not shame thee, in so fair a troop,
To read a lecture of them? If thou would'st,
There should'st thou find one heinous article,
Containing the disposing of a king,
And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,— Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven:—
Nay, all of you, that stand and look upon me,
Whilst that my wretchedness doth bait myself,—
Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands,
Showing an outward pity; yet you Pilates
Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,
And water cannot wash away your sin.

North. My lord, despatch; I read or these articles.

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see:
And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
But they can see a sort of traitors here.
Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
I find myself a traitor with the rest:
For I have given here my soul's consent,
To undeck the pompous body of a king;
Make glory base; and sovereignty, a slave;
Proud majesty, a subject; state, a peasant.

North. My lord,—

K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou haught, insulting
Nor no man's lord; I have no name, no title,—
No, not that name was given me at the font,—
But 'tis usurped:—A slack the heavy day,
That I have worn so many winters out,
And know not now what name to call myself!
O, that I were a mockery king of snow,
Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
To melt myself away in water-drops!—
Good king,—great king,—(and yet not greatly good,
And if my word be sterling yet in England,
Let it command a mirror hither straight;
That it may show me what a face I have,
Since it is bankrupt of his majesty.

Boiling. Go some of you, and fetch a looking-glass.

North. Read o'er this paper, while the glass doth come.

K. Rich. Fiend! thou torment'st me ere I come to hell.

Boiling. Urge it no more, my lord Northumberland.

North. The commons will not then be satisfied.

K. Rich. They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough.

When I do see the very book indeed
Where all my sins are writ, and that's—myself—

North. Read, with a glass.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read.
No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And madly no deeper wounds?—O, flattery glass,
Like to my followers in prosperity,
Thou dost beguile me! Was this face the face,
That every day under his household roof
Did keep ten thousand men? Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?
Was this the face, that fac'd so many follies,
And was at last out-fac'd by Bolingbroke?
A brittle glory shineth in this face:
As brittle as the glory is the face;
[Dash the glass against the ground.

North. The is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.—
Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport,—
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.

Boiling. The shadow of your sorrow hast destroy'd
The shadow of your face.

K. Rich. Say that again.

The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see:—
'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of lament
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the torment'd soul;
There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king
For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st
Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause.  I'll beg one boon,
And then be gone, and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?

Boiling. Name it, fair cousin.

K. Rich. Fair cousin? Why, I am greater than a king:
For, when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects; being now a subject,
I have a king here to my flatterer.
Being so great, I have no need to beg.

Boiling. Yet ask.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter Queen and Ladies.

Queen. This way the king will come; this is the way
To Julius Caesar’s ill-erected tower,
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doom’d a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke:
Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth
Have any resting for her true king’s queen.

Enter King Richard and Guards.

But soft, you see, or rather do not see,
My fair rose wither: Yet look up; behold;
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true-love tears—
Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand;
Thou map of honour; thou king Richard’s tomb,
And not king Richard; thou most beauteous inn,
Why should hard-favour’d grief be lodg’d in thee,
When triumph is become an alcheou’s guest?

K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so,
To make me and too sudden: learn, good soul,
To think our former state a happy dream;
From which awak’d, the truth of what we are
Shows us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim Necessity; and he and I
Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to France,
And cloister thee in some religious house:
Our holy lives must win a new world’s crown,
Which our profane hours here have stricken down.

Queen. What! is my Richard both in shape and mind
Transform’d, and weaken’d? Hath Bolingbroke Depos’d thine intellect? Hath he been in thy
The lion, dying, thrusteth forth his paw, [heart?
And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage
To be o’erpower’d; and wilt thou, pupil-like,
Take thy correction mildly? kiss the rod;
And fawn on rage with base humility,
Which art a lion, and a king of beasts?

K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed; if aught but I had been still a happy king of men.
[beasts.
Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France:
Think, I am dead; and that even here thou tak’st,
As from my death-bed, my last living leave.
In winter’s tedious nights, sit by the fire
With good old folks; and let them tell thee tales
Of woeful ages, long ago betid:
And, ere thou bid good night, to quit their grief,
Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.
For why, the senseless brands will sympathise
The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
And, in compassion, weep the fire out;
And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter Northumberland, attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is chang’d;
You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.—
And, madam, there is order ta’en for you;
With all swift speed you must away to France.

K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder wherewithal
The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,—
The time shall not be many hours of age
More than it is, ere foul sin, gathering head,
Shall break into corruption: thou shalt think,
Though he divide the realm, and give thee half,
It is too little, helping him to all;
And he shall think, that thou, which know’st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,
Being ne’er so little urg’d, another way
To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne.
The love of wicked friends converts to fear;
That fear, to hate; and hate turns one, or both,
To worthy danger, and deserved death.

North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.

Take leave, and part; for you must part forthwith.

K. Rich. Doubly divorc’d?—Bad men, ye violate
A twofold marriage; ’twixt my crown and me;
And then, betwixt me and my married wife.—
Let me unkiss the oath ’twixt thee and me;
And yet not so, for with a kiss ’twas made.—
Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north—
Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime;
My wife to France: from whence, set forth in pomp,
She came adorn’d hither like sweet May.
Sent back like Hallowmas, or short’st of day.

Queen. And must we be divided? must we part?
K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.
Queen. Banish us both, and send the king with me.

North. That were some love, but little policy.

Queen. Then whither he goes, thither let me go.

K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one wo.

Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here; Better far off, than—near, be'ne'er the near'.

Go, count thy way with sighs; I, mine with groans.

Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans.

K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short,

And piece the way out with a heavy heart.

Come, come, in woong sorrow let's be brief,

Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief.

One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part;
Thence give I mine, and thus I take thy heart.

Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good part,

To take on me to keep and kill thy heart.

So, now I have mine own again, begone,

That I may strive to kill it with a groan.

K. Rich. We make wo wan to with this fond scene

Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [delay.]

[They kiss.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of York's Palace.

Enter York and his Duchess.

Duch. My lord, you told me, you would tell the rest,

When weeping made you break the story off.

Of our two cousins coming into London.

York. Where did I leave?

Duch. At that sad stop, my lord,
Where rude misgovern'd hands, from windows' tops,

Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Boling

Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed, [broke,—

Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,—

With slow, but stately pace, kept on his course,

While all tongues cried—God save thee, Boling broke!

You would have thought the very windows spake,

So many greedy looks of young and old,

Through casements darted their desiring eyes

Upon his visage; and that all the walls,

With painted imagin'ry, had said at once,—

Jesu preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!

Whilst he, from one side to the other turning,

Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,

Bespake them thus,—I thank you, countrymen:

And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duch. Alas, poor Richard! where rides he the while?

York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men,

After a well-grad'ed actor leaves the stage,

Are idly bent on him that enters next,

Thinking his prattle to be tedious:

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes

Did scowl on Richard; no man cried, God save him;

No joyful tongue gave him his well-conceived home:

But dust was thrown upon his sacred head;

Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,—

His face still combatt[ing with tears and smiles,

The badges of his grief and patience,—

That had not God, for some strong purpose, steal'd

The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,

And barbarism itself have pitied him.

But heaven hath a hand in these events;

To whose high will we bound our calm contents.

To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,

Whose state and honour I for eye allow.

Enter Aumerle.

Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

York. Aumerle that was

But that is lost, for being Richard's friend,

And, madam, you must call him Rutland now:

I am in parliament pledge for his truth,

And lasting fealty to the new-made king.

Duch. Welcome, my son: Who are the victors now,

That strew the green lap of the new-come spring?

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care

God knows, I had as lief be none, as one. [not:

York. Well, bear you well in this new spring of time,

Lest you be cropp'd before you come to prime.

What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumph?

Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.

York. You will be there, I know.

Aum. If God prevent it not; I purpose so.

York. What seal is that, that hangs without thy bosom?

Yea, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.

Aum. My lord, 'tis nothing.

York. No matter then who sees it.

I will be satisfied, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech your grace to pardon me;

It is a matter of small consequence,

Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to fear, I fear, [see.

Duch. What should you fear?

'Tis nothing but some bond, that he is enter'd into

For gay apparel, 'gainst the triumph day.

York. Bound to himself? what doth he with a bond?

That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.—

Boy, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me; I may not show it.

York. I will be satisfied; let me see it, I say. [snatch's it, and reads.

Treason! foul treason!—villain! traitor! slave!

Duch. What is the matter, my lord?

York. Ho! who is within there? [Enter a Servant.

Saddle my horse.

God for his mercy! what treachery is here

Duch. Why, what is it, my lord?

York. Give me my boots, I say; saddle my horse;

Now by mine honour, by my life, my troth,

I will apprehend the villain. [Exit Servant.

Duch. What's the matter?

York. Peace, foolish woman.

Duch. I will not peace:—What is the matter, son?

Aum. Good mother, be content; it is no more

Than my poor life must answer.

Duch. Thy life answer?

York. Bring me my boots, I will unto the king.
SCENE III.—WINDSOR. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Bolingbroke, as King; Percy and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell of my unbrifiy son?
'Tis full three months, since I did see him last:—
If any plague hang over us, 'tis he.
I would to God, my lords, he might be found:
Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,
For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions;
Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;
While he, young, wanton, and effeminate boy,
Takes on the point of honour to support
So dissolute a crew.

Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the prince;
And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford.
Boling. And what said the gallant?
Percy. His answer was,—he would unto the stews;
And from the common' st creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour; and with that,
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.
Boling. As dissolute, as desperate: yet, through both,
I see some sparkles of a better hope,
Which elder days may happily bring forth.
But who comes here?

Enter Aumerle, hastily.

Aum. Enter Aumerle, hastily.

Boling. Where is the king?

Our cousin, that he stares and looks so wildly?
Aum. God save your grace. I do beseech your majesty,
To have some conference with your grace alone.
Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.—

What is the matter with our cousin now?
Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth,

My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,

And a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.
Boling. Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the first, how heinous ere it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee.
Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the
That no man enter till my tale be done. [key,
Boling. Have thy desire.

Boling. [Within.] My liege, beware; look to thyself;
Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.
Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe. [Drawing.
Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand;
Thou hast no cause to fear.
Boling. [Within.] Open the door, secure, fool-hardy king:
Shall I, for love, speak treason to thy face?
Open the door, or I will break it open.

Boling. [Bolingbroke opens the door.

Enter York.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak;

Recov' r breath; tell us how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.
York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason that my haste for bids me show.
Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise past:
I do repent me; read not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.
York. 'Twas, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.
I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king;
Fear, and not love, begets his penitence:
Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.
Boling. O heinous, strong, and bold conspirati
O loyal father of a treacherous son! [racy!
Thou she'er, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream through mudy passages,
Hath held his current and defil'd himself!
The overflow of good converts to bad;
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing son.
York. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd;
And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,
As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.
Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies,
Or my sham'd life in his honourious lies.
Thou kill'st me in his life; giving him breath,
The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.
Boling. [Within.] What ho, my liege! for God's sake let me in.

Boling. What shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this eager cry?
Duch. A woman, and thine aunt, great king;
Speak with me, pity me, open the door:  ['tis I;
A beggar begs, that never begg'd before.

Boling. Our scene is alter'd,—from a serious thing,
And now chang'd to The Beggar and the King.—
My dangerous cousin, let your mother in;
I know, she's come to pray for your foul sin.
York. If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,
More sins for this forgiveness, prosper may.
This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rests sound;
This let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Duchess.

Duch. O king, believe not this hard-hearted
Love, loving not itself, none other can. [man;
York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make here?

Shall thy old dugs once more a traitor rear?
Duch. Sweet York, be patient. Hear me, gentle liege. [Kneels.

Boling. Rise up, good aunt.

Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech:
For ever will I kneel upon my knees,
And never see that the happy sees,
Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy,
By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers I bend my [Kneels.
York. Against them both, my true joints bended
be,
Ill mayst thou strive, if thou grant any grace!
Duch. Pleads he in earnest? look upon his face;
His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast;

He prays but faintly, and would be denied;

We pray with heart, and soul, and all beside:
His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they grow:
His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
Ours, of true zeal and deep integrity.

Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have
That mercy, which true prayers ought to have.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. Nay, do not say—stand up;
But pardon, first; and afterwards, stand up.
If I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach
Pardon—should be the first word of thy speech.

I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say—pardon, king; let pity teach thee how:

The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
No word, like pardon, for kings' mouths so meet.

York. Speak it in French, king; say, pardonnezmoi.

Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?
Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,
That sett'st the word itself against the word!—
Speak, pardon, as 'tis current in our land;
The chopping French we do not understand.

Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there:
Or, in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear;
That, hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,
Pity may move thee, pardon to rehearse.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. I do not sue to stand,
Pardon all the suit I have in hand.

Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.

Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee!
Yet am I sick for fear: speak it again;

Twice saying pardon, doth not pardon twain,
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortune on the back
Of such as have before endur'd the like.
Thus play I, in one person, many people,
And none contented: Sometimes am I king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: Then crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king;
Then I am king'd again: and by-and-by,
Think that I am unkng'd by Bolingbroke;
And straight am nothing:—But, what'ee I am
Now, I not intend that but by man is.
With nothing shall be pleas'd till he be eas'd
With being nothing.—Music do I hear? [Music.
Ha, ha! keep time:—How sour sweet music is,
When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
So is it in the music of men's lives.
And here have I the daintiness of ear,
To check time broke in a disorder'd string;
But, for the concord of my state and time,
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke,
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.
For now hath time made me his numb'ring clock:
My thoughts are minutes; and, with sighs, they jar
Their watches on to mine eyes, the outward watch,
Whereeto my finger, like a dial's point,
Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.
Now, sir, the sound, that tells what hour it is,
Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: So sighs, and tears, and groans,
Show minutes, times, and hours:—but my time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand footing there, his Jack o' the clock.
This music mads me, let it sound no more;
For, though it have helpe madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems it will make wise men mad.
Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me!
For 'tis a sign of love: and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!
K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.
What art thou? and how comest thou hither,
Where no man never comes, but that sad dog
That brings me food, to make misfortune live?
Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
When thou wert king: who, travelling towards York,
With much ado, at length have gotten leave
To look upon my somewhat master's face.
O, how it yern'd my heart, when I beheld,
In London streets that coronation day,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary?
That horse, thou art often hast besrid;
That horse, that I so carefully have dress'd!
K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle
How went he under him? [friend,
Groom. So proudly, as if he disdain'd the ground.
K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!
That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down,
(Since pride must have a fall,) and break the neck
Of that proud man, that did usurp his back:
Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be aw'd by man,
Was born to bear? I was not made a horse:
And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spur-gall'd, and tir'd by jauncing Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper, with a dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.

Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say.

[Exit.

Keep. My lord, wilt please you to fall to?

K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do.

Keep. My lord, I dare not; sir Please of Exton, who Lately came from the king, commands the contrary
K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster,
And thee!

Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.

[Boats the Keeper.

Keep. Help, help, help!

Enter Exton, and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now? what means death in this rude assault?

Villain, thy own hand yields thy death's instrument.

[Snatching a weapon, and killing out.

Go thou, and fill another room in hell.

[Exeunt. Exton.

As full of valour, as of royal blood:
Both have I spilt; O, would the deed were good!
For now the devil, that told me—I did well,
Says, that this deed is chronicled in hell.
This dead king to the living king I'll bear;
Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—WINDSOR. A Room in the Castle.

Flourish. Enter BOLINGBROKE and York, with Lords and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear
Is—that the rebels have consum'd with fire
Our town of Cicester in Glosstershire;
But whether they be ta'en, or slain, we hear not.

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome, my lord: What is the news?

North. First to thy sacred state wish I all happiness.

The next news is,—I have to London sent
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:
The manner of their taking may appear
At large discoursed in this paper here.

[Bearing a paper.

Bolin. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter Fitzwater.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London
The heads of Brocas, and Sir Bennet Scely;
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,
That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

Bolin. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot.
Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy, with the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of West minster.
With clog of conscience, and sour melancholy,
Hath yielded up his body to the grave;
But here is Carlisle living, to abide
Thy kingly doom, and sentence of his pride.

Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom:—
Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life;
So, as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife:
For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Enter Exton, with Attendants bearing a coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present
Thy buried fear; herein all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast
A deed of slander, with thy fatal hand, wrought
Upon my head, and all this famous land.

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this deed.

Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,
Nor do I thee; though I did wish him dead,
I hate the murderer, love him murdered.
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,
But neither my good word, nor princely favour:
With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
And never show thy head by day nor light.—
Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,
That blood should sprinkle me, to make me grow:
Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,
And put on sullen black, incontinent;
I'll make a voyage to the Holy land,
To wash this blood off from my guilty hand:—
March sadly after; grace my mournings here,
In weeping after this untimely bier.
